Pan American Union. The official organization of the 21 republics of the Americas, founded in 1890 as the International Bureau of American Republics, and bearing its present name since 1910. The governing board is constituted of all the diplomatic representatives of the American countries and the Secretary of State of the U.S. Its headquarters are in Washington, D.C.

Panathenaea. A festival in honor of Pallas Athene, the Roman Minerva.

pancake. A thin, flat "cake" made in a frying-pan. It was originally intended to be eaten after dinner to stay the stomachs of those who went to be shaven; hence, SHROVE TUESDAY, a special day for these, came to be called Pancake Day, and the Shrovebell the Pancake Bell.

pancake turner. In radio "shop talk," the sound technician controlling the playing of double-faced records.

Panrace. In Molière's MARIAGE FORCÉ, a doctor of the Aristotelian school, who involves himself in constant absurdity in his attempts to apply his cumbersome logical analysis to trivial matters. When his adversary cannot agree, he calls him "un ignorant, un ignorantissime, ignorantifiant, et ignorantifié."

Pancras, St. See under SAINTS.

Pandarus. In Greek legend, a Lycian leader, one of the allies of PRIAM in the Trojan War. In the classic story he is depicted as an admirable archer, slain by Diomed, and honored as a hero-god in his own country, but in medieval romance he is represented as such a despicable fellow that the word pander is derived from his name. Chaucer in his Troilus and Criseyde (see TROILUS), and Shakespeare in his drama of Troilus and Cressida, represent him as procuring for Troilus the good graces of Cressida, and in MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING, it is said that Troilus "was the first employer of pandars."

Let all pitiful goers-between be called to the world's end after my name; call them all "Pandars." Let all constant men be "Troiluses," all false women "Cressids."—Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, Act III. Sc. 2.

Pandavas, the. The five brothers who are joint heroes of the great Hindu epic, the MAHABHARATA.

pandemonium (Gr., "all the demons"). A wild, unrestrained uproar, a tumultuous assembly, a regular row. The word was first used by MILTON as the name of the principal city in Hell, "the high capital of Satan and his peers."

Pandora. In Greek mythology, the first woman. Prometheus had made an image and stolen fire from heaven to endow it with life. In revenge, JUPITER commanded VULCAN to make a woman, who was named Pandora (i.e., the All-gifted), because each of the gods gave her some power which was to bring about the ruin of man. Jupiter gave her a box which she was to present to him who married her. Prometheus distrusted Jupiter and his gifts, but Epimetheus, his brother, married the beautiful Pandora, and—against advice—accepted the gift of the god. As soon he opened the box all the evils that flesh is heir to flew forth, and have ever since continued to afflict the world. According to some accounts the last thing that flew out was Hope, but others say that Hope alone remained. Some versions blame Pandora's curiosity for the disaster.

Pandora's box. A present which seems valuable, but which is in reality a curse; like that of MIDAS, who found his very food became gold, and so uneatable.

panegyric. A laudatory oration, song, essay, etc.

Pangloss, Dr. (Gr., "all tongues"). The pedantic old tutor to the hero in Voltaire's CANDIDE, OU L'OPTIMISME. His great point is his incurable and misleading optimism; it does him no good and brings him all sorts of misfortune, but to the end he reiterates "All is for the best in this best of all possible worlds." He is said to have been based on the philosopher LEIBNITZ.

Panhandle. In the United States a narrow strip of territory belonging to one State which runs between two others, such as the Texas Panhandle, the Panhandle of Idaho, etc. West Virginia is known as the Panhandle State. The allusion is obvious.

Panhard, René (b. 1841). French automotive engineer, the first to mount the internal combustion engine invented by Daimler (1887) on a mobile chassis (1891).

Panic. A verse play by Archibald MACLEISH (1935).

Pan in Wall Street. A famous poem by Edmund Clarence STEDMAN.

Panjandrum, The Grand, "with the little red button a-top." A village boss, who imagines himself the "Magnus Apollo" of his neighbors. The word occurs in the famous farrago of nonsense which the comic dramatist Foote (1721-1777) composed to test old Macklin, who said he had brought his memory to such perfection that he could remember anything by reading it over once. There is more than one version of the test passage; the following is as well authenticated as any:

So she went into the garden to cut a cabbage-leaf to make an apple-pie, and at the same time a great she-bear came running up the street and popped its head into the shop. "What! no soap?" So he died, and she—very imprudently—married the barber. And there were present the Picinnies, the Joblillies, the Garyulies, and the Grand Panjandrum himself, with the little red button a-top, and they all fell to playing the game of catch-as-catch-can till the gunpowder ran out at the heels of their boots.

It is said that Macklin was so indignant at this nonsense that he refused to repeat a word of it.

Pankhurst, Emmeline (1858-1928). English woman-suffragist; endured several hunger-strikes. Her daughters also supported the suffragist movement, and one of them, Estelle Sylvia Pankhurst (1882-), published a biography of her mother (1935).

Pan Michael. The third of a Polish historic trilogy by Sienkiewicz. See WITH FIRE AND SWORD.

panniers. A frame of steel, whalebone, or the like, formerly worn by women to expand their skirts at the hips.

Pansy. The nom de plume of Mrs. Isabella Alden (b. 1841) whose religious stories for young people, the Pansy Books were for a time very popular in America.

ruel (the first part published in 1533, the last posthumously in 1564), King of the Dipsodes, son of GARGANTUA, and by some identified with Henri II of France. He is the last of the giants, and Rabelais says he got his name from the Greek panta, "all," and Arab. gruel, "thirsty," because he was born during the drought which lasted thirty and six months, three weeks, four days, thirteen hours, and a little more, in that year of grace noted for having "three Thursdays in one week." He is covered with hair at birth, "like a young bear," and is so strong that though he is chained in his cradle he breaks his bonds into five hundred thousand pieces with one blow of his infant fist. When he grows to manhood he knows all languages, all sciences, and all knowledge of every sort, out-Solomoning Solomon in wisdom. His immortal achievement is his voyage from Utopia in quest of the "ORACLE OF THE HOLY BOTTLE."

Pantagruel's course of study. Pantagruel's father, Gargantua, says in a letter to his son:

"I intend and insist that you learn all languages perfectly; first of all Greek, in Quintilian's method; then Latin, then Hebrew, then Arabic and Chaldee. I wish you to form your style of Greek on the model of Plato, and of Latin on that of Cicero. Let there be no history you have not at your fingers' ends, and study thoroughly cosmography and geography. Of liberal arts, such as geometry, mathematics, and music, I gave you a taste when not above five years old, and I would have you now master them fully. Study astronomy, but not divination and judicial astrology, which I consider mere vanities. As for civil law, I would have thee know the digests by heart. You should also have a perfect knowledge of the works of Nature, so that there is no sea, river, or smallest stream, which you do not know for what fish it is noted, whence it proceeds, and whither it directs its course; all fowls of the air, all shrubs and trees whether forest or orchard, all herbs and flowers, all metals and stones, should be mastered by you. Fail not at the same time most carefully to peruse the Talmudists and Cabalists, and be sure by frequent anatomies to gain a perfect knowledge of that other world called the microcosm, which is man. Master all these in your young days, and let nothing be superficial; as you grow into manhood you must learn chivalry, warfare, and field manoeuvres."—Bk. II. 8.

Pantagruel's tongue. It forms a shelter for a whole army, and his throat and mouth contains whole cities.

Then did they [the army] put themselves in close order, and stood as near to each other as they could and Pantagruel put out his tongue half-way, and covered them all, as a hen doth her chickens.—Bk. II. 32.

Pantagruelian lawsuit. This is a lawsuit between Lord Busqueue and Lord Suckfist, who plead their own cases. The writs, etc., are as much as four asses can carry. After the plaintiff and defendant have stated their cases, Pantagruel gives judgment, and the two suitors are both satisfied, for no one can understand a word of the pleadings, or the tenor of the verdict.

Pantagruelion. The name given by Rabelais to hemp, of which the hangman's rope is made, "because Pantagruel was the inventor of a certain use which it serves for, exceeding hateful to felons, unto whom it is more hurtful than strangle-weed to flax."

Pantagruelism. Coarse and boisterous buffoonery and humor, like that for which Pantagruel is famous.

Pantaloone or Pantaleone. Originally, a stock character of Italian comedy, a thin, emaciated old man who always appeared in slippers. In England he became a pantomime character. See also PIERROT.

The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slippered Pantaloone.
Shakespeare, As You Like It, act ii. sc. 7 (1600).

Panter-Downes, Mollie (1906–). Anglo-Irish novelist and journalist, known for her "Letters From England," published weekly in THE NEW YORKER and later collected in book form (1940). Author of The Shoreless Sea (1924); etc.

Panthea. In classical history the wife of Abradatus, King of Susa. He joined the Assyrians against CYRUS, and she was taken captive. Cyrus refused to visit her, that he might not be tempted by her beauty, and Abradatus, charmed by this restraint, joined his party. Shortly after he was slain in battle, and Panthea put an end to her life, falling on the body of her husband. XENOPHON'S Cyropaedia, in which her history is related, is said to be "the first extant example of a prose love-story in European literature."

pantheism (from Gr. pan, "all," and theos, "god"). The doctrine that God is everything and everything is God; a monistic theory elaborated by SPINOZA, who, by his doctrine of the Infinite Substance, sought to overcome the opposition between mind and matter, body and soul.

During the romantic period (see ROMANTICISM) and later, WORDSWORTH, SHELLEY, EMERSON, TENNYSON, and others expressed various doctrines of pantheism in their writings.

Pantheon (from Gr. pan, "all," and theos, "god"). A temple dedicated to all the gods; specifically, that erected at Rome by Agrippa, son-in-law to Augustus. It is circular, nearly 150 ft. in diameter, and of the same total height; since the early 7th century, as Santa Maria Rotunda, it has been used as a Christian Church.

The Pantheon at Paris was originally the church of St. Genevieve, built by Louis XV and finished in 1790. The following year the Convention gave it its present name, and set it apart as the shrine of those Frenchmen whom their country wished to honor.

Pantisocracy. A scheme for an ideal social community in America, planned by S. T. COLERIDGE and Robert SOUTHBY in 1794. The community was to be based on the theories of ROUSSEAU and GODWIN and was to be located on the banks of the Susquehanna River in Pennsylvania. The scheme never materialized because of lack of financial backing.

pantomime. A dumb-show performance. Popular in ancient Rome and 17th- and 18th-century Italy and France. In England, the Christmas pantomime survives as an extravaganza for children put on in a theater with many magical spectacles. The silent motion picture worked essentially with a pantomime technique.

Panurge (from Gr. pan, "all," ergos, "worker"; the "all-doer," i.e., the rogue, he who will "do anything or anyone"). The roguish companion of PANTAGRUEL, and one of the principal characters in RABELAIS' satire of that name. He is a desperate rake, is always in debt, has a dodge for every scheme, knows everything and something more, is a boon companion of the mirthfullest temper and most licentious bias; but he is timid of danger, and a desperate coward. The third, fourth, and fifth (last) books of the satire are taken up with the adventures of Panurge, and the rest in their endeavor to find by divination whether or not he should marry. Besides PANTAGRUEL, Panurge consults lots, dreams, a sibyl, a deaf and dumb man, the old poet Romina-grobis, the chiromancer Herr Trippa, the theologian Hippothadée, the physician Rondibilis, the philosopher Trouillogan, the court fool Triboulet, and, lastly, the ORACLE OF THE HOLY BOTTLE. To every one of the very obscure answers Panurge receives, whether it seems to point to "Yes" or to "No," he invariably finds insuperable objections.

Some "commentators" on Rabelais have identified Panurge with John Calvin, others with Cardinal Lorraine; this part of the satire seems to be an echo of the great Reformation controversy on the celibacy of the clergy.

Panza, Sancho, see SANCHO PANZA.

Paolo and Francesca. See under FRANCESCA DA RIMINI.

Papen, Franz von (1879-). German diplomat. Military attaché in Washington (1915); recalled to Germany by request of U.S. state department for "improper activities" (1915). Premier of Prussia (1932-1933). Under Hitler, vice-chancellor of Germany (1933-1934). Ambassador, to Austria (1934-1938), and to Turkey (from 1939). One of the group of German nationalists who seconded the Nazi bid for power in the belief that they could exploit the expected revolution for the benefit of their own ideology. Acquitted at Nuremberg Trial (1946).

Paphian. Relating to Venus or rather to Paphos, a city of Cyprus, where Venus was worshipped; a Cyprian; a prostitute.

Paphnutius. The young monk who is the central figure in Thaïs, a romance by Anatole France.

Papimany. In Rabelais' satire GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL (ix, xlv), the country of the Papimanes, i.e., those who are madly devoted to, or have a mania for, the Pope; hence, any priest-ridden country.

Papini, Giovanni (1881-). Italian critic and author, at first known for his bitterness and his negative philosophy, but after World War I converted to Roman Catholicism (1920) and transformed into an exponent of mysticism. His best-known work is his Storia di Cristo (1921), translated as The Life of Christ (1923). Other writings, under their English titles, include Memoirs of God (1926); Prayer to Christ (1926); Laborers in the Vineyard (1930); Life and Myself (1930); Saint Augustine (1930); Gog (1930), an anti-20th-century satire. Among his later works are Dante Vivo (1933) and I Testimoni della Passione (1937).

Paracelsus. A narrative poem by Robert Browning (1835). The hero is a historical character, a famous Swiss physician (1493-1541), who was said to have delved deeply into alchemy and to have kept a small devil prisoner in the pommel of his sword. His full name was Philippus Aureolus Theophrastus Paracelsus, but his family name was Bombastus. In the poem, Paracelsus, at twenty, thinks knowledge the summum bonum, and on the advice of his two friends, Festus and Michal, retires to a seat of learning. Eight years later, dissatisfied, he falls in with Aprile, an Italian poet, and resolves to seek the summum bonum in love. Again he fails, and, when dying in a cell in the hospital of St. Sebastian, deserted by all but Festus, he declares the summum bonum to be "To see good in evil, and a hope in ill-success."

Paraclete. From Greek. A helper, intercessor, etc. Hence, the Holy Spirit in the sense of "the Comforter."

paradigm. A model, example, or pattern, especially, in grammar, of declension, conjugation, etc., constituting a full survey of all the forms of a noun, verb, or any other word that can be inflected.

paradise. The Greeks borrowed this word from the Persians, among whom it denoted the enclosed and extensive parks and pleasure grounds of the Persian kings. The Septuagint translators adopted it for the garden of Eden, and in the New Testament and by early Christian writers it was applied to Heaven, the abode of the blessed dead. The third part of Dante's DIVINE COMEDY is entitled Paradise (Paradiso). It describes the poet's journey through the ten spheres of paradise.

An old word, "paradise," which the Hebrews had borrowed from the Persians, and which at first designated the "parks of the Achaemenidae."—Renan, Life of Jesus, xi.

a fool's paradise. See FOOL.

paradise of exiles. Italy, from its foreign population, especially during the 19th century.

earthly paradise. See under EARTHLY.

Paradise and the Peri. See under PERI.

Paradise Lost. MILTON's epic poem—considered the greatest epic in any modern language—was published in twelve books in 1667. It tells the story—

Of Man's first disobedience and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree whose mortal taste
Brought death into the World, and all our woe,
With loss of Eden.

SATAN rouses the panic-stricken host of fallen angels with tidings of a rumor current in Heaven of a new world about to be created. He calls a council to deliberate what should be done, and they agree to send him to search for this new world. Satan, passing the gulf between Hell and Heaven and the limbo of Vanity, enters the orb of the Sun (disguised as an angel), and, having obtained the information, goes to Paradise in the form of a cormorant. Seating himself on the Tree of Life, he overhears Adam and Eve talking about the prohibition made by God, and at once resolves upon the nature of his attack. GABRIEL sends two angels to watch over the bower of Paradise, and Satan flees. RAPHAEL is sent to warn Adam of his danger, and tells him the story of Satan's revolt and expulsion from Heaven, and why and how this world was made. After a time Satan returns to Paradise in the form of a mist, and, entering the serpent, induces Eve to eat of the forbidden fruit. Adam eats "that he may perish with the woman whom he loved." Satan returns to Hell to tell his triumph, and MICHAEL is sent to lead the guilty pair out of the Garden.

Milton borrowed largely from the epic of Guillaume du BARTAS entitled La Semaine (The Week of Creation; 1578), which was translated into almost every European language. He was also indebted to St. Avitus (d. 523), who wrote in Latin hexameters The Creation, The Fall, and The Expulsion from Paradise, for his description of Paradise (Bk. i), of Satan (Bk. ii), and other parts.

In 1671, Paradise Regained (in four books), written by Milton on suggestion of his Quaker friend Thomas Ellwood, was published. The subject is the Temptation. Eve, being tempted, falls, and loses Paradise; Jesus, being tempted, resists, and regains Paradise. The New Testament narrative is followed and enlarged upon.

The American playwright Clifford ODETS named one of his plays Paradise Lost (1935).

Paradise of Dainty Devices, The. An English "poetical miscellany" (see TOTTLE's MIS-CELLANY) of the Elizabethan period, first published in 1576 and extremely popular, appearing in nine editions from its first date to 1606. Its contents, originally assembled by Richard Edwards, are marked by a greater seriousness than TOTTLE's.

paradox. A statement or proposition that is obviously contrary to common sense, yet full of significance when viewed from the proper angle. The Christian doctrine of the Trinity is paradoxical. GILBERT K. CHESTERTON and OSCAR WILDE, for instance, are masters in the use of paradoxes as rhetorical devices.

Paragot. Hero of W. J. LOCKE's BELOVED VAGABOND.

Parcae. The Latin name for the Fates. The three were Clotho, Lachesis, and Atropos. Parcae is from Lat. pars, "a lot"; and the corresponding Moirae of the Greeks is from Gr. meros, "a lot."

Pardoner's or Pardoner's Tale, The. One of the stories in CHAUCER's CANTERBURY TALES, that of Death and the Rioters, which comes from an Oriental source through the Italian Cento Novelle Antiche.

Three rioters in a tavern agree to hunt down Death and kill him. As they go their way they meet an old man, who tells them that he has just left him sitting under a tree in the lane close by. Off go the three rioters, but when they come to the tree they find a great treasure, which they agree to divide equally. They cast lots to determine who is to carry it home, and the lot falls to the youngest, who is sent to the village to buy food and wine. While he is gone the two who are left agree to kill him, and so increase their share; but the third buys poison to put into the wine, in order to kill his two confreres. On his return with his stores, the two set upon him and slay him, then sit down to drink and be merry together. But, the wine being poisoned, all three rioters find Death under the tree, as the old man predicted.

the pardoner's mitten. Whoever put this mitten on would be sure to thrive in all things.

He that his hondē put in this metayn,
He shal have multiplying of his grayn,
When he bath sown, be it whete or otes,
So that ye offre pans [pence] or ellēs grootes.
Prologue to The Pardoner's Tale.

Paré, Ambroise (1517-1590). French surgeon, often called the father of modern surgery; introduced practice of ligature of arteries in place of cautery in amputations; court physician to Henry II, Francis II, Charles IX, and Henry III.

Paret, Hugh. The hero of Winston Churchill's FAR COUNTRY.

Pareto, Vilfredo (1848-1923). Italian economist and sociologist. Mussolini is said to have recognized him as the father of Fascist theory, his contempt for democracy being well known. He died soon after the establishment of Fascism in Italy. Max Lerner has said, "Pareto's Republic is now a reality: it is Hitler's totalitarian state." But though Pareto detested political liberty, he wished for economic and intellectual liberty.

pariah. A member of a very low caste of Hindus in Southern India, from a native word meaning "a drummer," because it was these who beat the drums at certain festivals. Europeans often extend the term to those of no caste at all; hence it is applied to outcasts generally, the lowest of the low. The Pariah is the title of a novel by F. ANSTAY.

Parian. Pertaining to the Greek island of Paros, noted for its marble used in ancient sculpture; hence, of or pertaining to marble or to ancient sculpture.

Paribanou. In the tale of Prince Ahmed and Paribanou in the Arabian Nights, a fairy who gives Prince Ahmed a tent which will fold into so small a compass that a lady may carry it about as a toy but that, when spread, will cover a whole army.

Paridell. A libertine in Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE (III. viii, ix, x, IV, ii, v, ix, etc.) typifying the Earl of Westmorland. Pope in his DUNCIAD uses the name for a young gentleman who travels about and seeks adventure, because he is young, rich, and at leisure.

Paris. (1) In Greek legend, the son of PRIAM, King of Troy, and HECUBA; and through his abduction of HELEN the cause of the siege of Troy. Before his birth Hecuba dreamed that she was to bring forth a firebrand, and, as this was interpreted to mean that the unborn child would bring destruction to his house, the infant Paris was exposed on Mount Ida. He was, however, brought up by a shepherd, and grew to perfection of beautiful manhood. When the golden Apple of Discord (see under APPLE) was thrown on the table of the gods, it was Paris who had to judge between the rival claims of Hera (Juno), Aphrodite (Venus), and Athene (Minerva). Each goddess offered him bribes—the first power, the second the most beautiful of women, and the third martial glory. He awarded the Apple and the title of "Fairest" to Aphrodite, who in return assisted him to carry off Helen, for whom he deserted his wife, OENONE, daughter of the river-god, Cebren. At Troy Paris earned the contempt of all by his cowardice, and he was fatally wounded with a poisoned arrow by PHILOCTETES at the taking of the city.

(2) In Shakespeare's ROMEO AND JULIET, a young nobleman, kinsman of Prince Escalus of Verona, and the unsuccessful suitor of his cousin Juliet.

Paris. A gay city is sometimes so called, from Paris, capital of France, which was known for its brilliant social life.

the Paris of Japan. Osaka.

the little Paris. (1) Brussels; (2) Bucharest; (3) the Galleria Vittorio Emanuele of Milan.

Paris, Matthew (1200?–1259). English historian of the Middle Ages, a monk at the monastery of St. Albans, known for his lively chronicles of the outstanding events in England and Europe of his time. His Chronica Majora, beginning with 1235, and his Historia Minor, or Historia Anglorum, covering the period between 1200 and 1250, are his chief works.

Paris Bound. A light sophisticated comedy by Philip BARRY (1927).

Parisian Wedding, the. The massacre of St. Bartholomew, which took place (Aug. 24, 1572) during the festivities at the marriage of Henri of Navarre and Margaret of France.

Charles IX, although it was not possible for him to recall to life the countless victims of the Parisian Wedding, was ready to explain those murders.—Motley, Dutch Republic, iii, 9.

Parisina. Titular heroine of a poem by BYRON (1816), the wife of Azo, chief of Ferrara. She has been betrothed before her marriage to Hugo, a natural son of Azo, and after Azo takes her for his bride, the attachment of Parisina and Hugo continues and has freer scope for indulgence. One night Azo hears Parisina in her sleep confess her love for Hugo, whereupon he has his son beheaded; though he spares the life of Parisina, no one ever knows what becomes of her. The real Azo was Niccolò III of Ferrara, whose story corresponds in the main with that given in the poem.

Parizade, Princess. Heroine of one of the tales of the Arabian Nights, the Story of the Sisters Who Envied Their Younger Sister. She is most famed for her adventures in search of the Talking Bird, the Singing Tree, and the Yellow or Gold-colored Water. After she finds these treasures, her troubles are at an end. See PRINCE CHERY.

Park, Mungo (1771–1806). English surgeon, traveler, and author, a friend of Sir Walter Scott and famous for his Travels in the Interior of Africa (1799), an account of an exploratory trip along the Niger River. He was killed in a skirmish with the African natives.

Parker, Dorothy, née Rothschild (1893–). American journalist, short-story writer, and author of light verse, known for the malice, satire, cynicism, and flippancy of her poems and sketches, many of which were first published in THE NEW YORKER. Her books include Enough Rope (1926), Sunset Gun (1928), and Death And Taxes (1931), verse; Laments for the Living (1930) and After Such Pleasures (1933), stories and sketches; Not So Deep as a Well (1936), a collection of her verse; Here Lies (1939), a collection of her prose. She was a correspondent in Spain during the Spanish Civil War (1936-1939).

Parker, Sir Gilbert (1862-1932). Canadian novelist. His greatest success was The Seats of the Mighty (1896), a novel of the American Revolution, which sold more than 100,000 copies. The Right of Way (1901) was nearly as successful.

Parker, Henry Taylor (1867-1934). American drama and music critic, for 29 years on the staff of the Boston Transcript (1905-1934).

Parker, Horatio William (1863-1919). American composer. Dean of Yale Music School (1904-1919). Wrote two prize-winning operas with Brian Hooker: Mona (1911) and Fairyland (1915).

Parker, Louis Napoleon (1852-1944). English dramatist and composer, chiefly known for the comedy Pomander Walk (1910), the historical play, Disraeli, starring George Arliss, and the drama Joseph and His Brethren (1913). His versions of the plays of Edmond ROSTAND were often used.

Parker, Matthew (1504-1575). English prelate. Chaplain to Anne Boleyn (1535); dean of Lincoln (1552); during Mary's reign, deprived of preferments; second Anglican archbishop of Canterbury under Queen Elizabeth (1559). Extremely influential in Anglicanism. Published revised Bishops' Bible (1572).

Parker, Theodore (1810-1860). American Unitarian clergyman and transcendentalist (see TRANSCENDENTALISM), known for his emphasis on the role of direct intuition in religion. Because of his unorthodox ideas he was opposed by conservative religionists of his day. He was active in agitation against war, slavery, drunkenness, and the subjugation of women, and gave vigorous assistance to fugitive slaves. His best-known works are The . . . Question between Mr. Andrews Norton and his Alumni . . . (1830), written under the pseudonym of Levi Blodgett; A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion (1842); and Letter Touching the Matter of Slavery (1848). He is the Mr. Power of Work, a novel by Louisa M. ALCOTT.

Parkhurst, Charles Henry (1842-1933). American Presbyterian clergyman. Famous for his attacks on political corruption and organized vice (1892) which caused the election of the reform administration of Mayor William L. Strong in New York.

Parkman, Francis (1823-1893). American historian, known for his accounts of the early colonization of America by the French, English, and Spanish, their relations with the American Indians, and their colonial wars with each other. His works include The Oregon Trail (1849); History of the Conspiracy of the Pontiac (1851); Vassall Morton (1856), a novel, considered to be partly autobiographical; Pioneers of France in the New World (1865); The Book of Roses (1866), a book on horticulture; The Jesuits in North America in the 17th Century (1867); LaSalle and the Discovery of the Great West (1869); The Old Régime in Canada (1874); Count Frontenac and New France under Louis XIV (1877); Montcalm and Wolfe (1884); A Half-Century of Conflict (1892). Parkman wrote under great difficulty, being afflicted during most of his life by weakened eyes and a nervous and mental derangement that prevented him from concentrating on his work.

Park Row. A short street near City Hall, New York, once famous as a newspaper publishing center.

Parley, Peter. The nom de plume of the American author, Samuel Griswold Goodrich (1793-1860). His books attained great popularity.

Parleyings with Certain People of Importance in Their Way. A series of poems by Robert BROWNING (1887). The "people" are Bernard de Mandeville, Daniel Bartoli, Christopher Smart, George Bubb Dodington, Francis Furini, Gerard de Lairese, and Charles Avison. The poems are introduced by a prologue, Apollo and the Fates, and concluded by A Dialogue between John Fust and His Friends.

Parliamentary Novels. A series of novels of parliamentary life by Anthony TROLLOPE, including PHINEAS FINN, PHINEAS REDUX, The Prime Minister (1876), and The Duke's Children (1880). The hero is Phineas Finn, a young Irishman, but Plantagenet Palliser, Duke of OMNIUM, plays a prominent role.

Parliament of Fowls, The. A poem in rime-royal by Geoffrey CHAUCER. Probably written between 1372 and 1386.

the Addled Parliament. A parliament held in 1614-1615, so called because it remonstrated with the King for his levying of "benevolences" but passed no act.

the Barebones Parliament. The parliament convened by Cromwell in 1653; so called from Praise-God Barebones, a fanatical leader, who was a prominent member. Also called the Little Parliament, because it comprised under 150 members.

the Black Parliament. A parliament held by Henry VIII in Bridewell.

the Club Parliament. See below, PARLIAMENT OF BATS.

the Devil's Parliament. The parliament convened at Coventry by Henry VI in 1459, which passed attainder on the Duke of York and his supporters.

the Drunken Parliament. A Scotch parliament assembled at Edinburgh, January 1, 1661, the members of which, it was said, were almost perpetually drunk.

the Good Parliament. Edward III's parliament of 1376; so called because of the severity with which it pursued the unpopular party of the Duke of Lancaster.

the Illiterate, Lack-learning or Lawless Parliament. Same as THE UNLEARNED PARLIAMENT.

the Little Parliament. Another name for the BAREBONES PARLIAMENT.

the Long Parliament. The parliament that sat twelve years and five months, from November 2, 1640, to April 20, 1653, when it was dissolved by Cromwell. A fragment of it, called "THE RUMP" continued till the Restoration, in 1660.

the Mad Parliament. The parliament which assembled at Oxford in 1258, and broke out into open rebellion against Henry III. It confirmed the Magna Charta, the King was declared deposed, and the government was vested in the hands of twenty-four councillors, with Simon de Montfort at their head.

the Merciless (or Unmerciful) Parliament. A junto of fourteen tools of Thomas, Duke of Gloucester, which assumed royal prerogatives in 1388, and attempted to depose Richard II.

the Mongrel Parliament (1681), held at Oxford, consisting of Whigs and Tories, by whom the Exclusion Bill was passed.

the Pacific Parliament. A triennial parliament, dissolved August 8, 1713. It signed the treaty of peace at Utrecht, after a war of eleven years.

the Pensioner (or Pensionary) Parliament (from May 8, 1661, to January 24, 1678 [i.e., 16 years and 260 days]). It was convened by Charles II, and was called "Pensionary" from the many pensions it granted to the adherents of the King.

the Rump Parliament (1659). In the Protectorate; so called because it contained the rump or fag-end of the LONG PARLIAMENT. It was this parliament that voted the trial of Charles I.

the Running Parliament. A Scotch parliament; so called from its constantly being shifted from place to place.

the Unlearned or Lawless Parliament (Parliamentum Indoctum). The parliament convened by Henry IV at Coventry, in Warwickshire (1404), so called because lawyers were excluded from it.

the Unmerciful Parliament. The parliament of 1388 in the reign of Richard II; so called by the people from its tyrannical proceedings.

the Useless Parliament. The parliament convened by Charles I, on June 18, 1625, adjourned to Oxford, August 1, and dissolved August 12, having done nothing but offend the King.

the Wondermaking Parliament. The same as THE UNMERCIFUL PARLIAMENT.

the Parliament of Bats. A parliament held in 1426 during the regency in the reign of Henry VI; so called because the members, being forbidden by the Duke of Gloucester to wear swords, armed themselves with clubs or bats.

Parliament of Dunces. Another name for the UNLEARNED PARLIAMENT.

Parnassians. A school of French poets, flourishing in the latter part of the 19th century, which opposed the excessive emotionalism and subjectivism of ROMANTICISM and aimed at "Olympian calm" in attitude and meticulous precision in technique. The leader of the school was Charles LECONTE DE LISLE; members included Catulle Mendès, Sully PRUDHOMME, José-María de HEREDIA, François Coppée, and Paul VERLAINE. Some critics consider the Parnassian movement the result of the influence of the growing 19th-century scientific and historical objectivity on poetry. Le Parnasse Contemporain (1866, 1871-1876), a collection of the work of the Parnassian poets, gave the school its name.

See also SYMBOLISM.

Parnassus. A mountain near Delphi, Greece, with two summits, one of which was consecrated to Apollo and the Muses, the other to Bacchus. Owing to its connection with the Muses, Parnassus came to be regarded as the seat of poetry and music, and we still use such phrases as to climb Parnassus, meaning "to write poetry." Christopher MORLEY called his narrative on migratory book-selling Parnassus on Wheels (1917).

the legislator or Solon of Parnassus. BOILEAU (1636-1711) was so called by VOLTAIRE, because of his Art of Poetry.

Parnell, Charles Stewart (1846-1891). Irish nationalist leader, a Member of Parliament, who constantly agitated for Home Rule for Ireland, winning Gladstone and the Liberal party over to his side and uniting a number of dissident elements in his own country, until his career was brought to an end by accusations concerning his private life made by his enemies and by his being named co-respondent in a divorce suit (1890) initiated by one Captain O'Shea against his wife Kitty. Parnell is known for the devoted partisans and violent enemies that his policies and his personality created among the Irish people. He is referred to frequently throughout the works of James JOYCE, to whom he was an early hero. See IVY DAY IN THE COMMITTEE ROOM; PHOENIX PARK.

parochial. Restricted to a parish: hence narrow and limited in scope or understanding.

To be parochial is to turn away from the great and look at the little.—Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Margaret Fuller Ossoli, ix.

parodos. In Greek tragedy, the first choral passage sung as the chorus enters. Ordinarily it is preceded by the prologue.

parody. A satirical imitation of a novel or poem. A Christmas Garland, by Max BEERBOHM; Condensed Novels, by Bret HARTE, etc.

Parolles. One of the most famous braggarts and cowards of all literature, a follower of Bertram in Shakespeare's ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL. His name signifies mere empty words. In one scene the bully is taken blindfold among his old acquaintances, and he vilifies their characters to their faces in the belief that he is talking to their enemies.

I know him a notorious liar Think him a great way fool, solely a coward.—Act I. i.

paronomasia. A pun; a play on words.

Parr, Catherine (1512-1548). The sixth and last wife of Henry VIII of England whom she survived. A kind woman, she tried to lessen the religious persecutions of the time, and acted as mother to Prince Edward and Princess Elizabeth and Mary.

Parrington, Vernon Louis (1871-1929). American literary scholar, best known for his Main Currents in American Thought (1927-1930), left incomplete at the time of his death, which was awarded the Pulitzer prize for its first two volumes in 1928. This work is a history of the development of American ideas and their expression in literature, as seen from a liberal viewpoint. It was one of the first critical works to interpret American literature according to economic influences, and had an important effect on scholarship in its field.

Parrish, Anne (1888-). American novelist, noted for her satirical gift. The Perennial Bachelor (1925) won the Harper prize. The Methodist Faun (1929) displays her delicate talent and humor at their best.

Parrish, Maxfield (1870-). Well-known American book illustrator with a romantic and individual style. Also did murals such as the Old King Cole mural now in the St. Regis Hotel in New York. Noted for the luminous blue of his skies.

Parrott, Ursula (1902-). American novelist, principally known as author of sensational novels such as Ex-Wife (1929), etc.

Parry, Sir Charles Hubert Hastings (1848-1918). English composer of symphonies, chamber music, and choral compositions, notably Blest Pair of Sirens. Also noted as musicologist and author of The Evolution of the Art of Music (1896); etc.

Parsees or Parsis. Ghebers or fire-worshippers; descendants of Persians who fled to India during the Mohammedan persecutions of the 7th and 8th centuries and still adhere to their Zoroastrian religion. The word means People of Pars—i.e., Persia.

Parsifal or Parzival. A hero of medieval romance whose story, taken mainly from the 13th-century German epic Parzival by WOLFRAM VON ESCHENBACH, forms the subject of Wagner's opera Parsifal (1882). In English romance he is known as PERCIVAL, in Welsh as Peredur. According to the German legend, Parzival is the guileless fool who alone can heal the sore wound of Amfortas, guardian of the HOLY GRAIL kept in its temple at Montsalvat (Mont Salvagge) in the mountains of Spain. He grows up in innocence in the forest, becomes one of the knights of the ROUND TABLE at King ARTHUR's court, and takes part in numerous adventures but keeps always his strange innocence. Once as a mere lad he visits Amfortas in his castle but with no results, since he is ignorant of his mission and fails to ask the cause of Amfortas' wound, but when he returns years later, he effects the cure and becomes himself guardian of the Holy Grail. In most versions Amfortas has been wounded by the lance of LONGINUS as a punishment for sin, and in many he must be cured by a touch of that same weapon.

Wagner's opera, based on the old romances, makes the wound of Amfortas a product of his sin with the enchantress KUNDRY whom the evil magician KLINGSOR provided as a temptress for the Knights of the Grail. Kundry, who because she laughed at Christ is compelled to wander about the earth until she expiates her sins (see WANDERING JEW), soon repents and endeavors to find healing balsams for the wound, but in vain. When Parsifal, the guileless fool, appears, Klingsor again forces Kundry to act as temptress, but Parsifal resists her, seizes in mid air the lance hurled at him by the angry Klingsor, and fulfills his mission. Amfortas is cured of his wound, Kundry is baptized, and Parsifal becomes the guardian of the Holy Grail.

Parson.

Parson Adams, see ADAMS.

Parson Runo. A simple-minded clergyman, wholly unacquainted with the world; a Dr. Primrose, in fact. It is a Russian household phrase, having its origin in the singular simplicity of the Lutheran clergy of the Isle of Runo.

Parson Trulliber, see TRULLIBER.

Parsons, Elizabeth (1749–1807). An English impostor, who as a child at the age of eleven started the legend of the “Cock Lane Ghost” and was exposed by Dr. Johnson in Gentleman's Magazine.

Parsons, Geoffrey (1879–). American journalist. Chief editorial writer of the New York Herald Tribune (from 1924). Pulitzer prize for editorial writing (1942).

Parsons, Thomas William (1819–1892). American poet, chiefly known as interpreter and translator of Dante's Inferno (with illustrations by Gustave Doré; 1867). His best-known poems are On a Bust of Dante and Paradisi Gloria.

Parson's Tale, The. One of the two tales in prose in Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES. It is a kind of Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, comparing the life of a Christian to a journey from earth to heaven.

The Parson is perhaps best described in the following well-known lines:

A good man was ther of religioun
And was a poore Persoun of a toun
But riche he was of holy thoght and werk
He was also a lerned man, a clerk
That Cristes gospel trewely wolde preche . . .
But Cristes lore and his apostles twelve
He taughte, and first he folwed it himselfe.
Chaucer, Prologue to the Canterbury Tales.

Parthenia. The mistress of Argalus in Sir Philip Sidney's ARCADIA.

Parthenius (fl. 1st century B.C.). Greek grammarian and poet. The only work of his which has come down to us is Love's Woos, consisting of 36 love stories.

Parthenon. The great temple at Athens to Athene Parthenos (i.e., the Virgin), many of the sculptured friezes and fragments of pediments of which are now in the British Museum among the Elgin Marbles. The Temple was begun by the architect Ictinus about 450 B.C., and the embellishment of it was mainly the work of PHIDIAS, whose colossal chryselephantine statue of Athene was its chief treasure.

Parthenope. An old name for Naples; so called from Parthenope, the siren, who threw herself into the sea out of love for ULYSSES, and was cast up on the bay of Naples.

Parthian shot. The ancient Parthians fought on horseback with the bow, and turned their horses as though for flight after each shot. Hence “Parthian shot” or “Parthian arrow” came to mean something cutting or impressive said on the moment of departure.

Partington, Dame, and her mop. A taunt against those who try to withstand progress. Sydney Smith, speaking on the Lords' rejection of the Reform Bill, October, 1831, compares them to Dame Partington with her mop, trying to push back the Atlantic. “She was excellent,” he says, “at a slop or puddle, but should never have meddled with a tempest.” The story is that a Mrs. Partington had a cottage on the shore at Sidmouth, Devon. In November, 1824, a heavy gale drove the waves into her house, and the old lady labored with a mop to sop the water up.

Mrs. Partington. A popular character created, perhaps on the suggestion of the above-related incident, by the American humorist B. P. Shillaber. She is the central figure in his Life and Sayings of Mrs. Partington (1854), Partingtonian Patchwork (1873) and Ik and His Friends (1879). One of the characteristic outbursts of this American Mrs. Malaprop is: “I am not so young as I was once, and I don't believe I shall ever be, if I live to the age of Samson, which, heaven knows as well as I do, I don't want to, for I wouldn't be a centurion or an octagon and survive my factories and become idiomatic by any means.”

Her benevolent face, her use of catnip tea, her faith in the almanac, her domestic virtue, and her knowledge of the most significant facts in the life of every person in the village immediately made a large circle of readers recognize the lifelike portrayal of a person known in every American community.—Cambridge History of American Literature.

Partisan, The, a Tale of the Revolution. The first novel in W. G. SIMMS' Revolutionary trilogy (1835). The others are Mellichampe and KATHERINE WALTON.

Partisan Leader, The. A novel by the Virginia judge, Nathaniel Beverly (Am., 1836), which gained note because of its prediction of the Civil War.

Partisan Review. American literary quarterly, founded in 1934, at first associated with the Communist party and after 1938 characterized by an independent radical editorial viewpoint, broadly sympathetic with Trotskyist Marxism. See MARXISM; TROTSKY, LEON. Its contributors, in the fields of politics, literary criticism, fine arts, fiction, and poetry, included John Dos Passos, James T. Farrell, T. S. Eliot, Wallace Stevens, W. C. Williams, Edmund Wilson, Dwight MacDonald, and George L. K. Morris.

partlet. The hen in Chaucer's NUN'S PRIEST'S TALE, and in REYNARD THE FOX. A partlet was a ruff worn in the 16th century by women, and the reference is to the frill-like feathers round the neck of certain hens.

In the barn the tenant cock
Close to partlet perched on high.
Cunningham.

Sister Partlet with her hooded head, allegorizes the cloistered community of nuns in DRYDEN'S HIND AND PANTHER, where the Roman Catholic clergy are likened to barnyard fowls.

Parton, James (1822-1891). English-born American biographer. His best-known book is the noteworthy Life of Horace Greeley (1855).

Partridge. In Fielding's TOM JONES, the attendant of Tom Jones, faithful, shrewd, and of childlike simplicity. His excitement in the play-house when he goes to see Garrick in Hamlet is described in a famous chapter. Partridge has been both barber and schoolmaster before attaching himself to Tom Jones.

Partridge, Bellamy. American biographer and novelist. Author of the best-seller Country Lawyer (1939), Big Family (1941), and January Thaw (1945).

Partridge, Sir Bernard (1861-1945). Well-known chief cartoonist of Punch, the staff of which he joined in 1891. Originally an actor.

Partridge, William Ordway (1861-1930). American sculptor. Busts of Chief Justice Fuller, Robert Peary, etc.; statues of Grant, Nathan Hale, Horace Greeley. Author of several books on art.

parts of speech. A grammatical class of words of a particular character. The old rhyme by which children used to be taught the parts of speech is:

Three little words you often see Are ARTICLES, a, an, and the.
A NOUN's the name of anything;
As school or garden, hoop or swing.
ADJECTIVES tell the kind of noun;
As great, small, pretty, white, or brown.
Instead of nouns the PRONOUNS stand;
Her head, his face, our arms, your hand.
VERBS tell of something being done;
To read, count, sing, laugh, jump, or run.
How things are done the ADVERBS tell;
As slowly, quickly, ill, or well.
CONJUNCTIONS join the words together;
As, men and women, wind or weather.
The PREPOSITION stands before
A noun, as in or through a door.
The INTERJECTION shows surprise;
As, oh! how pretty! ah! how wise!
The whole are called nine parts of speech,
Which reading, writing, speaking teach.

Parvati. In Hindu mythology, the consort of Siva, better known as Durga or KALI.

Pascal, Blaise (1623-1662). French religious thinker and author, known for his defenses of the religious reform movement of Jansenism. His writings, a number of which became famous in later centuries, are marked by objectivity, rationality, insight, and a graceful, charming, and often ironic style. His best-known works are Lettres provinciales (Provincial Letters), issued beginning in 1656, appearing first anonymously and then under the pseudonym of Montalte, in which he attacks the Jesuit opponents of Jansenism; and the PENSÉES (Thoughts). Before his conversion to Jansenism, Pascal was greatly interested in science, especially mathematics, having invented a calculating machine, done work in connection with the theory of probability, and, in the opinion of some critics, anticipated the system of calculus.

pasch eggs. Easter eggs, a term still in use in Scotland and certain parts of England.

Pasht. See BUBASTIS.

Pasiphae. In Greek legend, a daughter of the Sun and wife of Minos, King of Crete. She was the mother of ARIADNE, and also (through intercourse with a white bull given by Poseidon to Minos) of the MINOTAUR.

pasque eggs. See PASCH EGGS.

Pasquinade. A lampoon or political squib, having ridicule for its object; so called from Pasquino, an Italian tailor of the 15th century, noted for his caustic wit. Some time after his death, a mutilated statue was dug up, representing Ajax supporting Menelaus, or Menelaus carrying the body of Patroclus, or else a gladiator, and was placed at the end of the Braschi Palace near the Piazza Navoni. As it was not clear what the statue represented, and as it stood opposite Pasquin's house, it came to be called "Pasquin." The Romans affixed their political, religious, and personal satires to it; hence the name. At the other end of Rome was an ancient statue of Mars, called Marforio, to which were affixed replies to the Pasquinades.

Then the procession started, took the way
From the New Prisons by the Pilgrim's Street
The street of the Governo, Pasquin's Street, (Where was stuck up, 'mid other epigrams,
A quatrain . . . but of all that, presently!)

Browning, The Ring and the Book, xii, 137.

pass or common pass. At the English Universities, an ordinary degree, without honors. A candidate getting this is called a passman.

Passage to India. Title of a poem by Walt WHITMAN. E. M. FORSTER wrote a novel entitled A Passage to India (1924).

Passamonte, Gines de. In Cervantes' DON QUIXOTE, the galley-slave set free by Don Quixote. He returned the favor by stealing Sancho's wallet and ass. Subsequently he reappeared as a puppet-showman.

Passelyon. A young foundling brought up by Morgan le Fay whose amorous adventures are related in the old romance Perceforest, vol. iii.

Passepartout. In Verne's romance AROUND THE WORLD IN EIGHTY DAYS, the French valet who accompanies Phileas Fogg on his hurried world tour.

Passionate Pilgrim, The. A collection of lyric poems (1599), published by William Jaggard, an English printer, with an announcement on the title page that they were "By W. Shakespeare," although only about four of the poems are considered by 20th-century scholars to be of Shakespeare's authorship. Others are by Griffin, Barnfield, Marlowe, and lesser-known writers; the collection is regarded as being properly a "poetical miscellany." See TOTTEL'S MISCELLANY.

The earliest story by Henry JAMES is entitled The Passionate Pilgrim (1870 or 1871).

Passion Play (Ger. Passionsspiel). A dramatic presentation of the events of Passion Week, i.e., the Passion and Death of Christ, given periodically by the peasants of Oberammergau, a little village in Bavaria. It was first performed there in 1633; at that time the villagers made a vow to give it at regular intervals if delivered from a ravaging plague. After 1680, the Passion Play has, with some few interruptions, been given every tenth year. It attracts great crowds of spectators, who come from all over the world.

Passions Spin the Plot. A novel by Vardis Fisher (Am., 1933). The title is taken from a sonnet in George Meredith's MODERN LOVE, which supplies also the titles of three other novels by Mr. Fisher, In Tragic Life (1932); We Are Betrayed (1935); and No Villain Need Be (1936).

In tragic life, God wot,
No villain need be. Passions spin the plot.
We are betrayed by what is false within.

Passover. A Jewish festival to commemorate the deliverance of the Israelites, when the angel of death (that slew the first-born of the Egyptians) passed over their houses, and spared all who did as Moses commanded them. It is held from the 15th to the 22nd of the first month, Nisan, i.e., about April 13 to 20.

Pasternak, Boris Leonidovich (1890-). Russian poet, author of Themes and Variations (1923); Second Birth (1932); etc.

Pasteur, Louis (1822-1895). French scientist, famous for his discoveries in applied bacteriology. His most sensational work was concerned with the development of a curative treatment for hydrophobia. Popularly, his name is associated with a process (developed by him and called pasteurization in his honor) of destroying pathogenic organisms in milk and other liquids by the application of heat. Pasteur is the titular hero of a drama by Sacha GUITRY. A film, The Life of Louis Pasteur, with Paul Muni, received the Motion Picture Academy Award in 1936.

pastiche. A literary or artistic effort that imitates or caricatures the work of another artist or artists. The Unique Hamlet, by Vincent STARRETT, is a pastiche of a SHERLOCK HOLMES story.

Paston Letters. A series of letters (with wills, leases, and other documents) written by or to members of the Paston family in Norfolk between the years 1424 and 1509. The Letters are an invaluable source of information concerning the customs and business methods of the upper middle classes of 15th-century England.

Pastor, Tony (1837-1908). Famous American actor and theatrical manager. Opened in New York "Tony Pastor's Opera House" (1865) and built his own theater, known as Tony Pastor's, on Union Square (1888). Reputed to have started farce-comedy in America. He initiated vaudeville road shows and imported talent from the London music halls.

pastoral poetry. In the strict sense, poetry dealing with the life of actual shepherds and country folk. Many celebrated pastorals, among them Virgil's BUCOLICS, Milton's LYCIDAS, Shelley's *ADONAI*s, and Arnold's THYRSIS present contemporaries in the guise of shepherds leading a pastoral existence. This convention was also followed in fiction in such romances as Mlle de Scudéry's CYRUS.

Past Recaptured, The. English translation of Le Temps retrouvé, the final volume of Marcel Proust's long novel REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST, published in 1928. It carries the narrator and the various characters down to the time of World War I, showing the effect of the war on their lives and thoughts, and presents generalizations by the author on the subject of time and memory, as in SWANN'S WAY, the first volume.

Pat. An Irishman.

Patchen, Kenneth (1911-). American poet, known for the combined bitterness and sentimentality, violence, melodrama, and imagination of his poetry, distinguished by striking imagery and dealing with the injustices and tragedies of 20th-century American life. His books include Before the Brave (1936); First Will and Testament (1939); The Journal of Albion Moonlight (1941; prose); The Dark Kingdom (1942); etc.

Patelin. The artful cheat in the 14th-century French comedy L'Avocat Pathelin. The French say, savoir son Patelin (to know how to bamboozle you). When he wants William Josseume to sell him cloth on credit, he artfully praises the father of the merchant. One of his remarks, "revenons à nos moutons (Let us return to our sheep)" has become a proverbial expression for "let us get back to the subject." See also under MOUTONS.

Pater, Walter Horatio (1839-1894). English critic, essayist, and novelist, known for his emphasis on ideal beauty and the perfection of form in art and literature, and for his graceful, harmonious, and subtle prose style. His works include Studies in the History of the Renaissance (1873), a collection of essays; MARIUS THE EPICUREAN (1885), a philosophic novel and his most widely known work;

Imaginary Portraits (1887); Appreciations (1889), studies of Shakespeare, Wordsworth, and other writers; Plato and Platonism (1893); THE CHILD IN THE HOUSE (1894); Greek Studies (1894) and Gaston de Latour (1896), posthumously published although left unfinished at the time of his death. Pater, most strongly influenced by Plato and Goethe, was associated with the PRE-RAPHAELITE BROTHERHOOD and was a leading spokesman for the doctrine of "ART FOR ART'S SAKE." He spent most of his life in scholarly seclusion at Oxford University. His essay on the Monna Lisa of LEONARDO DA VINCI is often quoted.

paternoster (Lat., "Our Father"). The Lord's Prayer; from the first two words in the Latin version. Every tenth bead of a rosary is so called, because at that bead the Lord's Prayer is repeated; the name is also given to a certain kind of fishing tackle, in which hooks and weights to sink them are fixed alternately on the line, somewhat in rosary fashion.

a paternoster-while. Quite a short time; the time it takes one to say a paternoster.

Paternoster Row (London) was probably so named from the rosary or paternoster makers. There is mention as early as 1374 of a Richard Russell, a "paternosterer," who dwelt there, and we read of "one Robert Nikke, a paternoster maker and citizen," in the reign of Henry IV. Another suggestion is that it was so called because funeral processions on their way to St. Paul's began their paternoster at the beginning of the Row.

Paterson, Mrs. Isabel (Bowles). American novelist, wit, and literary columnist. Her novels are chiefly historical. Her book column in the New York Herald Tribune Books (now Weekly Book Review) has run since 1922.

Paterson, William (1658-1719). Scottish-born British merchant and financier who originated the plan of the Bank of England. Headed the ill-fated and wildly speculative Darien Expedition to colonize the Isthmus of Panama (1698), from which he returned, partially insane, as one of a handful of survivors. Helped promote the Scottish union with England and advocated free trade prior to Adam Smith.

Pathan. A member of the principal race of Afghanistan or of one of the independent Afghan tribes on the northwestern frontier of India. Many Pathans have served the British in the native army and in civil service. There are about four million Indian Pathans.

pathetic fallacy. A phrase invented by RUSKIN to designate the illusion that external objects seem actuated by human feelings, particularly when one is under great emotional strain. Thus when a poet is tormented by grief, he is apt to ascribe to inanimate nature either sympathy or heartless cruelty. Tennyson's IN MEMORIAM, Shelley's *ADONAI*s, and other elegies are especially noteworthy for eloquent effects gained by the use of the pathetic fallacy.

Pathfinder. A title given to the American Major-General John Charles Frémont (1813-1890), who conducted four expeditions across the Rocky Mountains.

Pathfinder, The. A historical novel by COOPER (1840), one of the LEATHERSTOCKING series. Its setting, in the Lake Ontario region, gives it the scope of a novel of both woodcraft and seamanship. The plot is largely concerned with Leatherstocking's hopeless love for Mabel Dunham, whom he finally surrenders to another lover.

Patience or Bunthorne's Bride. A well-known comic opera by Gilbert and Sullivan (1881). The hero, Bunthorne (a caricature of Oscar Wilde) is pursued by a whole troop of love-sick ladies.

Patience Worth. A mysterious spirit who according to her own account, which was dictated on the ouija board in 1913 to Mrs. John H. Curran of St. Louis, lived in 1649 "across the sea." She is the reputed author of two or three works of fiction, especially one, published under the title Patience Worth, which received wide publicity.

Patient Griselda or Grisildis, see GRISELDA.

Patmore, Coventry Kersey Dighton (1823-1896). English poet, a friend of TENNYSON, RUSKIN, and later G. M. HOPKINS, for awhile associated loosely with the PRE-RAPHAELITE BROTHERHOOD, contributing to THE GERM. During the first part of his career his poems were concerned with the love between husbands and wives. After the year 1864, when he was converted to Roman Catholicism, his poetry dealt with mystical and religious subjects. Among his works are The Betrothal (1854), The Espousals (1856), Faithful Forever (1860), and The Victories of Love (1862), all parts of The Angel in the House, a planned long poem; The Unknown Eros (1877); Amelia (1878); Collected Works (1886); Principle in Art (1889), Religio Poetae (1893), and Rod, Root, and Flower (1895), prose essays and articles.

Patmos. The island of the Sporades in the Aegean Sea (now called Patmo or Patino) to which St. John retired—or was exiled (Rev. i. 9). Hence the name is used allusively for a place of banishment or solitude.

patriarch (Gr. patria, "family," archein, "to rule"). The head of a tribe or family who rules by paternal right; applied specially (after Acts vii. 8) to the twelve sons of Jacob, and to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob and their forefathers. In one passage (Acts ii. 29) David also is spoken of as a patriarch.

In the early Church, patriarch, first mentioned in the council of Chalcedon, but virtually existing from about the time of the council of Nice, was the title of the highest of Church officers. In the Orthodox Eastern Church the bishops of Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem are patriarchs; and within a religious order the title is given to the founder, as St. Benedict, St. Francis, and St. Dominic.

patrician. Properly speaking, one of the patres (fathers) or senators of Rome, and their descendants. As they held for many years all the honors of the state, the word came to signify the magnates or nobility of a nation, the aristocrats.

Patrick, St. See under SAINTS.

Patrick Spens, Sir. A famous early Scotch ballad.

patrin or patteran. The leaves or grass that gypsies throw down along their trail to indicate the way they have gone. A collection of essays by Louise Imogen GUINEY (1897) was called Patrins.

Patriot, The (Piccolo mondo antico). A novel by FOGAZZARO (1896), the first of a trilogy. See MAIRONI, PIERO.

Patroclus. The loyal friend of Achilles, in Homer's ILIAD. When Achilles refused to fight in order to annoy Agamemnon, he sent Patroclus in his own armor at the head of the Myrmidons to the battle, and Patroclus was slain by HECTOR.

patronymic. A name formed with an affix which means "the son of," as Pelides, son of Peleus; Johnson, son of John; MacDonald, son of Donald; Ivanovich, son of Ivan; etc.

patroons. The name given to the original landed proprietors in what was then the New Netherlands. These colonists retained their feudal privileges up to the time of the Anti-Rent War.

Pattee, Fred Lewis (1863-). American literary critic. Author of A History of American Literature Since 1870 (1915); The Development of the American Short Story (1923); The New American Literature (1930); etc.

Prolific writer. Put together an estimated 40,000,000 words in his lifetime. His Merriwell stories reached a total circulation of 125,000,000 copies.

Patterne, Sir Willoughby. "The Egoist" in George Meredith's novel of that name. See EGOIST.

Crossjay Patterne. A young boy, lazy and lovable, in the same novel.

Patterson, Joseph Medill (1879-1946). American journalist. Editor of the New York Daily News (from 1925).

Pattie, James Ohio (1804-?1850). A Kentucky-born explorer whose Personal Narrative (1831) was edited and partially written by one Timothy Flint. In another book, The Hunters of Kentucky by B. Bilson (1847), a great deal of the material was plagiarized.

Pattieson, Mr. Peter. A character who appears in the introduction of THE HEART OF MIDLOTHIAN, by Walter Scott, and again in the introduction of THE BRIDE OF LAMMERMOOR. He is a hypothetical assistant teacher at Gandercleuch, and the feigned author of Tales of My Landlord, which Scott pretends were published by Jedediah CLEISHBOTHAM after the death of Pattieson.

Pattison, Mark (1813-1884). English scholar and follower of John Henry NEWMAN. Author, among other books, of a Life of John Milton (1879).

Paul, Eden (1865-). With his wife, Gertrude Mary Paul, née Davenport, professionally known as Cedar Paul, translator of important European, chiefly Russian, novelists.

Paul, Elliot Harold (1891-). American journalist and novelist, for a number of years a resident of France and Spain and associated with the expatriate group of American writers of the LOST GENERATION. He was one of the editors of the magazine TRANSITION. Among his novels are Indelible (1922); Impromptu (1923); Low Run Tide (1929); Lava Rock (1929); The Amazon (1930); The Governor of Massachusetts (1930); Concert Pitch (1938). After his return to the U.S. in the late 1930's, he wrote several best-selling books, including The Life and Death of a Spanish Town (1937), an account of life in the Balearic Islands before and during the Spanish Civil War; The Last Time I Saw Paris (1942), reminiscences of life in Paris before the defeat of France in World War II; Linden on the Saugus Branch (1947); and a number of satirical detective stories.

Paul, Kegan (1828-1902). English publisher of the works of Tennyson, Hardy, Meredith, Stevenson, etc. Was joined (1881) by Alfred Trench and helped form (1889) the house of Keegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., Ltd., which was later incorporated in George Routledge & Sons, Ltd.

Paul, Louis (1901-). American satirical and humorous novelist; author of The Pumpkin Coach (1935); etc.

Paul, St. See under SAINTS.

St. Paul the Hermit. See under SAINTS.

robbing Peter to pay Paul. See ROB.

Paul and Virginia. A romance by Bernardin de St. Pierre (1788). Paul is the illegitimate child of Margaret, who has retired to Port Louis in the Mauritius to bury herself. He grows up as the playmate of Virginia, the daughter of a French widow, Mme de la Tour, and as they grow in years, their fondness for each other develops into love. When Virginia is fifteen, her mother's aunt adopts her and begs that she be sent to France to finish her education. She is two years in France. As she refuses to marry according to her aunt's wishes, she is disinherited and sent back to her mother. Within a cable's length of the island, a hurricane dashes the ship to pieces, and the dead body of Virginia is thrown upon the shore. Paul is prostrate with grief, and within two months follows her to the grave.

Paul Bunyan, see BUNYAN, PAUL.

Paul Clifford. A novel by Bulwer Lytton (1830). The hero, a youth of unknown parentage, is falsely accused of stealing a watch from a lawyer named Brandon. He escapes from prison, turns highwayman, and is brought to trial in the course of time, before this same Brandon, who is now a judge. Just before he passes the death sentence Judge Brandon learns from a note passed to him that this is his own son. He dies of shock and Clifford escapes to America.

Paulding, James Kirke (1778-1860). Associated with Washington Irving in publishing the humorous magazine Salmagundi (1807-1808). U.S. secretary of the navy (1838-1841); author of A Life of Washington (1835); etc.

Paulina. In Shakespeare's Winter's Tale, the noble-spirited wife of Antigonous, a Sicilian lord, and the friend of Queen Hermione.

Paulina is clever, generous, strong-minded, and warm-hearted, fearless in asserting the truth, firm in her sense of right, enthusiastic in all her affections, quick in thought, resolute in word, and energetic in action, but heedless, hot-tempered, impatient, loud, bold, voluble, and turbulent of tongue.—Mrs. Jameson.

Paul Pry. An idle, meddlesome fellow, who has no occupation of his own, and is always interfering with other folk's business. The term comes from the hero of John Poole's comedy, Paul Pry (1825). He always introduces himself with the apology, "I hope I don't intrude."

Paul Revere's Ride. A narrative poem by Longfellow (1861) telling of the midnight ride of the Revolutionary patriot Paul Revere, to spread the news of an expected British raid.

Paumanok. The Indian name of Long Island which was used by Walt Whitman in his Leaves of Grass.

Pauncefote, Julian. 1st Baron Pauncefote (1828-1902). English diplomat. Ambassador to the U.S. (1893). Signed Hay-Pauncefote Treaty (1901) which provided equal passage for all nations through the Panama Canal.

Pau-Puk-Keewis. In Longfellow's Hiawatha, a cunning mischief-maker, who teaches the North American Indians the game of hazard, and strips them by his winnings of all their possessions. When Hiawatha pursues him, he is changed into a huge beaver, but is slain nevertheless.

Now in winter, when the snowflakes Whirl in eddies round the lodges.
"There," they cry, "comes Pau-Puk-Keewis;
He is dancing thro' the village,
He is gathering in his harvest."

Hiawatha, xvii.

Pausanias (2nd century A.D.). Greek traveler and geographer. His accounts of the monuments of ancient Greece before their destruction are of extreme value in research.

Pavlova, Anna (1885-1931). Russian dancer, especially famous for The Death of the Swan (a ballet composed for her by Fokine).

pax (Lat., "peace"). The "kiss of peace," which is given in the Roman Church at High Mass. It is omitted on Maundy Thursday, from horror at the kiss of Judas.

Pax Britannica. The peace imposed by British rule. The phrase is modeled on the Latin Pax Romana, the peace existing between the different members of the Roman Empire.

pax vobis (cum) (Peace be unto you). The formula used by a bishop instead of "the Lord be with you," wherever this versicle occurs in Divine service. They are the words used by Christ to His Apostles on the first Easter morning.

Paxson, Frederic Logan (1877-1948). American historian. Pulitzer prize (1924) for History of the American Frontier.

Payn, James (1830-1898). English novelist. A voluminous writer of popular novels. Contributed to Household Words, edited by Charles Dickens, and was himself the editor of the Cornhill Magazine (1883-1896).

Payne, John (1842-1916). English poet and translator. Principally known for his version of the Arabian Nights (9 vols.; 1882-1884). See also under BURTON.

Payne, John Howard (1791-1852). American actor and playwright. His plays, Brutus, or the Fall of Tarquin, and Virginus, were written for the actor Edmund Kean. In his opera Clari (1823) occurs the song that assured his fame, Home, Sweet Home, which was based on a song he had heard sung by a Sicilian peasant girl.

P.C. The Roman Patres Conscripti. See CONSCRIPT FATHERS.

Peabody, George (1795-1869). American philanthropist who founded and endowed a number of institutions and museums in his name at Baltimore, Peabody, Mass., Yale, Harvard, etc. Member, American Hall of Fame (1900).

Peabody, Josephine Preston (1874-1922). American poet and dramatist. Her play, The Piper, won the 1910 verse play contest of the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre at Stratford-on-Avon. Her best-known poem is The Singing Man.

peace at any price. Lord Palmerston sneered at the Quaker statesman, John Bright, as a "peace-at-any-price man." The expression was used of an extreme pacifist.

peace in our time. A phrase used by Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain of England in an attempt to justify his appeasement of the demands of Adolf Hitler at the time of the MUNICH CRISIS (1938).

peace with honor. A phrase popularized by Lord Beaconsfield on his return from the Congress of Berlin (1878), when he said:

Lord Salisbury and myself have brought you back peace—but a peace I hope with honor, which may satisfy our Sovereign and tend to the welfare of the country.

peace without victory. A self-explanatory phrase much in use during World War I.

the Perpetual Peace. The peace concluded June 24, 1502, between England and Scotland, whereby Margaret, daughter of Henry VII, was betrothed to James IV. A few years afterwards the battle of Flodden Field was fought. The name has also been given to other treaties, as that between Austria and Switzerland in 1474, and between France and Switzerland in 1516.

Peace, The. A comedy by ARISTOPHANES (415 B.C.). The hero is TRYGAEUS.

Peachum. In Gay's BEGGAR'S OPERA, a despicable fellow, a patron of a gang of thieves, and receiver of their stolen goods. His house is the resort of thieves, pickpockets, and villains of all sorts. He betrays his comrades when it is for his own benefit, and even procures the arrest of their leader, Captain MACHEATH.

Mrs. Peachum. Wife of Peachum. She recommends her daughter Polly to be "some-what nice in her deviations from virtue."

Polly Peachum. The daughter of Peachum, a pretty girl, who really loves Captain Macheath, marries him, and remains faithful even when he disclaims her. When the reprieve arrives, the captain confesses his marriage and vows to abide by Polly for the rest of his life. This stage role led three actresses to the peerage: Miss Fenton (Duchess of Bolton), Miss Bolton (Lady Thurlow), and Miss Stephens (Countess of Essex).

by the peacock! An obsolete oath which at one time was thought blasphemous. The fabled incorruptibility of the peacock's flesh caused the bird to be adopted as a type of the resurrection.

the peacock's feather. An emblem of vain-glory, and in some Eastern countries a mark of rank.

As a literary term, the expression is used of a borrowed ornament of style spatchcocked into the composition; the allusion is to the fable of the jay who decked herself out in peacock's feathers, making herself an object of ridicule.

The peacock's tail is emblem of an Evil Eye, or an ever-vigilant traitor; hence the feathers are considered unlucky, and the superstitious will not have them in the house. The classical legend is that ARGUS, who had 100 eyes, was changed into a peacock by Juno, the eyes forming the beautifully colored disks in the tail.

Peacock, Thomas Love (1785-1866). English novelist, known for his burlesque romances containing eccentric characters (often drawn from life), ridiculous incidents, and interpolated drinking songs of a rousing nature; these books particularly satirize the GOTHIC NOVEL. Among them are HEADLONG HALL (1816); Melincourt (1817); Nightmare Abbey (1818); Maid Marian (1822); The Misfortunes of Elphin (1829); CROCHET CASTLE (1831); Gryll Grange (1860). Peacock was a businessman, working for the East India Tea Company. See also LAMB, CHARLES. He was a friend of SHELLEY and the father of the first wife of George MEREDITH.

Peacock Throne. A throne built (1628 to 1635) at Delhi, India, for the Indian ruler, Shah Jehan. Each of its twelve pillars was decorated with two peacocks glittering with gems. A century later (1739), Nadir Shah took it to Persia.

Peale, Rembrandt (1778-1860). American painter. Widely known for his portraits and historical scenes. Painted a portrait of Washington from life (1795). Rembrandt's brothers, Raphael and Titian, were also painters. So was their father, although his name was Charles.

peanut gallery. A name applied to the top gallery in the theater where the cheaper seats are located. The origin of the name came from the practice of eating peanuts and throwing shells on the stage. In other countries the same gallery is called Olympus.

to cast pearls before swine. To give what is precious to those who are unable to understand its value: a Biblical phrase (Matt. vii. 6).

Pearl, The. A 14th-century mystical allegorical poem, written in Middle English, brought to light only in the latter part of the 19th century but considered one of the best in existence. It laments the death of a child, considered to be the poet's daughter Margaret (from Fr. Marguerite, "pearl" or "daisy"), and gives a picture of her happiness in heaven. Symbolism of the pearl and the daisy, both signifying virginity, recurs throughout the poem, as does allusion to the Bible and medieval theology.

Pearl, Little. In Hawthorne's SCARLET LETTER, the elf-like child of Hester Prynne, born out of wedlock.

Pearl Poet, the. Supposed author of THE PEARL, which appears as one of four poems in a late 14th-century manuscript, written in the West Midland dialect and known as MS. Cotton Nero A X. See COTTON, Sir ROBERT BRUCE. The other four poems in the manuscript are Purity, Patience, and Sir Gawain and the Green Knight. See GAWAIN. Virtually nothing is known of the poet, although scholars agree that the sophisticated form and concept of the poem suggest that he was either attached to the court or subject to its influence. Oscar Car-gill believes that the man might have been either one John Don (or Donne) or one John Prat, and that he served as guardian to the small daughter of the Earl of Pembroke, granddaughter to King Henry III, writing the poem The Pearl on the death of the child at the age of two, although he himself bore no blood relationship to her. There seems to be further evidence for this theory in the fact that Henry III was very fond of pearls and that the child's mother had been named Margaret.

Pearse, Padraic Henry (1879-1916). Irish poet and patriot. During the Easter Rebellion (1916), commander in chief of the Irish republican forces and president of the provisional government. Shot by a British firing squad. Collected Works (1917).

Pearson, Edmund Lester (1880-1937). American librarian, bibliophile and literary criminologist. Books in Black or Red (1923); Studies in Murder (1924); Murder at Smutty Nose (1926); The Trial of Lizzie Borden (1937); etc. See also BORDEN, LIZZIE.

Peary, Robert Edwin (1856-1920). American arctic explorer. Reached North Pole on April 6, 1909. Dr. Frederick A. Cook's claim that he had reached the Pole on April 21, 1908, a year before Peary, was later discredited.

Peasant Bard. See under BARD.

Peasant Cantata, see under CANTATA.

Peasants' War, the. The name given to the insurrections of the peasantry of southern Germany in the early 16th century, especially to that of 1524 in Swabia, Franconia, Saxony, and other German states, in consequence of the tyranny and oppression of the nobles. It was ended by the Battle of Frankenhausen (1525), when many thousands of the peasants were slain. In 1502 occurred the rebellion called the Laced Shoe, from its cognizance; in 1514, the League of Poor Conrad; in 1523, the Latin War.

Peaseblossom. A fairy in Shakespeare's MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM. Other fairies in the play are Cobweb, Moth, and Mustardseed.

Peattie, Donald Culross (1898-). American botanist and author, best known for his popular books on nature subjects, written in a lyrical prose style. These are Singing in the Wilderness: A Salute to John James Audubon (1935); Almanac for Moderns (1935); Green Laurels: The Lives and Achievements of the Great Naturalists (1936); A Book of Hours (1937); Flowering Earth (1939). He also wrote scholarly scientific studies, novels, books for children, and an autobiography, The Road of a Naturalist (1941). His wife, Louise Peattie, née Redfield (1900-) has written a number of novels.

Peau de Chagrin. A novel by BALZAC, usually translated as THE WILD ASS'S SKIN.

peccavi (Lat., "I have sinned"). An admission of guilt. Hence to cry peccavi, "to acknowledge one's guilt."

Peck, George Wilbur (1840-1916). American humorist, well-known for Peck's Bad Boy and His Pa (1883) and other Peck's-Bad-Boy stories.

Peck, Harry Thurston (1856-1914). Professor of Latin at Columbia and editor of The Bookman (1895-1902). An unusual critic who met with social disaster in 1910, leading to his suicide.

Peck, John Mason (1789-1858). A Baptist preacher in New York State who wrote several books on the West still considered authoritative. Guide for Emigrants (1831); Life of Daniel Boone (1847); etc.

Peckham, Richard. See under HOLDEN, RAYMOND PECKHAM.

Peckham, Silas. In O. W. Holmes' ELSIE VENNER, a hard-headed New England school teacher who "keeps a young lady's school exactly as he would have kept a hundred head of cattle—for the simple unadorned purpose of making just as much money in just as few years as can be safely done."

Pecksniff. A hypocrite, from the character of that name in Dickens' MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT, who is "architect and land surveyor," at Salisbury. He prates about the beauty of charity and the duty of forgiveness, but is altogether a canting humbug. Ultimately he is so reduced in position that he becomes "a drunken, begging, squalid, letter-writing man," out at elbows, and almost shoeless. Pecksniff's specialty is the "sleek, smiling, drawing abomination of hypocrisy."

If ever man combined within himself all the mild qualities of the lamb with a considerable touch of the dove, and not a dash of the crocodile, or the least possible suggestion of the very mildest seasoning of the serpent, that man was Mr. Pecksniff, "the messenger of peace."—Ch. 19.

Charity and Mercy Pecksniff. The two daughters of the "architect and land surveyor." Charity is thin, ill-natured, and a shrew, eventually jilted by a weak young man, who really loves her sister. Mercy Pecksniff, usually called "Merry," is pretty and true-hearted. Though flippant and foolish as a girl, she becomes greatly toned down by the troubles of her married life.

Pédauque, Queen. See COIGNARD, JEROME.

Pedlington, Little. An English village typical of all the pettiness and hypocrisy that flourish in small communities; described in John Poole's Little Pedlington and the Pedlingtonians. It has no actual existence.

Pèdre, Don. A Sicilian nobleman in Molière's comedy LE SICILIEN OU L'AMOUR PEINTRE, owner of the slave Isidore, loved by Adraste.

Pedro, Dr. A character in Cervantes' DON QUIXOTE, whose full name is Dr. Pedro Rezio de Agüero, court physician in the island of Barataria. He carries a whalebone rod in his hand, and whenever any dish of food is set before SANCHO PANZA, the governor, he touches it with his wand, that it may be instantly removed as unfit for the governor to eat. Partridges are "forbidden by Hippocrates," olla podridas are "most pernicious," rabbits are "a sharp-haired diet," veal may not be touched, but "a few wafers and a thin slice or two of quince" may not be harmful.

The governor, being served with some beef hashed with onions, . . . fell to with more avidity than if he had been set down to Milan godwits, Roman pheasants, Sorrento veal, Moron partridges, or green geese of Lavajos; and turning to Dr. Pedro, he said, "Look you, signor doctor, I want no dainties, . . . for I have been always used to beef, bacon, pork, turnips, and onions."—Don Quixote, II. ii, 10, 12.

Pedro, Don. (1) The Prince of Aragon in Shakespeare's MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

(2) Vasco da Gama's rival in Meyerbeer's opera, L'Africaine.

Peebles, Peter. In Scott's REDGAUNTLET, the Scotch plaintiff in the celebrated case of Peebles against Plainstones that is finally appealed to Parliament. By this time Peter has become so self-important and so utterly good-for-nothing that he is soon known as "the old scarecrow of Parliament House." He is litigious, hard-hearted and credulous; a liar, and a miserable drunken pauper.

peel. A small castle, tower or fortified residence, common on both sides of the Scottish border in the sixteenth century.

Peel, Sir Robert (1788–1850). English statesman. First lord of treasury, chancellor of exchequer, and prime minister (1834–1835). Again first lord of treasury and prime minister (1841). Reorganized Bank of England, initiated reforms in Ireland, supported free trade and emancipation of the Jews. As chief secretary for Ireland (1812–1818) he instituted the Irish constabulary, from which came the nickname "peelers," afterwards also applied to the London police, who are also called "Bobbies."

Peele, George (1558?–1597). English playwright and poet of the Elizabethan period, author of dramas, pageants, lyrics for use in his plays, and verse celebrating various occasions of honor in the lives of noble patrons. His works include the following: plays—The Arraignment of Paris (ca. 1581), The Battle of Alcazar (1594), The Old Wives' Tale (1595), and The Love of King David and Fair Bethsabe (1599); poetry—Polyhymnia (1590) and The Honor of the Garter (1593), the latter addressed to the Earl of Northumberland.

peeler. See under PEEL, SIR ROBERT.

Peeperkorn, Mynheer. In Thomas Mann's THE MAGIC MOUNTAIN, a rich, elderly, retired Dutch coffee-planter from the Dutch East Indies, who comes with Clavdia CHAUCHAT to the HAUS BERGHOF. He immediately overwhelms the other characters of the novel—all sick or half-sick patients at the sanatorium—by his forceful personality and astonishing physical appearance, for he is a great, fat man with white hair, tremendous energy, a huge appetite for food and drink, and a habit of speaking in broken, incoherent sentences, as though his immense strength and passion refuse to be disciplined. Peeperkorn is considered to represent the sensually human element in the novel, and for a while he interests Hans CASTORP in leaving the mountains and returning to "normal" society. The planter is, however, growing old, and one day in the forest, in the presence of a party from the sanatorium, he delivers his final challenge to nature—a mighty speech which no one can hear because the roar of a nearby waterfall drowns out his words. Finding he can no longer live with the intensity of his youth, he commits suicide by means of a symbolic mechanism made of steel, gold, ivory, and rubber, and a poison composed of animal and vegetable substances.

Peep-o'-Day Boys. Irish insurgents of 1784, who prowled at daybreak, searching for arms.

Peer Gynt. A poetic drama by Henrik IBSEN (1867), which takes as its hero the legendary Peer Gynt of Norse folklore. In the drama Peer Gynt possesses a riotous imagination, is a great braggart and egotist, but invariably avoids any issue. In a long series of fantastic adventures that take him over the face of the globe, he proves his true character, and comes back to Norway at last to find Death, the Button Molder, waiting to melt him back to nothing, and Solveig, the faithful love of his youth, also waiting. Peer Gynt's dotting, scolding old mother, Ase, is a prominent character, and her death in the third act is one of the most effective scenes of the play. The music written by Edvard GRIEG for the play became famous as the Peer Gynt Suites, especially the first suite (Anitra's Dance, etc.).

Peers. The twelve most illustrious knights or paladins of Charlemagne. Also known as douzepeers. Their names are not always given alike. In the Chanson de Roland they are Roland (or Orlando), Oliver, Ivon, Ivory, Oton, Berengier, Samson, Anseis, Gerin, Gerier, Engelier, and Gerard de Rousillon.

Peers of the Realm. The five orders of Duke, Marquess, Earl, Viscount, and Baron. The word peer is the Latin pares (equals), and in feudal times all great vassals were held equal in rank.

the Twelve Peers of Charlemagne. See PALADINS.

Peerybingle, John. In Dickens' CRICKET ON THE HEARTH, a carrier, "lumbering, slow, and honest; heavy, but light of spirit; rough upon the surface, but gentle at the core; dull without, but quick within; stolid, but so good. O mother Nature, give thy children the true poetry of heart that hid itself in this poor carrier's breast, and we can bear to have them talking prose all their life long!"

Mrs. Peerybingle. John's wife, called by her husband "Dot." She is a little chubby, cheery young wife, very fond of her husband and very proud of her baby. She shelters Edward PLUMMER in her cottage for a time, and thereby places herself under a cloud. But the marriage of Edward with May FIELDING clears up the mystery, and John loves his little Dot more fondly than ever.

Peg. In Arbuthnot's satire, The History of John Bull (1712), the sister of John Bull; meant for the Scotch Presbyterian Church and the country of Scotland.

What think you of my sister Peg [Scotland], that faints at the sound of an organ, and yet will dance and frisk at the noise of a bagpipe?—History of John Bull.

Pegasus. In classic myth, the winged horse of the Muses, born of the sea foam and the blood of the slaughtered MEDUSA. He was caught by BELLEROPHON, who mounted him and destroyed the CHIMAERA. But when Bellerophon attempted to ascend to heaven, he was thrown from the horse, and Pegasus mounted alone to the skies to become the constellation of the same name. Hence Pegasus is used as a synonym for inspiration. According to the legend, when the Muses contended with the daughters of Pieros, Mount Helicon rose heavenward with delight; but Pegasus gave it a kick, stopped its ascent, and brought out of the mountain the soul-inspiring waters of the fountain HIPPOCRENE.

to break Pegasus's neck. To write halting poetry.

Peggotty, Clara. In Dickens' DAVID COPPERFIELD, the servant-girl of Mrs. Copperfield, and the faithful old nurse of David Copperfield. Her name "Clara" is taboo, because it is the name of Mrs. Copperfield. In the course of time Peggotty marries BARKIS, the carrier.

Being very plump, whenever she made any little exertion after she was dressed, some of the buttons on the back of her gown flew off.—Ch. ii.

Dan'el Peggotty. Brother of David Copperfield's nurse. Dan'el is a Yarmouth fisherman. His nephew, Ham Peggotty, and his brother-in-law's child, "little Em'ly," live with him in a houseboat. Dan'el himself is a bachelor, and a Mrs. Gummidge (widow of his late partner) keeps house for him. Dan'el Peggotty is most tender-hearted, and loves little Em'ly dearly.

Ham Peggotty. Nephew of Dan'el Peggotty of Yarmouth, and son of Joe, Dan'el's brother. Ham is in love with little Em'ly, daughter of Tom (Dan's brother-in-law), but STEERFORTH steps between them and steals Em'ly away. Ham Peggotty is represented as the very beau-ideal of an uneducated, simple-minded, honest and warm-hearted fisherman. He is drowned in his attempt to rescue Steerforth from the sea.

Em'ly Peggotty. Daughter of Dan's brother-in-law Tom, better known as "Little Em'ly." She is engaged to Ham Peggotty, but being fascinated with Steerforth, runs off with him. She is afterwards reclaimed and emigrates to Australia with Dan'el and Mrs. Gummidge.

Peg o' My Heart. A comedy (1912) by J. Hartley Manners, in which the author's wife, Laurette TAYLOR, was a triumphant success as an Irish colleen. A popular song of that title was revived 35 years later with equal success.

Pégoud, Adolphe (1889-1915). French aviator who was the first to fly a plane upside down and loop the loop. He joined the French air corps and destroyed six German planes in World War I. Killed in aerial combat.

Péguy, Charles (1873-1914). French poet, at first a Socialist and an admirer of BERGSON, later a convert to orthodox religion and a French nationalist. His work consists chiefly of long, mystical epics in free verse, notably Le Mystère de la charité de Jeanne d'Arc (The Mystery of the Charity of Joan of Arc) and Eve (1913). Péguy was killed in the Battle of the Marne in World War I.

Peg Woffington. A novel by Charles READE (1853), first brought out as a drama called Masks and Faces (1852). Its heroine is the famous Irish actress, Margaret Woffington (1718-1760). In both play and novel, proof of her art is given in two extraordinary impersonations: she first imitates a famous tragic actress of the day so skilfully as to deceive an entire dramatic company, and later substitutes her own face for the face of her portrait which has been painted by James Triplet and is being inspected by a group of critics. The plot centers about the relations of Peg and Ernest Vane, a married man who falls in love with the famous actress during a sojourn in town. When she learns that he is already married and has no serious intentions, she determines on revenge, but renounces her purpose, won over by the naïveté and charm of Mrs. Vane.

peine forte et dure. An old punishment, applied when a prisoner would not confess, and consisting of pressing him to death with heavy weights. The phrase is also used figuratively of great emotional distress, as in Aline Kilmer's line in her poem The Jest, in The Poor King's Daughter:

Will he let fall
Sudden and sure,
Or make me suffer
Peine forte et dure?

Peirce, Charles Sanders (1839-1914). American physicist and mathematician. Founder through a paper in Popular Science Monthly (1878) of pragmatism, which was later developed by William JAMES, and of pragmatism, which he differentiated from James' system. Regarded by many as the greatest logician of his time.

Peixotto, Ernest Clifford (1869-1940). American painter and illustrator. Illustrated Theodore Roosevelt's Life of Cromwell and Henry Cabot Lodge's Story of the Revolution, etc.

Peleus. In Greek legend, the King of the Myrmidons and father of ACHILLES by THETIS. He gave his son the famous PELIAN SPEAR.

Pelham. The hero of a novel by BULWER LYTTON, entitled Pelham, or The Adventures of a Gentleman (1828).

Pelian spear or Pelias. The huge spear of Achilles, which none but the hero could wield; so called because it was cut from an ash growing on Mount Pelion or because it was given him by his father Peleus. TELEPHUS, King of Mysia, who was wounded in single combat with Achilles, was told by an oracle that only that which had inflicted his wound could heal it, and was finally cured by rust scraped from the famous spear.

Pelias. In Greek mythology, the uncle of JASON, who by arrangement with his twin brother Neleus was to hold the throne of Iolcus only until Jason's majority. He refused to give it up unless Jason secured the GOLDEN FLEECE, and was thus the instigator of the famous Argonautic expedition. After Jason's return, Pelias perished in Medea's cauldron in the hope of regaining his youth as Jason's father Aeson had done.

pelican. In Christian art, a symbol of charity; also an emblem of Jesus Christ, by "whose blood we are healed." St. Jerome gives the story of the pelican restoring its young ones destroyed by serpents, and his salvation by the blood of Christ. The old popular fallacy that pelicans fed their young with their blood arose from the fact that when the parent bird is about to feed its brood, it macerates small fish in the large bag attached to its under bill, then pressing the bag against its breast, transfers the macerated food to the mouths of the young. The correct term for the heraldic representation of the bird in this act is a pelican in her piety, piety having the classical meaning of filial devotion.

The medieval Bestiary tells us that the pelican is very fond of its brood, but when the young ones begin to grow they rebel against the male bird and provoke his anger, so that he kills them; the mother returns to the nest in three days, sits on the dead birds, pours her blood over them and revives them, and they feed on the blood.

Than sayd the Pellycane,
When my byrds be slayne
With my bloude I them reuyue [revive] Scripture doth record,
The same dyd our Lord,
And rose from deth to lyue.
Skelton, Armoury of Birdts.

the Pelican State. Louisiana, which has a pelican in its device.

Pelides. In Greek legend, especially the Iliad, ACHILLES, son of Peleus, chief of the Greek warriors at the siege of Troy.

Pelion.

heaping Pelion upon Ossa. Adding difficulty to difficulty, embarrassment to embarrassment, etc. When the giants tried to scale heaven, they placed Mount Pelion upon Mount Ossa, two peaks in Thessaly, for a scaling ladder (Odyssey, xi. 315).

Pelle the Conqueror. A novel (1913-1917) by Martin Anderson NEXÓ, dealing with the labor movement. The Danish hero, Pelle, becomes a Union leader, puts through countless struggles, wins his goal, loses again, and is thrown into prison.

Pellean Conqueror. Alexander the Great, born at Pella, in Macedonia.

Pelleas. In Arthurian romance, one of the knights of the Round Table. In Pelleas and Ettare, one of Tennyson's IDYLLS OF THE KING, he is pictured as a noble and idealistic youth who is raised to the seventh heaven by the love of Ettare, but suffers a terrible disillusionment when she scorns him for his innocence, and both she and his friend, Sir Gawain, prove the falsest of the false. Sir Pelleas is introduced into the Faerie Queene (VI, xii) as going after the "Blatant Beast" when it breaks the chain with which it had been bound by Sir Calidore.

Zona Gale is the author of a book, The Loves of Pelléas and Ettarre (Am., 1907), the scheme of which is indicated by the words, "In spite of our sad gray hairs, Pelléas and I—"

Pelléas and Mélisande. A drama by Maurice MAETERLINCK, which forms the libretto for the opera of the same title by Claude DEBussy (1902). Mélisande is found wandering wretchedly about in the forest by Golaud, a grandson of King Arkel, who marries her and takes her to court, although she will disclose nothing about herself. Her sadness and charm win her first the sympathy and then the love of Pelléas, Golaud's brother. While talking with Pelléas she loses her wedding ring, and at that same moment Golaud meets with an accident, but she nurses him back to health. Golaud's little son Yniold, the child of a former marriage, unwittingly confirms his father's growing suspicions. Finally Pelléas and Mélisande decide to part and meet for a last interview, but the jealous Golaud kills Pelléas, and after the birth of her child, Mélisande dies.

Pellerin. In Flaubert's SENTIMENTAL EDUCATION, an opportunistic painter who, after "experimenting with Syndicalism, homoeopathy, table-turning, Gothic art, and humanitarian painting" becomes a successful photographer under the régime of Napoleon III. ". . . There were pictures of him on all the walls of Paris, with a tiny body and an enormous head."

Pelles, Sir. In Arthurian romance, the father of ELAINE and grandfather of GALAHAD. According to some legends he was "king of the foragn land and nigh cousin of Joseph of Arimathy" and guardian of the Holy Grail, which he kept in his Castle of Corbonec.

Pellinore, Sir. In Arthurian romance one of the knights of the Round Table.

Pelmanism. A system of mind and memory training originated by W. J. Ennever in the closing years of the 19th century, and so called arbitrarily as it seemed to be an easy name to remember. Owing to its success, and its very extensive advertising, the verb to Pelmanize, meaning to obtain good results by training the memory, was coined.

Peloponnesian War. The war between Athens and Sparta and their allies (431-404 B. C.). It resulted in the leadership of Greece passing from Athens to Sparta.

Pelops. In Greek legend, son of TANTALUS and father of Atreus and Thyestes. He was King of Pisa in Elis, and was cut to pieces and served as food to the gods. The Morea was called Peloponnesus, the "island of Pelops," from this mythical king.

the ivory shoulder of Pelops. The distinguishing or distinctive mark of anyone. The tale is that Demeter ate the shoulder of Pelops when it was served up by Tantalus; when the gods put the body back into the cauldron to restore it to life, this portion was lacking, whereupon Demeter supplied one of ivory.

Pemberton, Brock (1885-). Well-known American producer who was in partnership with Arthur Hopkins until 1920 and since then has been independent. He has produced plays by Sidney Howard, Pirandello, Maxwell Anderson, Clare Boothe, etc.

penmican. Dried buffalo meat or venison, pounded into a powder and mixed to a paste which is pressed into small cakes to be easily carried as food on arctic expeditions. Of Indian origin.

Penates. The household gods of the Romans who cared for the welfare of the family. See also LARES.

Pendennis, The History of: His Fortunes and Misfortunes, His Friends, and His Greatest Enemy. A novel by THACKERAY (1850), which is admittedly largely autobiographical. The young hero, Arthur Pendennis, known as Pen for short, is spoiled by his mother and by Laura Bell, a distant relative of his own age with whom he grows up. He goes through the University, enters London society, writes a successful novel, becomes editor of the Pall Mall Gazette, and meantime is involved in love affairs of varying character with the actress Miss Fotheringay, with Fanny Bolton, a London porter's daughter, and with Blanche Amory, daughter of Lady Clavering. He finally marries Laura, who has always loved him and whom he has grown to love. Pen's uncle, Major Arthur Pendennis, and his friend George Warrington play prominent roles.

Pendragon. A title conferred on several British chiefs in times of great danger, when they were invested with supreme power, especially (in the Arthurian legends) to Uther Pendragon, father of King Arthur. The word is Welsh pen, head and dragon (the reference being to the war-chief's dragon standard); it corresponded to the Roman dux bellorum.

A legend recorded by GEOFFREY OF MONMOUTH relates that when Aurelius, the British king, was poisoned by Ambron, during the invasion of Pascentius, son of Vortigern, there "appeared a star at Winchester of wonderful magnitude and brightness, darting forth a ray, at the end of which was a globe of fire in form of a dragon, out of whose mouth issued forth two rays, one of which extended to Gaul and the other to Ireland." Uther ordered two golden dragons to be made, one of which he presented to Winchester, and the other he carried with him as his royal standard, whence he received the title "Pendragon."

Penelope. (1) The wife of Ulysses and mother of Telemachus in Homeric legend. She was a model of all the domestic virtues.

the web of Penelope. A work "never ending, still beginning"; never done, but ever in hand. Penelope, according to Homer, was pestered by suitors at Ithaca while ULYSSES was absent at the siege of Troy. To relieve herself of their importunities, she promised to make a choice of one as soon as she had finished weaving a shroud for her father-in-law. Every night she unraveled what she had done in the day, and so deferred making any choice till Ulysses returned and slew the suitors.

(2) The heroine of Kate Douglas WIGGIN's travel narratives, Penelope's English Experiences (Am., 1893), Penelope's Progress (1898), and Penelope's Irish Experiences (1901).

Penelophon. The name of the beggar-maid loved by King COPHETUA as given in the old ballad in Percy's Reliques. Shakespeare called her "Zenelophon."

Penelva. A knight whose adventures and exploits form a supplemental part of the Spanish romance entitled AMADIS DE GAUL.

Peneus. A river in Thessaly. Also the name of the god of the river who was the father of DAPHNE.

Liquid Peneus was flowing,
And all dark Tempe lay
In Pelion's shadow. . . .
Shelley, Hymn of Pan.

Penfeather, Lady Penelope. In Scott's novel ST. RONAN'S WELL, a patroness at the Spa. She presides over a sort of court there for "painters and poets and philosophers and men of science and lecturers and foreign adventurers."

Penfield, Edward (1866-1925). American illustrator and poster artist. Editor of Harper's Magazine, Harper's Weekly, and Harper's Bazaar (1890-1901).

Penguin Island (L'île des pingouins). A volume by Anatole FRANCE (1908), dealing with French history in satiric vein. The old Breton monk Saint Maël lands on an island and in his semi-blindness fails to perceive that the inhabitants whom he baptizes are penguins and not men. They are, however, changed to men in the course of time and he carefully tows the island back to the Breton shore. Its subsequent history is given at some length.

Peninsula State. Florida. See under STATES.

Peninsular War. The war carried on, under the Duke of Wellington, against the French in Portugal and Spain, between 1808 and 1814. It was brought about through the French attack on Spain and Portugal, and, so far as England was concerned, was the most important of the Napoleonic Wars. It resulted in the expulsion of the French from the Peninsula.

Peniston, Darthea. Heroine of Weir Mitchell's HUGH WYNNE.

Penitentes. A religious order in New Mexico which puts on an annual Passion Play in the course of which the practice of self-flagellation is indulged in. The Penitentes are all Catholics, though the practice is condemned by the Church.

Penitential Psalms. The seven psalms expressive of contrition—viz. vi, xxxii, xxxviii, li, cii, cxxx, cxliii. From time immemorial they have all been used at the Ash Wednesday services: the first three at Matins, the 51st at the Communion, and the last three at Evensong.

Penn, William (1644-1718). Famous founder of Pennsylvania. Member of the Society of Friends. Superintended the laying out of Philadelphia.

Pennant, Thomas (1726-1798). British antiquarian, traveler, and naturalist. Author of British Zoology (1766) and History of Quadrupeds (1781), which were regarded as classics for a long time. In Gilbert White's Natural History of Selborne (1789), he appears as a correspondent of the author.

Pennell, Joseph (1857-1926). American etcher. Author of Pen Drawing and Pen Draftsmen (1889); The Life of James McNeill Whistler (1908); Joseph Pennell's Pictures of War Work in England (1917); etc. In the U.S. (1917) he made excellent drawings of industrial war activities.

Pennsylvania Avenue. The avenue from the Capitol to the White House in Washington, D.C.

Pennsylvania Dutch. The descendants of immigrants from southwestern Germany and Switzerland, who settled in Pennsylvania in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Their language is essentially a development from an early south German dialect with more or less fully assimilated English elements. The literature of the Pennsylvania Dutch is folkloristic. Their other forms of folk art are more highly developed.

penny-a-liner. The old name for a contributor to the newspapers who was not on the staff, because he used to be paid a penny a line. As it was to his interest to "pad" as much as possible the word is still used in a contemptuous way for a second-rate writer or newspaper hack; but a man who does this work is now usually called a linage-man, a spaceman, or simply a free lance.

penny dreadful. A morbidly sensational story of the kind at one time printed and sold for a penny. There is also a shilling shocker.

Penny for the Old Guy, A. Subtitle of T. S. Eliot's poem, The Hollow Men. It is what the street urchins ask in London on Guy Fawkes Day when they carry around the effigy of Guy Fawkes. The effigy suggests "the hollow men, the stuffed men" of the poem.

Pennys, The Three Black. See THREE BLACK PENNYS.

Howat Penny. One of the "Three Black Pennys," in Hergesheimer's novel of that title.

Penrod. A story by Booth TARKINGTON (1914), relating the escapades of the twelve-year-old Penrod Schofield, a youngster whose active imagination keeps him in hot water at school and at home. Penrod and Sam (1916) is a sequel, continuing his adventures and those of his friend Sam Williams.

Penrose, Boies (1860-1921). American politician. Senator from Pennsylvania (1897-1921). In general the opponent of most progressive measures. Republican boss of Pennsylvania succeeding Matthew Quay.

Pensées, Les (Thoughts). A collection of reflections on religion by Blaise PASCAL, found among the effects of the author after his death but published in entirety only in 1844, having been delayed because it was feared to be unorthodox. The collection is considered to consist of the fragments of an Apology for Christianity planned by the author. Several well-known quotations are derived from the Pensées, including the following: Le Nez de Cléopâtre: s'il eût été plus court, toute la face de la terre aurait été changée (Cleopatra's nose: if it had been shorter, the whole face of the earth would have been changed); L'Homme n'est qu'un roseau, le plus faible de la nature, mais c'est un roseau pensant (Man is only a reed, the frailest in nature, but he is a thinking reed). The Thinking Reed is the title of a novel by Rebecca WEST.

Penseroso, Il, see IZ PENSEROSO.

pentameter. In prosody, a line of five feet, particularly one of dactyls or spondees, divided by a caesura into two parts of two and a half feet each—the line used in alternation with the HEXAMETER in Latin elegiac verse. The name is sometimes, but less correctly, applied to the English five-foot iambic line.

In the hexameter rises the fountain's silvery column,
In the pentameter aye falling in melody back.
Coleridge, Example of Elegiac meter.

Pentapolin. In Cervantes' DON QUIXOTE (I. iii. 4), the drover of a flock of sheep, whom Don Quixote conceives to be the Christian King of the Garamantians and surnames the Naked Arm, because he always enters the field with his right arm bare.

Pentapolis. The name given in ancient history to a number of groups or confederations of five cities (Gr., penta, "five," polis, "city"), especially the Dorian Pentapolis in Asia Minor—Cnidus, Cos, Lindos, Ialysos, and Camiros, and the five cities of Italy in the exarchate of Ravenna—Rimini, Pesaro, Fano, Sinigaglia, and Ancona—which were given by Pepin to the Pope.

Pentateuch (from Gr. penta, "five," teuchos, "a tool, a book"). The first five books of the Old Testament, supposed to be written by Moses.

the Samaritan Pentateuch. The Hebrew text as preserved by the Samaritans; it is said to date from 400 B. C.

Pentecost (Gr. pentecoste, "fiftieth"). The festival held by the Jews on the fiftieth day after the second day of the Passover; the modern Whit Sunday, which commemorates the descent of the Holy Spirit on the Apostles on the Day of Pentecost (Acts ii).

Pentelic. Pertaining to Mount Pentelicus near Athens, Greece. The white marble used for the Parthenon came from the quarries of Mount Pentelicus. Hence, Pentelic came to connote the whiteness of marble.

Penthesilea. In classic myth, the Queen of the Amazons, slain by Achilles when she came to the aid of the Trojans after the death of HECTOR. Her beauty and courage won for her a sincere lament from her slayer.

Pentheus. In classic myth, a king of Thebes, who tried to abolish the orgies of Bacchus, but was driven mad by the offended god. In his madness he climbed into a tree to witness the rites, and being desecrated was torn to pieces by the Bacchantes. See BACCHAE.

Peona. The loyal and tender sister of EN-DYMION in Keats' poem of that name. She is not a classical character, but a creation of his own.

People, Yes, The. A free-verse poem by Carl SANDBURG (1936), celebrating the vigor of the American common people and expressing hope for their eventual progress in spite of social injustice and economic inequality. It makes use of colloquial American idiom, speech rhythms, slang, proverbs, and native folk-tales.

People's Commissar. In the U.S.S.R., formerly the head of a commissariat or department of government; now called minister. The Union Council of Ministers, formerly the Union Council of People's Commissars, is the Russian national cabinet.

peplos. The outer garment for women in ancient Greece. It was ample, pinned over the shoulders, and variously draped.

Pepper, George Wharton (1867-). American lawyer, U.S. Senator. Author of The Way (1909), A Voice from the Crowd (1915), Men and Issues (1924), In the Senate (1930), Family Quarrels (1931), and legal treatises.

Pepys, Samuel (1632-1703). English author and Secretary of the Admiralty during the Stuart Restoration (1673-1688), best known for his Diary, written in shorthand between 1660 and 1669 and not deciphered until 1825. He also wrote Memoirs of the Navy (1690). Pepys, the son of a tailor, had as a patron Sir Edward Montagu, Earl of Sandwich, and met the outstanding personalities of his day in his official position. After the ascension of William III to the English throne, Pepys lost his secretaryship and was imprisoned for a time for his Stuart sympathies.

per ardua ad astra (Lat.). Through hardship to the stars. Motto of the British Royal Air Force (R.A.F.).

per aspera ad astra (Lat.). Through difficulties to the stars. The motto of Kansas.

Perceforest, King. A legendary king of Britain, hero of an old romance first printed at Paris in 1528. According to the narrative, he was crowned King of Britain by the shipwrecked Alexander the Great. He was called Perceforest because he dared to pierce, almost alone, an enchanted forest, where women and children were most cruelly treated.

Perchta. A fairy (the white lady) of southern Germany, corresponding to HULDA (the gracious lady) of Northern Germany. After the introduction of Christianity, when pagan deities were represented as demons, Perchta lost her former character, and became a boggy to frighten children. See also BERTHA, FRAU.

Percival. In Virginia Woolf's THE WAVES, a character who does not appear but acts as a unifying force, since the six leading characters of the novel all admire him and are deeply fond of him, finding in him the type of vigorous, "outward" personality they would like to possess but lack. He is killed by a fall from a horse in India, and his death serves as a symbol of all death.

Percival, James Gates (1795-1856). American poet and geologist, an aspirant to fame as a romantic poet, although he never achieved more than a brief contemporary success. His works include Poems (1821); Clio (1822-1827); and The Dream of a Day (1843). He was eccentric in behavior and paranoiac in temperament, living voluntarily for a time at the New Haven State Hospital. During his lifetime he was a physician, a journalist, and a chemistry instructor, and held the position of state geologist in Connecticut (1835-1842) and Wisconsin (1854-1856).

Percival, Sir. A knight of the Round Table who, according to Malory's MORTE D'ARTHUR (and Tennyson's IDYLLS OF THE KING), finally wins sight of the HOLY GRAIL. He is the son of Sir Pellinore and brother of Sir Lamerocke, and is brought up in innocence in the forest. After his initial experiences at the court of King Arthur, he joins either GAWAIN or GALAHAD in the quest of the Holy Grail. In the English legend, he catches a glimpse of the Grail, but it is Sir Galahad who wins the quest. In German versions, under the name Parzival or PARZIFAL, he is the one who finally is made knight of the Grail.

Percy, Bishop Thomas (1729-1811). English scholar and antiquarian, known for his work called Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry (1763), a collection of English and Scotch songs, ballads, and metrical romances, some dating from the Middle Ages and some from the period of Charles I. This was the chief source of medieval characters and themes for the poets of the romantic period.

Percy's Reliques, see under PERCY, Bishop THOMAS.

Perdita. In Shakespeare's WINTER'S TALE, the daughter of Leontes and Hermione of Sicily. She is abandoned by order of her father, and put in a vessel which drifts to "the seacoast of Bohemia," where the infant is discovered by a shepherd, who brings her up as his own daughter. In time Florizel, the son and heir of the Bohemian king Polixenes, falls in love with the supposed shepherdess. The match is forbidden by Polixenes, and the young lovers flee to Sicily. Here the story is cleared up, and all ends happily in the restoration of the lost (Fr. perdu) Perdita to her parents, and her marriage with Florizel.

Mrs. Mary Robinson, the actress and mistress of George IV when he was Prince of Wales, was specially successful in the part of Perdita, and she assumed this name, the Prince being known as Florizel. Cf. The Exquisite Perdita (1926), by L. Adams BECK.

Perdix. The skillful nephew and apprentice of Daedalus. He invented the saw and made the first pair of compasses. When his jealous uncle tried to kill him by pushing him off a high tower, Minerva saved his life by changing him into a partridge. Latin perdix, "partridge."

Peredur. A knight of Welsh legend identified with the English PERCIVAL and the German PARISFAL. He is the son of EVRAWC and one of the knights of the Round Table, known as Sir Peredur of the Long Spear. He is for many years called "The Dumb Youth," from a vow he has made to speak to no Christian till Angharad of the Golden Hand loves him better than she loves any other man.

Père Goriot. See GORIOT.

Père Grandet. The miserable miser in Balzac's Eugénie Grandet who sacrifices her to his own cupidity.

Peregrine. A well-known poem by Elinor WYLIE, in which she made a staccato meter particularly her own.

Liar and bragger,
He had no friend
Except a dagger
And a candle end . . .

The feat of rhyming in it is brilliant. It was a favorite poem of F. Scott Fitzgerald's.

Peregrine Pickle, The Adventures of. A novel by Tobias SMOLLETT (1751). Peregrine Pickle is a savage, ungrateful spendthrift, fond of practical jokes, and suffering with evil temper the misfortunes brought about by his own wilfulness.

Perelman, Sidney Joseph (1904-). American humorist, a brilliant parodist, punster, and satirist of advertising clichés. Dawn Ginsbergh's Revenge (1929); Strictly from Hunger (1937); Look Who's Talking (1940); The Dream Department (1943); etc.

Pérez de Ayala, Ramón (1880-). Spanish novelist, poet, and critic. Ambassador to London (1931-1936). Author of lyrics and novels.

Pérez Galdós, Benito (1845-1920). Spanish novelist and playwright. Wrote historical romances and novels of contemporary life.

perfectibilism. The doctrine of man's individual and social perfectibility. In Thomas Love Peacock's novel Headlong Hall there is a Mr. Foster who is represented as "perfectibilian."

perfectionism. A religious doctrine which was the leading principle of J. H. NOYES' ONEIDA Community. It was a sort of religious utopianism which considered that no sin existed, and that the Kingdom of Heaven was rapidly approaching with complete salvation for everybody.

Pergolesi, Giovanni Battista (1710-1736). Italian composer. He strongly influenced the development of operatic and instrumental music. His music is known for its radiant vitality.

Per Hansa. The hero of Giants in the Earth (1927) by O. E. ROLVAAG.

Peri. Originally, a beautiful but malevolent sprite of Persian myth, one of a class which was responsible for comets, eclipses, failure of crops, etc. In later times it was applied to delicate, gentle, fairy-like beings begotten by fallen spirits who direct with a wand the pure in mind on the way to heaven. These lovely creatures, according to the Koran, are under the sovereignty of EBLIS, and Mahomet was sent for their conversion, as well as for that of man. The name is often applied to any beautiful, fascinating girl.

Paradise and the Peri. The second tale in Moore's LALLA ROOKH. The Peri laments her expulsion from heaven, and is told she will be readmitted if she will bring to the gate of heaven the "gift most dear to the Almighty." After a number of unavailing offerings she brings a guilty old man, who weeps with repentance, and kneels to pray. The Peri offers the Repentant Tear, and the gates fly open.

Pericles, Prince of Tyre. A drama attributed to Shakespeare (ca. 1608), but generally regarded as of doubtful authorship. The hero, Pericles, a wanderer because of the persecutions of Antiochus, Emperor of Greece, long believes that his wife Thaisa and his daughter Marina are dead, but finds the former a priestess of Diana and the latter a celebrated dancer. The action extends over sixteen years.

Pericles and Aspasia. See ASPASIA.

perigee. The point in the moon's orbit nearest to the earth. Opposed to apogee.

But flourish in our perigee
And have one Titan at a time.
Edwin Arlington Robinson, The Master.

Perilous Castle. The castle of Lord Douglas was so called in the reign of Edward I, because Douglas destroyed several English garrisons stationed there, and vowed to be revenged on anyone who dared to take possession of it. Sir Walter Scott calls it "Castle Dangerous" in his novel so entitled.

In the story of Gareth and Lynette in Arthurian romance, the castle in which Lyonors is held prisoner is called Castle Perilous. See GARETH; LYNETTE.

periodic sentence. A sentence in which, for rhetorical effect, the several clauses are so arranged as to suspend the interest until the very last words.

Perion. (1) King of Gaul, father of AMADIS OF GAUL. His "exploits and adventures" form part of Le Roman des Romans.

(2) The hero of CABELL's romance Domnei.

peripatetic school. The school or system of philosophy founded by ARISTOTLE who used to walk about (Gr. peri, "about," patain, "to walk") as he taught his disciples in the covered walk of the lyceum. This colonnade was called the Peripatos.

periphrasis. The substitution of an elaborate phrase for a simple word or phrase, as, for example, Wordsworth's "fragrant beverage drawn from China's herb." See also EPIPHET.

Perissa. The typification of excessive exuberance of spirits in Spenser's Faerie Queene (II, ii). She is the mistress of Sansloy and a step-sister of ELISSA.

In wine and meats she flowed above the bank,
And in excess exceeded her own might;
In sumptuous tire she joyed herself to prank,
But of her love too lavish.

Faerie Queene, II, ii, 36.

Peri Stephanou, see DE CORONA.

Perlmutter. See POTASH AND PERLMUTTER.

Pernelle, Madame. In Molière's TARTUFFE, mother of Orgon, a regular vixen, who interrupts everyone, without waiting to hear what was to have been said to her.

perpetual motion. The term applied to some theoretical force that will move a machine for ever of itself—a mirage which holds attractions for some minds much as did the search for the philosophers' stone, the elixir of life, and the fountain of perpetual youth in less enlightened times.

Perrault, Charles (1628-1703). French author and critic, known for his collection of Mother Goose rhymes, Contes de ma Mère l'Oye (1697), and for his leading role in the quarrel between the Ancients and Moderns. Outstanding in this connection are his poem Le Siècle de Louis le Grand (1687), asserting the superiority of the age of Louis XIV to that of the Roman Emperor Augustus; and Paral- èles des Anciens et des Modernes (1688-1697), a series of dialogues surveying the arts and pointing out the progress made by the writers of the author's own day over those of the past. Perrault was among the first to celebrate in verse the new inventions of the telescope and microscope and the study of physiology, and to assert a definite principle of progress.

Charles' brother, Claude Perrault (1613-1688), was a physician and architect and built the façade of the Louvre; he was satirized by BOILEAU in the latter's Art Poétique. Pierre Perrault (1608-1680), another brother, translated works from the Italian and in 1678 attacked Boileau and the Ancients in one of his prefaces; he himself was later attacked by RACINE.

Perry, Bliss (1860-). American literary critic, educator, and editor of Atlantic Monthly (1899-1909). Professor of English at Harvard (1907-1930). Member, American Academy of Arts and Letters. Author of numerous books, among them studies of Walt Whitman (1906); Whittier (1907); Carlyle (1915); etc.

Perry, Matthew Calbraith (1794-1858). American naval officer, brother of Oliver Hazard PERRY. Famed for opening Japan to U.S. commerce (1854).

Perry, Oliver Hazard (1785-1819). American naval officer. Fought battle of Lake Erie (Sept. 10, 1813). Noted for the words of his brief dispatch to General Harrison, "We have met the enemy and they are ours."

Perry, Ralph Barton (1876-). American philosopher and educator. Pupil and close friend of William JAMES. Author of the Pulitzer prize biography The Thought and Character of William James (1935). His own philosophy is an extension of the pragmatism of William James and is known as neo-realism. The New Realism (1912); General Theory of Value (1926); etc.

Perry, Thomas Sergeant (1845-1928). A friend of William Dean HOWELLS and Henry JAMES to whom, it is said, he introduced the works of Turgenev.

Perse, St.-J., see LÉGER, ALEXIS ST. LÉGER.

Persephone, see PROSERPINE.

Perseus. In Greek legend, the hero son of ZEUS and DANAË. He and his mother were set adrift in a chest, but were rescued through the intervention of Zeus, and he was brought up by King Polydectes, who, wishing to marry his mother, got rid of him by giving him the almost hopeless task of obtaining the head of MEDUSA. He, with the help of the gods, was successful, and with the head (which turned all that looked on it to stone) he rescued ANDROMEDA, and later metamorphosed Polydectes and his guests to stone.

Before his birth, an oracle had foretold that Acrisius, Danaë's father, would be slain by Danaë's son Perseus. This came to pass, for, while taking part in the games at Larissa, Perseus accidentally slew his grandfather with a discus.

Pershing, John Joseph (1860-1948). Commander in chief, American Expeditionary Force (1917-1919); chief of staff, U.S. Army (1921-1924). His My Experiences in the World War (1931) was awarded the Pulitzer prize for history.

Persius. In full Aulus Persius Flaccus (34-62 A. D.). Roman satiric poet influenced by HORACE. Friend of LUCAN. Author of satires in hexameters, which are mostly "versified lectures on Stoic tenets."

Persuasion. A novel by Jane AUSTEN (1818). The heroine, Anne Elliott, and her lover, Captain Wentworth, have been engaged eight years before the story opens but Anne has broken the engagement in deference to family and friends. Upon his return he finds her "wretchedly altered," but after numerous obstacles have been overcome, the two lovers are happily united. Anne is gentle, sensitive and charming; the author wrote of her, "She is almost too good for me."

Perth, The Fair Maid of. See FAIR MAID.

Pertinax. Pseudonym of the French journalists Charles Géraud (1878-) and André Géraud (1882-). André Géraud adopted the pseudonym later as editor of the Echo de Paris (1918).

Pertwee, Roland (1886-). English playwright and novelist. Also a popular writer for magazines and an actor in the companies of H. B. Irving, Charles Hawtrey, etc.

Peru, Conquest of, see CONQUEST OF MEXICO.

Perugino, Il. Real name Pietro Vannucci (1446-1523). Umbrian painter of the early Renaissance, teacher of RAPHAEL. His work shows devotional fervor, delicate color, minute delineation and the beginnings of scientific perspective.

Pervigilium Veneris. A famous short Latin poem of love and spring by an anonymous writer, probably of the 2nd century A. D.

Peshkov, Alexey Maximovich, see GORKY, MAXIM.

Pestalozzi, Johann Heinrich (1746-1827). Swiss educational reformer, whose work influenced strongly the methods of education in elementary schools in Europe and America.

Pétain, Henri Philippe (1856-). Commander in chief of French Army under Marshal Foch (1918); marshal of France (1918). After defeat of France by Germany (1940), set up a government at Vichy in unoccupied section of France, under German control. Upon defeat of Germany, tried by a French Tribunal for high treason (1945); death sentence commuted to life imprisonment.

Pétaud.

'tis the court of King Pétaud, where everyone is master. There is no order or discipline at all. This is a French proverb. Le Roi Pétaud (Lat. peto, "I beg") was the title of the chief who was elected by the fraternity of beggars in medieval France, in whose court all were equal. In his GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL, Rabelais introduces Henry VIII as Le Roi Pétaud.

Peter, St. See under SAINTS.

to rob Peter to pay Paul. See under ROB.

Peter Bell. The subject of a "tale in verse" by WORDSWORTH (1798). SHELLEY wrote a burlesque upon it, entitled Peter Bell the Third.

Peter Grimm, see RETURN OF PETER GRIMM.

Peter Ibbetson. A novel by George DU MAURIER (1891), a story of a strange, idealistic dream life shared by the hero, Peter Ibbetson, and his childhood friend, Mumsey Seraskier, afterwards Mary, the Duchess of Towers. The external events are few; the two see each other only two or three times after their childhood; Peter spends the greater part of his life in jail as a murderer, and dies in a criminal lunatic asylum. The novel has been dramatized (1917) starring John and Lionel BARRYMORE; filmed; and is the basis of an opera by Deems TAYLOR, with Lucrezia BORI as the Duchess of Towers.

Peterkin, Julia, née Mood (1880-). American novelist, known for her books dealing sympathetically with the Gullah Negroes of South Carolina. Her works include Green Thursday (1924), sketches; Black April (1927); Scarlet Sister Mary (1928), awarded the Pulitzer prize in 1929; Bright Skin (1932); Roll, Jordan, Roll (1933), a book of text and photographs.

Peter Pan. A children's drama by J. M. BARRIE (1904). The boy hero, Peter Pan, has run away to Never-Never-Land to escape growing up, and lives in the trees with the fairies. One day he shows the Darling children, Wendy, Michael, and John, how to fly and persuades them to come home with him. Peter has a terrible enemy in the one-handed Captain Hook, leader of a band of Pirates. If the crocodile who bit off the Captain's missing hand had not swallowed an eight-day alarm clock which ticks a loud warning at his approach, he would probably have succeeded in making away with the rest of the Captain. Once the children are captured by the Pirates, but Peter frightens Captain Hook away by pretending to be the ticking crocodile. The Indian princess, Tiger Lily, and Peter's unseen fairy friend, Tinker Bell, protect the children through many adventures. Finally Wendy has to go home, but she promises to come again every spring. A long succession of actresses, notably Maude Adams, and including Pauline Chase, Cissie Loftus, and Eva Le Gallienne, have played Peter.

Peter Parley, see PARLEY, PETER.

Peter Porcupine, see COBBETT, WILLIAM.

Peter Quince at the Clavier. A poem by Wallace STEVENS.

Peter Rugg, the Missing Man. A tale by William Austin (Am., 1824), once widely known. The hero swears a terrible oath that a thunderstorm shall not keep him from reaching home, and is punished by being forced to roam about forever between Boston and Hartford in a phantom chaise with a thunderstorm in his wake. The tale is based on an old New England legend.

Peters, Charles Rollo (1862-1928). American painter.

Peters, Curtis Armoux, Jr., see ARNO, PETER.

Peter Schlemihls wunderbare Geschichte. A tale by Adelbert von CHAMISSE (1814), treating realistically the adventures of a man who gives up his shadow to a gray stranger in return for Fortunatus' purse. Hence Peter Schlemihl became a synonym for any person who makes a desperate and senseless bargain. Chamisso derived the name of his hero from Yiddish schlemihl. The book can be read as a delightful and fanciful tale but also as a deeply bitter autobiography of a man who feels somehow excluded from normal human relations through no fault of his or of his environment. Chamisso was a Frenchman by birth, a German by education and language.

Petersham, Maud (1889-), and Peter-sham, Miska (1888-). Writers and illustrators of books for children. Illustrators of the Rootabaga Stories by Carl Sandburg and of many books by Mabel Scudder La Rue. Among their own books are Miki; The Ark of Father Noah and Mother Noah; etc.

Peter Simple. A novel (1834) by Captain MARRYAT.

Peterson, Houston (1897-). American educator. His study of the poetry of Conrad Aiken, The Melody of Chaos, was awarded the Butler Medal for 1931. Has edited anthologies of poetry. Poet to Poet (1945).

Peter's pence. An annual tribute of a penny paid before the Reformation to the Pope by every English householder who held land of a certain value. The term is now used to denote voluntary contributions by Roman Catholics to the Papal Treasury.

Peter Stirling, see HONORABLE PETER STIRLING.

Peter the Hermit. Also known as Peter of Amiens (1050?-?-1115). French monk, one of the instigators of the First Crusade (1095), one section of which he led as far as Asia Minor (1096). He is introduced by Tasso in JERUSALEM DELIVERED; and by Scott in his COUNT ROBERT OF PARIS, a novel laid in the time of Rufus. A statue was erected to him at Amiens in 1854.

Petition of Right. An act of Parliament, passed in 1628 and reluctantly assented to by Charles I, providing that no one should be imprisoned without cause shown; that no forced loans or taxes be imposed without Parliamentary grant; that there be no martial law; etc. It is one of the chief documents of the English constitution.

Petitioners and Abhorrrers. Two political parties in the reign of Charles II. When that monarch was first restored, he used to grant everything he was asked for. After a time this became a great evil, and Charles enjoined his loving subjects to discontinue their practice of "petitioning." Those who agreed with the King and disapproved of petitioning, were called Abhorrrers; those who were favorable to the objectionable practice were nicknamed Petitioners.

Peto. In Shakespeare's 1 and 2 Henry IV, lieutenant of "Captain" Sir John Falstaff's regiment.

Petra. The heroine of Björnson's FISHER MAIDEN.

Petrarch. In full Francesco Petrarca (1304-1374). Italian poet, scholar, patriot, and humanist, a friend of Boccaccio and the son of a Florentine who was exiled from his native city in the same year as DANTE. Petrarch was one of the first great figures of the Renaissance in Italy, studying Latin and Greek literature, writing in Latin and interesting his contemporaries in classical antiquity, showing his patriotism by his writings and his participation in numerous political affairs, and initiating the vogue for the sonnet-sequence in celebration of an unattainable mistress, an adaptation of the medieval COURTLY LOVE tradition, which was ubiquitous in the literature of Italy, France, and England for over 200 years after his death. He is best known for his spiritualized passion for the lady LAURA, which inspired his famous series of poems, called Canzoniere, or Rime in Vita e Morte di Madonna Laura (Verses on the Life and Death of My Lady Laura). He also wrote an Ode to Italy, an Epistle to Posterity, Africa, an epic-poem in Latin, and numerous other epistles and treatises in Latin.

petrel, the stormy. A small sea-bird (Procellaria pelagica), so named, according to tradition, from the Ital. Petrello, "little Peter," because during storms it seems to fly pating the water with each foot alternately as though walking on it. The allusion is to St. Peter, who walked on the Lake of Gennesareth. Sailors call these birds "Mother Carey's chickens." The term is used figuratively of one whose coming always portends trouble, one who can be calculated upon to "raise Cain" wherever he goes or whatever he does.

Petrie, Sir Flinders (1853-1942). World-renowned English Egyptologist, whose excavations in Egypt and Palestine led to many discoveries in archeology and anthropology. Author of numerous books on ancient civilizations.

Petrified Forest, The. A drama by Robert E. SHERWOOD (1935). The star of the stage and film production was Leslie HOWARD.

Petronius, Gaius or Titus, surnamed Arbiter (died ca. 66 A. D.). Roman author, called by Tacitus Arbiter Elegantiarum, that is "judge of elegance," director of court entertainment under the Emperor Nero. He is known for his Satyricon, a fragmentary manuscript in prose and verse which is considered one of the first examples of the novel form and gives a vivid, sardonic, and extremely realistic picture of the luxuries, vices, and social manners of the Imperial Age. One "W. Burnaby" made an English translation of the work about 1700 in the quaint, prolix style of his day. Almost the only historical evidence of Petronius' existence is to be found in the sixteenth book of the Annals of Tacitus, where it is reported that he committed suicide to escape being put to death by Nero. He figures in Quo Vadis, by SIENKIEWICZ.

Petrov, Eugene (1903-1942). Russian journalist and humorist. Author, in collaboration with Ilya ILF, of Diamonds To Sit On (1930); Little Golden Calf (1933); Little Golden America (1937). Also with Ilya ILF, wrote a satirical series of feuilletons which earned them the name of "the Soviet Mark Twains." Killed in the siege of Sevastopol (July 2, 1942).

Petruchio. In Shakespeare's TAMING OF THE SHREW, a gentleman of Verona, who undertakes to tame the haughty Katharina, called "the Shrew." He marries her, and without the least personal chastisement reduces her to lamb-like submission. Being a fine compound of bodily and mental vigor, with plenty of wit, spirit and good-nature, he rules his subordinates dictatorially and shows he will have his own way, whatever the consequences.

Petty, Sir William (1623-1687). English political economist and statistician. Author of Treatises of Taxes and Contributions (1662, 1667, 1685), which contain the first statement of the economic doctrine that price depends upon the labor invested in production.

Petunegro, Mr. The favorite gipsy character of George Borrow, in his ROMANY RYE.

Peveril of the Peak. The longest of all Walter SCOTT's novels (1823). It contains one hundred and eight characters, besides courtiers, officers, etc. The hero is Julian Peveril, a Cavalier; the heroine is Alice Bridgenorth, daughter of Major Bridgenorth, a Roundhead; the main subject is the "Popish Plot." The novel is crowded with well-known historic characters, among them, Charles II, his brother James, Duke of York, Prince Rupert, Antony Cooper, Earl of Shrewsbury, Lord Rochester, George Villiers, duke of Buckingham, Sir Edmond Godfrey, Hudson the dwarf, Colonel Blood, Titus Oates, and Settle the poet. Among the women are the widow of Charles I, the wife of Charles II, and his mistresses, Nell Gwyn and Louise de Keroualle.

Pew. The blind beggar in TREASURE ISLAND by Robert Louis Stevenson.

Peyrouton, Marcel B. (1888?-). French politician, minister of the interior under PÉTAIN (1940-1941). Appointed governor general in Algiers (1943) by General Giraud.

Pfaff's Beer Cellar. A famous Bohemian resort in New York City during the 1850's, a meeting place of writers such as Walt Whitman, Bayard Taylor, Fitz-James O'Brien, Adah Menken, etc.

Pfister's Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Phaeacians. In the Odyssey, the inhabitants of the mythical land over which Alcinous was king. His daughter Nausicaä welcomed ODYSSEUS.

Phaedo or Phaedon (fl. 4th century B. C.). Greek philosopher, friend and disciple of Socrates. PLATO gave his name to a dialogue which purports to be a record of Socrates' last conversation with his friends. It is mainly concerned with the immortality of the soul.

Phaedra. In classic myth, daughter of MINOS, King of Crete, and wife of THESEUS. She conceived a criminal love for Hippolytus, her step-son, and, being repulsed by him, accused him to her husband of attempting to dishonor her. Hippolytus was put to death, and Phaedra, stricken with remorse, strangled herself. This legend has been the subject of many tragedies, the most famous of which are by EURIPIDES in Greek, SENECA in Latin, and RACINE in French (Phèdre, 1677). A French Phèdre et Hippolyte by Pradon (1677) and an English Phaedra and Hippolytus by Smith (1708) were preferred by some contemporary critics to Racine's Phèdre, which is now considered his masterpiece, and was one of the greatest roles of Sarah BERNHARDT.

Phaedria. The typification in Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE (II, vi) of wantonness. She is handmaid to Acrasia the enchantress, and sails about Idle Lake in a gondola. Seeing Sir Guyon, she ferries him across the lake to the floating island, where Cymochles attacks him. Phaedria interposes, the combatants desist, and the little wanton ferries the knight Temperance over the lake again.

Phaëthon (Gr., "the shining one"). In classical myth, the son of Phoebus, the Sun. He undertook to drive his father's chariot, but was upset and thereby caused Libya to be parched into barren sands, and all Africa to be injured, the inhabitants blackened and vegetation nearly destroyed. He would have set the world on fire had not ZEUS transfixed him with a thunderbolt.

Phaëthon's bird. The swan. Cygnus, son of Apollo, was the friend of Phaëthon and lamented his fate so grievously that Apollo changed him into a swan, and placed him among the constellations.

Phantasmagoria. A humorous poem about a ghost in seven "cantos" by Lewis CARROLL (1869).

Phaon or Phedon. In SPENSER'S FAËRIE QUEENE (II, iv), a young man ill-treated by Furor, and rescued by Sir Guyon. He loves Claribel, but Philemon, his friend, persuades him that Claribel is unfaithful, and, to prove his words, makes him see what appears to be Claribel holding an assignation with a groom. Rushing forth, Phaon meets the true Claribel, whom he slays on the spot. When he is tried for the murder, it comes out that the groom was Philemon, and the supposed Claribel her maid. He poisons Philemon, and would have murdered the maid, but she escapes, and while he pursues her he is attacked by Furor. This tale is designed to show the evil of intemperate revenge. In some editions of the poem Phedon is the name, not Phaon.

Phaon and Sappho. See SAPPHO.

Pharamond. In the Arthurian romances, a knight of the ROUND TABLE, who is said to have been the first king of France, and to have reigned in the early 5th century. He is the son of Marcomir and father of Clodion.

La Calprenède's novel Pharamond, ou l'histoire de France, was published in 1661. WILLIAM MORRIS made Pharamond the hero of his Love is Enough, Or the Freeing of Pharamond, A Morality (1873), which tells how he abdicates his throne to marry a humble maiden.

Pharaoh. The title or generic appellation of the kings in ancient Egypt. The word originally meant "the great house," and its later use arose much in the same way as, in modern times, "the Holy See" for the Pope, or "the Sublime Porte" for the Sultan of Turkey.

None of the Pharaohs mentioned in the Old Testament has been certainly identified, owing to the great obscurity of the references and the almost entire absence of reliable chronological data. There are two who figure prominently in the book of Genesis:

(1) The Pharaoh who raised JOSEPH to power because of his interpretation of the dreams predicting seven years of famine, and who later welcomed Joseph's father JACOB and his family into Egypt.

(2) The Pharaoh who "knew not Joseph" and cruelly mistreated the Israelites. MOSES was brought up by his daughter but later violently opposed him (or possibly his successor) and called down upon him the famous Ten Plagues for refusing to let the Children of Israel go out from Egypt. This is the Pharaoh who pursued the Israelites into the Red Sea when the waters were parted for their benefit, and who was drowned as the waters returned.

In Dryden's satire ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL, Pharaoh stands for Louis XIV of France.

Pharaoh's chicken or hen. The Egyptian vulture, so called from its frequent representation in Egyptian hieroglyphics.

Pharaoh's corn. The grains of wheat sometimes found in mummy cases.

Pharaoh's serpent. A chemical toy consisting of sulpho-cyanide of mercury, which fuses into a serpentine shape when lighted; so called in allusion to the magic serpents of Exod. vii. 9-12.

Pharisees (Heb. perusim, from perash, "to separate"). In the Old Testament, "those who have been set apart," not as a sect but as a school of ascetics who attempted to regulate their lives by the letter of the Law. The opprobrious sense of the word was given it by their enemies, because the Pharisees came to look upon themselves as holier than other men, and refused to hold social intercourse with them. Many of Christ's sayings begin "Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites."

Pharos. A lighthouse; so called from the lighthouse—one of the seven wonders of the world—built by Ptolemy Philadelphus in the island of Pharos, off Alexandria, Egypt. It was 450 feet high, and, according to Josephus, could be seen at the distance of 42 miles. Part of it was blown down in 793.

Pharsalia. An epic in Latin hexameters by LUCAN. It tells of the civil war between POMPEY and CAESAR, and of the Battle of Pharsalus (48 B. C.) in which Pompey, with 45,000 legionaries, 7,000 cavalry, and a large number of auxiliaries, was decisively defeated by Caesar, who had only 22,000 legionaries and 1,000 cavalry. Pompey's battle-cry was Hercules invictus; that of Caesar, Venus victrix.

Phebe. In Shakespeare's As You Like It, a shepherdess beloved by the shepherd Silvius. While ROSALIND is in boy's clothes, Phebe falls in love with the stranger, and makes a proposal of marriage. When Rosalind appears in her true character and gives her hand to Orlando, Phebe is content to accept her old love Silvius.

Phedon. An alternative name of PHAON.

Phèdre. See under PHAEDRA.

Pheidias, see PHIDIAS.

Pheidippides. (1) In Aristophanes' comedy THE CLOUDS, a caricature of Alcibiades.

(2) A Greek runner, famed for his exploits at the time of the battle of Marathon. BROWNING makes him the hero of a poem in his Dramatic Idylls.

Phelps, Elizabeth Stuart, see Elizabeth S. WARD.

Phelps, William Lyon (1865-1945). American teacher and popularizer of literature; professor of English at Yale (from 1901). Wrote Essays on Russian Novelists (1910); Some Makers of American Literature (1923); As I Like It (1923), the outgrowth of his book department in Scribner's Magazine; and many other books. The influence of his personality on his students was greater still than that of his writings.

Phi Beta Kappa key. The golden watch key which is the badge of the oldest Greek letter society in American colleges and universities. Members are elected according to their excellence in scholarship. The society was founded on December 5, 1776, at William and Mary College, Williamsburg, Va., originally as a secret society. The initials phi, beta, and kappa, inscribed on the key, represent the Greek words for "Philosophy, the guide of life."

Phidias (fl. 5th century B.C.). Greek sculptor of the Periclean age. In charge of all Athenian public works under construction at the time, which included the Parthenon and most of the other great monuments of the city. His Olympian Zeus at Elis and his Athene Parthenos, both colossal CHRYSELEPHANTINE statues, are known from descriptions and more or less doubtful copies. Fragments of his frieze of the Parthenon have survived and hold the supreme place among all existing works of sculpture. Phidias died in prison, apparently under a charge of sacrilege for having represented Pericles and himself on Athene's shield.

philabeg (Scottish). A kilt. The term is used in the first verse of the famous old Scotch Jacobite song:

Cam' ye by Athol, lad wi' the philabeg,
Down by the Tummel or banks o' the Garry;
Saw ye our lads, wi' their bonnets and white cockades, Leaving their mountains to follow Prince Charlie?

Follow thee! follow thee! wha wadna follow thee?
Lang has thou loved and trusted us fairly:
Charlie, Charlie, wha wadna follow thee,
King o' the Highland hearts, bonnie Prince Charlie?

Philadelphia Story, The. A comedy (1939) by Philip BARRY.

Philaminte. One of the principal characters of Molière's FEMMES SAVANTES, a "learned lady," wife of Chrysale, the bourgeois, and mother of Armande, Henriette, Ariste, and Bélise.

Philammon. A young monk, one of the two chief characters of Kingsley's HYPATIA.

Philander. A male coquet; so called from Philander, the Dutch knight, who coquettes with Gabrina in Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO. To philander is to wanton or make licentious love to a woman.

Philaster or Love Lies a-Bleeding. A tragedy by BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER (1620). The hero, Prince Philaster, is heir to the crown of Sicily, and the plot concerns his love and marriage to Princess Arethusa of Spain. The most appealing character is Euphrasia, a maiden whose devotion to Philaster leads her to enter his service disguised as the page Bellario. Philaster gives his page to Arethusa and then grows jealous of Arethusa's love for the young page.

Philemon and Baucis. Poor cottagers of Phrygia, husband and wife, who, in Ovid's story (Metamorphoses, iii. 631), entertained Jupiter so hospitably that he promised to grant them whatever request they made. They asked that both might die together, and it was so. Philemon became an oak, Baucis a linden tree, and their branches intertwined at the top.

In the second part of Goethe's FAUST, Philemon and Baucis are an old couple who refuse to sell their home at any price. Because theirs is a part of the land that he is redeeming from the sea, Faust, with the aid of Mephistopheles, dispossesses them, and they die of the shock.

Philidor, François André. Real name François André Danican (1726-1795). French chess player and composer. Chiefly known in chess circles for "Philidor's Defense" and "Philidor's Legacy." Composed many operas.

Philip, St. See under SAINTS.

Philip, The Adventures of. A novel by W. M. THACKERAY (1862), a sequel to the unfinished SHABBY GENTEEL STORY. The hero, Philip Firmin, is an outspoken young man, in revolt against the underhanded hypocrisy of his father, Dr. George Brandon Firmin, whose sham marriage to Caroline Gann forms the subject of the earlier novel. As a boy he is nursed and befriended by Caroline, now known as Mrs. Brandon, or "the Little Sister," and throughout the book he champions her cause and owes much to her guidance. He is brought up in luxury, but due to his father's scheming, loses all his money and is forced to make a living as an editor. He marries Charlotte Baynes, the daughter of his trustee and guardian, whom his father had tricked to secure his fortune. After numerous difficulties Philip comes into a fortune from Lord Ringwood, a wealthy relative.

Philip and His Wife. A novel by Margaret DELAND (1894) on the theme of married life. Philip Shore is an unsuccessful artist, his wife Cecilia a beautiful heiress. The chief cause of their disagreement is the bringing-up of Molly, their only daughter.

Philip drunk. The phrase, "appeal from Philip drunk to Philip sober," springs from an anecdote which has it that a woman, condemned by Philip of Macedon when he was intoxicated, averred that she would appeal to him when he was sober again.

philippic. A severe scolding; a speech full of acrimonious invective. So called from the original Philippics, a group of nine orations by Demosthenes against King Philip of Macedon, designed to rouse the Athenians to resist his encroachments. The orations of Cicero against Antony are an example of philippics in the generic sense.

Philippines, I just came back from the. A nonsense song, appearing in Carl Sandburg's The American Songbag under the title The Horse Named Bill. Mr. Sandburg says he got the text from Sinclair Lewis, who got the last verse from George Sterling and two other verses from an Englishman. Actually, Sinclair Lewis first heard the song from William Rose Benét, who had got it from Lieutenant Storrs Bowen of the Presidio of San Francisco, except for the last verse in Carl Sandburg's version, which was made up by Sinclair Lewis himself. Mr. Sandburg does not give the refrain of the song, which gave it its original title. It goes:

I just came back from the Philippines.

I have, I was.

My uncle has a factory there

And they make brushes, and they use 'em for the hair
And the teeth, and the feet, and the eyebrows, aaaaaand—the fingers.

The man in the ballad was originally not "so very sleepy" when he jumped into the river, but rather "so very thirsty."

Phillips, Ambrose (1675?-1749). English poet, friend of Addison and Steele. Involved in a long quarrel with Alexander Pope, who adopted for him the nickname Namby Pamby originally conferred on him by Henry Carey. Pope thought the name fitted Phillips' "eminence in infantile style."

Phillips, John (1676-1709). English poet, chiefly known for The Splendid Shilling (1701).

Phillips, Katherine (1631-1664). English poet and leader of a literary group in Cardigan, Wales. Each member of the group assumed a fictitious name: Mrs. Phillips was known as "The Matchless Orinda"; her husband was called Antenor; and Anne Owen, her best friend, was Lucasia. Mrs. Phillips' poetry was circulated in manuscript, and was well known in her day.

Philisides. A poetical name of Sir Philip SIDNEY used in his ARCADIA and elsewhere.

Philistines. In the Old Testament, the inveterate enemies of the Israelites against whom Samson, David and other Jewish heroes waged war. In modern usage, the term refers to the ill-behaved and ignorant; persons lacking in liberal culture, or of low and materialistic ideas. This meaning of the word was first used by Matthew ARNOLD, who adapted it from Philister, the term applied by students at the German universities to the townspeople, the "outsiders." This usage is said to have arisen at Jena, because, after a "town and gown" row in 1689, which resulted in a number of deaths, the university preacher took for his text "The Philistines be upon thee" (Judges xvi).

The people who believe most that our greatness and welfare are proved by our being very rich, and who most give their lives and thoughts to becoming rich, are just the very people whom we call the Philistines.
—Matthew Arnold, Culture and Anarchy (1869).

James Branch CABELL introduces the country of Philistia into his satiric romances, notably JURGEN.

Phillies. In American baseball parlance, the Philadelphia Nationals. See under BASEBALL TEAMS.

Phillips, David Graham (1867-1911). American journalist and novelist, known for his muckraking newspaper and magazine articles (see MUCKRAKERS) and his novels exposing political corruption and dealing with social problems. Among these novels are The Great God Success (1901); Golden Fleece (1903); The Master-Rogue (1903); The Cost (1904); The Deluge (1905); The Plum Tree (1905); Light-Fingered Gentry (1907); The Second Generation (1907); The Fashionable Adventures of Joshua Craig (1909); The Conflict (1911); Old Wives for New (1908); The Hungry Heart (1909); The Husband's Story (1910); George Helm (1912); The Price She Paid (1912); and Susan Lenox: Her Fall and Rise (1917), regarded as his best work, a realistic account of the career of a country girl who becomes a prostitute and later a successful actress. Phillips was murdered by a madman in revenge for a fancied slander of his sister in The Fashionable Adventures of Joshua Craig.

Phillips, Edward (1630?-1696) and Phillips, John (1631-1706). Nephews of John Milton. The former became tutor to the son of John EVELYN and wrote a popular philological dictionary. The latter attacked Puritanism, wrote in favor of Titus OATES, did translations, and became a literary hack.

Phillips, Henry Wallace (1869-1930). American humorist, writer of Western stories, and creator of the character of the cowhand Red Saunders.

Phillips, Stephen (1868-1915). English poet and dramatist. His first work of poetry, Poems (1897), was so fulsomely acclaimed as to make his later under-estimation all the more ironic. His Paolo and Francesca, Christ in Hades, etc., are, however, still worth reading.

Phillips, Wendell (1811-1884). Prominent Boston abolitionist and supporter of William Lloyd Garrison.

Phyllis. A pastoral name for a maiden in English poetry. See PHYLIS.

Phillipotts, Eden (1862-). English novelist and playwright. Chiefly known for his long series of Dartmoor novels, which have been compared to Hardy's Wessex novels. Has also written mystery and detective novels, some under the name Harrington Hext.

Philoctetes. In classic myth, the most famous archer in the Trojan War, to whom HERCULES, at death, gave his arrows. He joined the allied Greeks with seven ships, but in the island of Lemnos his foot was bitten by a serpent, ulcerated, and became so offensive that the Greeks left him behind. In the tenth year of the siege ULYSSES commanded that he should be sent for, as an oracle had declared that Troy could not be taken without the arrows of Hercules. Philoctetes accordingly went to Troy, slew PARIS, and Troy fell. The Philoctetes of SOPHOCLES is one of the most famous Greek tragedies. The title of The Wound and the Bow, by Edmund WILSON, is derived from the legend.

Philomela. In Greek legend, daughter of Pandion, King of Attica. According to one version of the story, Tereus, king of Thrace, brought Philomela to visit his wife, Procne, who was her sister. When he reached the "solitudes of Heleas," he dishonored her, and cut out her tongue that she might not reveal his conduct. Tereus told his wife that Philomela was dead, but Philomela made her story known by weaving it into a peplus, which she sent to Procne. In another version Tereus married Philomela, telling her that Procne was dead, and it was Procne whose tongue was cut out and who wove the tell-tale story. In each case the end is the same. Procne, in revenge cut up her own son Itys, or Itylus, and served the flesh to Tereus. The gods changed all three into birds; Tereus became the hawk, his wife the swallow, and Philomela the nightingale, which is still called Philomel ("lover of song") by the poets. Matthew ARNOLD's Philomela, COLERIDGE's Nightingale, and SWINBURNE's Itylus are among the best-known poems based on the tale.

philosopher. The sages of Greece used to be called sophoi ("wise men"), but Pythagoras thought the word too arrogant and adopted the compound philosophoi ("lovers of wisdom"), whence "philosopher," one who courts or loves wisdom.

Marcus Aurelius (121-180) was surnamed the Philosopher by Justin Martyr, and the name was also conferred on Leo VI, Emperor of the East (d. 911), and Porphyry (d. 305), the neo-Platonic opponent of Christianity.

the philosopher of China. CONFUCIUS (551-479 B.C.). His mother called him Little Hillock, from a knob on the top of his head.

the philosopher of Malmesbury. Thomas Hobbes (1588-1679) author of Leviathan.

the philosopher of Persia. Abou Ebn Sina, of Shiraz (d. 1037).

the philosopher of Samosata. Lucan.

the philosopher of Sans-Souci. Frederick the Great (b. 1712, reigned 1740-1786).

philosophers' stone. The hypothetical substance which, according to the medieval alchemists, would convert all baser metals into gold. Its discovery was the prime object of all the alchemists, and to the wide and unrelenting search that went on for it we are indebted for the birth of the science of chemistry, as well as for many inventions. According to one legend, Noah was commanded to hang up the true and genuine philosophers' stone in the ark, to give light to every living creature therein. Another relates that DEUCALION had it in a bag over his shoulder, but threw it away and lost it.

philosopher's or Diana's tree. An amalgam of crystallized silver, obtained from mercury in a solution of silver; so called by the alchemists, with whom Diana stood for silver.

Philosophical Inquiry into the Origin of Our Ideas of the Sublime and Beautiful, A. A treatise on esthetics by Edmund BURKE (1756), which defines beauty as a quality arousing emotions of love, through small size, smooth surface, and bright coloring, and the sublime as that which arouses sensations of pain. The work also includes an analysis of the psychological effects of various types of sensuous stimuli which is considered unusual for the time of its composition.

Philosophy of Composition, The. A critical essay by Edgar Allan Poe (1846), presenting the poet's method of composition, with an analysis of THE RAVEN in illustration. It contains statements of Poe's well-known critical principles favoring a short over a long poem and designating melancholy as "the most legitimate of all poetical tones." See also POETIC PRINCIPLE, THE.

Philosophy, the father of. See under FATHER.

Philostrate. In Shakespeare's MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, master of the revels for Theseus, King of Athens.

Philostratus (170?-245 A.D.). Greek Sophist philosopher at Athens and Rome. He wrote the Lives of the Sophists.

Philoxenos of Leucadia. The ancient Greek epicure of whom it is told that he wished he had the neck of a crane, that he might enjoy the taste of his food the longer (Aristotle, Ethics, iii. 10).

Phil the Fluter's Ball. An Irish music-hall song, describing the festivities when "Phil the Fluter" holds a ball. There are allusions to it in James Joyce's FINNEGANS WAKE, and echoes of its bouncing rhythm and its onomatopoeia recur throughout the book. See also FINNEGAN, TIM.

Phineas Finn. A novel by Anthony TROLLOPE (1869). The hero is a young Irishman of talent and great personal attractions who goes to London to enter Parliament. There he carries everything before him and indulges in affairs of the heart too numerous to mention. Eventually, however, he gives up politics, marries a poor Irish girl, and goes home to become inspector of poorhouses in Cork County. In the sequel, Phineas Redux (1874), his wife dies, and he returns to his Parliamentary career. He reappears in The Prime Minister (1876) as Secretary for Ireland and later Lord of the Admiralty. By this time, after several additional love affairs, he has contracted a very happy second marriage. The three are called the Parliamentary Novels.

Phineus. In classic myth, a blind soothsayer who was tormented by the harpies. Whenever a meal was set before him, the harpies came and carried it off. The ARGONAUTS delivered him from these pests in return for his information respecting the route they were to take in order to obtain the GOLDEN FLEECE.

Phips, Sir William (1651-1695). American-born colonial governor of Massachusetts (1692-1694), named under a new charter and at the request of Increase Mather. His government was attacked as neglectful. In the biography of Cotton Mather, Phips, who had begun his career as a ship's carpenter, is praised.

Phiz. The pseudonym of Hablot K. Browne, who illustrated the PICKWICK PAPERS, NICHOLAS NICKLEBY, and most of Charles DICKENS' works of fiction. He also illustrated the Abbotsford edition of Sir Walter Scott's Waverley Novels.

Phlegethon (Gr. phlego, "to burn"). In classic myth, a river of liquid fire in HADES. It flowed into the river Acheron. For the other rivers, see STYX.

Fierce Phlegethon,
Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ii.

phlegm. In early physiology, one of the four "humors." It was a cold, moist humor that caused sluggishness. From this the word came to mean coolness of temperament or equanimity.

They judge with fury, but they write with phlegm.
Alexander Pope.

phlogiston. The principle of inflammability. The German chemists, Georg Ernst Stahl (1660-1734) and Johann Joachim Becher (1635-1682), advanced the phlogiston theory which explained combustion as the freeing and escape of phlogiston. The theory remained in force for about a century, and was then superseded by the modern theory of Lavoisier, which explained combustion as a combination with oxygen. Becher and Stahl trusted their senses in holding that combustion reduces the weight of a burning substance. Lavoisier used scales and demonstrated that the products of combustion show an increase in weight.

Phobos. Greek goddess of panic fear. Hence phobia, "fear."

Phocensian despair. Desperation which terminates in victory. In the days of Philip, King of Macedon, the men of Phocis had to defend themselves single-handed against the united forces of all their neighbors, because they presumed to plough a sacred field belonging to DELPHI. The Phocensians suggested that they should make a huge pile, and that all the women and children should join the men in one vast human sacrifice. The pile was made, and everything was ready, but the men of Phocis, before mounting the pile, rushed in desperation on the foe, and obtained a signal victory.

Phoebe of the ringlets. Phoebe Throssel, the heroine of J. M. Barrie's QUALITY STREET.

Phoebus (from Greek phoibos, "bright"). An epithet of APOLLO, particularly in his quality as the sun god. The name often stands for the sun personified.

Phoebus, Captain. In Victor Hugo's NOTRE DAME DE PARIS, the betrothed of Fleur de Marie. He entertains a base love for Esmeralda, the beautiful gypsy girl.

phoenix. A fabulous Arabian bird, the only one of its kind, that is said to live a certain number of years, at the close of which it makes in Arabia a nest of spices, sings a melodious dirge, flaps its wings to set fire to the pile, burns itself to ashes, and comes forth with new life, to repeat the former one.

The enchanted pile of that lonely bird,
Who sings at the last his own death-lay,
And in music and perfume dies away.
Thomas Moore, Paradise and the Peri.

It is to this bird that Shakespeare refers in CYMBELINE (i. 7):

If she be furnished with a mind so rare,
She is alone the Arabian bird.

The phoenix was adopted as a sign over chemists' shops through the association of this fabulous bird with alchemy. PARACELUS wrote about it, and several of the alchemists employed it to symbolize their vocation. It is also a symbol of immortality. The men of Lord Louis Mountbatten's Southeastern Asia command wore it as an insignia in World War II. The Phoenix and the Carpet (1904), by E. NESSBIT, is a romance for children dealing with the theme.

phoenix period or cycle. The period between the transformations of the phoenix, generally supposed to be 500 years but sometimes estimated as high as 1500 years.

Phoenix, John. Pseudonym of George Horatio Derby (1823-1861). Nicknamed Squibob. American journalist and humorist of California, known for his sketches and burlesques published in the San Diego Herald, of which he was editor. Collections of his works are Phoenixiana (1855) and The Squibob Papers (1859).

Phoenix Nest, The. (1) Title of a poetic miscellany (1593), edited by "R. S. of the Inner Temple, gentleman," and containing, among other poems, some by Lodge and Breton.

(2) A literary column given to poetry and talk about writers of the past, conducted by William Rose BENÉT in the Saturday Review of Literature.

Phoenix Park. A public park in Dublin, Ireland, situated on the banks of the river LIFFEY. It plays an important part in James Joyce's FINNEGANS WAKE, symbolizing there the Garden of Eden and also serving as the site of the secret crime that troubles the dreams of H. C. EARWICKER. Its latter rôle is believed by Harry Levin to be in memory of the "Phoenix Park murders," in which Charles Stewart PARNELL, Joyce's political hero, was implicated. The action of the first section of Finnegans Wake takes place broadly in and around Phoenix Park, which is doubly significant because of its name, the PHOENIX appearing frequently throughout the novel as a symbol of resurrection and recurrence.

Phooka or Pooka. A hobgoblin of Irish folklore, a spirit of most malignant disposition, who hurries people to their destruction. He sometimes comes in the form of an eagle, and sometimes in that of a horse, like the Scotch KELPIE. See also PUCK.

Phorcus. "The old man of the sea" of Greek mythology. He was the father of the three Graiae, who were gray from their birth, and had but one eye—which was stolen by PERSEUS as one of the means through which he was to obtain the head of MEDUSA—and one tooth common to the three.

Phrygian cap. See LIBERTY CAP.

Phrygian mode. One of the four principal modes in ancient Greek music. It is described as brisk and spirited. See also DORIAN MODE; LYDIAN MODE; MYXOLYDIAN MODE.

Phryne. A famous Athenian courtesan of the 4th century B. C., who acquired so much wealth by her beauty that she offered to rebuild the walls of Thebes if she might put on them this inscription: "Alexander destroyed them, but Phryne the hetaera rebuilt them." She is said to have been the model for Praxiteles' Cnidian Venus, and also for Apelles' picture of Venus rising from the sea.

Phrynus. The name of two playwrights of Athens. One wrote tragedies (late 6th and early 5th centuries B. C.), the other comedies (late 5th century B. C.).

Phyfe, Duncan (1768-1854). Famous Scottish-born furniture maker, coming to America about 1783. His designs for mahogany chairs, couches, tables, etc., are highly prized. He had a joiner's shop in New York from about 1792 until he retired in 1847.

Phyllis or Phillis. A country girl in Virgil's third and fifth Eclogues. Hence, a rustic maiden.

physicians, the prince of. See under PRINCE.

Physician's or Phisicien's Tale. One of Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES, having its source in the Roman legend of Appius Claudius and Virginia. See VIRGINIA.

Physick, Philip Syng (1768-1837). American surgeon, often called the "Father of American Surgery." Invented a number of surgical instruments of great value.

physiocrats. A French school of thought in political economy, started by François QUESNAY and Jean Claude Marie Vincent, sieur de Gournay (1712-1759). It systematized principles earlier expounded by R. Cantillon in 1755. The term is of Greek origin and combines the words for "nature" and "to rule." The physiocrats believed that society should be governed in accord with natural order, that individual rights should be limited only insofar as they do not infringe the rights of others, and that government is a necessary evil. They reached the conclusion that only agriculture, with the addition of the production of metals, is truly productive, and that manufactures and commerce are "sterile." Turgot was the chief practical member of the school. Adam SMITH was influenced by some physiocratic doctrines, and certain tenets of the physiocrats foreran the contentions of Henry GEORGE in America.

Physiologus. A Greek collection, of the second century A.D., of allegories concerning animals and other things in nature. In the fifth century, Latin translations of the Physiologus became popular throughout Europe. They constitute the foundation of the bestiaries of the later Middle Ages.

Platt, John James (1835-1917). American journalist and poet who wrote, with William Dean HOWELLS, Poems of Two Friends (1860). His wife, Sarah Morgan, was also a poet.

Piazza Tales, The. Stories by Herman MELVILLE collected in 1856.

pibroch. A war-like kind of bagpipe music used by the Scottish clans.

pica. A size of type; in the point system, equal to twelve points. Used as a unit in measuring widths of columns, etc. The term is probably derived from Latin pica, "a pie book," that is, a book containing the rules for the proper church service as used in pre-Reformation England. The pie book seems to have been so called because its color was that of a (mag)pie. The type size chosen for the first printed pie book would explain the transfer of the name to what is now 12-point type.

Picabia, Francis (1878?-). French post-impressionist painter of the cubist and Dadaist groups.

picador. In bull fighting, the horseman with a lance who helps exhaust the strength of the bull before the matador (who alone may do the killing) enters the ring.

picaresque (Sp. picaresco, "roguish, knavish"). The term applied to the class of literature that deals sympathetically with the adventures of clever and amusing rogues. The earliest example of the picaresque novel is Mendoza's Lazarillo de Tormes (1554). Le Sage's Gil Blas is perhaps the best known. Thomas NASH's Jack Wilton (1594) is the earliest English example, and others are Defoe's MOIL FLANDERS and Colonel Jack.

Picasso, Pablo (1881-). Spanish painter, known especially as a leader of post-impressionism and with his friend George Braque as a founder of cubism (1906).

Piccadilly. This well-known London thoroughfare is named from a house that stood near the corner of Sackville Street which, in the early 17th century, was nicknamed Picka-dilly Hall.

The "piccadille" was originally "the round hem or the several divisions set together about the skirt of a Garment," and was so called because it was pierced (Sp. picado) or slashed; thence it came to be applied to the stiff collar that supported the ruff of 17th century gallants.

One early account (1656) says Pickadilly Hall was so called because it was the "outmost or skirt house of the Suburbs that way"; another—of the same date—because it was built by one Higgins, a tailor, who made his fortune by selling "piccadilles."

piccaninny or piccannin (West India Negro, from Sp. pequeño, "small"). A little Negro child of the West Indies and southern part of the United States; also, in South Africa, applied to small Kaffir children, and sometimes to native children in Australia.

Piccard, Auguste (1884-). Swiss physicist. Investigator of atmospheric electricity. Made famous balloon ascents into stratosphere in an air-tight gondola of his own invention at Augsburg, Germany (1931), and Zurich, Switzerland (1932). His twin brother, Jean Felix Piccard (1884-), made a stratosphere ascent from the Ford airport at Dearborn, Michigan (1934).

Piccini, Niccolò (1728-1800). Italian opera composer, remembered especially for a feud (1774-1780), in which he did not participate, between his followers, the Piccinists, and the admirers of C. W. Gluck, the GLUCKISTS, who represented the German school of music.

Piccolomini. Famous Italian family, including archbishops, philosophers, soldiers, etc. Octavio Piccolomini (1599-1656) was a general in the imperial and Spanish armies during the Thirty Years' War. Cf. Schiller's drama Die Piccolomini, second part of the Wallenstein trilogy, in which the poet supplies Octavio with a non-historical son and rival Max.

Pickering, William (1796-1854). English publisher who improved the standard of printing. He adopted the dolphin-and-anchor device of the ALDINE Press and issued the Aldine edition of English Poets in 53 volumes.

Pickett, George Edward (1825-1875). American (Confederate) army officer who made a famous charge at Gettysburg (July 3, 1863) against the Union positions on Cemetery Ridge. He was beaten back with the loss of three-quarters of his division.

Pickford, Mary. Professional name of Gladys Smith (1893-). Famous Canadian-born moving-picture actress, usually in rôles of young girls. Wife (1920-1935) of Douglas Fairbanks. First husband Owen Moore (divorced 1920). After divorcing Fairbanks she married Charles ("Buddy") Rogers.

Pickle, Peregrine, see PEREGRINE PICKLE.

Pickthall, Marjorie Lowry Christie (1883-1922). Canadian poet and novelist.

Pickthall, Marmaduke (1875-1936). English novelist. Best-known for his oriental novels, such as Said the Fisherman (1903) and Oriental Encounters (1918).

Pickwick Papers. A novel by Charles DICKENS (1836-1837), more formally entitled The Posthumous Papers of the Pickwick Club. Aside from the immortal Sam WELLER, the chief character is Samuel Pickwick, general chairman of the Pickwick Club, a most naive, benevolent, elderly gentleman, who, as member of a club instituted "for the purpose of investigating the source of the Hampstead ponds," travels about with three members of the club, to whom he acts as guardian and adviser. His misadventures are many, but worst of all is his sad experience with Mrs. BARDELL, which led to a famous trial.

in a Pickwickian sense. Said of words or epithets, usually of a derogatory or insulting kind, that, in the circumstances in which they are employed, are not to be taken as having quite the same force or implication as they naturally would have. The allusion is to the scene in chapter 1 where Mr. Pickwick accuses Mr. Blotton of acting in "a vile and calumnious manner," whereupon Mr. Blotton retorts by calling Mr. Pickwick "a humbug." It finally is made to appear that both use the offensive words only in a Pickwickian sense, and that each has, in fact, the highest regard and esteem for the other.

Pico della Mirandola, Count Giovanni (1463-1494). Italian humanist, philosopher, and author, a member of the Florentine Academy established by the MEDICI family for the study of philosophy. He is known for his neo-Platonic studies and for his work in Hebrew philosophy and the CABALA, of which he was one of the first Christian scholars. He was condemned for a time by the Pope for certain of his philosophical publications. Sir Thomas MORE translated a number of his writings into English, including an account of his life.

Picon, Mollie (1903-). American Yiddish actress. Began in the Philadelphia Yiddish Arch Street Theater at the age of 5. After going to Europe and becoming famous internationally, she returned to New York in 1922. The Second Avenue Theater is known as Mollie Picon's, and she is part owner of it.

Picrochole. In Rabelais' Gargantua, a fire-eater who personifies satirically mankind's quarrelsome nature and lust for conquest. He may represent Charles V or Ferdinand of Aragon.

Picts. An ancient people of Great Britain who occupied parts of the Scottish highlands. They continually warred with the Romans and the Saxons. In Kipling's Puck of Pook's Hill, the Picts are described as the Little People, and figure in several of the stories.

Picture of Dorian Gray, The. A fantastic, allegorical novel (1891), by Oscar WILDE. Dorian remains youthful while his portrait grows old and corrupt. See also WILD ASS'S SKIN.

Picus. In classic mythology, a soothsayer and augur; husband of Canens. In his prophetic art he made use of a woodpecker (picus), a prophetic bird sacred to Mars. CIRCE fell in love with him, and, as he did not respond to her advances, changed him into a woodpecker, whereby he still retained his prophetic power.

Pidgin, Charles Felton (1844-1923). American novelist, best-known for his Quincy Adams Sawyer (1900), which is said to have been inspired by the poem The Courtin' by James Russell Lowell, and Blennerhassett (1901), a novel about Aaron BURR.

pidgin English. A lingua franca which has established itself in the intercourse of Chinese natives with foreigners. It consists essentially of more or less assimilated English words with Chinese grammatical constructions. For instance, the Chinese cannot pronounce r, so replace it with l—te-le for "three," solly for "sorry," etc. In Chinese, between a numeral and its noun there is always inserted a word (called the "classifier") and this, in pidgin English, is replaced by piece—e.g. one piece kniffee, two piece hingkichu (handkerchiefs). The word pidgin is a corruption of business.

pieces of eight. The old Spanish silver peso (piastre) or dollar of eight reals. It was marked with an 8. In use in the 17th and 18th centuries.

piéd-à-terre (Fr., "foot on the ground"). A temporary lodging, a country residence.

Mr. Harding, however, did not allow himself to be talked over into giving up his own and only piéd-à-terre in the High Street.—Anthony Trollope, Barchester Towers.

piéd de la lettre, au (Fr., "to the foot of the letter"). Quite literally—close to the letter.

A wild enthusiastic young fellow, whose opinions one must not take au piéd de la lettre.—Thackeray, Pendennis, I, xi.

Pied Piper of Hamelin. The legend is that the town of Hamelin (Westphalia) was infested with rats in 1284, that a mysterious Piper, clad in a parti-colored suit, appeared in the town and offered to rid it of the vermin for a certain sum. The townspeople accepted the offer, but, after the Pied Piper had fulfilled his contract, the payment was withheld. On the following St. John's Day he reappeared, and again played his pipe. This time all the children of the town, in place of the rats, followed him; he led them to a mountain cave where all disappeared save two—one blind, the other dumb, or lame; and one legend adds that the children did not perish in the mountain, but were led over it to Transylvania, where they formed a German colony. Robert BROWNING popularized the legend in his children's poem The Pied Piper. More recently Josephine Preston PEABODY made it the subject of her poetic drama The Piper (1909), which was awarded the Stratford-on-Avon prize.

To blow the pipe his lips he wrinkled,
And green and blue his sharp eyes twinkled . . .
And ere three notes his pipe had uttered . . .
Out of the houses rats came tumbling—
Great rats, small rats, lean rats, brawny rats,
Brown rats, black rats, grey rats, tawny rats,
And step by step they followed him dancing,
Till they came to the river Weser.

Browning.

Pierce, Franklin (1804-1869). Fourteenth president of the U.S. Senator (1837-1842), Brigadier General (1847). His friend Nathaniel HAWTHORNE wrote a campaign biography for him and was rewarded after election with the consulship at Liverpool.

Pierian spring. Inspiration, from Pieria where the Muses were born.

Pierpont, John (1785-1866). American Unitarian clergyman and author. His best-known works are on political subjects. They include The Anti-Slavery Poems of John Pierpont (1843). One of his grandsons was J. Pierpont Morgan.

Pierre or the Ambiguities. A novel by Herman MELVILLE (1852), regarded as partially autobiographical. It deals with the love of Pierre Glendinning and his half-sister Isabel, Pierre's murder of his cousin and the brother of Lucy Tartan, his fiancée, when they attempt to interfere with him, and the double suicide of Pierre and Isabel in prison. The "ambiguities" of the subtitle are good and evil, and critics interpret Pierre as a man defeated by his adherence to Christian ideals.

Pierre et Jean. A short novel by Guy de MAUPASSANT (1888), a story of two brothers, one of whom receives an unexpected inheritance. The other brother, by his suspicions, forces his once-adored mother, Madame Roland, to confess that the money comes from a former lover who has left it to his own son.

Pierre Nozière. The second of a series of four autobiographical volumes by Anatole FRANCE (1899). The others are My Friend's Book (Livre de mon ami; 1885), Little Pierre (Le Petit Pierre; 1918) and The Bloom of Life (La Vie en fleur; 1922).

Pierrot (Fr. "Little Peter"). A favorite character of pantomime, a sort of clown-lover.

He is generally the tallest and thinnest man that can be obtained, has his face and hair covered with white powder or flour, and wears a white gown with very long sleeves and a row of big buttons down the front. Pierrot is the lover of Pierrette, or sometimes of Columbine. From the simple figure of the early pantomime, poets and artists have gradually evolved another, more romantic Pierrot, an artist-lover of soaring imagination who grimly hides his real passions behind a comic mask. Among many others, the French DEBURAU, BAUDELAIRE and GAUTIER, the English Ernest DOWSON and the Canadian Bliss CARMAN have written of this new Pierrot. Ernest Dowson's dramatic fantasy, The Pierrot of the Minute, is the best known of several short plays on the subject. An interesting collection of poems on Pierrot (and, incidentally, Pierrette, Columbine, Harlequin and other of the pantomimic characters) is given in Mon Ami Pierrot, Songs and Fantasie, compiled by Kendall Banning.

Piers Plowman, The Vision of. A long allegorical and satirical poem in Middle English alliterative verse, written between 1362 and 1399 by probably as many as four or five different authors. On internal evidence the first part was long ascribed to William LANGLAND.

The title should really be The Vision Concerning Piers the Plowman, for in the earlier parts Piers typifies the simple, pious English laborer, and in the later, Christ Himself. The poet supposes himself falling asleep on the Malvern Hills, and in his dream sees various visions of an allegorical character, bearing on the vices of the times. The whole poem consists of nearly 15,000 verses, and is divided into twenty parts, each part being called a passus.

Pietà. In painting or sculpture, a representation of the Virgin Mary with the dead body of Christ held on her knees, or mourning for him. Michelangelo did a famous Pietà of white Carrara marble. He signed his name on the ribbon across the Madonna's gown. Other world-renowned Pietàs are by Van Dyck, Andrea del Sarto, Quentin Massys, etc.

Pietro. In Browning's RING AND THE BOOK, the putative father of Pompilia.

Pietro of Abano (1250?-?1316). The greatest Italian philosopher and physician of the 13th century. He was an astrologer, and was persecuted by the INQUISITION as a wizard. Browning wrote a poem called Pietro of Abano (1880).

a pig in a poke. A blind bargain. The French say acheter chat en poche ("to buy a cat in a pocket"). The reference is to a common trick in days gone by of trying to palm off on a greenhorn a cat for a sucking-pig. If he opened the sack he "let the cat out of the bag," and the trick was disclosed.

pigs in clover. People who have any amount of money but don't know how to behave themselves as gentlefolk. Also, a game consisting of a box divided into recesses into which one has to roll marbles by tilting the box.

pigeon wing. To cut a pigeon wing is an American phrase for "to execute a fancy step in dancing by jumping into the air and clapping the legs together."

Pig Iron. A novel by Charles G. NORRIS (1925).

Pigs in Clover. A novel by "Frank Danby" (Julia Frankau) (1904).

Pigs Is Pigs. The title of a widely-read humorous story by Ellis Parker BUTLER (1906).

Pigwiggen. An elf in Drayton's NYMPHIDIA, in love with QUEEN MAB. He combats the jealous OBERON with great fury.

Pigwiggen was this Fairy Knight,
One wond'rous gracious in the sight
Of fair Queen Mab, which day and night
He amorously observed.

Pike. A term denoting the crude hardy Westerner in American literature. It came into use with the publication, almost simultaneously in the year 1871, of John HAY's Pike County Ballads and Bret HARTE's East and West Poems, both of which attempted to express Western life in its own vernacular in ballad form. The best known of Bret Harte's poems is his HEATHEN CHINEE; of Hay's, JIM BLUDSO and Little Breeches.

Pilar. In Ernest Hemingway's FOR WHOM THE BELL TOLLS, a strong and vigorous peasant woman who is the leader of the Spanish Republican guerrilla band in its mountain hideout. She sentimentally encourages MARIA and Robert JORDAN in their love for each other.

Pilate, Pontius. A Roman procurator of Judea in the first half of the 1st century A. D. before whom Jesus was tried. He attempted to persuade the mob of Jesus' innocence, but failing, washed his hands before them with the words, "I am innocent of the blood of this righteous man; see ye to it." Tradition has it that Pontius Pilate's later life was so full of misfortune that, in Caligula's time, he committed suicide in Rome. His body was cast into the Tiber, but evil spirits disturbed the water so much that it was retrieved and taken to Vienne, where it was thrown into the Rhone, eventually coming to rest in the recesses of a lake on Mount Pilatus opposite Lucerne. Another legend states that the suicide occurred so that he might escape the sentence of death passed on him by Tiberius because of his having ordered the crucifixion of Christ; and yet another, that both he and his wife became penitent, embraced Christianity, and died peaceably in the Faith.

Tradition gives the name Claudia Procula, or Procla, to Pilate's wife, and by some she has been identified with the Claudia of 2 Tim. iv, 21.

Pilate's voice. A loud, ranting voice. In the old MYSTERIES, all tyrants were made to speak in a rough, ranting manner.

Pilgrim Fathers. The first shipload of settlers in Massachusetts, who set sail in the ship Mayflower in 1620; also, by extension of the term, any early Puritan settlers of New England. The Mayflower brought English, Scotch and Dutch Puritans, 102 in all.

Men in the middle of life, austere and grave in deportment . . .
God had sifted three kingdoms to find the wheat for this planting.
Longfellow, Courtship of Miles Standish, iv. (1858).

Pilgrim's Progress, The. A famous narrative by John BUNYAN (Pt. I, 1678; Pt. II, 1684), supposed to be a dream, and to allegorize the life of a Christian from his conversion to his death. His doubts are giants, his sins a bundle or pack, his Bible a chart, his minister Evangelist, his conversion a flight from the City of Destruction, his struggle with besetting sins a fight with Apollyon, and his death a toilsome passage over a deep stream.

The second part deals with Christiana and her family led by Greatheart through the same road, to join Christian, who had gone before.

pillars of Hercules. Two opposite promontories at the entrance of the Mediterranean, one in Spain and the other in Africa. The tale is that they were bound together till Hercules tore them asunder in order to get to Gades (Cadiz). The ancients called them Calpe and Abyla; we call them Gibraltar and Mount Hacho.

I will follow you even to the pillars of Hercules. To the end of the world. The ancients supposed that these rocks marked the utmost limits of the habitable globe.

Pillars of Society, The. A four-act drama by Henrik IBSEN (1877).

Pilnyak. Pseudonym of Boris Andreievich VOGAU (1894-). Russian novelist. The Naked Year (1922; translated, 1928) has been called the earliest attempt to interpret the Russian Revolution. It was rather scorned by Soviet critics but sold over half a million copies in the Soviet Union alone. The Volga Falls to the Caspian Sea (1931) concerns the huge Kolumna dam and the Five-Year Plan, again criticized by Soviet critics for bourgeois leanings. Pilnyak was president of the All Russian Writers Union (1929) and has traveled widely.

Pilot, The. A sea story by James Fenimore COOPER (1823), relating the adventures of the Revolutionary hero John Paul JONES. The sailor Long Tom COFFIN, one of Cooper's most famous characters, appears in this book.

Pilpay or Bidpay. The name given as that of the author of Kalilah and Dimnah (otherwise known as The Fables of Pilpay), which is the 8th century Arabic version of the Sanskrit Panchatantra. The word is not a true name, but means "wise man" (Arab. bidbah), and was applied to the chief scholar at the court of an Indian prince.

Pilsudski, Józef (1867-1935). Polish general and statesman. In World War I, he offered his army to Austria and fought against the Russians. Worked for Polish independence. Chief of state and first marshal of Poland (1920); dictator (1921); premier (1926-1928, 1930). He was in complete control of Polish policies until the time of his death. Respected by HITLER.

Piltdown man. An extinct manlike primate, reconstructed from the remains of two skulls found early in the 20th century at Piltdown, near Lewes, in Sussex, England. A bone implement was found nearby. Also known as Dawn man.

Pimpernel, The Scarlet, sec SCARLET PIMPERNEL.

pin money. A lady's allowance of money for her own personal expenditure. At one time pins were a great expense to a woman, and in 14th- and 15th-century wills there are often special bequests for the express purpose of buying pins.

policy of pin pricks. A policy of petty annoyances. The term came into prominence during the strained relations between England and France in 1898, and is an Anglicization of the very much older French phrase, un coup d'épingle.

Pinafore, H.M.S., or The Lass that Loved a Sailor. A comic opera by GILBERT and SULLIVAN (1878). The plot hinges on the fact that Josephine, the daughter of the Captain of H.M.S. Pinafore, refuses the advances of the all-important Sir Joseph PORTER because she loves a "common sailor" named Ralph Rackstraw. Finally Little Buttercup, the bumboat woman, confesses to having changed the two babies, Ralph Rackstraw and the Captain, as nurse long years before.

pinball game. In the U.S., a game similar to bagatelle. A tilted board allows the ball, shot up a side alley, to run down through a field of pins which deflect it from point to point, either into certain receptacles or away from them. The game is often used for gambling and has frequently been raided by the police.

Pinch. In Shakespeare's COMEDY OF ER-

RORS, a schoolmaster and conjurer, who tries to exorcise Antipholus.

Pinch, Tom. In Dickens' MARTIN CHUZZLEWITT, a clerk to Mr. PECKSNIFF, "architect and land surveyor." He is as simple as a child, green as a salad, and honest as truth itself. Tom is very fond of story-books, but far more so of the organ.

Pinchbeck, Christopher (1670?-1732). London maker of watches and toys who invented a copper and zinc alloy resembling gold. Hence pinchbeck, "a spurious kind of gold."

Pinchot, Gifford (1867-1946). American political leader. Professor of forestry at Yale (1903-1936). Founder, with his brother Amos Pinchot, of the Pinchot School of Forestry at Yale. Governor of Pennsylvania (1923-1927), 1931-1935).

Pinchwife, Mr. In WYCHERLY's comedy The Country Wife (1675), the town husband of a raw country girl, unpracticed in the ways of the world, whom he watches with ceaseless anxiety.

Mrs. Pinchwife. The counterpart of Molière's AGNES in his comedy entitled L'École des femmes, a young woman wholly unsophisticated in affairs of the heart.

GARRICK changed the title of Wycherly's comedy to The Country Girl (1766), and Mrs. Pinchwife's name to Peggy Thrift.

Pinc:ney, Charles Cotesworth (1746-1825). American statesman who served in the revolution, became a member of the federal convention (1787), and helped to frame the constitution. When he went to France on a special mission, he was refused recognition; his report on the attempts of Talleyrand's agents to obtain bribes from him is known as the "XYZ Correspondence."

Pindar. The Theban poet (ca. 518-442 B. C.) whose lyrics in irregular verse have furnished the word "pindaric."

the British Pindar. Thomas Gray (1716-1771). On his monument in Westminster Abbey are inscribed these lines—

No more the Grecian muse unrivalled reigns;
To Britain let the nations homage pay:
She felt a Homer's fire in Milton's strains,
A Pindar's rapture in the lyre of Gray.

the French Pindar. (1) Jean Dorat (1507-1588); (2) Ponce Denis Lebrun (1729-1807).

the Italian Pindar. Gabriello Chiabrera (1552-1637).

the Pindar of England. Abraham Cowley (1618-1667) was called by the Duke of Buckingham "The Pindar, Horace, and Virgil of England."

Pindaric verse. Irregular verse; a poem of various meters and of lofty style, in imitation of the odes of Pindar. Alexander's Feast, by DRYDEN, and The Bard, by GRAY, are representative examples. See also ODE.

Pindar, Peter. Pseudonym of John Wolcott (1738-1819).

Pinero, Sir Arthur Wing (1855-1934). English playwright, known for his comedies of manners and his "society" dramas. His works include The Money Spinner (1881); The Magistrate (1885); The Schoolmistress (1886); Dandy Dick (1887); Sweet Lavender (1888); THE SECOND MRS. TANQUERAY (1893); Lady Bountiful (1891); The Cabinet Minister (1892); The Weaker Sex (1894); The Amazons (1895); The Notorious Mrs. Ebbsmith (1895); The Princess and the Butterfly (1898); TRELAWNY OF THE WELLS (1898); THE GAY LORD QUEX (1899); Iris (1901); His House in Order (1906); The Thunderbolt (1908); Mid-Channel (1909); The Widow of Wasdale Head (1912). His later plays are in a lighter vein, and include The Enchanted Cottage (1922), made into a successful motion picture; Child Man (1930); Dr. Harmer's Holidays (1930); and A Cold June (1932).

Pine-Tree State. Maine. See under STATES.

Pink or Pinks. Also Parlor Pink. In derivative political jargon, partly or mildly Red.

Pinkerton, Allan (1819-1884). Scottish-born head of a widely-known American private detective agency. Organized and conducted secret service for General McClellan (1861-1862). Author of Criminal Reminiscences and Detective Sketches (1879); The Spies of the Rebellion (1883); Thirty Years a Detective (1884); etc.

Pinkerton, Miss. In Thackeray's VANITY FAIR, a majestic lady, tall as a grenadier, and most proper. Miss Pinkerton keeps an academy for young ladies on Chiswick Mall. She is "the Semiramis of Hammersmith, the friend of Dr. Johnson, and the correspondent of Mrs. Chapon." This very distinguished lady "had a Roman nose, and wore a solemn turban." Amelia SEDLEY was educated at her academy, and Rebecca SHARP was a pupil teacher there.

"Pink" Marsh. See MARSH.

Pinkney, Edward Coote (1802-1828). American poet who served in the U.S. Navy (1815-1824). His Poems (1825) show a rather imitative lyrical gift.

Pink 'Un, The. English nickname for the popular sports journal, The Sporting Times.

pin money. See under PIN.

Pinski, David (1872-). Jewish-American dramatist and editor, born in Russia and writing in Yiddish. His comedy, The Treasure, was produced by the Theater Guild in 1920. King David and His Wives (1923; a drama and The Final Balance (1928) are among his best works.

Pioneer, The. A monthly literary magazine founded by James Russell Lowell and Robert Carter (1843). It ran through only three issues but published The Tell-Tale Heart and Notes on English Verse by Edgar Allan Poe, and contributions by Nathaniel Hawthorne, Lowell, Whittier, etc.

Pioneers, The. A historical novel by James Fenimore COOPER (1823), one of the LEATHER-STOCKING series. In this novel, Leatherstocking is an old man in the Otsego settlement of his boyhood days. The action takes place in post-Revolutionary times and shows the corrupting effects of the settlements upon the Indians. Leatherstocking, embittered by the inroads of civilization upon the old freedom of the open country, lives on in lonely rebellion.

Walt WHITMAN wrote a poem Pioneers! O Pioneers (1865) and Willa CATHER a novel O Pioneers (1913).

Pioneers of France in the New World. A history by Francis PARKMAN (1865).

Piozzi, Hester Lynch, née Salusbury. Chiefly known as Mrs. Thrale (1741-1821). English writer. Well-known for her friendship of twenty years with Dr. Johnson, to whom the Thrales' home was always open. After her first husband's death, she married (1784) the Italian musician Gabriel Piozzi to the great displeasure of Dr. Johnson. Her anecdotes about Dr. Johnson and her correspondence with him approach Boswell's Life in interest.

Pip. The hero of Dickens' novel GREAT EXPECTATIONS. Real name, Philip Pirrip.

Pip. In Herman Melville's MOBY DICK, a little Negro cabin-boy, a favorite of Captain AHAH, who goes mad during the wild pursuit of the white whale through storm and disaster.

Pipchin, Mrs. In Dickens' DOMBEY AND SON, an exceedingly "well-connected lady," living at Brighton, where she keeps an establishment for the training of children. Mrs. Pipchin is an ill-favored old woman, with mottled cheeks and gray eyes. She is given to buttered toast and sweetbreads, but keeps her children on the plainest fare and gives them "everything that they didn't like and nothing that they did."

Piper, The. A drama dealing with the theme of the PIED PIPER OF HAMELIN by Josephine Preston PEABODY (1909).

Piper of Hamelin. See PIED PIPER OF HAMELIN.

Pipes, Tom. In Smollett's PEREGRINE PICKLE, a retired boatswain's mate, living with Commodore Trunnion to keep the servants in order. Tom Pipes is noted for his taciturnity.

Pippa Passes. A dramatic poem by Robert BROWNING (1841). Pippa is a very poor child, at work all the year round, except one day, in the silk mills at Asolo in Italy. Her one holiday is New Year's Day, and the drama hinges on her chance appearance "at critical moments in the spiritual life-history of the leading characters in the play." Just at the supreme moment, Pippa passes, singing some refrain, and her voice alters the destinies of the men and women to whom she is unknown. Unconsciously, her own destiny is altered in the end by her last song. The statement of Browning's theme lies in the refrain of Pippa's first song, piracy. The violation of copyright is technically an infringement. More currently and picturesquely, an illegal reprint is called a pirated edition and the practice of bringing out such editions, piracy. The term is often used loosely with reference to the era preceding modern COPYRIGHT conventions, when "pirating" was an honorable and lucrative business.

Piraeus. The port of Athens in Greece, built originally by Themistocles in 493 B. C.

Pirandello, Luigi (1867–1936). Italian playwright and novelist, known for his symbolical and psychological dramas and satires, which were internationally famous during the 1920's and aroused a great deal of controversy because of their alleged "obscurity." SIX CHARACTERS IN SEARCH OF AN AUTHOR (Sei Personaggi in Cerca d'Autore; 1921) is his most celebrated play. Others are Enrico IV (1922), produced in New York as The Living Mask; Right You Are If You Think You Are (Così È Se Vi Pare; 1918); As You Desire Me (Come Tu Mi Vuoi; 1931); Tonight We Improvise (Questa Sera Si Recita a Soggetto; 1932); Tutto Per Bene (1937). His non-theatrical works include Il Fu Mattia Pascal (1904), translated into English as The Late Mattia Pascal, L'Esclusa (The Outcast; 1913), and Uno, Nessuno, e Centomila (One, None, and a Hundred Thousand; 1926), novels; Novelle per un Anno (1932–1937), part of which was translated as Better Think Twice About It (1933), A Character in Distress (1938), and The Medals, and Other Stories (1939), collections of short stories.

Pirandello spent most of his early career as a professor of literature in an Italian girls' school. After his success as a writer for the stage he founded his own theater in Rome and took his own acting company on tours with his plays through Europe.

Piranesi, Giambattista (1720–1778). Italian architect, painter, and engraver. His copperplate engravings have become source material for the investigation of Louis XIV, Adam, and Empire styles of architecture.

Pirate, The. A novel by Sir Walter Scott (1822). The action takes place in the wild sea country of the Shetlands, and the chief characters are Minna and Brenda Troil, daughters of old Magnus Troil. Minna becomes infatuated with "the Pirate," Captain Clement Cleveland, a son of Basil Mertoun, who had sailed under the Jolly Roger himself but later repented. His other son, Mordaunt Mertoun, falls in love with Minna's sister Brenda and finally wins the reluctant consent of old Magnus to his suit. See also NORNA.

Pirates, the. In baseball parlance, the Pittsburgh Nationals. See BASEBALL TEAMS.

Pirates of Penzance. A well-known comic opera by GILBERT and SULLIVAN (1879), presenting the capers of a band of pirates, a bevy of girls, and a Major General.

Pirithous. King of the Lapithae in Thesaly, and friend of Theseus. He was the husband of Hippodamia, at whose wedding feast the Centaurs offered violence to the bride, thus causing a great battle.

Pisanio. In Shakespeare's CYMBELINE, servant of Posthumus. Sent to murder Imogen, the wife of Posthumus, he persuades her to escape to Milford Haven in boy's clothes, and sends a bloody napkin to Posthumus, to make him believe that she has been murdered.

Pisgah. The mountain from which Moses saw the Promised Land (Deut. iii. 27). See also NEBO.

Pisistratus (d. 527 B. C.). Tyrant of Athens. Presented the city with many splendid buildings. He was a patron of literature, and it was probably during his rule that dramatic contests were first introduced. According to Cicero and Pausanias, Pisistratus was instrumental in one phase of the Homeric literary tradition. The simple interpretation that this signified that "Pisistratus first committed the poems of Homer to writing and reduced them to the order in which we now read them" (F. A. Wolf, Prolegomena), is now generally discarded.

Piso's justice. Verbally right, but morally wrong. Seneca tells us that Piso condemned a man on circumstantial evidence for murder, but when the suspect was at the place of execution, the man supposed to have been murdered appeared. The centurion sent the prisoner to Piso, and explained the case to him, whereupon Piso condemned all three to death, saying fiat justitia (Lat., "let justice be done"). The condemned man was executed because sentence of death had been passed upon him, the centurion because he had disobeyed orders, and the man supposed to have been murdered because he had been the cause of death to two innocent men, and fiat justitia ruat coelum.

("let justice be done though the heavens should fall").

Pistol. An unprincipled bully who appears in Shakespeare's MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR and the two parts of Henry IV as the ancient or ensign of Sir John FALSTAFF, and in Henry V as his lieutenant. Pistol is married to Mistress Nell Quickly, hostess of the tavern in Eastcheap.

Pit, The. A novel by Frank NORRIS (1903), dealing with the wheat market of Chicago. The hero is Curtis Jadwin, whose winning of Laura Dearborn and subsequent growing prosperity mark him as a successful man. He is ruined in the Pit, but his misfortune wins back for him the love and devotion of his wife. This book is the second of a proposed wheat trilogy. See also OCTOPUS.

Pit and the Pendulum. A famous tale by Edgar Allan POE (1843) concerning the horrors of the INQUISITION.

Pitcairn Island. A Polynesian island colonized by refugee mutineers from the H.M.S. BOUNTY, who were the ancestors of its present natives. Named after the British midshipman Robert Pitcairn (1747?-1770?) who first sighted the island (July 2, 1767) from H.M.S. Swallow.

pitchblende. A dark green mineral found in England, Europe, the U.S., and Canada; the chief source of radium and uranium. The word is adapted from German Pechblende.

Pitcher, Mollie. See McCAULEY.

Pithecanthrope. The name given by HAECKEL in 1868 to the hypothetical "MISSING LINK"; from Gr. pithekos, "ape," and anthropos, "man." Later, Pithecanthropus was the generic name given to the remains of the extinct manlike ape discovered in the Pliocene of Java in 1891.

Pithom and Raameses. The treasure cities built for Pharaoh by the Israelites. (Ex. i. 11.)

Pitkin, Walter Boughton (1878-). American college professor and author of best-selling books on applied psychology and self-help. The best-known of these are The Art of Rapid Reading (1929); The Psychology of Happiness (1929); Life Begins at Forty (1932); More Power to You (1933); Let's Get What We Want (1935).

Pitman, Sir Isaac (1813-1897). English inventor of an original system of phonographic shorthand.

Pitt, William, see CHATHAM, LORD.

Pitter, Ruth (1897-). English poet, known for her treatment of conventional lyric subjects—love, death, nature, the English countryside—in intellectual, 20th-century adaptations of earlier models, and her use of forms and imagery which, critics point out, derive from the 17th-century English poets. Her metrical effects have been particularly praised. Her books, for which she was acclaimed as one of the outstanding women poets of her time, include First Poems (1920); First and Second Poems (1927); Persephone in Hades (1931); A Mad Lady's Garland (1934); A Trophy of Arms (1936); The Rude Potato (1941); The Spirit Watches (1940); The Bridge (1946).

Pitti Palace. Renaissance building in Florence, Italy, which contains one of the finest collections of paintings in the world. It takes its name from Luca Pitti, once head of the Florentine Republic, for whom it was designed (ca. 1440).

Pixie or Pixy. A sprite or fairy of folklore, especially in Cornwall and Devon, where some hold them to be the spirits of infants who have died before baptism. The Pixy monarch has his court like OBERON, and sends his subjects on their several tasks. The word is probably Celtic, but its history is unknown.

pixilated. Balmey, daffy. An American word, probably a corruption of pixy-led, "led astray by pixies." Popularized by R. Riskin's screen play Mr. Deeds Goes to Town (1936), based on a story by C. B. Kelland, but traceable as far back as 1848.

Pizarro. (1) Title and hero of a drama supposedly by Richard Brinsley SHERIDAN (1799). The hero, Francisco Pizarro (1470?-1541), was a Spanish adventurer who made war on Atahualpa (in the drama Ataliba), the Inca of Peru, conquered him (1532) and had him executed for his refusal to accept Christianity. The play was based on a previous drama by Kotzebue entitled Spaniards in Peru.

(2) In Beethoven's opera Fidelio (1791), the governor of the State prison in which Fernando Florestan is confined.

Placebo (Lat., "I shall please," or "be acceptable"). Vespers for the dead; they are so called because in the old church services this was the opening word of the first antiphon—Placebo Domino in regione vivorum ("I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living") (Ps. cxvi. 9).

As sycophants and those who wanted to get something out of the relatives of the departed used to make a point of attending this service and singing the Placebo, the phrase to sing Placebo came to mean "to play the flatterer or sycophant"; and Chaucer, who in the Merchant's Tale gives this as a name to a parasite, has—

Flatereres been the develes chapelleyns that singen evere Placebo.—Parson's Tale, § 40.

Place in the Sun. See under SUN.

Place-makers Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

plagiarism. Literary or artistic theft. The appropriation of the literary or artistic work of someone else as one's own. Ultimately from Latin plagium, "kidnaping."

Plagiary, Sir Fretful. In Sheridan's comedy THE CRITIC, a playwright, whose dramas are mere plagiarisms from "the refuse of obscure volumes." He pretends to be rather pleased with criticism, but is in reality sorely irritated thereby.

Plagued by the Nightingale. A novel by Kay BOYLE (1930).

Plague Year, A Journal of the. A narrative by DEFOE (1722), purporting to be an eyewitness account by a resident of London of the Great Plague of 1664-1665. It is a work of imaginative genius founded on first-hand evidence.

Plain, the. The Girondists were so called in the French Revolutionary National Convention, because they sat on the level floor or plain of the hall. See MOUNTAIN.

Plain Dealer, The. A comedy by William WYCHERLEY (?1674). The titular hero is Captain MANLY.

Plain Language from Truthful James. A poem by Bret HARTE, better known as THE HEATHEN CHINEE.

Plain Tales from the Hills. A volume of short stories of life in India by Rudyard KIPPLING, first published in Calcutta in 1888. It contains, among others, several stories about the famous trio, Ortheris, Learoyd and MULVANEY.

Planché, James Robinson (1796-1880). English playwright who gained a reputation for his knowledge of costume and heraldry. Produced plays for Mme Vestris. Author of works on British costume.

planetarium. A model of the solar system. In the Zeiss planetarium (first produced by the firm of Zeiss in Jena, Germany) the planets and stars are projected in motion onto the ceiling of a large auditorium. There are such Zeiss planetariums in New York City, Philadelphia, Chicago, Pittsburgh, etc.

planets. The heavenly bodies that revolve round the sun in approximately circular orbits; so called from Gr. (through Lat. and O. Fr.) planasthai, "to wander," because, to the ancients, they appeared to wander about among the stars instead of having fixed places.

The primary planets are Mercury, Venus, the Earth, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, and Neptune; these are known as the major planets, the asteroids between the orbits of Mars and Jupiter being the minor planets.

The secondary planets are the satellites, or moons, revolving round a primary.

Mercury and Venus are called inferior planets because their orbits are nearer to the sun than the earth's; the remaining major planets are superior planets.

Only five of the planets were known to the ancients (the earth, of course, not being reckoned), viz., Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn; to these were added the sun and the moon, making seven in all. Among the astrologers and alchemists—

THE SUN (APOLLO)	represented	Gold.
THE MOON (DIANA)	"	Silver.
MERCURY	"	Quicksilver.
VENUS	"	Copper.
MARS	"	Iron.
JUPITER	"	Tin.
SATURN	"	Lead.

In HERALDRY, the arms of royal personages used to be blazoned by the names of planets.

to be born under a lucky or unlucky planet. According to astrology, some planet, at the birth of every individual, presides over his destiny. Some of the planets, like Jupiter, are lucky; others, like Saturn, are unlucky. See HOUSES, ASTROLOGICAL.

Plantagenet (from planta genista "broom-plant"). The family cognizance first assumed by Geoffrey, Count of Anjou (d. 1151), during a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, as a symbol of humility. By his wife Matilda, daughter of Henry I of England, he was father of Henry II, the founder of the House of Plantagenet.

the House of Plantagenet. Henry II, and the English kings descended in the direct male line from him, viz.:

Henry II	Edward I
Richard I	Edward II
John	Edward III
Henry III	Richard II

They reigned from 1154 to 1399.

Plantagenet Palliser, see OMNIUM, DUKE OF.

Plantin, Christophe (1520?-1589). Famous French printer who established presses at Antwerp (1555) and later at Leyden and Paris.

Plastic Age, The. A realistic novel of college life by Percy MARKS (1924).

Plato, that is, the broad-shouldered one. Original name Aristocles (427?-347 B.C.). Famous Greek philosopher, disciple of SOCRATES and teacher of ARISTOTLE. He was the student and companion of Socrates until the latter's trial and death (399 B.C.). His work is in the form of dialogues in which Socrates interrogates others in his characteristic manner. The dialogues include Republic (probably the greatest work of Plato); Laws; Symposium (on ideal love, which has given rise to the expression "Platonic love"; see below); Phaedrus, etc. Phaedo (concerning the immortality of the soul) is supposed to be the last conversation of Socrates before his death.

the German Plato. Friedrich Heinrich Jacobi (1743-1819).

the Jewish Plato. Philo Judaeus (fl. 20-40 A. D.).

the Plato of the Eighteenth Century. Voltaire (1694-1778).

Plato's year. 25,000 Julian years, in the course of which the heavenly bodies pass through a complete cycle and return to their original positions.

Cut out more work than can be done
In Plato's year.

S. Butler, Hudibras, iii. 1 (1678).

Platonic love. A popular term for spiritual love between persons of opposite sexes; the friendship of man and woman, without sexual implications. The phrase is founded on a misinterpretation of a passage towards the end of the Symposium, in which Plato is extolling not the non-sexual love of a man for a woman, but the loving interest that Socrates took in young men—which was pure, and therefore noteworthy in the Greece of the period.

Platt, Jim. In Edward Sheldon's play SALVATION NELL, Nell's lover.

Platt, Thomas Collier (1833-1910). American politician, of great influence in the Republican party machine in New York. Politically associated with Roscoe Conkling.

Plattsburg. A village on Lake Champlain in northern New York. Headquarters for the American frontier troops in the War of 1812, when the Battle of Lake Champlain took place. Plattsburg was the site of a training camp for officers during the first World War and was again used for military purposes during the second.

Plautus, Titus Maccius (ca. 254-184 B. C.). Roman comic dramatist, known for his numerous comedies, including Amphitruo, Bacchides, Menaechmi, Mercator, Miles Gloriosus, Poenulus, Rudens, etc. SHAKESPEARE, MOLIÈRE, and other English and European playwrights adapted his plays or modeled their own upon his. Little is known of his life, except that he settled in Rome, worked at a variety of menial occupations, and was very poor until finally recognized as a playwright.

Playboy of the Western World, The. A drama by J. M. SYNGE (1907). The Irish protagonist, Christie Mahon, gets his first taste of being a hero when he escapes from home to a distant village under the terrible conviction that he has killed his domineering old father. He is regarded with awe and women vie with one another for his love. But when his father turns up alive and beats him, his glory is gone. When he actually tries to kill the old man, the villagers turn him over to the police. Nevertheless, something has happened; he will never be the timid, shrinking farmer's boy again.

Players, The. A club in New York City founded by Edwin BOOTH (1888), who was president until his death (1893). Originally intended for actors and dramatists, its membership was extended to writers, painters, and sculptors. Its building was designed by Stanford White. Among its later presidents were Joseph Jefferson and John Drew.

Playfair, Sir Nigel (1874-1934). English actor and manager who produced John Drinkwater's Abraham Lincoln (1919) and The Beggar's Opera by John Gay (1920).

Plays for Puritans, Three. Plays (1901) by George Bernard SHAW collected in one volume. They are The Devil's Disciple; Caesar and Cleopatra; and Captain Brassbound's Conversion.

Plays, Pleasant and Unpleasant. Seven plays in two volumes by George Bernard SHAW (1898). The pleasant ones are: Arms and the Man; Candida; The Man of Destiny; and You Never Can Tell. The unpleasant ones are: Widowers' Houses; The Philanderer; and Mrs. Warren's Profession.

play upon words. See PARONOMASIA.

Playwrights' Company, The. An organization founded in 1938 for the production of plays by its members: S. N. Behrman, Elmer Rice, Robert E. Sherwood, Maxwell Anderson, and Sidney Howard. When Sidney Howard died (1939), the Company established in his honor a memorial award of $1500 annually for the best first play by an American author to be produced in New York. (See under names of members.)

plebiscite. In Roman history, a law enacted by the "comitia" or assembly of tribes; in modern political terminology, the direct vote of the whole body of citizens of a nation on a question phrased in definite terms.

Pleiades. The cluster of stars in the constellation Taurus, especially the seven larger ones out of the great number that compose the cluster; so called by the Greeks, possibly from Gr. plein, "to sail," because they considered navigation safe at the return of the Pleiades, and never attempted it after those stars disappeared.

In Greek myth, the Pleiades were the seven daughters of Atlas and Pleione. They were transformed into stars, one of which, ELECTRA, is invisible, some said out of shame, because she alone married a human being, while others held that she hides herself from grief over the destruction of the city and royal race of Troy. She is known as "the lost Pleiad."

The name The Pleiad has frequently been given to groups of seven specially illustrious persons, e.g.:

(1) The Seven Wise Men of Greece, sometimes called the Philosophical Pleiad.

(2) The Pleiad of Alexandria. A group of seven poets in the 3rd century B. C., viz., Callimachus, Apollonius of Rhodes, Aratus, Philiscus (called Homer the Younger), Lycophron, Nicander, and Theocritus.

(3) Charlemagne's Pleiad. The group of scholars with which the Emperor surrounded himself, viz., Charlemagne (who, in this circle, was known as David), Alcuin (Albinus), Adelard (Augustine), Angilbert (Homer), Riculfe (Damaeas) Varnefrid, and Eginhard.

(4) The French Pleiad (or Pléiade) of the 16th century, who wrote poetry in the meters, style, etc., of the ancient Greeks and Romans, and put into practice the principles enunciated in the DÉFENSE ET ILLUSTRATION DE LA LANGUE FRANÇAISE. Of these, RONSARD was the leader, the others being Dorat, Joachim du BELLAY, Remi-Belleau, Jodelle, Baif, and Pontus de Thyard.

(5) The second French Pleiad. Seven contemporary poets in the reign of Louis XIII, very inferior to the "first Pleiad." They are Rapin, Commire, Larue, Santeuil, Ménage, Dupérier, and Petit.

plein-air (Fr., literally "full-air"). Pertaining to a school of painting started in France (ca. 1865), when certain painters left the falsified light of the studio to paint in the open air. Pissarro, Monet, Renoir, Sisley, later Cézanne, and Manet, started "the invasion of painting by color;" outdoor light, the sun's illumination and the tangled reflections in nature, the play of sun and colored shadow.

Pleydell, Mr. Paulus. In Scott's GUY MANNERING, an advocate in Edinburgh, shrewd and witty. He was at one time the sheriff at Ellangowan.

Mr. counsellor Pleydell was a lively, sharp-looking gentleman, with a professional shrewdness in his eye, and, generally speaking, a professional formality in his manner; but this he could slip off on a Saturday evening, when . . . he joined in the ancient pastime of High Jinks.—Sir W. Scott, Guy Mannerings, xxxix.

Pleydon. A sculptor in Hergesheimer's LINDA CONDON.

Pliable. In Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, one of Christian's neighbors, who accompanies him as far as the Slough of Despond and then turns back.

Pliant, Sir Paul. In Congreve's DOUBLE DEALER (1694), a hen-pecked husband, who dares not even touch a letter addressed to himself till his lady has read it first.

Plimsoll or Plimsoll's line or mark. The load-line mark painted on the sides of British merchant ships. It indicates how deeply the vessel may be submerged by loading. The name comes from Samuel Plimsoll (1824–1898), who secured an Act of Parliament (1876) to prevent overloading.

Pliny the Elder. In full, Caius Plinius Secundus (23–79 A. D.). Latin author, known for his Historia Naturalis (Natural History), which was regarded as a scientific sourcebook during the Middle Ages. He was one of those who were killed when the city of POMPEII was destroyed.

Pliny the Younger. In full, Caius Plinius Caecilius Secundus (b. 61 A. D.), the Elder's nephew, wrote a number of letters to the Emperor Trajan which have been found of value for a picture of the times in which they both lived.

Plomer, William Charles F. (1903–). South African novelist and trader in Zululand. Wrote a biography of Cecil Rhodes.

Plotinus (205?–270 A. D.). See under NEO-PLATONISM.

Plornish, Thomas. In Dickens' LITTLE DORRIT, a plasterer of Bleeding-Heart Yard. He is a smooth-cheeked, fresh-colored, sandy-whiskered man of thirty, long in the legs, yielding at the knees, foolish in the face, flannel-jacketed and lime-whitened. He generally joins in a conversation by echoing the words of the person speaking.

Mrs. Plornish. The plasterer's wife, a young woman, somewhat slatternly in herself and her belongings, and dragged by care and poverty already into wrinkles. She generally begins her sentences with, "Well, not to deceive you."

Ploughboy, Jonathan. A popular Yankee character of the early American stage, one of several such rôles made famous through the acting of James H. Hackett. Jonathan Ploughboy owed much to the shrewd, homely character of Jonathan (see BROTHER JONATHAN) in Royall Tyler's previous drama THE CONTRAST, but provided much more uproarious fun than that sober-minded citizen. As the center of interest in Woodworth's Forest Rose (Am., 1825), a comedy with the subtitle American Farmers, he delighted theater-goers for over forty years.

Plowden. "The case is altered," quoth Plowden. There is more than one story given by way of accounting for the origin of this old phrase—used by Ben Jonson as the title of one of his comedies (1598). One of them says that Plowden was an unpopular priest, and that he was inveigled by an enemy into attending mass performed by a layman. When impeached for so doing, the cunning priest asked the layman if it was he who officiated. "Yes," said the man. "And are you a priest?" said Plowden. "No," said the man. "Then," said

Plowden, turning to the tribunal, "the case is altered, for it is an axiom with the Church, 'No priest, no mass.'"

Another story fathers the phrase on Edmund Plowden (1518-1585), the great lawyer. He was asked what legal remedy there was against some hogs that had trespassed on complainant's ground. "There is very good remedy," began Plowden, but when told that they were his own hogs, said, "Nay, then, the case is altered."

Plowman, Piers, see PIERS PLOWMAN.

Plugson of Undershot. Thomas CARLYLE's typical commercial radical, who in the middle of the 19th century finds that no decent Tory will shake hands with him, but at the close of the century shares a free-competition company with latter-day Tories.

Plumb, Glenn Edward (1866-1922). American lawyer who devised a plan, known as the Plumb Plan, for government ownership of railroads (1919). The plan drew the endorsement of groups of railroad employers, of the American Federation of Labor, and of the Nonpartisan League. It was the subject of debate in Congress, but no practical results were achieved.

Plumed Knight, The. A name given to James G. BLAINE by Robert Ingersoll in the Republican campaign at Cincinnati in 1876.

Plummer, Caleb. In Dickens' CRICKET ON THE HEARTH, a little old toy-maker in the employ of Gruff and Tackleton, toy merchants. He is spare, gray-haired, and very poor. It is his pride "to go as close to Natur' in his toys as he could for the money." Caleb Plummer has a blind daughter, who assists him in toy-making and whom he has brought up in the belief that he himself is young, handsome, and well off, and that the house they live in is sumptuously furnished and quite magnificent.

Bertha Plummer. The blind daughter of the toy-maker. She is in love with Tackleton, the toy merchant, whom she thinks to be a handsome young prince. When she hears that he is about to marry May FIELDING, she falls ill. She is then disillusioned, hears the real facts, and becomes reconciled to the situation.

Edward Plummer. Son of the toy-maker, and brother of the blind girl. He is engaged from boyhood to May Fielding, goes to South America, and returns to marry her. Hearing of her engagement to Tackleton the toy merchant, he assumes the disguise of a deaf old man, to ascertain whether she loves Tackleton or not. In due course of time he marries her himself.

Plunkett. A leading character in Flotow's opera MARTHA.

Plunkett, Joseph Mary (1887-1916). Irish poet and patriot of an old Catholic family. The only collection of his poems published in his lifetime is The Circle and the Sword (1911), a book full of Catholic mysticism. After the Easter Rebellion he was shot by a British firing squad at Dublin Castle with his fellow poets Padraic PEARSE and Thomas MACDONAGH.

Plutarch (fl. ca. 66 A. D.). Greek author of forty-six Parallel Lives of Greeks and Romans of antiquity. In their classical stylization they are "character studies admirable in their distinctive medium as are the statues of Greek and Roman sculptors."

Pluto. In Roman mythology, the ruler of the infernal regions, son of Saturn, brother of Jupiter and Neptune, and husband of PROSERPINA; hence, the grave, the place where the dead go before they are admitted into Elysium or sent to Tartarus.

plutocrat. One who has influence and power because of his wealth. Plutocracy is government by the wealthy.

Plutus. In Greek mythology, the god of riches. Hence the phrase rich as Plutus, and the term plutocrat, one who exercises influence or possesses power through his wealth. The legend is that he was blinded by Zeus so that his gifts should be equally distributed and not go only to those who merited them.

Plymouth Rock. The ledge in the harbor of Plymouth, Massachusetts, where the Puritans were first supposed to have landed. As a matter of fact, they landed on Cape Cod at Provincetown (1620).

PM. A tabloid newspaper published daily in New York City, founded in 1940 under the editorship of Ralph INGERSOLL. It was characterized by a departmentalized presentation of the news, a wide use of photographs and illustrations, and a politically liberal, pro-labor editorial policy. Purchased (1945) by Marshall Field. Resold (1948) to Bartley Crum and Joseph S. Barnes, who changed its name to The New York Star. It ceased publication in 1949.

Pocahontas (1595-1617). Daughter of Powhatan, an Indian chief of Virginia. She is said to have rescued Captain John Smith when her father was on the point of killing him. She subsequently married John Rolfe, one of the settlers at Jamestown, was baptized under the name of Rebecca, and in 1616 was brought to England, where she became an object of curiosity and frequent allusion in contemporary literature.

Pocahontas was the subject of a number of dramas, of which the most noteworthy are Barker's Indian Princess, Or La Belle Sauvage (Am., 1808); Pocahontas, Or the Settlers of Virginia, by G. W. P. Curtis (Am., 1830); Pocahontas, by R. D. Owen (Eng., 1838); The Forest Princess, by Mrs. C. B. Conner (Am., 1848); and finally a burlesque, Pocahontas, Or the Gentle Savage, by John Brougham (Am., 1855).

pocket borough. A borough where the influence of the magnate is so powerful as to be able to control the election of any candidate he may choose to support.

pocket veto. A veto by the President of the United States which works automatically if he does not return a bill during session of Congress.

Pocket, Herbert. A cheerful young fellow, friend of Pip in GREAT EXPECTATIONS, by Charles Dickens.

Podsnap. A pompous, self-satisfied man in Dickens' OUR MUTUAL FRIEND, the type of one who is extremely proud of the patronage of his rich acquaintances and is overburdened with stiff-starched etiquette and self-importance. Hence the noun Podsnappery.

He always knew exactly what Providence meant. Inferior and less respectable men might fall short of that mark, but Mr. Podsnap was always up to it. And it was very remarkable (and must have been very comfortable) that what Providence meant was invariably what Mr. Podsnap meant.—Our Mutual Friend, Bk. I, Ch. 11.

Mrs. Podsnap. "A fine woman for Professor Owen: quantity of bone, neck and nostrils like a rocking-horse, hard features, and majestic head-dress in which Podsnap has hung golden offerings."

Georgiana Podsnap. Daughter of the above, called by her father "the young person." She is a harmless, inoffensive girl, "always trying to hide her elbows."

Poe, Edgar Allan (1809–1849). American poet, critic, and short-story writer, considered one of the most important American authors of the 19th century. His short stories, in which he is said to have been influenced by Charles Brockden Brown and for which he came to be best known, deal chiefly with mystery, horror, and crime in the tradition of the GOTHIC NOVEL; they are considered to be important forerunners of the typical detective story of the 20th century. His criticism, written under the influence of S. T. COLERIDGE, contains some of the first statements of the literary principles included under the heading of "ART FOR ART'S SAKE." His poetry, in which the influence of TENNYSON has been found, is marked by metrical experiment, pervasive romantic "atmosphere," and occasionally striking and complex imagery not common at the time it was written. Among Poe's works are Tamerlane (1827); Al Aaraaf (1829); Poems (1831); POLITIAN (1837), an unfinished tragedy; The Narrative of Arthur Gordon Pym (1838), a novelette; Tales of the Grotesque and Arabesque (1840); Tales (1845); The Raven, And Other Poems (1845); Eureka (1848), a poem on metaphysics. His best-known single poems include THE RAVEN, ANNABEL LEE, To Helen, Israfel, Ulalume, The Bells. Well-known single tales are THE GOLD BUG, THE BALLOON HOAX, The Fall of the House of Usher (see USHER), THE PIT AND THE PENDULUM, The Murders in the Rue Morgue, MS. Found in a Bottle, The Masque of the Red Death, The Black Cat, The Purloined Letter, The Cask of Amontillado. THE PHILOSOPHY OF COMPOSITION and THE POETIC PRINCIPLE are his outstanding works of criticism.

Poe did editorial work and hack-writing for a number of newspapers and magazines in Richmond, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York, attracting attention through his stories and engaging in critical quarrels with contemporary writers, notably LONGFELLOW, whom he charged with plagiarism. Throughout his career he was erratic and morbid in temperament, a natural tendency to instability being aggravated by poverty and unhappiness in his personal affairs. He died in Baltimore after having been picked up in drunken delirium outside a polling-place, in which it is believed he had served as a repeating voter.

As an artist, Poe came to be regarded more highly abroad than in his own country. His influence appears in the work of ROSSETTI, SWINBURNE, DOWSON, Ambrose BIERCE, Hart CRANE, and, especially, the poets of the French school of SYMBOLISM. BAUDELAIRE introduced Poe's work into France and started a vogue for it. MALLARMÉ made some masterful translations.

poems of chance (Fr. poèmes de chance). In DADAISM, a type of poetry composed by writing down without alteration the illogical, chance associations of words as they occurred, free of the more conventional limitations of rational and artistic thought processes.

poet (from Gr. poieo, "to make"). See also BARD.

Poet of France. Pierre Ronsard (1525–1585).

Poet of Greta Hall. Robert Southey (1774–1843).

Poet of Haslemere. Alfred Lord Tennyson, Poet Laureate (1809–1892).

poet of the poor. Rev. George Crabbe (1754–1832).

prince of poets. Edmund Spenser (1552–1599) is so called on his monument in Westminster Abbey.

prince of Spanish poets. Garcilaso de la Vega (1503–1536) is frequently so called by Cervantes.

Poet's Corner. The southern end of the south transept of Westminster Abbey, said to have been first so called by Oliver GOLDSMITH because it contained the tomb of CHAUCEER.

ADDISON had previously (Spectator, No. 26, 1711) alluded to it as the "poetical Quarter," in which, he says,

I found there were Poets who had no Monuments, and Monuments which had no Poets.

Besides Chaucer's tomb, it contains that of Spenser, and either the tombs of or monuments to Drayton, Ben Jonson, Shakespeare (a statue), Milton (bust), Samuel Butler, Davenant, Cowley, Prior, Gay, Addison, Thomson, Goldsmith, Dryden, Dr. Johnson, Sheridan, Burns, Southey, Coleridge, Campbell, Macaulay, Longfellow, Dickens, Thackeray, Tennyson, and Browning.

The term Poet's Corner is also facetiously applied to the part of a newspaper in which poetical contributions are printed.

Poet Laureate. In England, a court official, appointed by the Prime Minister, whose duty it is (or was) to compose odes in honor of the sovereign's birthday and in celebration of State occasions of importance, in return for £200 a year and a butt of sack.

The first Poet Laureate officially recognized as such was Ben Jonson, but in earlier times there had been an occasional Versificator Regis, and Chaucer, Skelton, Spenser, and Daniel were called "Laureates" though not appointed to that office. The following is the complete list of Poets Laureate:

Ben Jonson, 1619-1637.
Sir William Davenant, 1660-1668.
John Dryden, 1688-1688.
Thomas Shadwell, 1688-1692.
Nahum Tate, 1692-1715.
Nicholas Rowe, 1715-1718.
Laurence Eusden, 1718-1730.
Colley Cibber, 1730-1757.
William Whitehead, 1757-1785.
Thomas Warton, 1785-1790.
Henry James Pye, 1790-1813.
Robert Southey, 1813-1843.
William Wordsworth, 1843-1850.
Alfred Tennyson, 1850-1892.
Alfred Austin, 1896-1913.
Robert Bridges, 1913-1930.
John Masefield, 1930-

The term arose from the ancient custom in the universities of presenting a laurel wreath to graduates in rhetoric and poetry. There were at one time "doctors laureate," "bachelors laureate," etc.; in France, in modern times, authors of distinction continued "crowned" by the Academy.

Poetaster, The, or His Arraignment. A satirical comedy by Ben Jonson (acted 1601; published 1602). It was an attack upon DEKKER and MARSTON, with whom Johnson collaborated, however, later on (1603 and 1604).

Poetical Miscellanies. See TOTTEN's MISCELLANY.

poetic license. A phrase denoting the liberties which it is generally considered allowable for a poet to take with his subject-matter, grammatical construction, etc., in order to conform to the exigencies of rhyme and meter.

The phrase is frequently used in humorous fashion to account for many vagaries of poets.

Poetic Principle, The. A lecture by Edgar Allan POE, delivered in 1848-1849 and published in 1850. It favors the short poem over the long, proclaims the primacy of beauty in poetry, condemns the didactic, and pleads for "the poem written solely for the poem's sake." See also ART FOR ART'S SAKE; PHILOSOPHY OF COMPOSITION, THE.

poetics. A treatise on poetry and its theory as an art. Aristotle's Poetics analyzes poetic and dramatic laws, defines comedy and tragedy, discusses the laws of composition in a drama and the three UNITIES of time, place, and action. Its principles were more literally adhered to in French than in English poetry.

Poetry: A Magazine of Verse. A monthly magazine devoted to the publication of poetry, founded in 1912 under the editorship of Harriet MONROE, one of the first and most influential of the LITTLE MAGAZINES in the U.S. It published, and often introduced, the work of the leading American and English poets of its time, among them being Vachel LINDSAY, Carl SANDBURG, Amy LOWELL, Ezra POUND, T. S. ELIOT, and Hart CRANE. Pound was for a while the magazine's foreign correspondent.

Pogany, Willy (1882-). Hungarian-born American artist, illustrator, mural painter, stage and costume designer, and moving-picture art director. He has illustrated children's books by Padraic COLUM; Tales from the Arabian Nights; Gulliver's Travels; etc.

Poggio Bracciolini, Gian Francesco (1380-1459). Italian humanist, one of the first to uncover and study ancient Latin manuscripts.

Pogner, Eva. The heroine of Wagner's opera DIE MEISTERSINGER.

Pogram, Elijah. In Dickens' MARTIN CHuzzlewit, one of the "master minds" of America, and a member of Congress. He is possessed with the idea that there is a settled opposition in the British mind against the institutions of his "free, enlightened country."

pogrom (from Russ. gromit, "to thunder, to destroy unmercifully"). An organized massacre, especially those directed against the Jews in Russia in 1905 and later in Poland.

Poictesme. An imaginary country of medieval Europe which is the scene of many of the romances of James Branch CABELL, notably JURGEN, FIGURES OF EARTH, and DOMNELL. In THE CREAM OF THE JEST, the scene is laid partly in a Virginia town and partly in Poictesme. Carl VAN DOREN says of Poictesme:

The Poictesme, which James Branch Cabell has created and gradually populated with a whole dynasty, and its subjects, friends and enemies, lies somewhere on the map of Europe—just where, there are no precise geographers to say. The country was a fief of the wicked King Ferdinand of Castile and Leon, who beheaded his old friend, the rightful count, to make a place for Manuel. At that time, which was 1234, Poictesme was in the hands of the Northmen under Duke Asmund, later expelled. Not too far from Provence, neither was it too far from Albania, both of which Manuel visited on his way to claim his new possession. It had a sea-coast, the cities of Bellegarde and Storisende, in which Manuel ordinarily lived, and many dark woods and twilight heaths and haunted mountains. It engaged in diplomatic relations with France and England, to say nothing of less formal contacts between its rulers and all the countries, real or imagined, of the medieval universe. . . . Though it seems to have seen its great days in the thirteenth century, it was still prosperous as late as the eighteenth. Nothing, indeed, in the matter of geography or history is impossible to Poictesme, for it is, of course, a pure creation.—Two Heroes of Poictesme (Century, Nov., 1924).

poilu. The popular name for the French private soldier, like the British "Tommy Atkins." It sprang into use during World War I, and means literally "hairy," but had been used much earlier by BALZAC in the sense of "brave."

Poincaré, Raymond (1860–1934). French statesman and writer. Prime minister (1912–1913); president (1913–1920). Strengthened French defenses. Served through World War I. Again prime minister (1922–1924; 1926–1929) and minister of finance (1926–1929). Member of French Academy (1909).

Poins. In Shakespeare's 1 and 2 Henry IV, a companion of Sir John FALSTAFF.

Point Counter Point. The best-known novel of Aldous HUXLEY, published in 1928. With sardonic, biting wit and merciless satire, it presents a picture of the lives of British upperclass society and London intellectuals during the 1920's. Frequent allusions to literature, painting, music, and contemporary British politics occur throughout the book, and much scientific information is embodied in its background. The leading characters are as follows: Walter and John Bidlake, Marjorie Carling, Denis Burlap, Beatrice Gilray, Philip and Elinor QUARLES, Frank ILLIDGE, Mark and Mary RAMPION, SPANDRELL, Lord Edward TANTAMOUNT, Hilda and Lucy TANTAMOUNT, Everard WEBLEY. Several of the characters are considered to represent well-known literary personalities of Huxley's day.

Pointillism, see under SEURAT.

point system. In printers' parlance. See under EM.

Poirier, M. In Le Gendre de M. Poirier (The Son-in-Law of M. Poirier), a comedy by Emile Augier and Jules Sandeau (Fr., 1855), a Parisian bourgeois who makes a fortune and buys a title for his daughter Antoinette. His dissipated son-in-law, the Marquis de Presles, begins by being extremely scornful of his plebeian wife, but to his own surprise falls in love with her and reforms for her sake.

poisson d'avril (Fr., "April fish"). The French equivalent for our "APRIL FOOL."

Polanyetski, Pan Stanislas. The hero of Sienkiewicz' CHILDREN OF THE SOIL.

Pole, Reginald (1500–1558). English Roman Catholic prelate. Friend of Sir Thomas MORE; opposed the divorce of Henry VIII. Archbishop of Canterbury (from 1556) during the reign of Queen Mary, and largely responsible for the persecutions of Protestants.

Polichinelle. French equivalent of the Italian PUNCHINELLO. A secret of Polichinelle is a secret known to everybody.

Polish. For the Polish Byron, the Polish Franklin, etc., see under BYRON, FRANKLIN, etc.

Politburo. The controlling body of the Russian Communist party and its foreign propaganda.

Politian: A Tragedy. An unfinished drama in blank verse by Edgar Allan Poe, parts of which were published in The Southern Literary Messenger (1835–1836).

Politian. See POLIZIANO.

Poliziano, Angelo (1454–1494). Italian poet and humanist, a member of the Florentine Academy established by the MEDICI family for the study of philosophy. He translated Latin poetry and wrote poetry in Latin and Italian. In English he was known as POLITIAN. Cf. FICINO, MARSILIO; PICO DELLA MIRANDOLA.

Polixene. In Molière's PRÉCIEUSES RIDICULES, the name assumed by Madelon Gorgibus, a shopkeeper's daughter, as far more romantic and genteel than her baptismal name.

Polixenes. Father of FLORIZEL and King of Bohemia in Shakespeare's WINTER'S TALE.

Pollaiuolo, Antonio (1429–1498). Florentine painter, sculptor, and goldsmith. A protégé of the Medicis. His brother, Pierro Pollaiuolo (1443–1496), collaborated with him in his painting.

Pollard, Albert Frederick (1869–1948). English historian; principally known for his work on the early Tudor period, including a life of Thomas CRANMER (1904) and one of Cardinal Wolsey (1929).

Pollente. In Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE (V. ii), the puissant Saracen, father of Munera, who takes his station on "Bridge Perilous," and attacks everyone who crosses it, bestowing the spoil upon his daughter. He is slain by Sir ARTEGAL. He is supposed to typify Charles IX of France, notorious for the slaughter of Protestants on St. Bartholomew's Eve.

Pollexfen, Sir Hargrave. In Richardson's SIR CHARLES GRANDISON, the villain who attempts to carry off Harriet Byron.

pollice verso (Lat., literally "with turned thumb"). At the gladiatorial games in ancient Rome, the general public condemned a participating gladiator to death by holding out their hands with the thumbs turned down;

hence our phrases, "thumbs down" and, correspondingly, "thumbs up." The newspaper PM, in its dramatic criticism, once showed a small drawing of a hand with the thumb turned up or down to denote approval or disapproval of a play.

Pollio, Gaius Asinius (75 B.C.-5 A.D.). Roman soldier and politician, who constructed the first public library in Rome and was a patron of literature. Author of plays and prose works. Only fragments of his orations are extant. To him the poet Virgil addressed his fourth eclogue.

Pollock, Channing (1880-1946). American playwright. He dramatized The Pit by Frank Norris, in which Wilton Lackaye was the star. He also wrote one-act plays, essays, novels, and several popular songs, including My Man for Fannie Brice. The Sign on the Door (1919) and The Fool (1922) were his most successful plays. Harvest of My Years; an Autobiography (1943).

Pollock, Sir Frederick (1845-1937). Professor of jurisprudence at Oxford University (1883-1903). Many publications on legal subjects. With F. W. Maitland, author of History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I (1895). His early work, Spinoza, his Life and Philosophy (1880), continues to be praised. Carried on a notable correspondence with Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes.

Poll Pineapple. The "BUMBOAT WOMAN" of Gilbert's Bab Ballads.

Pollux. In classical mythology, the twin brother of CASTOR.

Polly. A ballad-opera by John Gay (published 1729), a sequel to THE BEGGAR'S OPERA. It was not performed till 1777, and then only in an adaptation by Colman the elder, because of government resentment at Gay's satire.

Polly, Aunt. In Mark Twain's TOM SAWYER, Tom's conventional and over-zealous aunt.

Polly, Mr., see MR. POLLY.

Pollyanna. The child heroine of a popular story by that name by Eleanor H. Porter (1868-1920), followed by numerous sequels. As an expert in her favorite "Glad Game" of looking on the bright side of her numerous trials, Pollyanna is a close second to Voltaire's Dr. Pangloss, who believed that "All is for the best in this best of all possible worlds." The name Pollyanna became a synonym for a fatuous optimist who makes a business of "making the best of things" for himself and other people.

Polo, Marco (1254?-1324). Venetian traveler and adventurer. Famous for his journeys through Asia, where he traveled as member of the diplomatic staff of Kublai Khan (from 1275). Dictated (1298) an account of

polonium. An element discovered by Mme CURIE in 1898. Named from Poland, Mme Curie's native country. Symbol Po. It is also known as radium F. It has come into popular notice as a factor in the construction of the atomic bomb.

Polonius. A garrulous old courtier in Shakespeare's HAMLET, typical of the pompous, sententious old man. He is the father of Ophelia, and Lord Chamberlain to the King of Denmark.

poltergeist. From German; literally, "noisy spirit." A violent and mischievous spirit who is responsible for the odd noises one hears in some houses at night, who breaks crockery, and is generally fond of playing practical jokes.

polyandry. That form of polygamy in which the woman enjoys the privilege of a plurality of mates. Contrasted with polygyny. Polyandry is on the whole a practice indicative of a primitive state of civilization. See also ONEIDA.

Polybius (204?-125 B.C.). Greek historian. Author of a history of Rome from the beginnings of the Punic Wars to the destruction of Carthage (266-146 B.C.) in 40 books, of which five have come down to us.

Polycletus. A sculptor of Sicily, of the late 5th century B.C., who deduced a canon of the proportions of the several parts of the human body, and made a statue of a Persian body-guard which was admitted by all to be a model of the human form and was called "The Rule" (the standard).

Polyclites. See under DORYPHORUS.

Polycrates. Tyrant of Samos, so fortunate in all things that AMASIS, King of Egypt, advised him to vary his pleasures by relinquishing something he greatly prized. Whereupon Polycrates threw into the sea a beautiful seal, the most valuable of his jewels. A few days afterwards a fine fish was sent him as a present, and in its belly was found the jewel. Amasis, alarmed at this good fortune, broke off his alliance, declaring that sooner or later this good fortune would fail. Not long afterwards Polycrates was shamefully put to death by Oroetes, who had invited him to his court. On this tale is based SCHILLER's ballad, The Ring of Polycrates.

Polydamas. A Grecian athlete of immense size and strength. He killed a fierce lion without weapons, stopped a chariot in full career, lifted a mad bull, and died at last in attempting to stop a falling rock. See also MILO.

Polydore. The name assumed by Guidarius, in Shakespeare's CYMBELINE. See also POLYDORUS.

Polydorus or Polydore. In classic myth, the youngest son of Priam and Hecuba. According to HOMER (Iliad, xx. 470), he was killed by ACHILLES, but other legends state that he was committed to the care of Polymnestor, King of Thrace, who treacherously slew him.

Polyeucte. A drama by Pierre CORNEILLE (ca. 1641). It deals with the Christian martyr Polyeuctus and his Roman wife, who heeds her duty to her husband, becomes a convert to his religion, and wins others to his belief.

polygamy. The primitive practice of having several wives (polygyny) or husbands (polyandry).

Polyglot Bible. See Complutensian Polyglot under BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Polyhymnia. The Muse of lyric poetry, and inventor of the lyre. See MUSES.

Polyidus. The soothsayer who advised Bellerophon to procure the horse Pegasus for his conflict with the Chimaera.

Polynices. In classic myth, the brother of Eteocles and joint heir with him to the throne of Thebes after their father Oedipus' exile. The celebrated "Seven against Thebes" expedition was launched by him to force his brother to yield the crown to him. See under THEBES.

Polyolbion. A long poem by Michael DRAYTON (1612, 1622), a topographical description of England interspersed with many legends of early Britain.

Polyphemus. In classic myth, one of the Cyclops, an enormous giant, with only one eye, and that in the middle of his forehead, who lived in Sicily. When ULYSSES landed on the island, this monster made him and twelve of his crew captives; six of them he ate, and then Ulysses contrived to blind him, and escape with the rest of the crew. Polyphemus was in love with Galatea, a sea-nymph who had set her heart on the shepherd Acis; Polyphemus, in a fit of jealousy, crushed him beneath a rock.

the Polyphemus of literature. Dr. Samuel Johnson (1709-1784) has been so called.

polyphonic prose. A type of FREE VERSE resembling prose in its thought sequence and published as a prose passage. Its use is outstanding in the poetry of Amy LOWELL.

polyrhythmic verse. A type of free verse, characterized by a variety of not necessarily integrated rhythms.

Polyxena. In classic myth, a daughter of PRIAM and Hecuba. The early poets say little about her, but according to later legends she is the heroine of a tragic love affair with ACHILLES, the Greek hero.

pomander. A perforated box, often in the shape of an apple, containing a mixture of perfumes expected to guard the bearer against infection. Also, the perfume mixture itself. E. NESBIT gave the title A Pomander of Verse to one of her books.

Pombodita. A land of incredible happenings.

pomegranate seed. See PROSERPINE.

Pomes Penyeach. A collection of lyric poems by James JOYCE published in 1927.

Pomona. (1) In Roman mythology, the goddess of fruit trees. She was wooed and won by VERTUMNUS, god of the seasons.

(2) The entertaining servant-maid heroine of F. R. Stockton's novels RUDDER GRANGE, The Rudder Grangers Abroad and Pomona's Travels.

Pompadour, Marquise de. Jeanne Antoinette Poisson (1721-1764). Mistress of Louis XV. Established as Versailles (1745) and given the estate of Pompadour. Had great influence over the king, especially in internal affairs (1745-1764). Opposed RICHELIEU's foreign policy and was instrumental in bringing on the Seven Years' War which ended in disaster for France.

Pompeii, The Last Days of, see LAST DAYS etc.

Pompey the Great. Lat. Gnaeus Pompeius Magnus (106-48 B.C.). Roman general and statesman. Organized the First Triumvirate (60) with Julius Caesar and Crassus. Became the champion of the Conservative party. The civil war he instigated led to his decisive defeat in Pharsalus (48) and to his subsequent flight to Egypt where Ptolemy had him murdered. The earliest English tragedy based on the story of Pompey is Pompey the Great, his faire Corneliaes Tragedy, a translation into blank verse by Thomas KYP from the French of Garnier. Cf. also Five Men and Pompey, the first book of poems by Stephen Vincent BENÉT; also, Pompey the Great by John MASEFIELD.

Pompilia. Heroine of Browning's RING AND THE BOOK.

Ponce de León, Juan (1460?-1521). A Spanish explorer, famed for his search for the Fountain of Youth, which, as its name implies, would make those who drank of it young again. His explorations were largely in the vicinity of Florida, where he has left many traces of his name. Most legends located the Fountain of Youth on the island of Bimini.

Ponce de León, Fray Luis (1527-1591). Spanish Augustinian monk, celebrated as a mystic poet. Cf. his life by James Fitzmaurice-Kelly (1921).

Pond, James Burton (1838-1903). American lecture manager. Under his management were Henry Ward Beecher, Mark Twain, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, Henry M. Stanley, Matthew Arnold, and other well-known literary personages of his day.

Ponderevo, George. The hero of H. G. Wells' TONO-BUNGAY.

Pons, Lily (1904-). French operatic coloratura soprano. In U.S. (from 1928). Married to André Kostelanetz, a well-known orchestra leader. Principal rôles are Lakmé, Lucia, Philine.

Pons, Sylvain. Hero of Balzac's COUSIN PONS (Le Cousin Pons; 1847), a musical composer and collector of works of art, on which he squanders his substance. He is ugly, lonely, and not over-successful; as he grows older, he becomes a glutton and social parasite. His greatest source of satisfaction is his friendship for the pianist Schmucke, whom he makes his residuary heir.

Pons Asinorum (Lat., "the asses' bridge"). The fifth proposition, Bk. I, of Euclid—the first difficult theorem, which dunces rarely get over without stumbling.

Pontiac (died 1769). American Ottawa Indian chief who led an attack upon the British known as "the Conspiracy of Pontiac." Cf. History of the Conspiracy of Pontiac (1851) by Francis PARKMAN.

Pontifex, Ernest. The hero of Samuel Butler's WAY OF ALL FLESH. His father, Theobald, and mother, Christina, are also prominent characters, and were unflattering portraits of Butler's own parents.

Pontoppidan, Henrik (1857-1943). Danish novelist, who shared the Nobel prize (1917) with Karl Gjellerup. Author of Kingdom of the Dead (5 parts; 1912-1916); etc.

pony express. The U.S. mail service from St. Joseph, Mo., to Sacramento, Calif., which operated from 1860 until the end of 1861, when it was discontinued owing to the completion of the transcontinental telegraph. It was the first rapid transit system in the Far West and covered its 1,960 miles in as little as 8 days.

Pooh-Bah. Lord High Everything Else, an official in the Gilbert and Sullivan comic opera THE MIKADO.

poohpooh theory. See BOWWOW THEORY.

Pooka, see PHOOKA.

Poole, Ernest (1880-). American novelist. His first book, THE HARBOR (1915), ran through 6 editions in one month. Won the 1918 Pulitzer prize for His Family (1917). Other novels of his are Millions (1922); One of Us (1934); Giants Gone (1942); etc. Also a newspaper correspondent and playwright.

Poole, William Frederick (1821-1894). American librarian. At Yale (1848) he started An Alphabetical Index to Subjects Treated in the . . . Periodicals (Poole's Index), which was the forerunner of the Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature.

Poorgrass, Joseph. In Hardy's FAR FROM THE MADDING CROWD, a bashful farmhand who provides the humorous element in the book. In his apology for drunkenness he says he "only suffers from a multiplying eye."

Poor Henry. See HEINRICH VON AUE.

Poor Little Rich Girl. An expression used with reference to the neglect and loneliness which children of the wealthy sometimes suffer; from a comedy of that name by Eleanor GATES.

Poor Relations. A famous humorous essay by Charles LAMB in his Essays of Elia (1823).

Poor Richard's Almanack. An almanac first issued in 1733, and annually thereafter for twenty-five years, by Benjamin FRANKLIN under the pseudonym of Richard Saunders. To Poor Richard are attributed most of Franklin's famous adages.

Poor Robin. Pseudonym of the author of a series of almanacs published at first (from 1662) with the help of Robert HERRICK. Probably William Winstanley (1628?-1698). A Poor Robin came to signify "an almanac."

Poor White. A novel by Sherwood ANDERSON (1920). It concerns Hugh McVey, a shy telegraph operator in Bidwell, Ohio, whose amazing inventions make him a millionaire and transform Bidwell into a boom-town with all the vices and corruptions of industrialism, although Hugh is not aware of these harmful effects of his genius until it is too late.

Pope.

Pope Joan. See JOAN.

Pope of Geneva. John Calvin (1509-1564).

Pope of Philosophy. Aristotle (384-322 B.C.).

Pope, Alexander (1688-1744). English poet, literary dictator of his age and regarded as the English epitome of NEO-CLASSICISM. His poetry is characterized by satire, epigram, didacticism, smoothness and technical finish, invective, biting and malicious wit, and skillful use of the closed or heroic couplet. His best-known works are Pastorals (1709); Essay on Criticism (1711), which made Pope famous and which, he claimed, he wrote when he was only twelve years old; THE RAPE OF THE LOCK (1712); Windsor Forest (1713); translations of the Iliad (1715-1720) and the Odyssey (1725-1726); THE DUNCIAD (1728, 1742); Moral Essays (1731-1735); ESSAY ON MAN (1733); EPISTLE TO DR. ARBUTHNOT (1735).

Pope, a Roman Catholic and the son of a linen-draper in London, was unable to attend a public school or a university because of governmental restrictions against Catholics after the Revolution of 1688. A hunchback and cripple as the result of a serious illness in childhood, Pope relieved his sense of rancor in jealous, spiteful, and venomous attacks on his contemporaries; because of this, he was called the "Wicked Wasp of Twickenham," from the name of the London suburb where he lived. He was a Tory in politics and a friend of John GAY and Jonathan SWIFT.

Pope-Figs. Protestants.

Pope-Figland. An island in Rabelais' satire GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL (Bk. IV, ch. 45), inhabited by the Gaillardets (Fr., "gay people"), rich and free, till, being shown the Pope's image, they exclaimed, "A fig for the Pope!" whereupon the whole island was put to the sword, its name changed to Pope-Figland, and the people called Pope-figs.

Pop Goes the Weasel! American folk song. Also English country dance.

popinjay. A parrot; also a fop who dresses in bright clothes and chatters like a parrot. There is a popinjay in the poem The Lang Coortin' by Lewis CARROLL, appearing in the volume Rhyme? and Reason?:

Then up and spake the popinjay, Sae wisely counselled he . . .

The poem is a burlesque of the old Scotch ballads.

Popinot, Jean-Jules. One of the few characters in the novels of the Balzac's COMÉDIE HUMAINE who display any altruistic qualities; a lawyer who "gave free rein to the exercise of charity, a virtue that had become a passion with him."

Popish Plot. A fictitious plot implicating the Duke of York and others in high places, invented by Titus Oates (1678) who alleged that the Catholics were about to massacre the Protestants, burn London, and assassinate the King. Some thirty innocent persons were executed, and Oates obtained great wealth by revealing the supposed plot. Ultimately he was pilloried, whipped, and imprisoned.

Poppaea. The mistress and later the wife of the Roman Emperor Nero. She is a character in Seneca's Latin tragedy Octavia and appears in Sienkiewicz' historical novel Quo Vadis.

popular etymology, see FOLK ETYMOLOGY.

Popular Front. A term brought into notice in the later years of the 1930's, during the Spanish Civil War (1936-1939) and again after the beginning of World War II (1939-1945), signifying an alliance between the capitalist democracies (especially the U.S. and Great Britain) and the U.S.S.R. against Nazi Germany, Fascist Italy, and, later, Japan. See NAZISM; FASCISM. The Popular Front became a reality only after the German invasion of the U.S.S.R. in June 1941. The term is also applied to coalitions of certain progressive parties in Spain and France (after 1936), as those which supported the French cabinets of Léon Blum, Camille Chautemps, and Édouard Daladier, and opposed the Spanish insurgents in the early phases of the Civil war.

Populists. In U.S. politics, the members of the People's party, organized (1891) by agricultural and labor groups. William Jennings BRYAN captured their vote as presidential candidate (1896; 1900) through his advocacy of free and unlimited coinage of silver.

Poquelin, Jean-Ah. See JEAN-AH POQUELIN.

Poquelin, Jean-Baptiste, see MOLIERE.

Porch, the. A philosophic sect, generally called Stoics (Gr. stoa, "a porch"), because Zeno, the founder, gave his lectures in the public ambulatory, Stoa poecile, in the agora of Athens.

The successors of Socrates formed societies which lasted several centuries: the Academy, the Porch, the Garden.—Seeley, Ecce Homo.

Porcupiad. See PORCUPINE, PETER and CAREY, MATTHEW.

Porcupine, The. A play by Edwin Arlington ROBINSON (1915).

Porcupine, Peter. The name under which William COBBETT wrote, and was bitterly satirized by Matthew CAREY for his criticisms of America.

Porgy. A very successful Negro folk play (1927) by Du Bose and Dorothy HEYWARD, originally written as a novel. It was made into a combination of grand opera and musical comedy by George GERSHWIN under the title of Porgy and Bess (1935).

Porgy, Captain. A once famous comic character appearing in the American Revolutionary series of William Gilmore SIMMS (The Partisan, 1835; Mellichampe, 1836; Katherine Walton, 1851), and in other novels by Simms, notably Woodcraft (published first as The Sword and the Distaff, or Fair, Fat, and Forty, 1854), of which he is the leading character. This fat, boastful Southern soldier has been called "a prose Falstaff." In the earlier books he serves under Marion and Singleton; in Woodcraft he rescues the charming rich widow, Mrs. Eveleigh, from the schemes of McKewn and the attack of Bostwick and pays her ardent but unsuccessful court.

Porkopolis. Chicago, from the meat industry located there.

Porphyro. The hero of Keats' Eve of St. Agnes who rescues Madeline from the Baron's castle.

porphyrogene. Born in the purple, said of a child born after its father's accession to the throne. The meaning of the word is linked up with the fact that Greek has the same word for porphyry and purple. In ancient Byzantium, a room lined with porphyry was reserved for the empress. Her children born there were porphyrogene or porphyrogenitic, which could be taken to mean "born in the porphyry room" or "born in the purple." In The Haunted Palace by Edgar Allan Poe, the word porphyrogene occurs in the 3rd stanza. It seems to refer to the kind of room above described where "the ruler of the realm" was sitting.

Porphyry. Lat. Porphyrius. Original name Malchus (232?-?304). Greek scholar and neoplatonic philosopher.

Porrex. In the early English tragedy Gorboduc, the younger son of Gorboduc.

Porsena, Lars. A legendary king of Etruria, who made war on Rome to restore Tarquin to the throne. Lord Macaulay made this the subject of one of his Lays of Ancient Rome (1842).

Porson, Richard (1759-1808). English classical scholar. Regius Professor of Greek at Cambridge (1792). Widely known through his critical Letters to Archdeacon Travis (1788-1789), upholding Gibbon's views regarding the genuineness of 1 John v. 7.

Porte, the Sublime. See SUBLIME PORTE.

Porteous Riot. At Edinburgh in September, 1736. C. Porteous was captain of the city guard, and, at the execution of a smuggler named Wilson, ordered the guards to fire on the mob, which had become tumultuous. Six persons were killed, and eleven wounded. Porteous was condemned to death, but reprieved, whereupon the mob burst into the jail where he was confined, and, dragging him to the Grassmarket (the usual place of execution), hanged him by torchlight on a barber's pole. Scott introduces the riot in his Heart of Midlothian.

Porter, Cole (1892-). American composer of popular songs and music. Best-known songs are Night and Day, Begin the Béguine, Let's Do It, etc.

Porter, David (1780-1843). American naval officer, commander in chief of the West Indian squadron against piracy (1823-1825). Court-martialed and suspended from duty for action against the Spanish authorities in Puerto Rico (1825-1826). Resigned from U.S. Navy (1826) and went into Mexican naval service (1826-1829). U.S. minister to Turkey

Porter, Mrs. Eleanor (1868-1920). American novelist, famous for the sensational success of her book Pollyanna (1913).

Porter, Gene Stratton (1868-1924). American novelist, author of sentimental romances, the best-known of which are Freckles (1904), which sold over two million copies, A Girl of the Limberlost (1909), and The Harvester (1911).

Porter, Harold Everett. Pseudonym Holworthy Hall (1887-1936). American writer, chiefly known for his short stories, and a one-act play, The Valiant (with Robert Middlemass).

Porter, Jane (1776-1850). English novelist famous for the popularity of her romances Thaddeus of Warsaw (1803) and The Scottish Chiefs (1810). The latter was translated into German and Russian.

Porter, Katherine Anne (1894-). American journalist and short-story writer, known for the psychological insight and characterization of her stories. Her books include Flowering Judas (1930); Hacienda (1934); Noon Wine (1937); Pale Horse, Pale Rider (1939); No Safe Harbor (1941), a novel.

Porter, Noah (1811-1892). American Congregational clergyman and author. Editor in chief of Webster's American Dictionary of the English Language (1864) and of Webster's International Dictionary of the English Language (1890).

Porter, Sir Joseph, K.C.B. An admiral in the comic opera H.M.S. Pinafore by Gilbert and Sullivan, who "stuck close to his desk and never went to sea" and therefore became in time "ruler of the Queen's navy." He is said to have been drawn in parody of the contemporary First Lord of the Admiralty, William H. Smith, who was a powerful newspaper publisher with few practical qualifications for his task.

Porter, William Sydney, see HENRY, O.

Porthos. One of the famous trio in Dumas' Three Musketeers, and a prominent character in the sequels, Twenty Years After and The Vicomte de Bragelonne.

Portia. (1) A rich heiress and "lady barister" in Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice, in love with Bassanio. Her name is often used allusively for a female advocate.

(2) In Shakespeare's Julius Caesar, the noble wife of Marcus Brutus. She kills herself by "swallowing fire."

portmanteau word. An artificial word made up of parts of others, and expressive of a combination denoted by those parts—such as squarson, a "cross" between a squire and a parson. Lewis CARROLL invented the term in Through the Looking-Glass, ch. vi; slithy, he says, means lithe and slimy, mimsy is flimsy and miserable, etc. It is so called because there are two meanings "packed up" in the one word. In FINNEGANS WAKE James Joyce makes frequent use of portmanteau words.

Portolá, Gaspar de (1723?-1784). Spanish governor of the Californias who marched 1,000 miles (1769) from Lower to Upper California where he founded San Diego and Monterey. Father Junípero Serra was one of the diarists of the expedition.

Portrait of a Lady, The. A novel by Henry JAMES (1881). The motives that lead Isabel Archer, a romantic New England girl who inherits an English fortune, to refuse other suitors and marry Gilbert Osmond are skillfully analyzed and her subsequent disillusionment traced in its devastating detail. Osmond is a dilettante, an impoverished gentleman living in retirement in Italy with his daughter, Pansy, because his exquisite tastes and sensibilities make him scornful of the crudities of the modern struggle for existence. After Isabel's marriage she discovers that she has only served the purposes of her quasi-friend, Madame Merle, who, as Osmond's mistress and the mother of Pansy, had brought the two together for the sake of Isabel's fortune. Osmond's fine sensibilities are likewise seen to be but the expression of an intensely ego-centric, unpleasant nature.

Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man, A. An autobiographical novel by James JOYCE, published in 1915. It portrays the childhood, schooldays, adolescence, and early manhood of Stephen DEDALUS, later one of the leading characters of ULYSSES, touching upon his unhappy experiences at the Jesuit school at Clongowes, the bitter conflicts among the Irish regarding Charles Stewart PARNELL, Stephen's awakening interest in art, metaphysics, and aesthetics, his first love affairs, and his growing rebellion against his bigoted and poverty-stricken family background, the Roman Catholic religion, and his native Ireland itself. This book contains Joyce's first experiments in the technique of STREAM OF CONSCIOUSNESS. See also DOLAN, FATHER; RIORDAN, MRS. DANTE.

Port Royal. A convent about eight miles southwest of Versailles, which in the 17th century became the headquarters of the Jansenists and a literary and religious community of great influence. The community was suppressed by Louis XIV in 1660, but later again sprang into prominence and was condemned by a bull of Clement XI in 1708. Two years later the convent, which had been removed to Paris about 1637, was razed to the ground.

Portuguese. For the Portuguese Cid, the Portuguese Horace, etc., see under CID, HORACE, etc.

Posa, the Marquis of. A Spanish nobleman in Schiller's DON CARLOS, who, according to Heine, "is at once prophet and soldier and who under a Spanish cloak bears the noblest heart which ever loved and suffered in all Germany." In many ways he typifies Schiller's own ideals.

Poseidon. The god of the sea in Greek mythology, the counterpart of the Roman NEPTUNE. He was the son of Cronus and Rhea, brother of Zeus and Pluto, and husband of Amphitrite. It was he who, with Apollo, built the walls of Troy. When the Trojans refused to give him his just reward he began to hate them and took part against them in the Trojan War. Earthquakes were attributed to him, and he was said to have created the first horse.

Positivism. A philosophical movement of the 19th century, developed under the influence of the new discoveries in the science of the period, particularly outstanding in the thought of Auguste COMTE, regarded as its founder. Its chief principles call for the following: a study of the various sciences and an arrangement of them in a "scale of subordination," with those of greater complexity placed near the top of an ascending series; the assignment of sociology, with its study of past history and contemporary society and its attempts to solve persistent social problems, to a position at the summit of hierarchy; and a belief in the progress of mankind toward a superior state of civilization by means of the science of sociology itself. In the later years of his career, Comte, turning toward mysticism, attempted to convert sociology into a literal Religion of Humanity, with a set creed, rituals and ceremonies for private and public use, the worship of great men and women of the past, saints' days, etc. As a church, Positivism lasted in France down through the 20th century, although this development of his philosophy alienated a number of early admirers from the side of Comte. J. S. MILL and G. H. Lewes (see under ELIOT, GEORGE) were among the leading disciples of early Positivism in England. George Eliot's poem The Choir Invisible expresses its aspiration. Herbert Croly, first editor of the NEW REPUBLIC, was the first American child to be christened in the faith.

Possessed, The. A novel by Fyodor DOSTOYEVSKY, published in 1871 as an attack on NIILISM. It deals with the return of Nikolay STAVROGIN, son of the well-to-do widow Varvara Petrovna Stavrogin, to his home in a small Russian provincial town after years of absence in Moscow and Europe. Pyotr Stepanovich VERHOVENSKY, son of Stepan Trofimovich Verhovensky, a former liberal professor who lives on the estate of Mme Stavrogin, his old friend, also appears. It soon develops that Nikolay and Pyotr Stepanovich, along with SHATOV, a former servant of the household, and KIRILLOV, an engineer, have belonged to a band of revolutionary terrorists. Pyotr Stepanovich is the leader and plans to organize terroristic activities in the neighborhood. Tragedy and death result, with LEBYADKIN, a crafty army captain, and his half-wit sister, Marya Timofeyevna, being murdered and burned in their dwelling, Shatov being slain as a suspected traitor, Lizaveta Nikolaevna TUSHIN, a young noblewoman in love with Nikolay, becoming a victim of mob vengeance, and both Kirillov and Nikolay committing suicide.

The novel, which contains a number of scenes bitterly satirizing the revolutionaries at their meetings, was designed by the author to show what he regarded as the horrors of Western revolutionary doctrines as imported into Russia in the 19th century, and to propose, through the mouth of Shatov, Dostoyevsky's own solution for the plight of his country—a return to the Russian Orthodox religion and an awakened spirit of nationalism. The title refers to the Biblical account of the Gadarene swine, the nihilists being regarded as the "swine" into which the social ills of Russia enter and thus are removed.

For a discussion of The Possessed and other works by Dostoyevsky, consult Dostoyevsky: The Making of a Novelist, by Ernest J. Simmons.

Post, Emily, née Price (1873?–). American writer and columnist, particularly well-known for her articles on manners and social etiquette. Author of Etiquette (1922) which has gone through many editions. Also a novelist, her books contrasting European with American standards.

Post, Guy Bates (1875–1946). American actor on New York and London stage. Leading man for Mrs. Fiske (1907–1908).

Post, Melville Davison (1871–1930). American lawyer, short-story writer, and novelist. Best known for his magazine detective stories about a Virginia squire by name of Uncle Abner. The best of them were afterwards published in book form as Uncle Abner, Master of Mysteries (1918).

posteriori, see A POSTERIORI.

postern. A rear or side door for private use.

As hard to come as for a camel
To thread the postern of a small needle's eye.
Shakespeare, King Richard II.

Post Exchange. See CANTEEN.

Posthumus, Leonatus. The husband of Imogene in Shakespeare's CYMBELINE.

post-impressionism. A term coined by Roger FRY to denote movements in modern art. The most important post-impressionist painters are Cézanne, Seurat, Gauguin, Van Gogh, Matisse, etc. What these men had in common was that, not content with "outward effects," they strove to grapple with the "form beneath."

Postumus. The friend of the poet HORACE, to whom, in Ode 14 of Book 2, he addresses the famous words, Eheu! fugaces, Postume, Postume, labuntur anni (Alas! Postumus, Postumus, the flying years glide by).

Potash and Perlmutter. Joint heroes of a series of popular, humorous stories by Montague Glass (Am., 1877–1934), which formed the basis for a number of comedies, notably Potash and Perlmutter, Abe and Mawruss, and His Honor Abe Potash. These two typical Jewish business men are partners in the cloak-and-suit trade. Later they go into the motion-picture business.

pot-boiler. Anything done merely for the sake of the money it will bring in—because it will keep the pot boiling, i.e., help to provide the means of livelihood; applied specially to work of small merit by artists or literary men.

Potemkin, Grigori Aleksandrovich (1739–1791). Russian field marshal, favorite of Empress Catherine of Russia and influential in her councils.

Potiphar Papers. A series of satires of New York society by G. W. Curtis (Am., 1824–1892) published in 1853, relating the adventures of the newly rich Mr. and Mrs. Potiphar. They were dramatized as Our Best People the following year. The most popular character was Mrs. Potiphar's friend and adviser, Rev. Cream CHEESE.

Potiphar's wife. In the Old Testament and the Koran, the wife of Joseph's master in Egypt. JOSEPH fled from her advances, leaving his coat behind him, whereupon she accused him of evil and had him cast into prison. Some Arabian commentators have called her Rahil, others Zuleika, and it is this latter name that the 15th century Persian poet gives her in his Yusuf and Zulaikha.

Potocka, Countess Anna, née Tyczkiewicz (1776–1867). Polish writer whose Memoirs are valuable as historic source material. They cover the period from 1794 to 1820 and give an account of Napoleon's stay in Warsaw (1806–1807).

Pot of Basil, The, see ISABELLA, OR THE POT OF BASIL.

Pot of Earth, The. A long poem by Archibald MacLEISH (1925) based on the fertility legend in The Golden Bough.

Potomac, Army of the. The principal part of the Union army in the U.S. Civil War. It was engaged under General McClellan in the Peninsular and Antietam Campaigns (1862). Under the command of General Meade it won the victory at Gettysburg (1863) and continued under his leadership during General Grant's operations (1864-1865).

Potter, Paul Meredith (1853-1921). English-born American playwright, best-known for his dramatizations of Du Maurier's Trilby (1895) and Ouida's Under Two Flags (1901).

Potteries. See under BENNETT, ARNOLD.

Potteries, Father of the. See under FATHER.

Potterism. A novel by Rose Macaulay (Eng., 1920). The word speedily became a synonym for humbug and hypocrisy.

poulter's measure. In prosody, a meter consisting of alternate Alexandrines and fourteens, i.e., twelve-syllable and fourteen-syllable lines. The name was given to it by George GASCOIGNE (1576) because it is said, poulterers—then called poulters—used sometimes to give twelve to the dozen and sometimes fourteen. It was a common measure in early Elizabethan times. The following specimen is from a poem by SURREY:

Good ladies, ye that have your pleasures in exile, Step in your foot, come take a place, and mourn with me a while;

And such as by their lords do set but little price
Let them sit still, it skills them not what chance come on the dice.

Pound, Sir Dudley (1877-). British admiral. Fought in the Battle of Jutland (May 31, 1916); commander in chief of the Mediterranean fleet (1936-1939); sea lord of England and chief of naval staff (from 1939).

Pound, Ezra Loomis (1895-). American poet, editor, and literary critic, the most famous of the American expatriate writers of the period before and after World War I, known for his influence on a number of the leading poets of his time. His poetry, beginning in the school of IMAGISM, of which Pound was one of the founders, is marked by extensive learning, iconoclasm, individualism, the characteristic disillusionment of the Lost GENERATION, and wide freedom of form. It reflects the author's interest in scholarly research into the past and foreign languages, and includes numerous translations and adaptations of poetry from the ancient Chinese and Japanese, the Latin of the Empire period, medieval Provençal, Middle English, and 19th-century French SYMBOLISM. His best-known work is a project entitled CANTOS, consisting of A Draft of XXX Cantos (1930), Eleven New Cantos (1934), The Fifth Decad of Cantos (1937), Cantos LII-LXXI (1940). Among other books of poetry are: A Lume Spento (1908); Exultations (1909); Provença (1910); Riposte (1912); Lustra (1916); Quia Pauper Amavi (1919); Poems: 1918-1921 (1921); Personae (1926); Selected Poems (1928). His prose includes: The Spirit of Romance (1910); Noh, Or Accomplishment: A Study of the Classical Stage of Japan (1916); Gaudier-Brzeska (1916), a memoir; Pavannes and Divisions (1918); Instigations (1920); Indiscretions (1923); The A.B.C. of Reading (1934); Make It New (1935); Jefferson and/or Mussolini (1936); Culture (1938); Polite Essays (1939); The A.B.C. of Economics (1939).

Pound contributed steadily to the numerous LITTLE MAGAZINES of his day, edited the first anthology of Imagist poetry (1914), served as foreign correspondent of POETRY (1912-1919) and London editor of the LITTLE REVIEW (1917-1919), and founded and edited The Exile (1927). He was one of the first critics to call attention to the talents of Rabindranath TAGORE, T. S. ELIOT, James JOYCE, and the sculptor Henri GAUDIER. Among the poets most influenced by his own work were Eliot, Hart CRANE, and Archibald MacLEISH.

Pound went to Europe in 1907 and thereafter never lived again in the U.S. After moving from one place to another in London, Venice, Paris, and Provence, he took up residence in Rapallo, on the Italian Riviera, about 1924. He held an official position under Benito MUSSOLINI, whom he professed to admire, and during World War II broadcast the Fascist party line by short wave to America. After Italy's surrender, he was arrested and tried for high treason (1945), but was adjudged insane.

Pound, Roscoe (1870-). American educator, professor at Northwestern, Chicago, Harvard. Dean of Harvard Law School (1916-1936). Author of a number of books on law. His sister, Louise Pound (1872-), a folklorist and authority on the English ballad, was senior editor of American Speech (1925-1933).

pound of flesh. The whole bargain, the exact terms of the agreement, the bond litera-tum et verbatim. The allusion is to Shylock in Shakespeare's THE MERCHANT OF VENICE, who bargains with Antonio for a "pound of flesh," but is foiled in his suit by PORTIA, who says the bond is expressly a pound of flesh, and therefore these conditions would follow: (1) Shylock must cut the exact quantity, neither more nor less than a just pound; and pourboire (Fr.). Literally, "for drinking." A small gratuity or tip.

(2) in so doing he must not shed a drop of blood.

Pourceaugnac, M. de. The hero of a comedy so called by MOLIÈRE (1669). He is a pompous country gentleman, who comes to Paris to marry Julie, daughter of Oronte. Julie loves Erasta, and this young man plays off so many tricks, and devises so many mystifications upon M. de Pourceaugnac, that the latter is willing to give up his suit.

Poussin, Nicolas (1594-1665). French landscape painter of the classical school.

Powder of Sympathy, The. A book of essays by Christopher MORLEY (1923).

Powell, Dawn (1897-). American novelist and dramatist. She has written some film scenarios and has broadcast a Music and Manners program. The Locusts Have No King (1948) is in her usual satiric vein.

Powell, Mary. First wife of John MILTON, whom she married in 1643 when she was only seventeen years old. She left him within a month after the wedding, and it is believed that his pamphlet The Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce was written as a result of this. In 1645 Mary returned to Milton and died at the birth of her fourth child by him in 1652.

Power, Tyrone Edmond (1914-). Direct descendant of the famous Irish comedian William Grattan Tyrone Power (1797-1841) and son of the well-known American leading man Frederick Tyrone Power (1869-1931) who acted with Mrs. Fiske, Mrs. Leslie Carter, and Julia Marlowe. Tyrone Edmond Power is a widely-known actor of leading parts in motion pictures (from 1935). Before that he played in Katharine Cornell's production of Romeo and Juliet.

Powers, Paula. Heroine of Hardy's novel A LAODICEAN.

Powys, John Cowper (1872-). English novelist and critic, whose writings are characterized by a strong and mystic love of nature. Among his novels are Wood and Stone (1915); Rodmoor (1916); Ducdame (1925); Wolf Solent (1929); A Glastonbury Romance (1932); Weymouth Sands (1934); Jobber Skald (1935); Maiden Castle (1936); Morwyn, Or The Vengeance of God (1937); Owen Glendower (1940). His essays and criticism include Visions and Revisions (1915); The Religion of a Skeptic (1925); In Defense of Sensuality (1930); A Philosophy of Solitude (1933); Enjoyment of Literature (1938).

Powys' brothers, Llewelyn Powys (1884-1939) and Theodore Francis Powys (1875-), were also well-known English writers. Among Llewelyn's books are Ebony and Ivory (1922), stories and sketches of life in East Africa; Skin for Skin (1925); Apples Be Ripe (1930), a novel; Earth Memories (1934); Rats in the Sacristy (1937), and A Baker's Dozen (1941), collections of essays; Love And Death (1939), an "imaginary autobiography" (1939). Theodore's works, novels and stories dealing chiefly with evil and tragedy in the Dorset countryside, realistically presented, include The Left Leg (1923); Black Bryony (1923); Mockery Cap (1925); Mr. Weston's Good Wine (1928); The House with the Echo (1929); The Two Thieves (1932).

Poyser, Mrs. One of George Eliot's best-known characters, a farmer's wife in ADAM BEDE whose keen, pungent wit makes her running commentary on the other persons of the story both entertaining and discerning.

P.P., Clerk of this Parish. The hero and pretended author of a famous volume of Memoirs written by John ARBUTHNOT as a burlesque on Burnet's History of My Own Times. His self-important affectations proved highly amusing and made his name a byword for conceit.

p.p.c. (Fr. pour prendre congé). For leave-taking; sometimes written on the address cards of persons about to leave a locality when they pay their farewell visits. In English, paid parting call.

Ppt. In Jonathan Swift's Journal to Stella (see STELLA), a cryptic abbreviation which is believed to have been a pet name for Stella. It recurs throughout James Joyce's FINNEGANS WAKE, where it serves H. C. EARWICKER as a pet name for his daughter Isobel. See also PRESTO.

Prado. The national museum of painting and sculpture in Madrid, Spain, next to the famous fashionable promenade of the same name. The word means "meadow."

Praed, Winthrop Mackworth (1802-1839). English poet of vers de société.

praetor. A Roman magistrate, second in rank to a consul and appointed only from the patrician class.

Praetorian Guard. In Roman history, the imperial body guard. Organized by Augustus on the basis of the older praetorian cohorts, the body guards of praetors. The Praetorian Guard grew more and more powerful and many emperors were hardly more than its puppets. It survived to the time of Constantine.

Pragmatic Sanction. Sanctio in Latin means a "decree or ordinance with a penalty attached," or, in other words, a "penal statute." Pragmaticus means "relating to state affairs," so that Pragmatic Sanction is a penal statute bearing on some important question of state. The term was first applied by the Romans to those statutes which related to their provinces. The French applied the phrase to certain statutes which limited the jurisdiction of the Pope, but generally it is applied to an ordinance fixing the succession in a certain line.

Pragmatic Sanction of 1713. A statute whereby the succession of the Austrian Empire was made hereditary in the female line, in order to transmit the crown to Maria Theresa, the daughter of Charles VI. This is emphatically the Pragmatic Sanction, unless some qualification is added restricting the term to some other instrument.

Pragmatism (from Gr. pragma, "deed"). The philosophical doctrine that the only test of the truth of human cognitions or philosophical principles is their practical results, i.e., their workableness. It does not admit "absolute" truth, as all truths change their truthness as their practical utility increases or decreases. The word was introduced in this connection about 1875 by the American logician C. S. PEIRCE, and was popularized by William JAMES, whose Pragmatism: A New Name for Some Old Ways of Thinking, lectures delivered at the Lowell Institute and Columbia University (1906-1907) were published in 1907. See also MATERIALISM.

Prairie, The. A historical novel by James Fenimore COOPER (1827), one of the LEATHERSTOCKING series. It relates the story of the last days of Leatherstocking, now an exile whom civilization has driven westward to the great prairies beyond the Mississippi. Here the old scout becomes a trapper, and here, as everywhere, there are captives for him to rescue and numerous adventures for him to undertake. Finally, the old trapper dies in the arms of friends. Much of the action is taken up with the concerns of the rough, crude squatter Ishmael Bush and his family.

prairie schooner. A name given to the covered wagon which crossed the plains in the early days of America.

Prairie State. Illinois. See under STATES.

Prankquean. A name for Grace O'Malley (Graine Ni Maillé), an Irish princess of Connaught, who was refused shelter in Howth Castle one Christmas day while she was on her way home from a visit to Queen Elizabeth. In revenge, she kidnaped the child of the lord of the castle. Her name, in the form "Granuille," later came to be a symbol of Ireland itself, because she had defied Elizabeth.

Critics find an adaptation of this anecdote in James Joyce's FINNEGANS WAKE, in an episode which apparently takes place in the taproom of the tavern of H. C. EARWICKER. Earwicker is here called Jarl van Hoothor, or "Earl of Howth," and a riddle asked him by the Prankquean herself ("Why do I am alook alike a poss of porterpease?") is combined with the request of a customer for "a pot of porter, please." Harry Levin thinks this refers to Earwicker's confused emotions regarding his wife and daughter.

Prasildo. In BOIARDO's ORLANDO INNAMORATO, a Babylonish nobleman, who falls in love with Tisbina, wife of his friend Iroldo. He is overheard by Tisbina threatening to kill himself, and, in order to divert him from his guilty passion, she promises to return his love on the condition that he perform certain deeds which she thinks to be impossible. However, Prasildo performs them all, and then Tisbina and Iroldo, finding no excuse, take poison to avoid the alternative. Prasildo resolves to do the same, but is told by the apothecary that the "poison" he had supplied was a harmless drink. Prasildo tells his friend, Iroldo quits the country, and Tisbina marries Prasildo. Time passes on, and Prasildo hears that his friend's life is in danger, whereupon he starts forth to rescue him at the hazard of his own life.

Prater. A famous Viennese park on an island formed by the Danube and the Danube Canal. It was opened to the public in 1766 by Emperor Joseph II. The name (like PRADO, derived from Lat. pradum, "meadow") is often used for the amusement park which is actually but a small part of the Prater.

Pratt, Silas Gamaliel (1846-1916). American pianist and composer who founded the Pratt Institute of Music and Art in Pittsburgh (1906).

Praxiteles. Famous Greek sculptor of the 4th century B.C. He did the Aphrodite of Cnidus for which the courtesan PHRYNE is said to have posed. The statue of a satyr at the Roman Capitol referred to in the title of The Marble Faun by Nathaniel HAWTHORNE is possibly a copy of a statue by Praxiteles.

Prayers of Steel. A free verse poem (1915) by Carl SANDBURG.

prayer wheel. A device used by the Tibetan Buddhists as an aid to, or substitute for, prayer, the use of which is said to be founded on a misinterpretation of the Buddha's instructions to his followers, that they should "turn the wheel of the law"—i.e., preach Buddhism incessantly. The prayer wheel consists of a pasteboard cylinder inscribed with—or containing—the mystic formula OM MANI PADME HUM and other prayers, and each revolution represents one repetition of the prayers.

praying mantis. A grotesque insect that holds its stout anterior legs in a manner suggesting prayer. The Praying Mantis is the title of a novel by Edgar Johnson.

Preacher, the. Solomon, the reputed author of Ecclesiastes in the Old Testament.

the glorious preacher. Saint John Chrysostom (347-407).

the king of preachers. Louis Bourdaloue (1632-1704).

the little preacher. Samuel de Marets (1599-1663), Protestant controversialist.

preadamites. The name given by Isaac de la Peyrère (1655) to a race of men whom he supposed to have existed long before the days of Adam. He held that only the Jews are descended from Adam, and that the Gentiles derive from these "preadamites."

Précieuses Ridicules, Les. A comedy by MOLIÈRE (1659). The chief characters are two girls, who assume the airs of the Hotel de Rambouillet, a coterie of savants of both sexes in the 17th century. The members of this society were termed précieuses, and the précieuses ridicules means a ridiculous aping of their ways and manners.

The plot is, briefly, as follows: Cathos, cousin of Madelon, has been brought up by her Uncle Gorgibus, a plain citizen in the middle rank of life. These two silly girls have had their heads turned by novels, and, thinking their names commonplace, Cathos calls herself Aminte, and her cousin adopts the name of Polixene. Two gentlemen wish to marry them, but the girls consider their manners too unaffected and easy to be "good style," so the gentlemen send their valets to represent the Marquis of Mascarille and the Viscount of Jodelet. The girls are delighted with these "distinguished noblemen," but when the game has gone far enough, the masters enter, and lay bare the trick. The girls are taught a useful lesson, without being involved in any fatal consequences.

Preciosa. The heroine of Longfellow's SPANISH STUDENT.

Preedy, George, see LONG, GABRIELLE MARGARET.

Preface to Morals, A. A philosophical work (1929) by Walter LIPPMANN.

Prejudices. Six series of critical essays (1919-1927) by H. L. MENCKEN.

prelapsarian. In theology, referring to the state of man before his fall. From Latin lapsus, "a fall."

Prelude, The. A long autobiographical poem by William WORDSWORTH, showing the growth of a poet's mind by tracing his own life from childhood on. The full text was published only in 1926 through the devotion of E. de Selincourt. Wordsworth originally dedicated the poem to Coleridge.

Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood, the. A group of artists and poets formed in London in 1848, consisting originally of Holman HUNT, John Everett MILLAIS, D. G. ROSSETTI, the leader, and Thomas Woolner, later adding James Collinson, Frederick George Stephens, Walter Deverell, and W. M. Rossetti. It had for its objects a closer study of nature than was practiced by those bound by academic dogmas, and the cultivation of the methods and the spirit of the early Italian (the "pre-Raphael") painters. The group was championed by John RUSKIN, but was attacked by many artists and critics.

... a society which unfortunately, or rather unwisely has given itself the name of "Pre-Raphaelite"; unfortunately, because the principles on which its members are working are neither pre- nor post-Raphaelite, but everlasting. They are endeavouring to paint with the highest possible degree of completion, what they see in nature, without reference to conventional or established rules; but by no means to imitate the style of any past epoch.—Ruskin, Modern Painters, pt. ii, sect. vi, ch. iii, § 16, n.

In poetry, the Pre-Raphaelites championed the medieval ballad, the supernaturalism of Edgar Allan Poe, and the concrete, sensuous imagery of John KEATS. They published a LITTLE MAGAZINE called THE GERM, one of the first of such experimental journals, and poets either associated with the movement at one time or another or generally sympathetic with its aims were Christina ROSSETTI, William MORRIS, Coventry PATMORE, and A. C. SWINBURNE. The French Symbolist leader MALARMÉ is considered to have been influenced to some degree by the Pre-Raphaelites. See also FLESHLY SCHOOL. For a study of the Pre-Raphaelite movement, cf. Poor Splendid Wings, by Frances WINWAR.

Presbyterian. Pertaining to one of the Churches of Calvinistic origin, in which, as in the early Christian Church, the presbyters or elders are the medium through which all members of the church govern it. See also FREE KIRK; John KNOX.

Prescott, William Hickling (1796-1859). American historian, known for his colorful and dramatic works in the field of Spanish history, written under the influence of Sir Walter Scott and emphasizing the role of powerful individuals, such as CORTÉS and MONTEZUMA, in the events portrayed. His works include History of Ferdinand and Isabella (1838); History of the Conquest of Mexico (1843), regarded as his greatest accomplishment; Biographical and Critical Miscellanies (1845); History of the Conquest of Peru (1847); History of the Reign of Philip the Second, begun in 1849 and left unfinished at the time of the author's death. Prescott was blind in one eye during most of his life and wrote his studies under great difficulty.

Presidium. In the organization of the soviet system in Russia, every factory or trade or profession chooses members for the local or town soviet. The town or village soviets choose representatives to larger bodies above them. There is an ascending scale of soviets till it reaches a small legislative body known as the Presidium and a ministry known as the Council of Peoples' Commissars, of which Lenin was originally the chief.

Presles, the Marquis de. In Le Gendre de M. Poirier, a comedy by Augier and Sandeau, the titled son-in-law of the bourgeois M. POIRIER.

press gang. In English history, a detachment of seamen under a naval officer who had the power to seize any sailor in time of emergency and make him serve on board one of the King's ships. When the British tried to impress American seamen it was one of the causes of the War of 1812.

Prester John (i.e., John the Presbyter). A fabulous Christian king and priest, supposed in medieval times to have reigned in the 12th century over a wonderful country somewhere in the heart of Asia. He figures in Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO (Bks. xvii-xix), and has furnished materials for a host of medieval legends, including that of the HOLY GRAIL.

According to Sir John MANDEVILLE he was a lineal descendant of OGIER THE DANE, who penetrated into the north of India with fifteen of his barons, among whom he divided the land. John was made sovereign of Teneduc, and was called Prester because he converted the natives. Another tradition says he had seventy kings for his vassals, and was seen by his subjects only three times in a year. So firm was the belief in his existence that the Pope, Alexander III (d. 1181), sent him letters by a special messenger. The messenger never returned.

The centuries go by, but Prester John endures for ever
With his music in the mountains and his magic on the sky.

Alfred Noyes, Forty Singing Seamen.

Presto. The name frequently applied to himself by Jonathan SWIFT in his JOURNAL TO STELLA. According to his own account (Journal, August 1st, 1711) it was given him by the Duchess of Shrewsbury, an Italian. See also PPT.

the Old Pretender. James Francis Edward Stuart (1688-1766), son of James II. He is introduced in Thackeray's HENRY ESMOND.

the Young Pretender. Charles Edward Stuart (1720-1788), son of the "Old Pretender." By his friends he was called "the Chevalier" or Bonnie Prince Charlie. Scott introduced him in WAVERLEY and again in REDGAUNTLET, where he appears disguised as Father Buonaventura.

Prettyman, Prince. In the burlesque Rehearsal (1621) by the Duke of Buckingham, the lover of Cloris, who, much to his own annoyance, is sometimes a prince and sometimes a fisherman. He is said to be a caricature of Leonidas in Dryden's Marriage à la Mode.

preview. In motion-picture and theatrical parlance, a performance, sometimes a dress-rehearsal, which is given before an especially invited audience prior to the opening night.

Prévost, Abbé. Full name, Antoine François Prévost d'Exiles (1697-1763). French novelist and Benedictine abbé. He conducted a journal, Le Pour et le Contre (1733-1740) made translations into French of the English novels of Samuel RICHARDSON, and wrote a number of popular romances with wild plots and exotic backgrounds. His best-known work is MANON LESCAUT (1731). Prévost had a stormy youth, serving as a soldier and escaping twice from the Church before finally settling down as an unattached abbé in Paris.

Prevost, Eugène Marcel (1862-1941). French novelist. Member of the French Academy (1909).

Priam. In Greek legend, King of Troy when that city was sacked by the Greeks, husband of Hecuba, and father of fifty children, among whom were HECTOR, Helenus, PARIS, Deiphobus, Polyxena, TROILUS, CASSANDRA and POLYDORUS. When Hector was slain, the old King went to the tent of ACHILLES and made a successful plea for the body of his dead son. After the gates of Troy were thrown open by the Greeks concealed in the wooden horse, Pyrrhus, the son of Achilles, slew the aged Priam. See also TROJAN WAR.

Priamond. In Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE (IV. ii), the elder brother of Diamond and Triamond, sons of Agape, a fairy. He is very daring, and fights on foot with battleaxe and spear. He is slain by Cambalo.

Priapus. In Greek mythology, the god of reproductive power and fertility (hence of gardens), and protector of shepherds, fishermen, and farmers. He was the son of DIONYSUS and APHRODITE, and in later times was regarded as the chief deity of lasciviousness and obscenity.

Pribilof Islands. A group of islands in the Bering Sea, discovered (1786) by the Russian sea captain Gerasim Pribylov who gave them his name. They became a fur-seal reservation under the American government in 1868.

Price, Byron (1891-). American newspaper man. During World War II, U.S. director of censorship, appointed (1941) by President Roosevelt.

Price, Fanny. (1) Heroine of Jane Austen's MANSFIELD PARK.

(2) In W. S. Maugham's OF HUMAN BONDAGE, a lonely, unhappy, and bitterly frustrated English spinster, an art student in Paris who doggedly persists in her studies in spite of great poverty and the warnings of her teachers that she has no talent. She finally hangs herself.

Pride, Thomas (died 1658). English Parliamentary commander. Principally remembered for his conduct of the expulsion of more than 100 Royalist and Presbyterian members from the Long Parliament which was known as Pride's Purge (1648).

Pride and Prejudice. A novel by Jane Austen (1813). The story concerns the middle-class household of the Bennets, a family of five daughters. Mr. Bennet, a mild and indolent man, has little but witty cynicisms to oppose to the everlasting scheming of his wife, who is a type of the silly garrulous mother anxious to marry off her daughters. During the first half of the novel, Elizabeth Bennet grows more and more impatient with her suitor, Darcy, whose haughty consciousness of superior birth and uncalled for interference in the love affair of her sister Jane and his friend Bingley win her growing dislike. In the latter half, Bingley renews his suit with Darcy's approval, a boisterous younger sister, Lydia, causes great excitement by eloping with an officer named Wickham, and Darcy himself finally conquers his own pride and Elizabeth's prejudice to their mutual satisfaction. In this novel, which is the best-known of Jane Austen's novels, appear also two of her best-known minor characters, Mr. Collins and Lady Catherine de Bourgh.

Pride's Purge. The Long Parliament, not proving itself willing to condemn Charles I, was purged of its unruly members by Colonel Pride, who entered the House with two regiments of soldiers (December 6th, 1648), imprisoned sixty members, drove more than one hundred out into the streets, and left only sixty—the "Rump." See under PARLIAMENTS.

Priest, Judge. A well-known character appearing in a number of short stories by Irvin S. Cobb. He is a wise and kindly retired Kentucky judge who assists in the solution of numerous problems.

Priestley, John Boynton (1894–). English novelist, playwright, and journalist, best known as the author of The Good Companions (1929) and Angel Pavement (1930), best-selling novels compared by critics to Dickens' works. Other books are The Old Dark House (1928) and Faraway (1932), novels; Dangerous Corner (1932), a novel, also dramatized as a play; Four-In-Hand (1934), stories and essays; The Doomsday Men (1938); Let the People Sing (1940); Blackout In Gretley (1942), dealing with World War II in England. Priestley's plays include Dangerous Corner (1932); Eden End (1934); Laburnum Grove (1934); Duet in Floodlight (1935); Mystery At Greenfingers (1937); People At Sea (1937); Time and the Conways (1937); I Have Been Here Before (1938). Midnight on the Desert (1937) concerns travel in the western U.S.; Rain Upon Godshill (1939) is autobiographical.

Much interested in the theories of time expounded by J. W. Dunne in Experiments with Time and Serial Universe, Mr. Priestley has used them in several of his plays, in Time and the Conways, etc. In politics he calls himself "strongly left, but I am definitely anti-Marxist."

Priestley, Joseph (1733–1804). English clergyman, chemist, and philosopher. Pursued fruitful investigations into the nature of electrical discharges and discovered what is now called oxygen (1774). His theory of government, as set forth in his Essay on the First Principles of Government (1768), stipulates that the happiness of the majority is the great standard of all good government. See also BENTHAM. As a psychologist, he was influenced by Hartley to evolve an early theory of association. He spent the last decade of his life in America after his home in Birmingham had been burned by a mob infuriated on account of his sympathies with the French Revolution. A direct descendant was Mrs. BELLOC LOWNDES.

Prig, Betsey. In Dickens' MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT, an old monthly nurse, "the frequent pardner" of Mrs. Gamp. She is equally ignorant, equally vulgar, and equally selfish and brutal towards her patients as is her friend.

"Betsey," said Mrs. Gamp, filling her own glass, and passing the teapot [of gin], "I will now propose a toast: 'My frequent pardner, Betsey Prig.'" "Which, altering the name to Sarah Gamp; I drink," said Mrs. Prig, "with love and tenderness."—Martin Chuzzlewit, xlix prima facie (Lat.). At first view.

Primate. In the Roman Catholic Church, originally a bishop set over other bishops in matters of jurisdiction or as vicar of the Holy See. Later the term became purely an honorary title.

Prime Minister, The. A novel by Anthony Trollope (1876). See OMNIUM, DUKE OF; PHINEAS FINN.

primitivism. Term applied to a persistent tendency in European literature, art, and thought since the 18th century, stimulated by the acquisition of foreign colonies of low cultural development and by new discoveries in scholarship and the social sciences, to attribute superior virtue to primitive, non-European civilizations. J. J. Rousseau was the first notable primitivist, with his doctrine of the "natural man," and the widespread 18th-century veneration of the Noble Savage had an important influence on the romantic movement. See ROMANTICISM. The American Indian was a favorite early exemplar of the Noble Savage. Later, primitivism expanded to include among the objects of its enthusiasm the violent, the crude, undeveloped, ignorant, naïve, non-intellectual or sub-intelligent of any kind, such as peasants, children, and idiots.

The following are literary figures of the 18th, 19th, and 20th centuries whose work embodies primitivism in one or another of its aspects: MACPHERSON (pseudo-Ossianic poems); BLAKE (innocence, childhood); WORDSWORTH (peasants, children, idiot boys); CHATEAUBRIAND and James Fenimore COOPER (the American Indian); the GRIMM brothers (fairy tales, legends); Richard WAGNER (pre-Christian religion and myth); Fyodor DOSTOYEVSKY (children, idiots); TOLSTOY (peasants); RIMBAUD (sadism, violence, the occult); HUYSMANS and the DECADENTS (sadism, violence, the cult of sensation); Pierre LOTI (South Sea Islands); W. B. YEATS (myth and legend); Thomas MANN (myth and legend); D. H. LAWRENCE (the mystical rôle of sex, the cult of sensation, primitive religion and ritual); Sherwood ANDERSON and Carl VAN VECHTEN (the American Negro); Ernest HEMINGWAY (violence, cult of sensation); James JOYCE (legend and myth, the subconscious). In psychology, FREUD and JUNG (the subconscious), and in anthropology, Sir J. G. FRAZER (primitive religion, myth, and ritual), are also representatives of primitivism and of the scientific thought which helped to stimulate primitivism. Primitivists in painting include MILLET and van GOGH (peasants); GAUGUIN (Tahitian themes); PICASSO and BRAQUE (African Negro forms); Joan MIRO and Paul KLEE (children's art); Salvador DALI and the surrealists (the subconscious). Henri ROUSSEAU, a naïve, self-taught painter, was a favorite among primitivist art groups in the early part of the 20th century. Igor STRAVINSKY (the primitive ritual of Le Sacre du printemps) and the American jazz composers of the 1920's (African and American Negro rhythms) outstandingly represent primitivism in music, and the political movements of NAZISM and FASCISM of the period following World War I are striking examples of primitivism also, seeking a return to the social organization and cultural and religious ideals of the Roman Empire and the early Germanic tribes.

primogeniture. The right of the first-born son to succeed to the patrimony.

Primrose, the Rev. Dr. Charles. The hero of Oliver Goldsmith's famous novel THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD, a clergyman, rich in heavenly wisdom. He has his little foibles and vanities, but is genuinely devout and kindly, a man whom all his parishioners love.

Mrs. (Deborah) Primrose. The doctor's wife, full of motherly vanity, and desirous to appear genteel. She can read without much spelling, prides herself on her housewifery, especially on her gooseberry wine, and is really proud of her excellent husband. She is painted as Venus, and the vicar, in gown and bands, is presenting to her his book on "second marriages," but when completed, the picture is found to be too large for the house.

George Primrose. Son of the vicar. He goes to Amsterdam to teach the Dutch English, but never once calls to mind that he himself must know something of Dutch before this can be done. He becomes Captain Primrose, and marries Miss Wilmot, an heiress.

Moses Primrose. Younger son of the vicar, noted for his greenness and pedantry. Sent to sell a good horse at a fair, he barter it for a gross of green spectacles with copper rims and shagreen cases, of no value at all.

Olivia Primrose. The eldest daughter of the doctor. Pretty, enthusiastic, eager for adventure, she "wished for many lovers," and elopes with Squire Thornhill. Her father finds her at a roadside inn called the Harrow, where she is on the point of being turned out of the house. Subsequently, she is found to be legally married to the Squire.

Sophia Primrose. The second daughter of Dr. Primrose. She is "soft, modest, and alluring." She is twice rescued by Sir William THORNHILL, then disguised as Mr. Burchill, and marries him at last.

Primrose League, The. A British organization of conservatives, founded (1883) in memory of Benjamin DISRAELI whose favorite flower was the primrose.

primum mobile (Lat., "the first moving thing"). In the Ptolemaic system of astronomy, the ninth (later the tenth) sphere, supposed to revolve around the earth from east to west in twenty-four hours, carrying with it all the other SPHERES. Milton refers to it as "that first mov'd" (Paradise Lost, III. 483), and Sir Thomas BROWNE (Religio Medici) uses the phrase, "Beyond the first movable," meaning outside the material creation. According to PTOLEMY the primum mobile was the boundary of creation, above which came the EMPYREAN or seat of God.

The term is figuratively applied to any machine which communicates motion to others, and also to persons and ideas suggestive of complicated systems. Thus, Socrates may be called the primum mobile of the Dialectic, Megaric, Cyrenaic, and Cynic systems of philosophy.

prince (Lat. princeps, "chief, leader"). A royal title which, in England, is now limited to the sons of the sovereign and their sons. Princess is similarly limited to the sovereign's daughters and his sons' (but not daughters') daughters.

Crown Prince. The title of the heir-apparent to the throne in some countries, as Sweden, Denmark, and Japan (formerly also in Germany).

Prince Consort. A prince who is the husband of a reigning Queen, as Albert of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, husband of Queen Victoria, and the husband of Wilhelmina, Queen of the Netherlands.

Prince Imperial. The title of the heir-apparent in the French Empire of 1852-1870.

Prince of Wales. See WALES.

Prince of Alchemy. Rudolph II, Emperor of Germany, also called The German Hermes Trismegistus.

Prince of Angels. Michael.

Prince of Apostles. St. Peter. See under SAINTS.

Prince of Asturias. The title of the heir-apparent to the Spanish throne.

Prince of Dandies. BEAU BRUMMEL (1778-1840).

Prince of Darkness. Satan (Eph. vi. 12).

Prince of Destruction. Timur or Tamerlane (1333-1405).

Prince of Gossips. Samuel Pepys (1632-1703) noted for his gossiping Diary, commencing January 1, 1659, and continued for nine years.

Prince of Grammarians. Appolonios of Alexandria (fl. 40-30 B. C.), so called by Priscian.

Prince of Hell. Satan.

Prince of Hypocrites. Emperor Tiberius (42 B. C.-37 A. D.).

Prince of Liars. Fernando Mendes Pinto, so called by Cervantes.

Prince of Music. Palestrina (1529-1594).

Prince of Painters. (1) Parhasius (fl. 400 B. C.); (2) Apelles (fl. 330 B. C.). Both Greek painters.

Prince of Peace. A title given to the Messiah (Isa. ix. 6).

Prince of Physicians. Avicenna (980-1037) the Arabian physician.

Prince of Piedmont. The Italian heir-apparent.

Prince of Poets. (1) Virgil (70-19 B. C.); (2) Edmund Spenser (1552-1599), so called on his monument.

Prince of Spanish Poetry. Garcilaso de la Vega (1503-1536), so called by Cervantes.

Prince of the Church. A cardinal.

Prince of the Ode. Pierre de Ronsard (1524-1585).

prince of the vegetable kingdom. So Linnaeus calls the palm tree.

Prince, Morton (1854-1929). American neurologist. Founder and editor (1906-1929) of the Journal of Abnormal Psychology. Author of several books on the nature of mind and the unconscious.

Prince and the Pauper, The. A historical romance by Mark TWAIN (1882), describing in satirical vein the comedy resulting from a prankish change of garments between Prince Edward, after Edward VI, and his double, Tom Canty the beggar boy. Tom is regarded as the lawful prince, temporarily unbalanced, and only when he is on the point of being crowned king is the mistake cleared up.

Prince Chery or Cheri. See CHERY AND FAIR-STAR.

Prince Hohenstiel-Schwangau. A monologue poem by Robert Browning imagined to be spoken by Napoleon III, disguised under the name of the title.

Prince of India, The. A novel by Lew WALLACE (1893) based on the legend of the WANDERING JEW. Here the Jew has assumed the title Prince of India and devotes himself to preaching brotherly love. He takes his teaching to both the Mohammedans and the Greek Church, but with little success; then he gives his support to Mohammed, heir to the Turkish Empire. The capture of Constantinople by Mohammed and his marriage to Princess Irene are important incidents. At the conclusion of the novel the Prince, left for dead on the battlefield, starts out with renewed youth on fresh wanderings.

Prince of Parthia. A tragedy by Thomas Godfrey, the first play written by an American and performed by professional actors in America. It was played on April 24, 1767. The scene is laid in Parthia about the 1st century A. D.

Prince Rupert's drops. Also Rupert's drops or ball or tear. Delicate pieces of glass made by dropping molten glass into water. They were introduced into England from Germany by Prince RUPERT, the nephew of Charles I, and looked like tears made out of glass.

Prince's Progress, The. An allegorical poem (1866) by Christina ROSSETTI.

Princess, The. A long narrative poem by TENNYSON (1847), especially noted for the songs introduced. It deals with the general subject of the "new woman," and shows the heroine, Ida, as founder of a university to which only women are admitted. The Gilbert and Sullivan comic opera, Princess Ida (1884), is "a respectful operatic perversion of Tennyson's Princess."

Princess Casamassima, The. A novel by Henry JAMES (1886), dealing with socialism.

The titular heroine is the Christina Light who appeared in RODERICK HUDSON. Wealthy, beautiful and unhappily married, she seeks an outlet in her espousal of the socialist cause and in her sympathetic association with Hyacinth Robinson, a handsome and ardent young radical.

Princesse de Clèves, La. A novel (1678) by Mme de La Fayette (1634-1693). Its historical importance lies in the fact that it is a brilliant forerunner of the psychological novel.

Princip, Gavril (1893?-1918). The Serbian student who assassinated the Austrian Archduke Francis Ferdinand at Sarajevo (June 28, 1914), precipitating the first World War.

Principia. Philosophiae Naturalis Principia Mathematica by Sir Isaac Newton.

Pringle, Henry Fowles (1897-). American journalist and biographer. His Theodore Roosevelt: A Biography (1931) won the Pulitzer prize for biography.

Printers' Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Printing, Father of English. See under FATHER.

Printing House Square. Once the site of the King's printers in London. Now the office of the London Times.

Prinzivalle. In Maeterlinck's MONNA VANNA, the Florentine admirer of Vanna.

Prior, Matthew (1664-1721). English poet and diplomat, known chiefly for his epigrams, satires, and "society" verse. His works include Alma, Or the Progress of the Soul, a long poem on worldly vanity; Henry and Emma, a paraphrase of THE NUT-BROWN MAID; Solomon on the Vanity of the World (1718); Down-Hall (1723), a ballad on a journey through Essex; Carmen Saeculare (1700), an "occasional" piece on William III; The Secretary, reminiscences of his experiences in diplomacy; and several prose works, among them being Essay upon Learning, Essay upon Opinion, and Four Dialogues on the Dead. Prior took part in several important European treaty negotiations of his time, including the Treaty of Ryswick and the Peace of Utrecht.

Prioress's Tale, The. One of Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES, similar to the story of HUGH OF LINCOLN. A little boy is constantly singing the Alma redemptoris, and the Jews capture him on his way to school, kill him, and cast his dead body into a well. His mother, anxious at his absence, goes in search of him, and, coming to the well hears her son's voice singing the Alma redemptoris. She tells the provost, who has the Jews executed. The child is drawn up still repeating the same words, and, being asked why he does so, replies that he can never die until his tongue is cut out.

The abbot cuts out the tongue, the child instantly gives up the ghost, and the body is buried in a marble tomb. WORDSWORTH has modernized this tale. In his drama THE CANTERBURY PILGRIMS, Percy MacKAYE makes the gentle, lovable Prioress play a prominent role as the rival of the Wife of Bath.

She is perhaps best described in the following lines:

Ther was also a Nonne, a Prioress
That of hir smyling was ful simple and coy
Hir gretteste ooth was but by seynt Loy
And she was cleped madame Eglentyne
Ful wel she song the service divyne
Entuned in hir nose ful semely
And Frensh she spak ful faire and fetisly. . . .
She was so charitable and so pitous
She wolde wepe, if that she sawe a mous
Caught in a trappe, if it were deed or bledde.
Prologue to the Canterbury Tales.

Priscian. A great grammarian of the fifth century. The Latin phrase, Diminuere Prisciani caput (to break Priscian's head), means to "violate the rules of grammar."

Priscilla. (1) The heroine of Longfellow's COURTSHIP OF MILES STANDISH. (2) A delicate little seamstress, one of the chief characters in Hawthorne's BLITHEDALE ROMANCE.

Prisoner of Chillon. See CHILLON.

Prisoner of Zenda, The. A popular romance by Anthony HOPE (1894). The English hero, Rudolf Rassendyll, for three months impersonates King Rudolf of Ruritania, the "Prisoner of Zenda," meantime making every effort to secure the King's release and return to him the throne. His final success in so doing loses for Rassendyll the hand of the Princess Flavia, whom he surrenders to his royal rival, together with the crown.

Prithu. A hero of the Indian Purānas. Vena having been slain for his wickedness, and leaving no offspring, the saints rubbed his right arm, and the friction brought forth Prithu. Being told that the earth had suspended for a time its fertility, Prithu went forth to punish it, and the Earth, under the form of a cow, fled at his approach. Unable to escape, she promised that in future "seed-time and harvest should never fail."

Private Papers of Henry Rycroft, The. A novel by George GISSING (1903), largely autobiographical and dealing with the problems of the struggling author.

Privy Council. The council chosen by the English sovereign originally to administer public affairs, but by the 20th century never summoned as a whole except to proclaim the successor to the Crown on the death of the Sovereign. The business of the Privy Council is now performed by Committees (of which the Cabinet is technically one), such as the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and the great departments of State—the Board of Trade, Local Government Board, Board of Education, etc. All of these are, in theory, merely committees of the Privy Council. Privy Councillors are entitled to the prefix "the Right Honorable" before their names, and rank next after Knights of the Garter, who may be commoners.

Prix Goncourt. A prize, at first of 5000, later of 10,000 francs, awarded every year (since 1903) by the Académie Goncourt in Paris for the most remarkable imaginative work composed during the year by a young French writer. The academy was founded with an endowment bequeathed by Edmond GONCOURT and is composed of ten outstanding French men of letters.

pro and con (Lat.). For and against. Con is an abbreviation of contra. The pros and cons of a matter are all that can be said for or against it.

Proclus (410?-485). Greek Neoplatonic philosopher who defended paganism and opposed Christianity. He issued a brief statement of the principles of Neoplatonism.

Procne. In classic myth the sister of PHILOMELA.

Procopius. A Byzantine historian who was private secretary (527 A. D.) to Belisarius and accompanied him on his campaigns. He wrote histories of the Persian, Vandal, and Gothic wars.

Procris. In classic myth, the jealous wife of CEPHALUS.

unerring as the dart of Procris. When Procris fled from Cephalus out of shame, Diana gave her a dog (Laelaps) that never failed to secure its prey, and a dart which not only never missed aim, but which always returned of its own accord to the shooter.

Procrustes' bed. Procrustes, in Greek legend, was a robber of Attica, who placed all who fell into his hands upon an iron bed. If they were longer than the bed he cut off the redundant part, if shorter, he stretched them till they fitted it. He was slain by THESEUS. Hence, any attempt to reduce men to one standard, one way of thinking, or one way of acting, is called placing them on Procrustes' bed.

Procter, Bryan Waller. Pseudonym Barry Cornwall (1787-1874). English poet. Friend of Charles Lamb, Leigh Hunt, Hazlitt, Dickens, etc. His daughter Adelaide Ann Procter (1825-1864), is remembered for her poem THE LOST CHORD which she wrote under the pseudonym of Mary Berwick.

Procyon. A first-magnitude star in Canis Minor.

Prodigal Son. A repentant sinner from the parable of the Prodigal Son (Luke xv.) who "wasted his substance in riotous living" in a far country, but returned to his father's house and was forgiven.

prodigy (Lat. prodigium). A portent, prophetic sign.

the Prodigy of France. Guillaume Budé (1467-1540); so called by Erasmus.

the Prodigy of Learning. Samuel Hahnemann (1755-1843), the German founder of homeopathy, was so called by J. Paul Richter.

Professor, The. A novel by Charlotte Brontë (written, 1846; published posthumously, 1857), founded on the facts of the author's experiences in teaching school in Brussels.

Professor Bernhardt. A drama by Arthur Schnitzler (1862-1931) concerning the public persecution of a distinguished Jewish physician who has refused to let a Catholic priest disturb a charity patient, dying in the hospital in happy ignorance of her impending fate.

Professorenroman (Ger.). Literally, "professor's novel." In German literary history a very convenient term applied to novels which are crammed full of reliably correct historical detail but which remain absolutely devoid of literary inspiration.

Professor's House, The. A novel (1925) by Willa Cather.

Profitendieu, Bernard. In André Gide's THE COUNTERFEITERS, the adolescent hero, a Paris schoolboy who runs away from home when he discovers a letter which appears to be evidence that his birth was illegitimate.

Profound Doctor. See under DOCTOR.

Progin, Xavier. French inventor (1833) of "Ktypographic" machine, forerunner of modern typewriter, which used bars of type.

program music. A type of music the aim of which is to tell a story, either by the imitation of natural sounds or by the suggestion in sound of the actions and situations of a definite plot, or "program." Beethoven's Sixth or Pastoral Symphony is an early example of program music, as is the Symphonie fantastique of BERLIOZ. The orchestral Tone Poems of Richard STRAUSS are also representative examples of program music.

Progress and Poverty. A treatise on economics by Henry GEORGE (1879). In it, the author tries to analyze why there is an increase in poverty with the increasing prosperity of a nation and attributes the cause to private ownership of land and the rising rate of rent in proportion to the rising value of the land. George's proposed solution is his famous "Single Tax," by which only the return from rented land is made subject to taxation.

Progressive party. The first of the American political organizations to have this name was formed during the 1912 presidential campaign by Republicans opposed to the nomination of William Howard Taft. These insurgents nominated Theodore Roosevelt for president and Hiram Johnson for vice-president. Their party was also given the name of the Bull Moose Party, and the platform included approval of woman suffrage and other advanced measures. In 1924 the second Progressive party was organized, nominating Robert La Follette for president and Burton K. Wheeler for vice-president. It was supported by farmer, labor, and socialist groups. It opposed monopoly, and collected 5 million votes, one-sixth of the total votes in the election. See also WALLACE, Henry A.

Prohibition. The term by which the national legal curb on the sale of intoxicating liquors, as authorized by the 18th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution (passed 1918, repealed by the 21st Amendment in 1933), was popularly known. During the period that Prohibition was in force nationally there was predominant BOOTLEGGING, racketeering, and crime. See GANGSTERS; SPEAKEASY. Prohibition laws, all the result of agitation by leaders of the temperance movement and the ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE, were passed from time to time by individual states during the 19th century, and some continued after the repeal of the 18th Amendment. A Prohibition party, founded in 1869, regularly entered candidates in national elections.

Prokofiev, Sergei Sergeevich (1891-). Russian composer, noted for the brilliance and boldness of his compositions. His The Buffoon was played by Diaghilev's ballet in Paris (1921). Peter and the Wolf is also a popular ballet. His CLASSICAL SYMPHONY is more conventional in style.

Prokosch, Frederic (1909-). American poet and novelist, author of poetry marked by rich, sensuous imagery and an atmosphere of decay, and novels dealing chiefly with romantic adventure and unusual, introspective characters portrayed against exotic foreign backgrounds. The Assassins (1936), The Carnival (1938), and Death at Sea (1940) are books of his poetry; his novels include The Asiatics (1935), The Seven Who Fled (1937), Night of the Poor (1939), and The Idols of the Cave (1946), a novel of New York and the ballet.

proletarian literature. A type of literature, at the height of its influence during the 1930's, especially in the U.S., which had as its aim a sympathetic portrayal of the lives and sufferings of the PROLETARIAT and an exposure of the injustices and economic inequalities seen by its writers in the society in which they lived, with a view toward inducing amelioration. A presentation of the aims and activities of labor organizers, revolutionaries, and members of the COMMUNIST PARTY, all regarded as representatives of the proletariat, was also an outstanding characteristic of proletarian literature, and a novel or play dealing with the privations of a family of miners, factory-workers, or southern sharecroppers would often conclude with a burst of hope on the part of the characters as they went out to join a labor union or become Communists. But although the leading writers of proletarian literature were often Communists or Communist sympathizers, and the Communist party enthusiastically endorsed and encouraged its production, frequently using it for purposes of PROPAGANDA for the achievement of various of its objects, to a large degree this type of literature represented the sincere response of its authors to an era of economic depression and unemployment and to certain persistent social injustices which they knew from their own experience or observation.

In subject-matter and sympathetic approach to its characters, proletarian literature had its forerunners among the humanitarian novelists of the 19th century, such as Mrs. GASKELL, DICKENS, George ELIOT, Charles KINGSLEY, Victor HUGO, Harriet Beecher STOWE, and Rebecca H. DAVIS, Jack LONDON, and such humanitarian poets as Thomas HOOD, Elizabeth Barrett BROWNING, and Edward MARKHAM. In its social perspective, it was preceded by the naturalists (FLAUBERT, the GONCOURTS, ZOLA) and their American disciples Stephen CRANE and Frank NORRIS, by the MUCKRAKERS, and by such "problem" novelists as W. D. HOWELLS, Robert HERRICK, and D. G. PHILLIPS. Its technique, in turn, is derived from that of the naturalists and the unaffiliated realists, such as KIRKLAND, E. W. HOWE, and Hamlin GARLAND, while the spirit of bitter or idealistic rebellion that animates its most characteristic examples had a precedent among the English and American romantics—Robert BURNS, the early WORDSWORTH, P. B. SHELLEY, EMERSON, THOREAU, and Walt WHITMAN. Whitman's exaltation of the "common man" was continued particularly by American proletarian poets.

In the field of fiction and the theater, proletarian writers include the following: Maxim GORKI, Gerhart HAUPTMANN (in his early career), Sean O'CASEY, Liam O'FLAHERTY, Nexö, John Dos PASSOS (in part in U.S.A.), James T. FARRELL (in part in STUDS LONIGAN), BARBUSSE, Erskine CALDWELL, John STEINBECK, André MALRAUX, Clifford ODETS, John Howard LAWSON, Irwin SHAW, Marc BLITZSTEIN, Albert HALPER, Meyer LEVIN, Albert MALTZ, Grace LUMPKIN, Meridel LE SUEUR, Henry Roth, Richard WRIGHT, Waldo FRANK, and Leane ZUGSMITH. Among proletarian poets are: Carl SANDBURG (in his celebration of the "common man," which preceded the general movement in proletarian literature by a number of years), Bertolt BRECHT, Hugh MACDIARMID, Stephen SPENDER (in part), Kenneth FEARING, Alfred Hayes, Muriel RUCKER (in her early work), Horace GREGORY (in part). Characteristic proletarian novels are MAN'S FATE, IN DUBIOUS BATTLE, and GRAPES OF WRATH; WAITING FOR LEFTY and Let Freedom Ring are characteristic proletarian plays. With the growth of the international ambitions of Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy, anti-Nazi and anti-Fascist works, by such writers as Ralph BATES and Ignazio SILONE, came to be included in the category of proletarian. Leading organs of proletarian literature were the magazines NEW MASSES, The Anvil, and PARTISAN REVIEW, the last-named in its early period of publication only. A school of proletarian criticism also developed which sought to advance the notion that literature should concern itself with social and economic injustice and participate actively in the "class struggle," impelling its readers to "action" rather than causing them pleasure or turning them to contemplation. It vigorously condemned theories of "ART FOR ART'S SAKE."

proletariat. The lowest class of the community, laborers and wage-earners who are destitute of property. In ancient Rome, the proletarii contributed nothing to the state but their proles, i.e., offspring; they could hold no office, were ineligible for the army, and were useful only as breeders of the race.

The term came into wide use with the spreading influence of the Socialist and Communist movements in the 19th and 20th centuries, being frequently used in Marxist writings (see MARX, KARL; MARXISM), and was especially known after the successful Russian Revolution of 1917. In Marxist and Communist context it refers particularly to workers in factories.

dictatorship of the proletariat. A period of strict control by the working-class revolutionaries which, according to Marxist doctrine, is to mark the transition from a capitalist society to a state of communal ownership, its political forms "withering away" when its work of expropriating land, factories, resources, capital, etc., from private hands has been completed. The dictatorship of the proletariat in the U.S.S.R. was supposed to have ended within a few years after the revolution, although some critics maintained that a political dictatorship continued as the government of the nation.

Prometheus (Gr., "forethought"). One of the Titans of Greek myth, son of Iapetus and the ocean-nymph Clymene, and famous as a benefactor to man. It is said that ZEUS employed him to make men out of mud and water, and that then, in pity for their state, he stole fire from heaven and gave it to them. For this he was chained by Zeus to Mount Caucasus, where an eagle preyed on his liver all day, the liver being renewed at night. He was eventually released by Hercules, who slew the eagle. It was to counterbalance the gift of fire to mankind that Zeus sent PANDORA to earth with her box of evils.

Prometheus is the subject of a famous trilogy by the Greek dramatist AESCHYLUS (Prometheus Bound, Prometheus Unbound, Prometheus the Fire Bringer). One of Shelley's best-known works is his poetic drama Prometheus Unbound. William Vaughn MOODY's drama, The Fire Bringer (1904) also deals with Prometheus, and many other poets have sung of him.

Promethean. Capable of producing fire; pertaining to Prometheus. The earliest "safety" matches, made in 1805 by Chancel, a French chemist, who tipped cedar splints with paste of chlorate of potash and sugar, were known as Prometheans.

Promethean fire. The vital principle; the fire with which Prometheus quickened into life his clay images. Figuratively, inspiration.

the Promethean unguent. Made from a herb on which some of the blood of Prometheus had fallen. MEDEA gave Jason some of it, and thus rendered his body proof against fire and warlike instruments.

Promised Land or Land of Promise. Canaan or Palestine; so called because God promised Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob that their offspring should possess it. (Gen. xii. 7, xxvi. 3, xxviii. 13).

The expression is frequently in use with reference to the promise of the BALFOUR DECLARATION that the Jews should have a "homeland" in Palestine.

Promised Land, The. An autobiography by Mary Antin (1912), describing her life in Polotsk as the child of a Russian Jew, her emigration to America at the age of ten, and her school days in Boston, where her talents and enthusiasm for America made friends for her and opened many doors of opportunity.

proof. A trial imprint to be corrected and approved before it is finally printed.

galley or first proof. Gallies are shallow oblong containers that hold the equivalent of three or four pages of book type. First proofs are practically always taken in galley form—that is, in single column on long strips of paper. Corrections noted on galley proof are made before the type is arranged in pages.

page proof (usually second proof, although the proofreader sometimes calls for a second galley proof). After the type has been taken out of the galley and arranged in pages, page proofs are taken, with page numbers, titles or chapter headings, etc.

foundry or stone proof. Proofs made after the type pages are locked in the forms for the electrotyping process. They have a black border made by the ink from the metal guards. After the electrotype plates are cast, corrections are very expensive.

author's proof. The proof sent to the author of the manuscript for his corrections and O.K.

clean proof. A proof having very few printers' errors, or a revised proof.

foul or dirty proof. A proof after it has been corrected by proofreader or author, or a proof with many printers' errors.

revised proof. Second proof, either galley or page.

press proof. The final proof O.K.'d for the press.

proofreader. One who reads and corrects printers' proofs.

Proof marks for correction of proof:

cap., change to capital letters those trebly underlined.

δ delete, take out.

ital., change to italic letters those underlined.

l.c., change to lower-case letters (small, not caps or s. caps) those underlined.

n.p., or ¶, begin a new paragraph with the word after the bracket [.

press, print off.

Qy., or ?, added by reader to mark something about which he is uncertain.

revise, submit another proof.

rom., change to roman letters those underlined.

run on and a line drawn from the last word of the first paragraph to the first word of the second, no new paragraph.

s. caps., change to small capitals those doubly underlined.

stet, let the canceled word dotted underneath remain.

tr/ transpose as marked.

w.f., wrong font (type face or size), alter.

× bad letter, substitute good type.

^ the caret mark, insert matter in margin.

□ indent first word.

insert space, or equalize spacing.

L space to be reduced.

○ remove space, close up.

V to be put under all apos., quotes, and superior letters (as r in M^r.) to be added.

⊥ a space to be pushed down.

|| make parallel at the sides.

..... see stet, above.

/ a stroke as this to be put after each note in the margin to show that it is concluded, to separate it from others, and to call attention to it.

All corrections are to be made in ink, and attention called to them in the margin, as otherwise they are likely to be overlooked. All punctuation marks, as full stop, etc., to be enclosed in a circle.

propaganda. A type of literature or journalism which, by means of style and emphasis as well as content, seeks to appeal to the fears, emotions, and prejudices of a certain group of people in such a way as to persuade them to undertake a desired action or to inculcate in them a desired attitude. Commercial advertising, certain types of political oratory, and certain official releases to the newspapers by governments or organizations are outstanding examples of propaganda. The word came to have an opprobrious connotation during the 1920's and 1930's as a result of revelations that the "atrocities" attributed to Germany during the invasion of Belgium in World War I were untrue, although proletarian critics (see PROLETARIAN LITERATURE) defended the use of propaganda in fiction and poetry, claiming that all good literature has been propaganda. A striking and apparently overwhelmingly effective use of propaganda was made during this period by the movements of FASCISM and NAZISM. The science of SEMANTICS made propaganda one of the objects of its study, and at the beginning of World War II an Institute for Propaganda Analysis was founded in the U.S. for the analysis of statements made by the various belligerents and the demonstration of their fallacious or specious reasoning and misleading wording. When the U.S. entered the war, the Institute was disbanded.

Propertius, Sextus (b. ca. 51 B.C.). Latin poet, known for his elegiac verse dealing with the varying phases of ecstasy and disillusionment in love. The 20th-century American poet Ezra POUND was much interested in the work of Propertius.

Prophet, the. The special title of MAHOMET. According to the KORAN, there have been 200,000 prophets, but only six of them brought new laws or dispensations, viz., Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Jesus, and Mahomet.

the Great or Major Prophets. Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel; so called because their writings are more extensive than the prophecies of the other twelve.

the Minor or Lesser Prophets. Hosea, Joel, Amos, Obadiah, Micah, Jonah, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Haggai, Zechariah, and the author of Malachi, whose writings are less extensive than those of the four Great Prophets.

Prophète, Le (The Prophet). An opera by MEYERBEER (1849), libretto by SCRIBE. The scene is laid in Holland in 1534-1535, and the central figure is John of Leyden, the fanatical leader of the Anabaptist uprising. The heroine, Bertha, wreaks vengeance against the blood-thirsty Prophet, unconscious of the fact that he is her betrothed, and kills herself on discovery of the truth. The chief dramatic interest lies in the part of Fides, the Prophet's mother, whom he publicly denies because he wishes the people to believe he is of supernatural origin, but who forgives him with true motherly love.

Prophetess, the. A title of Ayesha, the second and beloved wife of MAHOMET. Like Sultana, it is simply a title of honor.

props. In theatrical and motion-picture cant, short for property, the things that are necessary to the action of a play and have to be placed on the stage by the "property man."

prose (Lat. oratio prosa—i.e., proversa, "straightforward speaking"). The form of man's ordinary language. The term is meaningful only by opposition to the foot-bound form of language which is normally called poetry. The rhythm of artistic prose is not pre-established but emerges from the rhythm of thought.

Monsieur Jourdain, in Molière's Le Bourgeois gentilhomme suddenly discovers that he has been talking prose for twenty years without knowing it.

Father of English, French, etc., prose. See under FATHER.

Proserpina or Proserpine. The Roman counterpart of the Greek goddess Persephone, daughter of DEMETER, queen of the infernal regions and wife of PLUTO. As the personification of seasonal changes, she passed six months of the year on Olympus, and six in Hades; while at Olympus she was beneficent, but in Hades she was stern and terrible. Legend has it that, as she was amusing herself in the meadows of Sicily, Pluto seized her and carried her off in his chariot to the infernal regions as his bride. In her terror she dropped some of the lilies she had been gathering, and they turned to daffodils. In Hades she was disconsolate and would eat nothing, but finally tasted a few pomegranate seeds, for which she was compelled to spend a part of each year in the underworld.

In later legend, Proserpina was the goddess of sleep, and in the myth of Cupid and Psyche, by Apuleius, after PSYCHE had long wandered about searching for her lost Cupid, she was sent to Proserpina for "the casket of divine beauty," which she was not to open till she came into the light of day. Just as she was about to step on earth, Psyche thought how much more Cupid would love her if she were divinely beautiful; so she opened the casket and found it contained Sleep, which instantly filled all her limbs with drowsiness, and she slept as though it were the sleep of death.

Thou art more than the day or the morrow, the seasons that laugh or that weep;
For these give joy and sorrow; but thou, Proserpina, sleep.

Swinburne, Hymn to Proserpine, I. 3.

prosody. The science of versification according to syllabic quantity, accent, etc. The systematic study of metrics. All types of metrical feet, patterns of rhyme, kinds of stanzas, etc., come in its domain.

Prosper le Gai. The hero of Maurice Hewlett's FOREST LOVERS.

Prospero. The rightful Duke of Milan in THE TEMPEST, deposed by his brother. Having drifted to a desert island, he practices magic and raises a tempest in which his brother is shipwrecked. Ultimately Prospero breaks his magic wand, and his daughter marries the son of the King of Naples.

Prospect. Latin, "Look forward!" Soon after his wife's death, Robert BROWNING wrote a poem of this title (1864) in which he expressed an optimistic and courageous attitude toward death.

protagonist. The chief person in a drama or novel. Hence also the chief supporter of a given "cause."

Protagoras. Greek philosopher of the 5th century B. C. Known as the first of the Sophists. "Man is the measure of all things: of those which are, that they are; of those which are not, that they are not." Driven from Athens under a charge of atheism. One of Plato's dialogues bears his name. In it Socrates makes the point that virtue is knowledge.

pro tanto (Lat.). As an instalment, good enough as far as it goes, but not final.

protective tariff. See FORDNEY-McCUMBER.

pro tempore (Lat.). Temporarily; for the time being, until something is permanently settled. It is usually contracted into pro tem.

Protesilaus. At the siege of Troy an oracle prophesied that the first Greek to step on land would be killed. Protesilaus took the office upon himself and was promptly slain. After that, his wife, Laodamia, always kept an image of him where she could see it. When her father took it from her, she killed herself.

Proteus. (1) In Greek legend, Neptune's herdsman, an old man and a prophet, famous for his power of assuming different shapes at will. Hence the phrase, as many shapes as Proteus—i.e., full of shifts, aliases, disguises, etc., and the adjective protean, readily taking on different aspects, ever-changing. Proteus lived in a vast cave, and his custom was to tell over his herds of sea-calves at noon, and then to sleep. There was no way of catching him but by stealing upon him at this time and binding him; otherwise he would elude anyone by a rapid change in shape.

(2) In Shakespeare's TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA, one of the two titular heroes.

prothalamion. The term coined by SPENSER (from Gr. thalamos, "a bridal chamber") as a title for his "Spousall Verse" (1596) in honor of the double marriage of Lady Elizabeth and Lady Katherine Somerset, daughters of the Earl of Worcester, to Henry Gilford and William Peter, Esquires. Hence, a song sung in honor of the bride and bridegroom before the wedding is called a prothalamion.

Prothero, George Walter (1848-1922). English historian. Coeditor, Cambridge Modern History (1902-1912).

Protocol, Mr. Peter. In Scott's GUY MANNERING, the attorney in Edinburgh employed by Mrs. Margaret Bertram of Singleside.

protomartyr. The first martyr in a given cause. The Christian protomartyr is St. Stephen.

Proudhon, Pierre Joseph (1809-1865). French philosophic anarchist. His most famous work, What is Property? (1840), starts out with the answer, "Property is theft!"

Proudie, Bishop and Mrs. Two of the best-known characters in Anthony Trollope's Chronicles of Barsetshire (see BARSETSHIRE). Dr. Proudie is a hard-working, earnest clergyman, but whether he would ever have risen to the position of bishop without the exertions of the redoubtable Mrs. Proudie is something about which no reader of the novels can be in doubt. That strong-willed and sharp-tongued lady is a born executive and can be trusted with the fortunes of the household and of the diocese as well. Trollope killed her off at last on impulse after overhearing two clergymen say that they would not continue to write novels if they could not create new characters, but he is said to have mourned her loss ever afterward.

Proust, Marcel (1871-1922). French novelist, one of the most famous literary figures of his generation, known for his REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST (A la Recherche du temps perdu; 1913-1928), a long novel in seven books. As epitomized here, his work is characterized by psychological penetration, skill in character portraiture, intense introspective analysis, and a complex, delicate, and suggestive style. He was strongly influenced by Henri BERGSON, whose theories of time and memory he embodied in his great work; Anatole FRANCE, Robert de MONTESQUIOU, and John RUSKIN were also admired by Proust. His other works are Pastiches et Mélanges (1919), written in his early youth, and Les Plaisirs et les jours (1896).

Proust, as a wealthy and popular young man, was well-known in the Parisian world of society that he portrayed in his novels. He suffered from asthma and heart-trouble and spent most of the final ten years of his life in an unventilated bedroom, where he wrote, studied, and received his friends, going out only on rare occasions and then only at night. He was known for his eccentric behavior, his almost morbid hypersensitivity, and his tireless literary drudgery which, according to some reports, ruled him even on his deathbed. See also BALZAC, FLAUBERT, GONCOURT brothers, DAUBET. With James JOYCE and Thomas MANN he is ranked among the greatest novelists of the 20th century.

See also ROMAN-FLEUVE.

Prout, Father. The pseudonym of Francis Mahoney (1805-1866), a humorous writer who contributed the Prout Papers to Fraser's Magazine. They consisted of a series of dialogues and episodes in the life of a parish priest.

Prouty, Mrs. Olive Higgins (1882-). American novelist, best-known for Stella Dallas (1922).

Proverbs. A section of the Old Testament written by several authors, formerly thought to include Solomon. In the Douay Version it is called Book of Proverbs.

Provincetown Players. An American LITTLE THEATER group, organized in 1915 at Provincetown, Massachusetts. At first, its plays were produced in the "Wharf Theater," formerly a fishing smack. Later it moved to GREENWICH VILLAGE, where its productions attracted critical attention. Among the authors who wrote for the Provincetown Players are Eugene O'NEILL, Edna St. Vincent MILLAY, John REED, Sherwood ANDERSON, Susan GLASPELL, Floyd DELL, Paul GREEN, and E. E. CUMMINGS. The group included among its productions some of the artistically most important plays of its time, and had a strong influence on the commercial drama. It lasted as an association for almost twenty-five years.

Provok'd Wife, The. A comedy (1697) by Sir John VANBRUGH.

Prudhomme, Monsieur. An extremely self-important, self-satisfied person, from Joseph Prudhomme, a character created by Henri Monnier, whose original adventures were enlarged upon and published as Les Memoires de Joseph Prudhomme in 1857. He is a "calligraphist and sworn expert in the courts of law," a man of experience and great prudence and practical good sense.

Prudhomme, Sully, see SULLY PRUDHOMME.

Prue and I. A leisurely narrative, or more accurately, a series of essays, by G. W. Curtis (Am., 1856), in which a bookkeeper whose meager salary provides for few luxuries, indulges to the full his bent for "Castles in Spain."

Prufrock, J. Alfred. The protagonist of T. S. ELIOT's long poem The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock (1917). Mr. Prufrock is a decorous New England bachelor approaching middle age who spends his time attending stuffy and useless social gatherings and associating with stuffy and useless people of the New England upper classes. In the poem, which makes use of the rhythms and the techniques of the Symbolist poets, especially Jules LAFORGUE, Prufrock contemplates the emptiness of his life in ironic despair.

prunella. A woolen or mixed stuff, formerly used for clergymen's gowns and the uppers of shoes.

Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;
The rest is all but leather or prunella.

Alexander Pope, An Essay on Man.

Prunella is the name of a fantasy by Laurence HOUSMAN, in which the petite American actress Marguerite Clark played.

prunes and prisms. The words which give the lip the right ply of the highly aristocratic mouth, as Mrs. General tells Amy Dorrit in Dickens' LITTLE DORRIT:

"'Papa' gives a pretty form to the lips. 'Papa,' 'potatoes,' 'poultry,' 'prunes and prisms.' You will find it serviceable if you say to yourself on entering a room, 'Papa, potatoes, poultry, prunes, and prisms.'"

Prussianism. Prussian militarism; hence, any ruthless theory or practice of the kind popularly associated with Prussia.

Pry, Paul, see PAUL PRY.

Pryce, Richard (1864-1942). Welsh novelist and playwright.

Prynne, Hester. The heroine of Hawthorne's SCARLET LETTER.

Prynne, William (1600-1669). English Puritan pamphleteer who particularly attacked popular amusements and stage plays.

Pryor, Lloyd. In Margaret Deland's AWAKENING OF HELENA RICHIE, Helena's lover.

P.S. (Lat. post-scriptum). Written afterwards—i.e., after the letter or book was finished.

Psalmazar, George (1679?-1763). The name under which an unidentified Frenchman posed as a Formosan in London. He translated the catechism into his "native" language for the bishop of London. After a serious illness (1728) he confessed to his imposture and took up a new career as a hack writer. Dr. Johnson thought highly of him.

Psalmist, the. King David is called "The Sweet Psalmist of Israel" (2 Sam. xxiii. 1).

Psalm of Life, A. A didactic poem by Henry Wadsworth LONGFELLOW, in his Voices of the Night (1839).

psaltery. An ancient zither-like musical instrument, mentioned in the Psalms. Also called a psalterion, as in:

My fingers thou hast taught to con
Thy flame-chorded psalterion,
Till I can translate into mortal wire—
Till I can translate passing well—
The heavenly harping harmony
Melodious, sealed, inaudible,
Which makes the dulcet psalter of the world's desire.
Francis Thompson, Orient Ode.

The origin of the word is identical with that of psalter, which stood for a musical instrument before its meaning was restricted to Psalter, "The Book of Psalms."

Psammead. The strange monkey-like creature with snail-like eyes who has the power of granting wishes that usually turn out badly, in Five Children and It, THE PHOENIX AND THE CARPET, and The Story of the Amulet, by "E. NESBIT."

P's and Q's. The phrase, Mind your P's and Q's, means "Be very circumspect in your behavior."

Several explanations have been suggested, but none seems to be wholly satisfactory. One is that it was an admonition to children learning the alphabet—and still more so to printers' apprentices sorting type—because of the similar appearance of these tailed letters; another that in old-time bar-parlors in the accounts that were scored up for beer "P" stood for "pints" and "Q" for "quarts," and of course the customer when settling up would find it necessary "to mind his P's and Q's," or he would pay too much; and yet another—from France—is that in the reign of Louis XIV, when huge wigs were worn, and bows were made with great formality, two things were specially required: a "step" with the feet, and a low bend of the body. In the latter the wig would be very apt to get deranged, and even to fall off. The caution, therefore, of the French dancing-master to his pupils was, "Mind your P's (i.e., pieds, feet) and Q's (i.e., queues, wigs)."

Psaphon's birds (Lat. Psaphonis aves). Puffers, flatterers. Psaphon, in order to attract the attention of the world, reared a multitude of birds, and having taught them to pronounce his name, let them fly.

pschent. The double crown of the Egypttian pharaohs, worn after Upper and Lower Egypt had been united under one rule. The under crown of Upper Egypt was a tall red caplike structure. Over it was the crown of Lower Egypt, made of stiff white linen.

Psellus, Michael Constantine. A Byzantine philosopher and writer of the 11th century; at one time prime minister of Michael VII Ducas. He revived the study of Plato and was influential in the policies of the rulers of his time.

pseudonym. A fictitious name assumed by a writer for purposes of anonymity. Synonyms are: pen name, nom de plume, stage name, nom de théâtre, nom de guerre, etc. "Mark TWAIN" is the pseudonym of Samuel L. Clemens.

Psycarpax (Gr. "granary thief"). In the Greek BATTLE OF THE FROGS AND MICE, the son of Troxartas, the king of the Mice. The Frog-king offers to carry the young prince over a lake, but scarcely has he reached midway, when a water-hydra appears and King Frog, to save himself, dives under water. The mouse, being thus left on the surface, is drowned, and this catastrophe brings about the battle of the Frogs and Mice.

The soul of great Psycarpax lives in me,
Of great Troxartas' line.

Parnell, Battle of the Frogs and Mice, i.

Psyche (Gr. "breath"; hence, life, or soul itself). In "the latest-born of the myths," Cupid and Psyche, an episode in the Golden Ass of Apuleius (2nd century A.D.), a beautiful maiden beloved by Cupid, who visited her every night but left her at sunrise. Cupid bade her never seek to know who he was, but one night curiosity overcame her prudence; she lit the lamp to look at him, a drop of hot oil fell on his shoulder, and he awoke and fled. The abandoned Psyche then wandered far and wide in search of her lover; she became the slave of Venus, who imposed on her heartless tasks and treated her most cruelly; but ultimately she was united to Cupid, and became immortal.

Psychical Research, The Society for. A society founded in England (1882) with Henry Sidgwick as president, then professor of moral philosophy in Cambridge University. The object of the society was to study and investigate supernatural phenomena. A great mass of case histories and statistics was collected, and much progress was made into the knowledge of telepathy, autohypnoses, the subliminal self, etc. F. W. H. Myers, Andrew Lang, and Mrs. Sidgwick were among the earliest members. A. J. Balfour and Professor William James of Harvard, as well as Sir William Crookes, were among its presidents.

psychoanalysis. A 20th-century science attributing the greater part of human activity to motives of the subconscious mind. It endeavors, largely through analysis of the symbolic value of dreams, to bring "suppressed desires" into the sphere of consciousness and to strip them of their power or set them free to work in more normal channels. The prime mover in the field of psychoanalysis was Dr. Sigmund Freud, who identified the libido, that is, the prime motive power in living creatures, with the sex urge. Freud's disciple and later rival JUNG rejected such a restriction. Both Freud's and Jung's forms of psychoanalysis are primarily theories advanced to increase our knowledge of the workings of the human mind. Their therapeutic value is secondary. The psychoanalytical system of ADLER's Individual Psychology is the work of a doctor, a general practitioner of diseases of the soul, rather than of a philosopher.

psychological tests. See SIMON BINET TESTS.

Ptah. Chief god of Memphis. Worshipped as the molder of the world and the father of gods and men.

✓Ptolemy. Latin Claudius Ptolemaeus (2nd century A.D.). Astronomer and geographer of Alexandria, who described in his Almagest a new system of astronomy. The Ptolemaic system, as it is called, stipulates that the sun, the planets, and the stars revolve around the earth. It was the generally accepted system until, during the 16th and 17th centuries, it was replaced by the Copernican system. See COPERNICUS.

Ptolemy Philadelphus or Ptolemy II (285–246 B.C.). King of Egypt. As a patron of learning he increased the extent of the Alexandrian library begun by his father. Famous men of letters visited Alexandria during his reign. The SEPTUAGINT is said to have been begun at Ptolemy's request. See also MANETHO.

Public Advertiser, The. A London journal (1758–1793), edited by Henry Sampson Woodfall. In it appeared the letters of JUNIUS.

Public Occurrences, Boston, see BOSTON PUBLIC OCCURRENCES.

Public Ledger. A Philadelphia newspaper, founded (1836) as the first penny paper in that city. Purchased (1913) by C. H. K. Curtis.

Public Opinion. Book by Walter LIPPMANN (1922).

public school. In Great Britain, a school either maintained by the community or by private endowment not carried on for profit. Eton, Harrow, Rugby, and Winchester are well-known public schools. In the U.S., an elementary or secondary school maintained by the local government, which requires no tuition fees.

Public Speech. A collection of poems (1936) by Archibald MACLEISH.

Puccini, Giacomo (1858–1924). Italian composer. His principal operas are MANON LESCAUT; LA BOHÈME; LA TOSCA; MADAME BUTTERFLY; and THE GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST.

Pucelle, La. (Fr., "The Maid," i.e., of Orléans). Jeanne d'Arc (1410-1431). Voltaire wrote a mock-heroic, satirical and in part scurrilous, poem with this title. See JOAN OF ARC.

Puck. (1) A mischievous, tricky sprite of popular folklore, also called ROBIN GOODFELLOW, originally an evil demon, but transformed and popularized in his present form by Shakespeare (MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM), who shows him as a merry wanderer of the night, "rough, knurly-limbed, faun-faced, and shock-pated, a very Shetlander among the gossamer-winged" fairies around him. The name seems to be connected with Pooka, or PHOOKA.

Rudyard Kipling in his Puck of Pook's Hill (1906), a series of tales for children, represents Puck as appearing to two children, Dan and Una, and guiding them through a series of extraordinary adventures, in the course of which they visit many places famed in legend and meet many legendary and historical personages.

(2) An American humorous weekly with colored cartoons (1877-1918). Its most famous editor was Henry Cuyler Bunner (1878-1896). Other notable editors were Harry Leon Wilson (1896-1902), and John Kendrick BANGS (1904-1905).

Puck of Pook's Hill. A book of tales for children by Rudyard Kipling (1906). See also under PUCK.

Pudd'nhead Wilson. A novel by Mark Twain (1894). Pudd'nhead Wilson is the village atheist, and his adventures as an amateur detective form the substance of the book.

pueblo (Span.). An Indian village in Arizona, New Mexico, etc., of terraced communal houses built of adobe, sometimes on mesas, with flat-roofed houses reached by trap-doors and ladders and subterranean ceremonial chambers called kiva.

puff. An onomatopoeic word, suggestive of the sound made by blowing air from the mouth. As applied to inflated or exaggerated praise, extravagantly worded advertisements, reviews, etc., it dates at least from the early 17th century, and the implication is that such commendation is really as worthless and transitory as a gust of wind.

In Sheridan's The Critic (1779), Puff, who, he himself says, is "a practitioner in panegyric, or, to speak more plainly, a professor of the art of puffing" gives a catalogue of puffs:

editor, occasional anecdote, impartial critique, observation from correspondent, or advertisement from the party.—I, ii.

Pugin, Augustus Welby (1812-1852). English architect and designer who was instrumental in reviving Gothic architecture in England in the 19th century.

Pulcherie. In George Sand's LÉLIA, the sister and physical double of Lélia.

Pulci, Luigi. See MORGANTE MAGGIORE.

Pulitzer prizes. Prizes given annually for what is judged to be the best American novel, the best American drama, the best books of biography, history, and (from 1921) poetry, published by American authors, and for the best work done in five distinct fields by American journalists during each year. They are so called from Joseph Pulitzer (1847-1911), American newspaper proprietor and philanthropist, who bequeathed a fund of money for the establishment of the Columbia University School of Journalism, and provided that the annual interest be used for prizes. The first awards were made in 1917.

The following are works of literature awarded the Pulitzer prize:

pulque. A fermented Mexican drink made from the juice of various agaves.

Pumblechook. In Dickens' GREAT EXPECTATIONS, uncle to Joe Gargery the blacksmith. He is a well-to-do corn-chandler and drives his own chaise-cart. A hard-breathing, middle-aged, slow man is Uncle Pumblechook, with fishy eyes and sandy hair inquisitively on end. He calls Pip, in his facetious way, "sixpen'orth of ha'pence," but when Pip comes into his fortune, Mr. Pumblechook is the most servile of the servile. He ends almost every sentence with, "May I, Mr. Pip?" i.e., "have the honor of shaking hands with you again."

pumpnickel. A coarse rye bread ("brown George") relished in Germany and originally made in Westphalia. Thackeray applied the term as a satirical nickname to petty German princelings ("His Transparency, the Duke of Pumpnickel") who made a great show with the court officials and etiquette, but whose revenue was almost nil. The origin of the word is obscure. The charming story which relates that a Napoleonic soldier rejected this coarse bread as only bon pour Nickel (good enough for the dog Nickel), whereupon the Germans picked up the phrase and made of it their word Pumpnickel, is unfortunately incorrect, for the word can be traced back to the 17th century.

pun. A word-play in which two meanings appear in one word or in two words of identical sound. Used as a rather low form of wit, often in playful humor, but sometimes with deeply serious implications.

Ask for me tomorrow and you shall find me a grave man.

Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.

Eve was nigh Adam;
Adam was naïve.

Mark A. Neville.

Sticks float.
They wood.

Clark Stillman.

Punch. The boy hero of KIPLING's story Baa Baa Black Sheep in his volume called Wee Willie Winkie (1889).

Punch and Judy. The hero and heroine—and the story—of the popular puppet show, Punch and Judy, are of Italian origin, Punch being a contraction of Punchinello. In the 18th century the suggestion was made that the name was from a popular and ugly low comedian named Puccio d'Aniello, but nothing definite is known of him, and the conjecture is probably an example of "FOLK ETYMOLOGY." Another suggestion is that the name is derived from that of Pontius Pilate in the old MYSTERY PLAYS.

The show first appeared in England a little before the accession of Queen Anne, and the story is attributed to Silvio Fiorillo, an Italian comedian of the 17th century. Punch, in a fit of jealousy, strangles his infant child, whereupon his wife, Judy, fetches a bludgeon with which she belabors him till he seizes another bludgeon, beats her to death, and flings the two bodies into the street. A passing police officer enters the house; Punch flees, but is arrested by an officer of the Inquisition and shut up in prison, whence he escapes by means of a golden key. The rest is an allegory, showing how the light-hearted Punch triumphs over (1) Ennui, in the shape of a dog, (2) Disease, in the disguise of a doctor, (3) Death, who is beaten to death, and (4) the Devil himself, who is outwitted.

The English satirical humorous weekly paper, PUNCH, OR THE LONDON CHARIVARI, was, of course, named from "Mr. Punch." It first appeared on July 17th, 1841.

Punch's advice to those about to marry. "Don't." This well-known counsel appeared in the Punch Almanac, January 1845.

pleased as Punch. Greatly delighted. Our old friend is always singing with self-satisfaction in his naughty ways, and his evident "pleasure" is contagious to the beholders.

Suffolk punch. A short, thick-set cart-horse. The term was formerly applied to any short fat man, and is probably the same word as above, though it may be connected with puncheon, the large cask.

Punchinello. One of the characters of the old Italian pantomime. See PUNCH AND JUDY and also PIERROT.

Punch the Immortal Liar. A long poem by Conrad AIKEN.

pundit. An East Indian scholar, skilled in Sanskrit and learned in law, divinity, and science. We use the word for a porcus literarum, one more stocked with book-lore than deep erudition.

Punic faith (Lat. Punica fides). Treachery, violation of faith, the faith of the Carthaginians. The Latin word Punicus, earlier Poenicus, meaning a Phoenician, was applied to the Carthaginians, who were of Phoenician descent. The Carthaginians were accused by the Romans of breaking faith with them, a most extraordinary instance of the "pot calling the kettle black"; for whatever infidelity they were guilty of, it could scarcely equal that of their accusers. See also ATTIC FAITH.

Pupin, Michael Idvorsky (1858-1935). Yugoslav-born American physicist and inventor. Extended the range of long-distance telephones; developed a method for short exposures in X-ray photography; etc. Pulitzer prize (1924) for his autobiography, From Immigrant to Inventor.

Puranas. Literally, "old stories." A class of Sanskrit works, serving as the Scriptures of Hinduism, and containing the history and legends of the gods.

Purcell, Henry (1659-1695). English composer. Organist at the Chapel Royal (from 1682) and composer in ordinary to the King. His opera The Fairy Queen (1693) had a libretto adapted from Shakespeare's Tempest.

Purchas, Samuel (1575?-1626). English author and clergyman, known for his editions of voyage literature of Elizabethan times. His outstanding works are Purchas His Pilgrimage, Or Relations of the World and the Religions Observed in All Ages (1613); Purchas His Pilgrim: Microcosmus, Or The Histories of Man (1619); and Hakluytus Posthumus, Or Purchas His Pilgrims, Containing a History of the World in Sea Voyages and Land Travel by Englishmen and Others (1625). The last-named work was compiled in part from material left by HAKLUYT. S. T. COLERIDGE is considered to have made use of the narratives assembled by Purchas in his famous poems The Rime of the Ancient Mariner and Kubla Khan. Cf. The Road to Xanadu, by J. L. Lowes.

Pure, Simon, see SIMON PURE.

Purefoy, Mrs. Mina. In James Joyce's ULYSSES, a woman whose having given birth to a child supplies the basis for the famous Oxen-of-the-Sun scene in the novel. Leopold BLOOM, a friend of Mrs. Purefoy, goes to the maternity hospital to visit her, and while he is there Stephen DEDALUS revels with Buck MULIGAN in the internes' quarters of the same hospital; eventually Bloom and Stephen meet. This episode is told in a series of parodies on successive literary styles, each representing a particular stage in the development of the English language, to suggest a correspondence with the development of the embryo in the womb. The parodies range from the Bible and the Anglo-Saxon epic through Malory, Shakespeare, and Bunyan to the 19th-century scientific essay, the sentimental novel, and 20th-century Irish slang.

Purgatory. The second part of Dante's DIVINE COMEDY. The doctrine of Purgatory, according to which the souls of the departed suffer for a time till they are purged of their sin, is of ancient standing, and was held in a modified form by the Jews, who believed that the soul of the deceased was allowed for twelve months after death to visit its body and the places or persons it especially loved. This intermediate state they called by various names, as "the bosom of Abraham," "the garden of Eden," "upper Gehenna." The outline of this doctrine was annexed by the early Fathers, and was considerably strengthened by certain passages in the New Testament, particularly Rev. vi. 9-11, and 1 Pet. iii. 18 and 19.

St. Patrick's Purgatory. See under SAINTS.

purge. In the modern sense, in Russia and Germany, the purging of a national party of those opposed to its principles, accomplished by execution or exile. See PRIDE'S PURGE for a bloodless variant in British history.

Puritans. Originally, seceders from the Reformed Church of England in the time of Queen Elizabeth. They are so called because, wishing for a more radical purification of religion, they rejected all human traditions and interference in religious matters, acknowledging the sole authority of the "pure Word of God," without "note or comment." Under Cromwell's leadership they played a major rôle in the history of 17th century England. The PILGRIM FATHERS of New England were Puritans. In both England and America the rigid morals of the Puritans and their stern suppression of various forms of recreation and of art have made the word Puritanical synonymous with narrow-minded.

The Puritan hated bearbaiting, not because it gave pain to the bear, but because it gave pleasure to the spectators. Indeed he generally contrived to enjoy the double pleasure of tormenting both spectators and bear.—Macaulay, History of England, Bk. i, ch. ii.

Puritan City. Boston, Mass. See under CITIES.

Puritans, The (I Puritani). An opera by BELLINI (1835), book by Count Pepoli, dealing with the period of CROMWELL. The heroine is Elvira, a Puritan; her lover, Lord Arthur Talbot, a Cavalier. Many circumstances combine to prevent their marrying, but they are united at last.

purple. The imperial color in Rome; hence a mark of dignity and luxury.

purple patches. Highly colored or brilliant passages in a literary work which is, generally speaking, otherwise undistinguished. The allusion is to Horace's De Arte Poetica, l. 15:

Inceptis gravibus plerumque et magna professis, Purpureus, late qui splendeat, unus et alter
Adsuitur pannus.

(Often to weighty enterprises and such as profess great objects, one or two purple patches are sewed on to make a fine display in the distance.)

Purple Cow, The. A quatrain by Gelett BURGESS. It first appeared in the LARK (1895).

I never saw a PURPLE COW,
I never HOPE to see one;
But I can tell you, anyhow,
I'd rather SEE than BE one.

Some years later, for obvious reasons, he recorded his sentiments with,

Ah, Yes! I Wrote the PURPLE COW—
I'm Sorry, now, I Wrote it!
But I can Tell you Anyhow,
I'll KILL you if you QUOTE it!

Purple Heart. A military order originally established by George Washington and revived in 1932 to give a mark of distinction to soldiers wounded in the service of their country. The heart has a head of Washington upon it and is worn on a purple ribbon.

Purple Island. An allegorical poem on the human body by Phineas FLETCHER (1633).

Purúravas and Urvasi. A Hindu myth similar to those of Cupid and PSYCHE and Apollo and DAPHNE. King Purúravas fell in love with Urvasi, a heavenly nymph, who consented to become his wife on certain conditions. When these conditions were violated, Urvasi disappeared, and Purúravas, inconsolable, wandered everywhere to find her. Ultimately he succeeded, and they were indissolubly united. There are many versions of the story. One of the best-known is found in Kalidasa's Sanskrit drama, Vikramorvasi.

Pusey, Edward Bouverie (1800-1882). Anglican theologian. Stood with KEBLE and NEWMAN for a reform of the church and became the leader of the OXFORD MOVEMENT; endeavored to bring about a reunion of the English and Roman churches.

Pushcart at the Curb, A. A collection of poems (1922) by John Dos Passos.

Pushkin, Alexander Sergeyevich (1799-1837). Russian poet, dramatist, novelist, and author of tales, the first great author of modern Russia, influenced by the European movement of ROMANTICISM, especially by Lord BYRON. Pushkin's works include Ruslan and Ludmila (1820), a long poem; The Prisoner of the Caucasus (1825); The Tziganis (1827); BORIS GODUNOV (1825), an historical tragedy, dramatized as an opera by MOUSSORGSKY in 1874; Poltava (1829); Eugene Onegin (1831), a romance in verse, later dramatized as an opera by TCHAIKOVSKY; and a number of tales and lyrics. One tale, Pique Dame, has also been made into an opera (music by Tchaikovsky) and a moving picture. Pushkin lived like a characteristic romantic poet, becoming involved in duels and court intrigue, and was a liberal in politics.

Puss in Boots. A famous tale retold from many sources but notably from Charles PERRAULT's tale Le Chat botté (1697). The cat is marvelously accomplished, and by ready wit or ingenious tricks secures a fortune and royal wife for his master, a penniless young miller, who passes under the name of the Marquis de Carabas. In the Italian tale, Puss is called "Constantine's cat."

Putnam, Abbie. See under DESIRE UNDER THE ELMS.

Putnam, George Palmer (1814-1872). American publisher. Founded Putnam's

Monthly Magazine (1853) and the publishing house of G. P. Putnam & Son (1866). His grandson, George Palmer Putnam (1887-), treasurer of G. P. Putnam's Sons, was the husband of Amelia EARHART.

Putnam, Herbert (1861-). Librarian of Congress (1899-1939). Succeeded by Archibald MACLEISH and Luther H. Evans.

Putnam, Israel (1718-1790). American Revolutionary major general who fought in the Battle of Bunker Hill and was in chief command of New York during the defeat in the Battle of Long Island (1776).

Putnam, Mrs. Nina Wilcox (1888-). Popular American novelist and short-story writer. Laughing Through (1930).

Putnam, Phelps (1894-). American poet. His best-known volumes of verse are Trinc (1927) and The Five Seasons (1930).

Putsch (Swiss German). A small rebellion. Hitler's Beer Hall Putsch (1923) is the most recently famous.

Puttenham, George (d. 1590). English author, known for Arte of English Poesie (1589), an early critical treatise, chiefly dealing with rhetorical figures and the classification of types. Sometimes the work is attributed to Richard Puttenham (1520?-1601), George's brother.

putti (Italian; singular putto). The little nude Cupids or figures resembling Cupids used in decorative painting and sculpture.

Put Yourself in His Place. A novel by Charles READE (1870) dealing with the labor question. The hero is Henry Little, a laborer and inventor who struggles against the jealous antagonism of the trade unions. The title is the favorite saying of the philanthropist, Dr. Amboyne, an important character.

Pwyll. A hero of the Welsh MABINOGION, Prince of Dyfed.

Prince Pwyll's bag. A bag that was impossible to fill.

Come thou in by thyself, clad in ragged garments, and holding a bag in thy hand, and ask nothing but a bagful of food, and I will cause that in all the meat and liquor that are in these seven cantreves were put into it, it would be no fuller than before.—The Mabinogion.

Pye, Henry James (1745-1813). English poet laureate (1790). He wrote patriotic verses and is considered one of the least of the poets laureate.

Pygmalion. A sculptor and king of Cyprus in Greek legend, who, though he hated women, fell in love with his own ivory statue of Aphrodite. At his earnest prayer the goddess gave life to the statue and he married it.

The story is told in Ovid's Metamorphoses, x, and appeared in English dress in John Marston's Metamorphosis of Pygmalion's Image (1598). William MORRIS retold it in

The Earthly Paradise (August), and W. S. GILBERT adapted it in his comedy of Pygmalion and Galatea (1871), in which the sculptor is a married man. His wife Cynisca is jealous of the animated statue Galatea, which, after considerable trouble, voluntarily returns to its original state.

Bernard SHAW's play, Pygmalion (1913), takes its name from this legendary figure. His "Galatea" is a London flower girl who is transformed into a charming woman of the world by three months' labor on the part of a professor of phonetics, and is successfully exhibited in a London drawing-room. The girl's father, Mr. Doolittle, a dustman who eloquently presents the cause of the "undeserving poor" until he is suddenly made respectable by a legacy from a philanthropist, is one of Shaw's most amusing characters.

Pygmies. The name used by Homer and other classical writers for a supposed race of dwarfs said to dwell somewhere in Ethiopia; from Gr. pugme, "the length of the arm from elbow to knuckles." Fable has it that every spring the cranes made war on these creatures and devoured them. They used an axe to cut down corn-stalks. When Hercules went to the country, they climbed up his goblet by ladders to drink from it, and while he was asleep two whole armies of them fell upon his right hand, and two upon his left. They were rolled up by Hercules in his lion's skin. It is easy to see how Jonathan SWIFT availed himself of this Grecian legend in his Gulliver's Travels. See GULLIVER, LEMUEL.

The term is now applied to certain dwarfish races of Central Africa (whose existence was first demonstrated late in the 19th century), Malaysia, etc.; also to small members of a class, as the pygmy hippopotamus.

Pylades and Orestes. Two friends in Homeric legend, whose names have become proverbial for friendship, like those of Damon and Pythias, David and Jonathan. ORESTES was the son, and Pylades the nephew, of AGAMEMNON, after whose murder Orestes was put in the care of Pylades' father Strophius, and the two became fast friends. Pylades assisted Orestes in obtaining vengeance on Aegisthus and Clytemnestra, and afterwards married Electra, his friend's sister.

Pyle, Ernie (1900-1945). American journalist and war correspondent. Killed by Japanese gunfire on Ie, west of Okinawa. His Here Is Your War (1943) and Brave Men (1944) were immensely popular.

Pyle, Howard (1853-1911). Widely-known American illustrator and author, famous for his pen-and-ink drawings and carefully detailed, colorful and romantic paintings, especially of scenes from American history. Also wrote and illustrated for children, The Merry Adventures of Robin Hood (1883); The Wonder Clock (1888); Twilight Land (1895); etc.

Pym, John (1584-1643). English Parliamentary statesman who decided the fate of Strafford in the time of Charles I, and at the opening of the Civil War led Parliament in refusing peace negotiations.

Pyncheon. The name of the Salem family who built, and lived in, the HOUSE OF THE SEVEN GABLES in Hawthorne's novel of that name.

Colonel Pyncheon. The first Pyncheon, builder of the "House of the Seven Gables," upon whom the wizard Maule pronounced the curse.

Alice Pyncheon. The proud and lovely girl whom the carpenter grandson of Maule hypnotizes and makes subject to his will.

Clifford Pyncheon. The cousin whom Judge Jaffrey Pyncheon allows to suffer thirty years' imprisonment on the false charge of murdering his uncle.

Hepzibah Pyncheon. The gaunt and sallow old maid sister of Clifford, finally forced by poverty to conquer her pride and open a cent-shop.

Judge Jaffrey Pyncheon. The distinguished head of the Pyncheons at the time of the story, a man whose prosperity and eminent reputation are founded on hypocrisy.

Phoebe Pyncheon. The pretty young cousin who lives with Hepzibah and finally marries HOLGRAVE.

Pynson, Richard (d. 1530). Norman printer, settled in London. Successor, with Wynkyn de Worde, to Caxton as king's printer. Introduced Roman type in England. Printed an edition of Chaucer and the SHIP OF FOOLS by Barclay. The modern Pynson Printers in New York take their name from him.

pyramid. A tall structure, built of stone, usually on a square foundation, used as royal tombs in ancient Egypt. There are some seventy pyramids still remaining in Egypt, but those specially called The Pyramids are the three largest in the group of eight known as the Pyramids of Gizeh. Of these the largest, the Great Pyramid, is the tomb of Cheops, first king of the 4th Dynasty, about 3000 B.C. It was 480 ft. in height and the length of each base is 755 ft. The Second Pyramid, the tomb of Chephren (also 4th Dynasty) is slightly smaller (472 ft. by 706 ft.); the Third, the tomb of Menkaura, or Mycerinus (4th Dynasty, about 3630 B.C.), is much smaller (215 ft. by 346 ft.). Each contains entrances, with dipping passages leading to various sepulchral chambers.

Pyramid of Mexico. This pyramid is said to have been built in the reign of Montezuma, emperor of Mexico (1466-1520). Its base is double the size of Cheops' pyramid, that is, 1423 feet each side, but its height does not exceed 164 feet. It stands west of Puebla, faces the four cardinal points, was used as a mausoleum, and is usually called the Pyramid of Cholula.

Pyramus. A Babylonian youth in classic story (Ovid's Metamorphoses, iv), the lover of Thisbe. Thisbe was to meet him at the white mulberry-tree near the tomb of Ninus, but she, scared by a lion, fled and left her veil, which the lion besmeared with blood. Pyramus, thinking his ladylove had been devoured, slew himself, and Thisbe, coming upon her dead lover soon afterwards, stabbed herself also. The blood of the lovers stained the white fruit of the mulberry-tree into its present color. The "tedious brief scene" and "very tragical mirth" presented by the rustics in Shakespeare's comedy A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM is a travesty of this legend.

Pyrocles and Musidorus. The two heroes of Sidney's ARCADIA, famed for their friendship. They have many adventures and are finally shipwrecked in Arcadia, where many more await them.

Pyrocles in Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE, is the personification of fiery anger.

Pyrrrha. The wife of DEUCALION in Greek legend. They were the sole survivors of the deluge sent by Zeus to destroy the whole human race, and repopulated the world by casting stones behind them.

Pyrhic dance. The famous war-dance of the Greeks; so called from its inventor, Pyrrichos, a Dorian. It was a quick dance, performed in full armor to the flute, and its name is still used for a metrical foot of two short, "dancing" syllables. The Romaika, still danced in Greece, is a relic of the ancient Pyrrhic dance.

Ye have the Pyrrhic dance as yet
Where is the Pyrrhic phalanx gone?
Byron, The Isles of Greece.

Pyrrhic victory. A ruinous victory. Pyrrhus, King of Epirus, after his victory over the Romans at Asculum (279 B. C.), when he lost the flower of his army, said to those sent to congratulate him, "One more such victory and Pyrrhus is undone."

Pyrrhonism. Skepticism, or philosophic doubt; so named from Pyrrho (4th cent.

B. C.), the founder of the first Greek school of skeptical philosophy. Pyrrho maintained that nothing was capable of proof and admitted the reality of nothing but sensations.

Blessed be the day I 'scaped the wrangling crew
From Pyrrho's maze and Epicurus' sty.
Beattie, Minstrel

Pyrrhus. See NEOPTOLEMUS.

Pythagoras (fl. ca. 530 B. C.). The Greek philosopher and mathematician, born at Samos (hence his epithet the "Samian Sage"), to whom was attributed the enunciation of the doctrines of the transmigration of souls and of the harmony of the spheres, and also the proof of the forty-seventh proposition in the first book of Euclid, which is called the Pythagorean proposition.

Pythagoras was noted for his manly beauty and long hair. Many legends are related of him, such as that he distinctly recollected previous existences of his own, having been (1) Aethalides, son of Mercury, (2) Euphorbus the Phrygian, son of Panthous, in which form he ran Patroclus through with a lance, leaving Hector to dispatch the hateful friend of Achilles, (3) Hermotimus, the prophet of Clazomenae, and (4) a fisherman. To prove his Phrygian existence he was taken to the temple of Hera, in Argos, and asked to point out the shield of the son of Panthous, which he did without hesitation.

Other legends assert that one of his thighs was of gold, and that he showed it to Abaris, the Hyperborean priest, and exhibited it in the Olympic games; also that Abaris gave him a dart by which he could be carried through the air and with which he expelled pestilence, lulled storms, and performed other wonderful exploits.

Pythia. In Greek legend, a name for the priestess of APOLLO at his famous oracle in DELPHI. The Pythia officiated and uttered the words of the oracle.

Pythian games. One of the four great national Greek festivals celebrated every four years at Delphi in honor of Apollo. An earlier name of Delphi was Pytho. The games were instituted by Apollo in commemoration of his slaying of the serpent Python.

Pythias. See DAMON.

Python. The monster serpent hatched from the mud of DEUCALION'S deluge, and slain near Delphi by APOLLO.

Q

Q. To mind one's P's and Q's. See under P.

Q.E.D. (Lat. quod erat demonstrandum, "which was to be demonstrated"). An abbreviation appended to the theorems of Euclid:—Thus have we proved the proposition stated above, as we were required to do.

Q.T., On the strict. With complete secrecy. "Q.T." stands for "quiet."

Quadrilateral. In northern Italy, the four fortresses of Peschiera and Mantua on the Mincio, with Verona, and Legnago on the Adige.

the Prussian Quadrilateral. The fortresses of Luxemburg, Coblenz, Sarrelouis, and Mayence.

quadrivium (Lat. quadri, "four," and via, "way"). The collective name given by the Schoolmen of the Middle Ages to the four "liberal arts," viz., arithmetic, music, geometry, and astronomy. The quadrivium was the "fourfold way" to knowledge; the trivium the "threefold way" to eloquence; both together comprehended the seven arts or sciences enumerated in the following hexameter:

Lingua, Tropus, Ratio, Numerus, Tonus, Angulus, Astra.

Quadruple Alliance. An international alliance for offensive or defensive purposes of four powers, especially that of Britain, France, Austria, and Holland in 1718, to prevent Spain from recovering her Italian possessions, and that of Britain, France, Spain, and Portugal in 1834 as a counter-move to the "Holy Alliance" between Russia, Prussia, and Austria. Another is that of 1674, when Germany, Spain, Denmark, and Holland formed an alliance against France to resist the encroachments of Louis XIV.

quaestor. In ancient Rome, an official with the functions of a judge or treasurer.

Quai d'Orsay. The French Foreign Office, from its location in Paris.

Quakers. A familiar name for members of the Society of Friends, an evangelical religious body having no definite creed and no regular ministry, founded by George Fox, 1648–1650. It appears from the founder's Journal that they first obtained the appellation (1650) from the following circumstance:—"Justice Bennett, of Derby," says Fox, "was the first to call us Quakers, because I bade him quake and tremble at the word of the Lord."

the Quaker City. Philadelphia. See under CITY.

a Quaker's bargain. An offer that must be accepted or rejected without modification.

Quality Street. A drama by J. M. BARRIE (1901). When she sees that her lover, Valentine Brown, finds her very much changed on his return after a long absence, the heroine, Phoebe Throssel, "Phoebe of the ringlets," gaily arrays herself as an imaginary niece Livvy and sets out to conquer him anew.

Quangle Wangle Quee. A creature in Edward LEAR's nonsense poem, The Quangle Wangle's Hat.

Quantrill, William Clarke (1837–1865). A guerrilla leader in the Confederate Army. His band operated in Kansas and Missouri (1861–1862).

Quaritch, Bernard (1819–1899). German-born bookseller in London. One of his publications was the extremely valuable General Catalogue of Old Books and Manuscripts (12 vols., 1887–1897).

Quarles, Francis (1592–1644). English poet of the Metaphysical school. See METAPHYSICAL POETS. He is known for his religious poetry, marked by an elliptical, colloquial or hortatory style and striking imagery chosen from the everyday pursuits and interests of his time similar to that of George HERBERT. The greatest contemporary popularity was achieved by his EMBLEM books. His works include A Feast for Worms (1620); Argalus and Parthenia (1629); Divine Fancies (1632); Emblems (1635); Hieroglyphics (1638).

Quarles, Philip. In Aldous Huxley's POINT COUNTER POINT, an English novelist, brother-in-law of Walter Bidlake. Quarles is solitary, reserved, analytical, devoted to his work, tending to be cold and devoid of average human weaknesses and sympathies. He is said to represent HUXLEY himself.

Elinor Quarles. Philip's wife, who is unhappy because of the novelist's aloofness.

Quarterly Review, The. An English review, founded by John Murray (1809) as a Tory rival of the Edinburgh Review. Sir Walter Scott promoted it and set forth the liberal attitude it should adopt. Famous contributors were Sir Walter Scott (with his favorable review of Jane Austen's Emma), Canning, Southey, Rogers, Lord Salisbury, and Gladstone. Croker's review of Endymion by John Keats has been said to have hastened Keats's death. Cf. Byron's lines:

Who killed John Keats?
'T, says the Quarterly,
So cruel and Tartarly,
'Twas one of my feats."

Quartier Latin, see LATIN QUARTER.

quarto. A book composed of sheets folded twice so that each leaf is one-fourth of a given size of paper.

Quasimodo. The "Hunchback of Notre Dame" in Victor Hugo's novel NOTRE DAME DE PARIS.

quatrain. A stanza of four lines, particularly one of ten-syllable iambic verse. See STANZA.

Quatre-vingt treize. See NINETY-THREE.

quattrocento. The fifteenth century, applied to Italian art or literature. The word means "four hundred."

Quay, Matthew Stanley (1833-1904). Political boss of the state of Pennsylvania (from 1885). U.S. senator (1887-1899, 1901-1904).

Quayle, Gloria. The heroine of Hall Caine's novel THE CHRISTIAN.

Queechy. A once popular novel by Susan Warner ("Elizabeth Wetherell") (1852). Queechy is the name of the Vermont town where the heroine, Fleda Ringgan, supports herself by making maple sugar after the loss of the money that had provided for her bringing up in Paris. Fleda is a model of all the charms and virtues. She marries Carleton whom she had known in Paris and succeeds in winning him away from his worldly ways.

Queed. A novel by Henry Sydnor Harrison (Am., 1911). The hero, Queed, is at first a recluse, completely absorbed in a sociological work he is writing, but through his interest in the charming and sympathetic heroine, Sharlee Wayland, becomes a much more normal human being.

Queen Consort, the wife of a reigning king; Queen Dowager, the widow of a deceased king; Queen Mother, the mother of a reigning sovereign; also, a queen who is a mother; Queen Regnant, a queen who holds the crown in her own right, in contradistinction to a Queen Consort, who is queen only because her husband is king.

Queen Anne is dead. A reply made to the teller of stale news.

Queen Dick. Richard Cromwell is sometimes so called. To say a thing occurred in the reign of Queen Dick implies it never happened at all.

Queen Quintessence. See QUINTESSENCE.

Queen Mab. See MAB.

Queen of Hearts. Elizabeth, daughter of James I. This unfortunate Queen of Bohemia (1596-1662) was so called in the Low Countries, from her amiable character and engaging manners, even in her lowest estate. Also, a character in Lewis Carroll's ALICE IN WONDERLAND.

Queen of Heaven, with the ancient Phoenicians, was Astarte; Greeks, Hera; Romans, Juno; Trivia, Hecate, Diana, the Egyptian Isis, etc., were all so called; but with the Roman Catholics it is the Virgin Mary.

Queen of Sheba. See SHEBA.

Queen of the Adriatic. Venice. See also BUCENTAURO.

Queen of the East. (1) Antioch, Syria; (2) Batavia, Java; (3) Queen Zenobia of Palmyra, who reigned in the 3rd century.

Queen of the Eastern Archipelago. The island of Java.

Queen of the May. A village lass chosen to preside over the parish sports on May Day. TENNYSON has a poem on the subject.

Queen of the Mississippi Valley. St. Louis.

Queen of the North. Edinburgh.

Queen of the Northern Seas. Elizabeth, who greatly increased the English navy, and was successful against the Spanish Armada, etc.

Queen of the Sciences. Theology.

Queen of the Sea. Tyre.

the Queen's English. Dean Alford wrote a small book on this subject, whence has arisen three or four phrases, such as "clipping the Queen's English," "murdering the Queen's English," etc. Queen's English means grammatical English, as does King's English.

the White Queen. Mary Queen of Scots, from the white mourning she wore for her husband, Lord Darnley; also, one of the remarkable personages of Lewis Carroll's THROUGH THE LOOKING-GLASS.

Queen, Ellery. Pseudonym of Frederic Dannay (1905-) and Manfred B. Lee (1905-), who have also used the pen name of "Barnaby Ross." They are cousins who have been very successful in producing a series of mystery and detective stories, the chief character, the detective, being Ellery Queen. They also publish a monthly magazine of the better type of short mystery stories, Ellery Queen's Mystery Magazine.

Queen's Quair, The. A romance (1904) by Maurice HEWLETT, founded on the life of Mary Queen of Scots. The title was suggested by The Kingis Quair, a poem composed by James I of Scotland while he was a prisoner in England (1423-1424). Quair is an older form of quire, "booklet."

Queequeg. In Herman Melville's MOBY DICK, a Polynesian prince who is the comrade of the narrator Ishmael on board the whaling ship. He daily worships a little god which he carries about with him, and occasionally Ishmael joins him.

Quennell, Peter Courtney (1905-). English poet, critic, and biographer; best-known for his books on Byron, Baudelaire and the symbolists, for his Caroline of England (1940), and for his highly individual poetry. His parents, Charles Henry Quennell (1872-1935) and Marjorie Quennell, née Courtney (1884-), are well-known as the authors of a series of educational books used both in England and America, including A History of Everyday Things in England (4 vols.; 1918–1934), which has sold more than 100,000 copies.

Quentin Durward. A novel by Sir Walter Scott (1823), a story of French history. In this novel are introduced Louis XI and his Scottish Guards, Oliver le Dane and Tristan l'Hermite, Cardinal Balue, De la Marck (the "Wild Boar of Ardenne"), Charles the Bold, Philip des Comines, Le Glorieux (the court jester), and other well-known historic characters. The main plot has to do with the love of the gallant young Quentin Durward, a member of the Scottish Guards, and Isabelle, Countess of Croye. The hero saves the King's life in a boar hunt and later wins the hand of the Countess from his rival, the Duke of Orleans.

Quercus, P. E. G. A nom de plume used by Christopher Morley in his column The Bowling Green in The Saturday Review of Literature. It was taken from the Latin for "Tall Oaks from Little Acorns Grow" displayed in back of a quick-lunch-counter in Grand Central Station, New York City, which goes back to David Everett's Lines Written for a School Declamation.

Quesnay, François (1694–1774). Physician to the King of France. As an economist, contributor to the Encyclopédie of articles which were the basis for the theory adopted by the PHYSIOCRATS.

the previous question. The question whether the matter under debate shall be put to the vote or not. In Parliament, and debates generally, when one party wishes that a subject should be shelved, it is customary to "move the previous question"; if this is carried, the original discussion comes to an end, for it has been decided that the matter shall not be put to the vote.

to beg the question. To take for granted something that demands proof; to assume a proposition which, in reality, involves the conclusion. Thus, to say that parallel lines will never meet because they are parallel, is simply to assume as a fact the very thing you profess to prove. The phrase is the common English equivalent of the Latin term, petitio principii.

to put the question. To call for a vote; to come to a decision.

Quetzalcoatl. Prior to the Spanish conquest of Mexico, a nature god of various Indian tribes. His symbol was the quetzal or royal bird, which is known abroad as the emblem of Guatemala.

Quex, Lord. The hero of Pinero's comedy THE GAY LORD QUEX.

Quezon y Molina, Manuel Luis (1878–1944). President of the Philippine Senate (1916–1935); president of the Commonwealth of the Philippines (from 1935). After the Japanese conquest of the Philippines he became the head of the Philippine Government in Exile with headquarters first in Australia and then (from May 1942) in the U.S.

Quiberon Bay. An arm of the Bay of Biscay, scene of an historic naval battle (Nov. 20, 1759), in which Admiral Hawke in command of the British fleet defeated the French under Admiral Conflans.

Quick, Herbert (1861–1925). American lawyer and novelist. He became a Single Taxer after reading Henry George's Progress and Poverty. His best-known books are Vandemark's Folly (1922) and The Hawkeye (1923).

Quickly, Mistress. In Shakespeare's MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR, servant-of-all-work to Dr. Caius, a French physician. She says, "I wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat and drink, make the beds, and do all myself." She is the go-between of three suitors for "sweet Anne Page," and with perfect disinterestedness wishes all three to succeed, and does her best to forward the suit of all three, "but speciously of Master Fenton."

Quickly, Mistress Nell. In Shakespeare's 1 and 2 Henry IV, hostess of a tavern in East Cheap, frequented by Harry, Prince of Wales, Sir John Falstaff, and all their disreputable crew. In Henry V, Mistress Quickly is represented as having married Pistol, the "lieutenant of Captain Sir John's army." All three die before the end of the play. Her description of Sir John Falstaff's death (Henry V Act ii. Sc. 3) is very graphic. In 2 Henry IV, Mistress Quickly arrests Sir John for debt, but, as soon as she hears of his commission, she is quite willing to dismiss the bailiffs, and trust "the honey sweet" old knight again to any amount.

quiddity. The essence of a thing, or that which differentiates it from other things—"the Correggiosity of Correggio," "the Freeness of the Free." Hence it is used of subtle, trifling distinctions, quibbles, or captious argumentation.

quidnunc (Lat., "what now?"). One who is curious to know everything that's going on, or pretends to know it; a self-important news-monger and gossip. It is the name of the leading character in Murphy's farce The Upholsterer, Or What News? (1758).

Quietism. A form of religious mysticism based on the doctrine that the essence of religion consists in the withdrawal of the soul from external objects and in fixing it upon the contemplation of God; especially that professed by the Spanish mystic, Miguel Molinos (1640–1696), who taught the direct relationship between the soul and God. His followers were termed Molinists, or Quietists.

Quiller-Couch, Sir Arthur Thomas. Pseudonym Q (1863-1944). Cornish writer and scholar, principally known in America as the editor of the Oxford Book of English Verse and other collections of poetry in the Oxford series. His best-known novel is The Splendid Spur (1889). The background for most of his novels is his native Cornwall.

Quilp, Daniel. In Dickens' OLD CURIOSITY SHOP, a hideous dwarf, cunning, malicious, and a perfect master in tormenting. He lives on Tower Hill, collects rents, advances money to seamen, and keeps a sort of wharf, containing rusty anchors, huge iron rings, piles of rotten wood, and sheets of old copper, calling himself a ship-breaker. He is on the point of being arrested for felony when he is drowned.

He ate hard eggs, shell and all, for his breakfast, devoured gigantic prawns with their heads and tails on, chewed tobacco and water-cresses at the same time, drank scalding hot tea without winking, bit his fork and spoon till they bent again, and performed so many horrifying acts, that one might doubt if he were indeed human.—Ch. v.

Mrs. Betsy Quilp. Wife of the dwarf, a loving, young, timid, obedient and pretty blue-eyed little woman, treated like a dog by her diabolical husband, whom she really loves but more greatly fears.

Quin, James (1693-1766). Irish tragic actor (at Drury Lane, Lincoln's Inn Fields, Covent Garden) of the old school prior to Garrick who displaced him in public favor. He serves as a character in Tobias Smollett's Humphry Clinker (1770).

Quinapalus. A kind of "Mrs. Grundy" or "Mrs. Harris" invented by Feste, the Clown in Shakespeare's TWELFTH NIGHT, when he wishes to give some saying the weight of authority. Hence the name is sometimes "dragged in" when one wishes to clench an argument by some supposed quotation.

What says Quinapalus: "Better a witty fool, than a foolish wit."—Twelfth Night, i. 5.

Quinbus Flestrin. The man-mountain. So the Lilliputians call GULLIVER in Ch. ii. of Gulliver's Travels by Swift. John GAY wrote an ode to this giant.

Quince, Peter. A carpenter, who undertakes the management of the play called PYRAMUS AND THISBE, in Shakespeare's MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM. He speaks of "laughable tragedy," "lamentable comedy," "tragical mirth," and so on.

quincunx. An order of five items placed in the middle and at each corner of a square. Sir Thomas Browne's Garden of Cyrus (1658) is one long discussion of the prevalence of the quincunx throughout the universe. Coleridge's comment upon it was:

... quincunxes in heaven above, quincunxes in earth below, quincunxes in the mind of man, quincunxes in tones, in optic nerves, in roots of trees, in leaves, in everything' cunxes in tones, in optic nerves, in roots of trees, in leaves, in everything'

Quinn, Arthur Hobson (1875-). American educator and critic. Edited Representative American Plays (1917; latest revised edition, 1938). He was one of the founders of the Franklin Inn Club (for writers) in Philadelphia (1902). Edgar Allan Poe (1941).

Quinn, Edmond Thomas (1868-1929). American sculptor and painter. He did the bronze statue of Edwin BOOTH as Hamlet which stands before The Players Club in Gramercy Park, New York City.

Quint, Peter. In Henry James' THE TURN OF THE SCREW, the former steward of the estate who is one of the apparitions the governess-narrator believes to return and appear to the children. Quint has particular influence over the boy, MILES.

Quintana, Manuel José (1772-1857). Spanish poet and statesman. His patriotic poems during Spain's war for independence were very popular. He was elected Senator in 1835.

Quintessence, Queen. In Rabelais' GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL (v. 19), the sovereign of Entélechy, the country of speculative science visited by Pantagruel and his companions in their search for "the oracle of the Holy Bottle." See under ORACLE. She is also sometimes known as Queen Whims.

Quintilian. Latin Marcus Fabius Quintilianus (1st century A.D.). Spanish-born rhetorician and teacher of oratory in Rome (from 68 A.D.). His writings contain a description of the whole educational system of first-century Rome.

Quintus Fixlein. The title and chief character of a romance by Johann Paul Friedrich RICHTER (1796).

Francia, like Quintus Fixlein, had perennial fire-proof joys, namely, employments.—Carlyle.

quip modest, the. Sir, it was done to please myself. TOUCHSTONE says (As You Like It, v. 4): "If I sent a person word that his beard was not well cut, and he replied he cut it to please himself," he would answer with the quip modest, which is six removes from the lie direct; or, rather, the lie direct in the sixth degree. See also COUNTERCHECK QUARRELSOME.

Quirinus. In Roman legend, a war god, said to be ROMULUS, the founder of Rome, but sometimes identified with MARS.

qui s'excuse, s'accuse (Fr.) He who excuses himself, or apologizes, condemns himself.

Quisling, Vidkun (1887-1945). Norwegian official who actively collaborated in the German conquest of Norway (1940) and became head of the State Council under the Nazis. Tried and executed after the German defeat.

His name has become synonymous with "traitor": a quisling, also a quisler.

Quivira. A mythical city of fabulous treasures, supposed to be located in the present state of Kansas. It was sought by CORONADO and later explorers. ARTHUR GUITERMAN wrote a poem of that title, which describes Coronado's expedition.

qui vive? (Fr.). Literally, Who lives? but used as a sentry's challenge and so equivalent to our Who goes there?

to be on the qui vive. On the alert; to be quick and sharp; to be on the tiptoe of expectation, like a sentinel.

Quixano, Daniel. A character in Israel Zangwill's THE MELTING POT.

Quixote, Don, see DON QUIXOTE.

Quixotic. Having foolish and impractical ideas of honor, or schemes for the general good, like Don Quixote.

the Quixote of the North. Charles XII of Sweden (1682-1718).

quos ego. A threat of punishment for disobedience. The words, from Virgil's Aeneid (i. 135), were uttered by Neptune to the disobedient and rebellious winds, and are sometimes given as an example of aposiopesis, i.e., a stopping short for rhetorical effect. "Whom I—," said Neptune, the "will punish" being left to the imagination.

Quo Vadis. A historical novel by H. SIENKIEWICZ (1895), dealing with the Rome of Nero and the early Christian martyrs. The Roman noble, Petronius, a worthy representative of the dying paganism, is perhaps the most interesting figure, and the struggle between Christianity and paganism supplies the central plot, but the canvas is large. A succession of characters and episodes and, above all, the richly colorful, decadent life of ancient Rome give the novel its chief interest. The beautiful Christian Lygia is the object of unwelcome attentions from Vinicius, one of the Emperor's guards, and when she refuses to yield to his importunities, she is denounced and thrown to the wild beasts of the arena. She escapes and eventually marries Vinicius, whom Peter and Paul have converted to Christianity. Has been filmed, with Charles LAUGHTON as Nero.

q.v. (Lat. quantum vis). As much as you like, or quantum valeat, as much as is proper.

q.v. (Lat. quod vide). Which see.

R

Ra. The principal deity of ancient Egypt, one of the numerous forms of the sun-god, and the supposed ancestor of all the PHARAOHS. He was the creator, the protector of men and the vanquisher of evil; Nut, the sky, was his father, and it was said of him that every night he fought with the serpent Apepi. He is usually represented as hawk-headed and is crowned with the solar disk and ureus. See OSIRIS; AMON.

Rabagas. The title and hero of a comedy by SARDOU (1872), a satirical study of the rise and fall of an unscrupulous politician, said to have been drawn from GAMBETTA.

Rab and his Friends. A famous dog story by Dr. John BROWN (1858). Rab is a dog fond of his master and mistress, and most faithful to them. He is described as "old, gray, brindled, as big as a little Highland bull."

Rabbi Ben Ezra. A famous poem by Robert BROWNING on old age, beginning:—

Grow old along with me,
The best is yet to be,
The last of life, for which the first was made.

The supposed speaker, Rabbi Ben Ezra (Abraham ben Meir ben Ezra or Ibn Ezra), was one of the most distinguished Jewish literati of the Middle Ages (ca. 1090–1168). See also under ADMIRABLE.

Rabble in Arms. A novel (1933) by Kenneth ROBERTS, of the American Revolution.

Rabelais, François (1494?–1553). French scholar, humanist, physician, and satirist, early in his career a member first of the Franciscan order and then of the Benedictine order. He is famous for his robust and outspoken burlesque GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL, satirizing contemporary religion, pedantry, politics, and social institutions, exalting nature, empiricism, and characteristic Renaissance variety and richness, and showing evidence of derivations from numerous source-books of the author's day. This work was published as follows: Les Grandes et Inestimables Chroniques du Grand et Enorme Géant Gargantus (1532), a chapbook; Pantagruel (1533), later Book II of the work in its best-known form; La Vie Inestimable du Grand Gargantua, Père de Pantagruel (1534), later Book I; Book III (1546); Book IV (1552), condemned by the Sorbonne and prohibited from sale; Isle Sonnante (1562) and Le Cinquième et dernier Livre des Faits et Dits Héroïques du Bon Pantagruel (1564), constituting Book V and considered by some scholars to be of doubtful authenticity, although it is believed that an outline prepared by the author was used for it.

Rabelais took his Master's and Doctor's degrees in medicine and divided his time between his practice as a physician and a second profession of editing and publishing books. His great work contributed in an important degree to the development of the French language, more than 600 words having been added through it to the vocabulary of the modern language of France. Rabelais is considered to have influenced most MONTAIGNE, MOLIERE, Blaise PASCAL, Anatole FRANCE, Jonathan SWIFT, and Laurence STERNE.

Rabelaisian. Coarsely and boisterously satirical; grotesque, extravagant, and licentious in language; reminiscent in literary style of Rabelais.

Dean SWIFT, Thomas Amory (d. 1788, author of John Bunce), and Laurence STERNE have all been called the English Rabelais. MELVILLE, the author of MOBY DICK, is sometimes called the American Rabelais.

Rabican. A famous horse of Carolingian legend whose exploits are related in the Italian epics, ORLANDO INNAMORATO and ORLANDO FURIOSO. His first owner is ARGALIA; later he comes into the possession of RINALDO. Rabican feeds on air alone and is unsurpassed for speed.

Rabinowitz, Solomon. Pseudonym Shalom or Sholem Aleichem (1859–1916). Yiddish humorist born in Russia; to U.S. (1906).

Rabourdin. In several of BALZAC's novels, notably The Government Clerks (Les Employés), an official whose honesty and industry, carried to excess, causes his downfall.

Raby, Aurora. In Byron's DON JUAN a rich young English orphan, Catholic in religion, of virgin modesty, "a rose with all its sweetest leaves yet folded." Aurora Raby is introduced in canto xv, and here and there in the two remaining cantos but, as the tale was never finished, it is not possible to divine what part the beautiful and innocent girl was destined by the poet to play.

Rachel. (1) In the Old Testament, daughter of Laban and wife of JACOB, for love of whom he served her father fourteen years.

Rachel weeping for her children "and she would not be comforted, for they were not." An allusion to Herod's Massacre of the INNOCENTS after the birth of Christ. The phrase is an Old Testament quotation introduced in the New Testament narrative.

(2) In Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST, an actress, early mistress to Robert SAINT-LOUP.

Rachel, Mlle. Stage name of ÉLISA FÉLIX (1820–1858). French actress, celebrated for her tragic roles, as Camille, Phèdre, Lucrèce, etc.

Rachmaninoff, Sergei Wassilievitch (1873–1943). Distinguished Russian musician; well-known in the U.S. as concert pianist, conductor, and composer. Resident of New York City (from 1918). His music is sombre and romantic. Prelude in C Sharp Minor and Second Piano Concerto best known to the general public.

Racine, Jean (1639–1699). French dramatist, known for the effective simplicity of his poetic style and his psychological portrayals of the passions of his characters. His works include La Thébaine (1664); Alexandre (1665); Andromaque (1667); Les Plaideurs (1668), his sole comedy; Britannicus (1669); Bérénice (1670); Bajazet (1672); Mithridate (1674); Iphigénie (see IPHIGENIA; 1674); PHÈDRE (see PHAEDRA; 1677), regarded as the author's masterpiece; ESTHER (1688–1689); Athalie (1690), performed privately, called by some critics the author's greatest dramatic poem. The subjects of most of these dramas were derived from the tragedies of Euripides or historical accounts.

Racine was educated in a JANSENIST school and at first intended for the priesthood; the influence of Jansenist doctrines of ORIGINAL SIN combined with the classic Greek concept of FATE has been found in his tragedies. MOLIÈRE, LA FONTAINE, and BOILEAU were his friends in Paris, where his plays suffered through the enmity of partisans of his rivals, among whom was CORNEILLE. Racine retired as a writer for the stage after the production of Phèdre. Esther was performed by the school-girl daughters of French nobles, and Athalie was not produced in Paris until 1716.

Rackham, Arthur (1867–1939). British illustrator, especially of classics for children, as Andersen's Fairy Tales; The Pied Piper of Hamelin; etc.

Rackrent, Castle, see CASTLE RACKRENT.

Rackstraw, Ralph. A character in Gilbert and Sullivan's comic opera, PINAFORE.

Rada. Poetic play by Alfred NOYES (1915) originally entitled A Belgian Christmas Eve.

Radcliffe, Mrs. Ann née Ward (1764–1823). English novelist, known for her tales of mystery and terror in the convention of the GOTHIC NOVEL. Her works include The Romance of the Forest (1791); THE MYSTERIES OF UDOLPHO (1794); A Sicilian Romance (1790); An Italian Romance (1891); The Italian (1797).

Radek, Karl Bernardovich (1885–). Russian Communist politician, one of the leaders of the Communist International (1923). Dismissed from the Party (1925) for being an adherent of Trotsky (re-admitted, 1930). Tried for treason in Moscow (1937) and condemned to 10 years' imprisonment.

Radiguet, Raymond (1903–1923). French poet and novelist. Protégé of Jean COCTEAU, associated with the surrealist movement, though his style is distinctly classicistic. His novels, The Devil in the Flesh (Le Diable au corps; 1923) and The Count's Ball (Le Bal du Comte d'Orgel; 1924), are highly regarded.

Radigund. Queen of the Amazons in Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE (V, iv, 33, etc.), reigning over

A goodly citty and a mighty one.
The which of her owne name she called Radegone.

Getting the better of Sir Artegall in a single combat, she compels him to dress in "woman's weeds," and to spin flax. BRITOMART goes to the rescue, cuts off the Amazon's head, and liberates her knight.

Radio City. Popular designation of Rockefeller Center, a group of buildings in New York City specially designed to house the city's leading commercial enterprises, built between 1931 and 1940. The term is derived from the R.C.A. (Radio Corporation of America) Building, which is the center of the group and contains the studios of the National Broadcasting Company. A sunken plaza, landscaped gardens, outdoor sculpture, shops, restaurants, and two theaters are included in the group.

Radisson, Pierre Esprit (1636–?1710). French fur trader and explorer; to Canada (about 1651), where he made trips to the western parts of the country (1657; 1659), possibly reaching the Upper Mississippi. Instrumental in organizing the Hudson Bay Company (chartered, 1670). His description of his voyages were published as Voyages of Peter Esprit Radisson (1885).

Radziwill, Princess Catherine. Pen name Count Paul Vassili (1858–1941). Russian writer. Author of Behind the Veil of the Russian Court; Confessions of the Czarina; The Taint of the Romanovs; etc.

Raglan, 1st Baron. Fitzroy James Henry Somerset (1788-1855). British commander who, in the Crimean War, won the Battle of Alma (1854) but was blamed for the loss of the light brigade at Balaklava. Cf. Tennyson's The Charge of the Light Brigade. He was made field marshal for the victory at Inkerman (1854).

Ragnarok. The twilight of the gods, known in German as Götterdämmerung. It will result in the destruction of the universe. Loki and his offspring, Hel, Fenris, and the Midgard serpent, will break their bonds and kill, and be killed by, the gods on the battlefield of Vigrid. Ragnarok will be followed by the regeneration of all things. A new earth will arise, and sons of Odin and Thor together with Baldur and Hödur will people it.

Rahab. In the Old Testament (Josh. ii.), the woman of Jericho who protected the twelve spies of the Israelites and managed their escape. She and her family alone were saved when the city was later destroyed.

Rahu. The demon that, according to Hindu legend, causes eclipses. He one day quaffed some of the nectar of immortality, but was discovered by the Sun and Moon, who informed against him, and VISHNU cut off his head. As he had already taken some of the nectar into his mouth, the head was immortal, and he ever afterwards hunted the Sun and Moon, which he caught occasionally, causing eclipses.

rail. A garment (Middle English), remaining in the language only in the expression night rail, "night gown."

Rainbow, The. A novel by D. H. LAWRENCE (1915), dealing with the strong, vital, passionate Brangwen family, farmers and craftsmen of Nottinghamshire. The stories of three generations of the family are told in the novel. Tom Brangwen, a farm youth, marries Lydia Lensky, a Polish lady, widow of a Polish political exile. Anna, Lydia's daughter by her first marriage, grows up as Tom's own child and marries her cousin, Will Brangwen, a strange, strong-willed, morose man with a passion for wood-carving. Ursula, daughter of Anna and Will, in her turn becomes a proud, sensitive, and high-spirited girl who rebels against the confinements of her family background. She falls in love with Anton Skrebentsky, son of a Polish exile who was a friend of her grandmother, and conceives an intense affection for Winifred Inger, her teacher at school, an athletic woman interested in the intellectualism of her time and the woman-suffrage movement. But Winifred eventually marries Tom Brangwen the second, Ursula's uncle, and Anton, an officer in the British army, proves so capricious and undependable that Ursula voluntarily rejects him after a brief love affair. At the end of the book we see her, after having taught in a local school and attended college, about to set out on a life of her own.

Women in Love (1920), a sequel to The Rainbow, portrays the love affairs of Ursula and her sister Gudrun (said to have been based on Katherine MANSFIELD) and their lives in the "emancipated" era of the 20th century. The Rainbow caused a sensation on its publication, being the first of Lawrence's books to present situations involving sex in frank and honest language. Women in Love, even more than its predecessor, is a vehicle for the author's theories of sex.

Rainbow Division. The name of the 42nd Division of the United States Army which was made up of National Guard troops from all over the country. They were the first American troops in combat in World War I. Their insignia was a rainbow on a black field.

Raine, William MacLeod (1871-). English-born American journalist and novelist, especially known for adventure stories of the Wild West.

Raines Law. Named after the American legislator John Raines (1840-1909). As passed in 1896, the law provided that on Sundays liquor should only be sold by licensed hotels having at least ten bedrooms. Saloons, trying to comply with the law, began to fix up the required number of bedrooms, which did not serve to better their reputation. Establishments of this sort were called Raines Law Hotels.

Rainey, Paul J. (1877-1923). American explorer, known for his motion pictures of African wild life.

Rain-in-the-Face. Famous Sioux Indian who was one of the leaders at the battle of the Little Big Horn. He was killed on an Indian reservation in South Dakota. Longfellow wrote a poem, The Death of Rain-in-the-Face.

Rais, Gilles de. See RETZ.

raison d'être (Fr.). The reason for a thing's existence, its rational ground for being;

as "Once crime were abolished there would be no raison d'être for the police."

Raisuli, Ahmed ibn-Muhammed (1875?-1925). A brigand of Morocco who created international incidents by kidnaping the London Times correspondent Walter Harris (1904); Perdicaris, an American (1904); and Sir Harry MacLean (1907). The Sultan of Morocco met his ransom demands to avoid war with the powers involved. An American slogan of the time ran "Perdicaris alive or Raisuli dead!"

Rajah (Sans., "king," cognate with Lat. rex). The title of an Indian king or prince, given later to tribal chiefs and comparatively minor dignitaries and rulers, and also to Malayan and Japanese chiefs, as Rajah Brooke, of Sarawak. Maha-rajah means the "great rajah." See also RULERS, TITLES OF.

rakshas. Evil spirits of Hindu legend, who guard the treasures of Kubera, the god of riches. They haunt cemeteries and devour human beings, and can assume any shape at will; their strength increases as the day declines. Some are hideously ugly, but others, especially the female spirits, allure by their beauty.

Raleigh, Sir Walter (1552?-1618). A famous historical personage of the time of Queen Elizabeth, introduced by Scott in his KENILWORTH. The tradition of Sir Walter laying down his cloak on a miry spot for the Queen to step on, and the Queen's commanding him to wear the "muddy cloak till her pleasure should be further known," is mentioned in Ch. xv.

Raleigh, Sir Walter Alexander (1861-1922). English critic and essayist, especially concerned with the English novel, Wordsworth, Shakespeare, Johnson, etc.

Ralph or Ralpho. The squire of HUDIBRAS in Butler's satire of that title. The model was Isaac Robinson, a zealous butcher in Moorfields, always contriving some queer art of church government. He represents the Independent party, and Hudibras the Presbyterian.

Ralph, James (1695?-1762). American writer, who accompanied Benjamin Franklin to London (1724) and established himself there with the Thomsonian blank-verse poems The Tempest and Night (1727). His ballad opera The Fashionable Lady (1730) was the first play by an American produced on a London stage. Franklin refers to him in his own Autobiography.

Ralph, Julian (1853-1903). American war correspondent; with the Turkish army in the war against Greece (1897) and with Lord Roberts in South Africa during the South African War (1899).

Ralph Roister Doister. The title of the earliest English comedy, so called from the chief character. It was written by Nicholas Udall about 1533 for performance by the boys at Eton, where he was then headmaster. Ralph is a vain, thoughtless, blustering fellow, who is in pursuit of a rich widow named Custance, but he is baffled in his intention.

Rama. The seventh incarnation of VISHNU. Rama performed many wonderful exploits, such as killing giants, demons and other monsters. He won Sita to wife because he was able to bend the bow of Siva. He is the hero of the great Hindu epic, the RAMAYANA. See also AVATAR.

Ramachandra. See AVATAR.

Ramadan or Ramazan. The ninth month of the Mohammedan year, and the Mussulmans' Lent or Holy Month. No food is touched by pious Mohammedans from sunrise to sundown during this period.

As the Moslem year is calculated on the system of twelve lunar months, Ramazan is liable at times to fall in the hot weather, when abstinence from drinking as well as from food is an extremely uncomfortable and inconvenient obligation. What wonder, then, that the end of the fast is awaited with feverish impatience?—H. M. Batson, Commentary on Fitzgerald's "Omar," st. xc.

Raman, Sir Chandrasekhara Venkata (1888-). Indian physicist and professor at Calcutta University, who was awarded the Nobel prize in physics in 1930. President, Indian Academy of Sciences (1934).

Ramayana (Sans., "The Deeds of Rama"). The history of Rama, the great epic poem of ancient India, ranking with the MAHABHARATA. It is ascribed to the poet Valmiki, and, as now known, consists of 24,000 stanzas in seven books. The young hero, Rama, an incarnation of the deity Vishnu (see AVATAR), wins his bride Sita by bending the great bow that had belonged to Rudra, one of the gods. Although heir to the throne of Ayodhya, Rama is exiled for fourteen years through the jealousy of one of his father's wives, who desires the throne for her own son. Sita is now carried off by Ravana, a demon-king of Ceylon, to his capital at Lanka, and a great part of the narrative is concerned with Rama's efforts to win her back. He secures the assistance of Ravana's own brother Vibhishana, and of the great monkey-god, Hanuman, whose monkeys throw up a bridge across the straits. After the rescue of Sita, Rama is welcomed as the monarch of Ayodhya. But both Rama and the people fear that Sita has been defiled by her sojourn with the demon-king, and although she successfully undergoes certain ordeals, Rama sends her away. She wanders into the forest, finds shelter in the hut of Valmiki (the poet to whom the epic is ascribed), and there gives birth to Rama's two sons, whom she brings up to be brave and noble youths. Eventually she is found by Rama and received back as his wife.

Rambler, The. An 18th-century English periodical which was issued from March, 1750, to March, 1752. Dr. Samuel Johnson contributed to it a series of essays on literature, manners, and morals.

Rambouillet, Hôtel de. The house in Paris where, about 1615, the Marquise de Rambouillet, disgusted with the immoral and puerile tone of the time, founded the salon out of which grew the Académie Française. Mme de Sévigné, Descartes, Richelieu, Bossuet, and La Rochefoucauld were among the members. They gradually developed a language of their own, calling common things by uncommon names, and so on; the women were known as Les précieuses and the men as esprits doux. Preciosity, pedantry and affectation led to the disruption of the coterie which, after having performed a good and lasting service, was finally demolished by the satire of Molière's LES PRÉCIEUSES RIDICULES (1659) and LES FEMMES SAVANTES (1672).

Rameau, Jean Philippe (1683-1764). French organist and composer; his Traité de L'Harmonie (1722) established the modern science of harmony.

Ramée, Marie Louise de la. Pseudonym Ouida (1839-1908). English novelist, widely known for her flamboyant romances of fashionable life, including Under Two Flags (1867); Tricotrin (1869); Moths (1880); etc. She also wrote animal stories and children's books, which include A Dog of Flanders (1872) and Bimbi (1882). Her pseudonym was baby talk for Louise.

Ramière, Raymonde de. In George Sand's INDIANA, the young lover of the heroine.

Ramillies. A village in Belgium, scene of one of Marlborough's famous victories over the French (1706). The battle gave its name to various articles and modes of dress, as Ramillies wig, etc.

Raminagrobis. Rabelais, in his famous satire GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL (III. xxi) under this name satirizes Guillaume Crétin, a poet in the reigns of Charles VIII, Louis XII, and François I.

In LA FONTAINE's fables, the name is given to the great cat chosen as judge between the weasel and the rabbit.

Ram of the Zodiac. This is the famous Chrysomallon, whose golden fleece was stolen by Jason in his Argonautic expedition. It was transposed to the stars, and made the first sign of the Zodiac.

Ramona. A historical novel by Helen Hunt JACKSON (1884), dealing with Spanish and Indian life in California. The heroine, Ramona, of mixed Scotch and Indian blood, is brought up by a Spanish Señora and jealously loved by her foster brother. She, however, regards him with no more than sisterly affection and finally irrevocably offends the Señora by eloping with a young Temecula Indian, Alessandro. But wherever the couple go, their land is confiscated by the United States government, and they are forced to seek another Indian reservation. Because of his resentment and shame at being forced to submit to such treatment, the proud young Alessandro comes to a tragic end.

Rampion, Mark. In Aldous Huxley's POINT COUNTER POINT, a novelist who, with his wife Mary, lives a simple, vigorous, passionate, and dignified life, devoid of the artificiality, falsehood, repression, and frustration represented by the other characters in the novel. Mark and Mary are the only characters who are presented sympathetically. They are considered to be idealized portraits of D. H. LAWRENCE and his wife Frieda.

Ramsay, Allan (1686-1758). Scottish poet and wigmaker. He became a bookseller and edited old Scottish poems. He was the first to have a circulating library in Scotland. His eldest son, Allan Ramsay (1713-1784), was a well-known portrait painter in Edinburgh and London and became court painter to George III.

Ramsay, Sir William (1852-1916). Distinguished British chemist who first advanced proof that the emanation of radium produces helium during its atomic disintegration. Won the Nobel prize for chemistry (1904).

Ransom, John Crowe (1888-). American poet and literary critic, a member of the group known as Fugitives and later of the AGRARIANS. His poetry, broadly showing the influence of the METAPHYSICAL POETS, is marked by irony, intellectualism, criticism of the 20th-century industrial world, and nostalgia for the past, especially the aristocratic society of the South before the Civil War. His literary criticism is devoted chiefly to an attempt to formulate an aesthetic system for poetry by which poetry is shown to present a form of knowledge of equal status with scientific knowledge. His books of poetry include Poems About God (1919); Chills and Fever (1924); Two Gentlemen in Bonds (1927). God Without Thunder (1930), The World's Body (1938), The New Criticism (1941), and Poetics (1942) are volumes of his criticism. Ransom, after 1914 a professor of English at Vanderbilt University and later at Kenyon College, was among the editors of The Fugitive (1922-1925) and Kenyon Review (1938). See LITTLE MAGAZINE. He also edited I'll Take My Stand (1930), an anthology of writings by the Agrarians. His Selected Poems were published in 1945.

ranz des vaches. A Swiss cattle call.

Raoul de Nangis. Hero of Meyerbeer's opera THE HUGUENOTS.

Rape of Lucrece. See LCRETIA.

Rape of the Lock. A famous poetic satire by Alexander POPE. The first sketch was published in 1712 in two cantos, and the complete work in five cantos in 1714. Lord Petre, in a thoughtless moment of frolic gallantry, cut off a lock of Arabella Fermor's hair, and this liberty gave rise to a bitter feud between the two families, which Pope worked up into the best mock-heroic poem of the language. The heroine, called Belinda, indignantly demands back the ringlet, but after a fruitless charge it is affirmed that, like BERENICE's hair, it has been transported to heaven, and henceforth shall "midst the stars inscribe Belinda's name."

Raphael. (1) One of the principal angels of Jewish angelology. In the book of Tobit we are told how he traveled with Tobias into Media and back again, instructing him on the way how to marry Sara and to drive away the wicked spirit. Milton calls him the "sociable spirit," and the "affable archangel" (Paradise Lost, vii. 40), and it is he who is sent by God to advise Adam of his danger. Raphael is usually distinguished in art by a pilgrim's staff, or is carrying a fish, in allusion to his aiding Tobias to capture the fish which performed the miraculous cure of his father's eyesight.

(2) The hero of Balzac's novel Le Peau de chagrin, usually translated under the title THE WILD ASS'S SKIN.

Raphael. Full Italian name Raffaello Sanzio (1483-1520). One of the greatest painters of the Italian Renaissance. Examples of his numerous works are in the Louvre, the Vatican Gallery, the National Gallery in London, etc. He was also an architect and designed the Palazzo Pandolfini in Florence.

the Flemish Raphael. Frans Floris (1520-1570).

the French Raphael. Eustace Lesueur (1617-1655).

the Raphael of Cats. Godefroi Mind, a Swiss painter, famous for his cats (1768-1814).

the Raphael of Holland. Martin van Hemskerck (1498-1574).

Rapp, George (1757-1847). See NEW HARMONY.

Rappaccini's Daughter. A well-known story by HAWTHORNE in his Mosses From an Old Manse (1846). As a curious, cold-blooded experiment, the scientist Rappaccini feeds his daughter Beatrice on poisons, so that she grows up immune to their effect. When, finally, she is given an antidote by a medical man, the wholesome drug is fatal to her. The suggestion for this story is found in the following quotation from Sir Thomas BROWNE, copied into Hawthorne's American Notebooks: "A story there passeth of an Indian King that sent unto Alexander a faire woman fed with aconytes and other poisons, with this intent complexionally to destroy him."

rara avis (Lat., "a rare bird"). A phenomenon; a prodigy; something quite out of the common course. It was first applied by Juvenal to the black swan, which, since its discovery in Australia, is quite familiar to us, but was unknown before.

Rara avis in terris nigroque simillima cygne (a bird rarely seen on the earth, and very like a black swan.)—Juvenal, vi. 165

Rarahu. The Tahitian heroine and the original title of Pierre Loti's MARRIAGE OF LOTI (Le Mariage de Loti).

Rare Ben. The inscription on the tomb of Ben Jonson, the dramatist, in the Poets' Corner, Westminster Abbey, reads "O rare Ben Jonson." The phrase was first used by SHAKESPEARE.

Rascoe, Burton (1892-). American journalist, reviewer, and dramatic critic. When literary editor of the Chicago Tribune he "discovered" James Branch CABELL. Coming to New York, he wrote for the Herald Tribune a weekly department of literary gossip widely syndicated under the title of A Bookman's Daybook. Afterwards he edited The Bookman, was on the Editorial Board of the Literary Guild, and dramatic critic for the World-Telegram. His own books include Titans of Literature (1932) and the autobiographical Before I Forget (1937) and We Were Interrupted (1947).

Raskolnikov. The unhappy, introspective, self-willed hero of Dostoyevsky's CRIME AND PUNISHMENT.

Rasmussen, Knud Johan Victor (1879-1933). Danish arctic explorer. Made ethnological expeditions to North Greenland and was the author of The People of the Polar North (1908); Myths and Legends from Greenland (3 vols.; 1921-1925); Across Arctic America (1927); etc.

Raspe, Rudolph Erich (1737-1794). See MÜNCHAUSEN, BARON.

Rasputin, Grigori Efimovich (1871?-1916). A Russian monk who gained ascendancy over the Czar and Czarina. Notorious for his evil life, he was assassinated by a group of Russian nobles on December 31, 1916. Cf. René Fulöp-Miller, Rasputin, the Holy Devil (1927).

Rasselas. Prince of Abyssinia, in Dr. Johnson's philosophical romance of that name (1759). He dwells in a secluded "Happy Valley," shut off from all contact with the world or with evil. This paradise is in the valley of Amhara, surrounded by high mountains. It has only one entrance, which is by a cavern under a rock concealed by woods, and closed by iron gates. The prince makes his escape with his sister Nekayah and Imlac, the poet, and wanders about to find out what condition or rank of life is the most happy. After careful investigation, he finds no lot without its drawbacks, and resolves to return to the "Happy Valley."

Rassendyll, Rudolf. The hero of Anthony Hope's PRISONER OF ZENDA.

Rastignac, Eugène de. One of Balzac's best known characters, appearing in several of the novels of the COMÉDIE HUMAINE, notably Father Goriot (Le Père Goriot) and Cousin Betty (La Cousine Bette). Introduced as a struggling young law student who has come to Paris to make his fortune, Rastignac quickly becomes cynical and determines to conquer society by giving up his ideals and taking advantage of circumstances. By installing himself as the adorer of Madame de Nucingen, the daughter of his poor old fellow-boarder, Père Goriot, and wife of a wealthy financier, he manages to better his fortunes. Later he marries Augusta de Nucingen, the daughter of his former mistress, and in the course of time becomes a prominent statesman, a peer and a millionaire. He is the type of ruthless and cynical ambition. See also GORIOT; Lisbeth FISCHER.

Rat, the Cat and Lovel, the Dog, The. This line and the following one, "Rule all England under the Hog" refer to RICHARD III and three of his followers named Ratcliffe, Catesby, and Lovell. "The Hog" means the wild boar which figured in the royal arms.

Ratcliffe, Senator. The chief character in DEMOCRACY (1880), a study of the unscrupulous American politician. The novel was published anonymously, but is now known to be the work of Henry ADAMS.

Ratcliffe Highway. A London highway which extended from one end of the place of execution at Wapping along the Thames into the city.

Rathenau, Walther (1867-1922). German-Jewish industrialist and statesman. After World War I he secured the lessening of reparation payments, was foreign minister, and signed the Rapallo Treaty with Russia (1922). He was assassinated by ultra-nationalists.

rationalism. Term applied to a trend in philosophic thinking toward emphasis on the reason and intellect, rather than the emotions and imagination. ARISTOTLE and St. Thomas Aquinas (see under SAINTS) are considered rationalists, and the 18th century was dominated by rationalist philosophy.

Rattlin, Jack. A famous naval character in Smollett's RODERICK RANDOM.

Rat-Wife, The. A hag in Ibsen's LITTLE EYOLF, who is responsible for the death of the child hero.

Rauschning, Hermann (1887-). German political writer, at one time president of the Danzig senate, but soon breaking away from the Nazi party. He came to the U.S. and took out first citizenship papers in 1942. His The Revolution of Nihilism: A Warning to the West (1939) conveyed his knowledge of and insight into the machinations of the Nazis in Germany.

Rautendelein. The nymph in Hauptmann's drama THE SUNKEN BELL.

Ravana. A gigantic ten-faced demon of Hindu legend, who was fastened down between heaven and earth for 10,000 years by Shiva's leg, for attempting to move the hill of heaven to Ceylon. He is prominent in the Hindu epic, the RAMAYANA, especially because of his abduction of Rama's wife, Sita.

Ravel, Maurice Joseph (1875-1937). French impressionist composer. Some of his best-known works are the songs Shéhérazade (1903); the one-act opera L'Heure Espagnole (1910); the ballets Daphnis et Cloé (1912) and Boléro (1928); etc.

raven. A bird of ill omen; fabled to forebode death and bring infection and bad luck generally. The former notion arises from their following an army under the expectation of finding dead bodies to raven on; the latter notion is a mere off-shoot of the former, since it was noted that pestilence kills as fast as the sword.

In Christian art, the raven is an emblem of God's Providence, in allusion to the ravens which fed Elijah.

the fatal raven, consecrated to Odin, the Danish war god, was the emblem on the Danish standard, Landeyda (the desolation of the country), and was said to have been woven and embroidered in one noontide by the daughters of Regner Lodbrok, son of Sigurd, that dauntless warrior who chanted his death-song (the Krakamal) while being stung to death in a horrible pit filled with deadly serpents. If the Danish arms were destined to defeat, the raven hung his wings; if victory was to attend them, he stood erect and soaring, as if inviting the warriors to follow. See also HUGIN and MUGINN.

Raven, The. The best known poem of Edgar Allan Poe (1845). The poet, trying to forget his lost love Lenore, is visited by a "grim, ungainly, ghastly, gaunt and ominous bird of yore."

And the Raven, never flitting, still is sitting, still is sitting

On the pallid bust of Pallas just above my chamber door;

And his eyes have all the seeming of a demon's that is dreaming.

And the lamp-light o'er him streaming throws his shadow on the floor;

And my soul from out that shadow that lies floating on the floor

Shall be lifted—nevermore!

Ravenel, Mrs. Beatrice, née Witte (1870-). American poet of Charleston, S.C. The Arrow of Lightning (1926).

Raven-Hill, Leonard (1867-1942). Famous British cartoonist, mainly known for his work for Punch (1896-1936).

Ravenshoe. A novel (1861) by Henry KINGSLEY.

Ravenswood, Edgar. The hero of Scott's BRIDE OF LAMMERMOOR and of Donizetti's opera LUCIA DI LAMMERMOOR, founded on the novel. In the novel, Edgar is lost in the quicksands of Kelpie's Flow, but in the opera he kills himself.

Rawlings, Marjorie Kinnan (1896-). American novelist, best known for The Yearling, which won the Pulitzer prize for fiction in 1938.

Rawlinson, George (1812-1902). British Orientalist. Author of The Five Great Monarchies of the Ancient Eastern World (4 vols.; 1862-1867); etc.

Ray, Man (1890-). American surrealist painter and photographer and author of surrealist moving pictures.

Raymond. In Tasso's JERUSALEM DELIVERED, the Count of Toulouse, equal to Godfrey in the "wisdom of cool debate" (Bk. iii). This Nestor of the Crusaders slays Aladine, King of Jerusalem, and plants the Christian standard upon the tower of David (Bk. xx). He is introduced by Scott in his COUNT ROBERT OF PARIS, a novel of the period of Rufus.

Razumov. The principal character in Conrad's UNDER WESTERN EYES.

Read, Herbert Edward (1893-). English literary and art critic and author, at times sympathetic with both MARXISM and SURREALISM. Read, Opie Percival (1852-1939). American humorist who wrote many novels. The Jucklins (1895) is said to have sold over a million copies.

Read, Thomas Buchanan (1822-1872). American poet, famous for the popular poem, Sheridan's Ride.

Reade, Charles (1814-1884). English novelist, known for his attempts to deal with social problems in his fiction and to expose social abuses. His novels include PEG WOFFINGTON (1853); CHRISTIE JOHNSTONE and It Is Never Too Late to Mend (1853); The Course of True Love Never Did Run Smooth (1857); The Autobiography of a Thief and Jack of All Trades (1858); LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG (1859); THE CLOISTER AND THE HEARTH (1861), considered his best work; HARD CASH (1863); Griffith Gaunt (1866); Foul Play (1866); PUT YOURSELF IN HIS PLACE (1870); A Terrible Temptation (1871); The Wandering Heir (1872); A Hero and a Martyr (1874); A Woman-Hater (1874). His plays include Masks and Faces (1852); The Courier of Lyons (1854); Drink (1879), based on Zola's L'ASSOMMOIR.

Reader's Digest. A magazine, originally of articles condensed and simplified from printed sources, founded in 1921 in New York City by DeWitt Wallace, who had first tried reducing articles when he was in a hospital recovering from a wound received in the first World War. In course of time the reprint idea was partly abandoned but the "simplist" formula was retained. In 1944 the Reader's Digest sold 11,000,000 copies a month. The British, Spanish, Portuguese, Arabic, Finnish, and Danish editions were the largest selling magazines in the respective countries and languages. Cf. John Bainbridge, Little Wonder or, The Reader's Digest and How it Grew (1946).

Reading Gaol, The Ballad of, see BALLAD OF READING GAOL, THE.

Ready-Money Jack. The nickname given to an English yeoman in Washington Irving's BRACEBRIDGE HALL.

Ready-to-Halt. A pilgrim in Pt. II of Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, who journeys on crutches. He joins the party under the charge of Mr. Greatheart, but when he is "sent for," he throws away his crutches, and, lo! a chariot bears him into paradise.

realism. Rather than a definite form of writing in fiction, realism is an inclusive term the interpretation of which varies with both writers and critics. The foundation of realism is an endeavor to depict life in an entirely honest manner, without prejudice or glamor, but in practice this virtue can only be relative. Realism may be said to begin with such early English novelists as Defoe, Fielding and Smollett. It assumed the proportions of a definite literary trend in the nineteenth century. The advance of science and the growth of rationalism in philosophy were contributing factors. In the English writers George Eliot, Trollope, Thackeray, and Dickens we can follow the growth of realistic treatment of contemporary life. In the U.S., Mark Twain and Whitman can be cited as outstanding examples. A school of writing dependent upon "LOCAL COLOR" developed with such writers as Bret Harte, in the West, and Thomas Nelson Page in the South. William Dean Howells and Henry James practiced realism, one in straightforward novels of American life, the other in psychological exploration of Americans abroad. In the early part of the twentieth century the sociological trend can be noted in such writers as Jack London and Upton Sinclair. Later on, Ellen Glasgow in the South, and Willa Cather for the Middle West, contributed a new growth of the realistic spirit. The work of Ernest Hemingway introduced a new realistic style which a great many younger writers have since attempted to copy. John Steinbeck, in such a novel as The Grapes of Wrath, has been a prime exemplar of realism. In American poetry one can point to such writers as Carl Sandburg and Edgar Lee Masters, whose Spoon River Anthology explores the lives of a whole Middle Western community. In the drama we have the experimental plays of Eugene O'Neill and later Elmer Rice and Clifford Odets. (See under all these names.)

it stands to reason. It is logically manifest; this is the Latin constat (constare, literally, "to stand together").

the Age of Reason. See AGE.

the Goddess of Reason. The central figure in a philosophic religion introduced among the people for worship during the French Revolution. The role was taken by various young women of questionable repute, who, in turns, were enthroned and "worshiped" in the cathedral of Notre Dame. Mary JOHNSTON wrote a poetic drama on this subject.

the woman's reason. "I think so just because I do think so." Cf. Two Gentlemen of Verona, i. 2.

First then a woman will, or won't, depend on't;
If she will do't, she will, and there's an end on't.
Hill, Epilogue to "Zara."

Reaumur. A scale of the thermometer set up by the French physicist René Réaumur (1683-1757). It is graduated so that zero marks the freezing point and 80 degrees the boiling point of water. 4 degrees R. (that is, Reaumur) equal 5 degrees C. (that is, Celsius or centigrade) or 9 degrees F (that is, Fahrenheit).

Rebecca. In Scott's IVANHOE, the real heroine, daughter of Isaac the Jew. She loves Ivanhoe, who has shown great kindness to her and to her father. When Ivanhoe marries Rowena, both Rebecca and her father leave England for a foreign land.

Rebecca and Rowena. A burlesque continuation of Scott's Ivanhoe by THACKERAY (1850). Ivanhoe is now a henpecked husband and Rowena makes him promise never to marry a Jewess, but after Rowena's death Rebecca becomes a Christian and she and Ivanhoe finally marry.

Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm. A story for girls by Kate Douglas Wiggin (Am., 1903). The ten-year-old heroine, Rebecca Randall, leaves her widowed mother and brothers and sisters to go to live with her two old maid aunts, Miranda and Jane. Aunt Miranda, particularly, is a great trial, but Rebecca finds a friend in Emma Jane Perkins and a hero and admirer in Adam Ladd, whom she calls Mr. Aladdin. The book ends with her graduation from Wareham Academy, in Maine. There was a sequel, New Chronicles of Rebecca, in 1907, and Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm was successfully dramatized in 1910, with Mabel Taliaferro in the title rôle.

Rebecca's Camels Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Rebekah. In the Old Testament, the wife of ISAAC. The meeting of Abraham's servant with Rebekah at the well is one of the celebrated pastoral love stories. Rebekah became the mother of Jacob and Esau and suggested to the former, who was her favorite, his deception of Isaac and his theft of Esau's blessing.

Rebound. A three-act comedy (1929) by Donald Ogden Stewart.

Récamier, Mme Jeanne Françoise Julie Adélaïde, née Bernard (1777-1849). French beauty and wit, the wife of a Paris banker, whose salon was filled with the most noteworthy people of her time. Her adopted daughter, Mme Lenormand, published her Souvenirs et correspondance (1852).

Recessional. A famous poem by Rudyard Kipling (1897) written to celebrate the sixtieth anniversary of the reign of Queen Victoria. A recessional in a church is the hymn sung while the choir is leaving the chancel and proceeding to the robing room.

Recherche du temps perdu, A la, see RE-MEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST.

Recio, Marie. Italian singer, for whom the composer BERLIOZ left his wife and whom he later married (1854).

Reclamation Service. A bureau of the Department of the Interior established in 1902 to reclaim desert lands, chiefly in the West, by means of irrigation and the development of electric power.

Reconstruction Finance Corporation (R.F.C.). Established in 1932 to grant emergency relief, by means of loans to financial institutions including banks, insurance companies, etc., and to stimulate agriculture, commerce, and industry. It had as resources nearly four billion dollars in capital.

Recruiting Officer, The. A comedy (1706) by FARQUHAR.

recusant. One who refuses to conform. In English history, a Roman Catholic who refuses to attend the services of the established Church of England. Louise Imogen GUINEY compiled a book of poems by "recusant" Catholic writers under the title of The Recusant Poets.

Red. One of the primary colors. In heraldry, it is said to signify magnanimity and fortitude. In ecclesiastical use, it is worn in honor of martyrs on Ash Wednesday and the remaining days of Holy Week, and on Whitsunday. In popular folklore, it is the color of magic.

Red is the colour of magic in every country, and has been so from the very earliest times. The caps of fairies and musicians are well-nigh always red.—Yeats, Fairy and Folk Tales of the Irish Peasantry, p. 61.

During the later periods of modern history, it came to be more often symbolical of anarchy and revolution—"Red ruin, and the breaking up of laws" (Tennyson, Guinevere, 421). In the French Revolution, the Red Republicans were those extremists who never hesitated to dye their hands in blood in order to accomplish their political object, and in modern Russia the Reds, with their Red Army, played a similar part. In general, red is regarded as the color of liberty.

In the old ballads, red was frequently applied to gold ("the gude red gowd"), and this use still survives in thieves' cant, a gold watch being a red kettle, and the chain a red tackle. One of the names given by the alchemists to the PHILOSOPHERS' STONE was the red tincture, because, with its help, they hoped to transmute the base metals to gold.

Red Book. A directory relating to the court, the nobility, and the "Upper Ten" generally. The Royal Kalendar, published from 1767 to 1893, was known by this name, as also Webster's Royal Red Book, a similar work, first issued in 1847. The name is also given to other special works covered in red, as, e.g., the official parliamentary papers of the old Austro-Hungarian Empire which corresponded to the British "BLUE BOOKS." In New York City, the Red Book is that part of the telephone directory that gives names classified according to occupations, trades, etc.

the Red Book of Hergest. A Welsh manuscript of the 14th century, containing the MABINOGION among other things of great interest.

red button. In the Chinese Empire, a mandarin of the first class wore one of these as a badge of honor in his cap. See also PANJANDRUM.

Red Coats. British soldiers, from the color of the uniform formerly universal in line regiments. Red is the color of the royal livery, and it is said that this color was adopted by huntsmen because foxhunting was declared a royal sport by Henry II.

the Red Crescent. The Turkish equivalent of the Red Cross, i.e., the military hospital service.

Red Cross. The badge adopted by all nations (except Mohammedans, who, in its place, use the Red Crescent), in accordance with the Geneva Convention of 1864, as that of military ambulance and hospital services, hospital ships, etc. It is a red Greek cross on a white ground, and is also called the Geneva Cross. Hence it became the name of various national societies for the relief of the wounded and sick.

red flag. The emblem of anarchy, Bolshevism, Communism, and revolution and rebellion generally. English Communists adopted a "battle hymn" with this title, which was also used as the title of anarchical and revolutionary journals. The red flag was used during the French Revolution as the symbol of insurrection and terrorism, and in the Roman Empire it signified war and a call to arms.

Red Hand. The badge of Ulster, in northern Ireland.

red letter day. A lucky day; a day to be recalled with delight. In almanacs, saints' days and holidays are printed in red ink, other days in black; only the former have special services in the Prayer Book.

"It's a great piece of luck, ma'am," said Mrs. Bel-field, "that you should happen to come here of a holiday! . . . Why, you know, ma'am, to-day is a red-letter day!"—Fanny Burney, Cecelia, X, vi.

Red Republicans. Extreme Republicans.

Red Shirts. Revolutionists. The allusion is to the red shirts worn by Garibaldi's followers in the struggle for a united Italy.

Red Sox. In American baseball parlance, the Boston Americans. See under BASEBALL TEAMS.

Red Sultan. Abdul Hamid II (1842-1918) was so called.

red tape. Official formality, or rigid adherence to rules and regulations, carried to excessive lengths; so called because lawyers and government officials tie their papers together with red tape. Charles Dickens is said to have introduced the expression, but it was the scorn continually poured upon this evil of officialdom by CARLYLE that brought the phrase into popular use.

Red, White, and Blue. The American flag; also, the British flag.

Admiral of the Red. See ADMIRAL.

Red and the Black, The (Le Rouge et le Noir). The most celebrated novel of STENDHAL, published in 1830. It deals with the rise to power of Julien Sorel, a handsome, cold, and intensely egotistical young man who uses his love affairs to serve his ambition and tries to murder his first mistress when she betrays him to her successor in his interest. The title refers to the colors of the military class, represented by Napoleon, the author's hero, and of the clergy, which Stendhal detested. The novel is noted for its psychological analysis and exposition of the character of Sorel.

Red Badge of Courage, The: An Episode of the American Civil War. A novel by Stephen Crane (1895). It presents a study of the psychological reactions of Henry Fleming, a young soldier, during the Civil War Battle of Chancellorsville, his first experience in combat. He is shown in successive emotional states of patriotic zeal, bravado, fear, shame, near-hysteria, and finally courage. This was one of the first realistic studies of war in literature,

Redburn: His First Voyage. A novel (1849) by Herman MELVILLE.

Red Cloud (1822-1909). American Indian Chief, famous leader of Sioux and Cheyenne bands in a war against the whites (1866-1868).

Red Cotton Night-Cap Country, or Turf and Towers. A difficult and rather tedious poem (1873) by Robert BROWNING, the title of which suggested itself to the poet when his friend, Miss Annie Thackeray, called St. Aubin White Cotton Night-Cap Country, because the women there wore white caps.

Red Cross, American. See BARTON, CLARA.

Red Cross Knight. In Spenser's FAÉRIE QUEENE (Bk. I), a personification of St. George, the patron saint of England. He typifies Christian Holiness, and his adventures are an allegory of the Church of England. The Knight is sent by the Queen to destroy a dragon which is ravaging the kingdom of Una's father. With UNA he is driven into Wandering Wood, where they encounter Error, and pass the night in Hypocrisy's cell. Here he is deluded by a false vision and, in consequence, abandons Una and goes with DUESSA to the palace of Pride. He is persuaded by DUESSA to drink of an enchanted fountain, becomes paralyzed, and is taken captive by ORGOGLIO, whereupon Una seeks Arthur's help, and the prince goes to the rescue. He slays Orgoglio, and the Red Cross Knight is taken by Una to the house of Holiness to be healed. On leaving Holiness they journey onward, and as they draw near the end of their quest, the dragon flies at the knight, who has to do battle with it for three whole days before he succeeds in slaying it. The Red Cross Knight and Una are then united in marriage.

Redemption. A drama in two acts by Leo N. TOLSTOI. As performed in 1912, it was an abridgement of The Living Corpse.

Redfield, William C. (1789-1857). Founder and first president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science (1848). His grandson, William Cox Redfield (1858-1932), was U.S. secretary of commerce (1913-1919).

Redgauntlet. A novel by Sir Walter SCOTT (1824), told in a series of letters. Sir Edward Hugh Redgauntlet, a Jacobite conspirator in favor of the Young Pretender, Charles Edward, is the hero; among others, his niece, Lillias Redgauntlet, is prominently involved. The whole enterprise proves a fiasco, Redgauntlet becomes a prior abroad, and Lillias marries her brother's friend, Allan Fairford, a young advocate.

Red-Haired Man's Wife, The. A poem by James Stephens.

Red-Headed Woman. A novel (1931) by Katharine BRUSH.

Red-Haired Girl, the. In Kipling's LIGHT THAT FAILED, a friend of Maisie's who shares her studio. She is mentioned little, and by no other name, but her hopeless love for Dick Helder is hinted at in a way that makes her unforgettable.

redingote (Fr., from English "riding coat"). A plain double-breasted outside coat, such as was frequently worn by Napoleon.

Red Jacket. Indian name Sagoyewatha (1758?-1830). American Indian chief of the Senecas who was friendly to the whites but did not wish Indian lands ceded to the U.S.

Redlaw, Mr. The principal character of a story by Dickens called The Haunted Man (1848).

Red Lily, The (Le Lys rouge). A novel by Anatole FRANCE (1894). When she meets and falls in love with the sculptor, Dechartre, the lovely and accomplished Thérèse Martin-Bellême is already the wife of one man and the mistress of another. In spite of an absorbing love, Dechartre and Thérèse find only wretchedness, and his jealous refusal to listen to her explanations finally brings their affair to an end.

Redman, Ben Ray (1896-). American writer of poetry and criticism. Also translator from the French and author of several detective stories. For eleven years he conducted a book column on the Herald Tribune under the title of Old Wine in New Bottles, and now conducts a similar department, New Editions, in the Saturday Review of Literature.

Red Pony, The. A story by John Steinbeck, reprinted in his collection of novelettes, The Long Valley (1938).

Red Ridinghood, Little. This celebrated nursery tale is, with slight alterations, common to Sweden, Germany, and France. It comes to us from the French Le Petit Chaperon Rouge, in Charles PERRAULT's Contes des Temps, and probably originated in Italy. A little girl takes a present to her grandmother, but a wolf has assumed the place of the old woman, and, when the child gets into bed, devours her. The brothers GRIMM have reproduced this tale in German and the finale, which tells of the arrival of a huntsman who slits open the wolf and restores little Red Ridinghood and her grandmother to life, is a German addition.

Red Robe, The (La Robe rouge). A drama by Eugene Brieux (Fr., 1900). The lawyers Mouzon and Vagret, in their ambition to win the red robe of a judge (an honor based, in France, on the number of convictions), completely wreck the happiness of the peasant Etchepars, who has been falsely accused of murder, by destroying his wife's good name. Vagret realizes his selfishness in time and loses promotion; Mouzon is promoted, but is stabbed by the peasant's wife, Yanetta.

Red Rock, A Chronicle of the Reconstruction. A historical novel by Thomas Nelson PAGE (1898). It deals with the reconstruction period, when Northern carpet-baggers were influential in the South, and the raids of the KU KLUX KLAN are a prominent feature. Red Rock is the old Gray estate which the hero, Jacquelin Gray, is forced to see in the possession of another man after the Civil War. He gradually wins back the plantation and the love of his old playmate, Blair Cary. His brilliant cousin, Steve Allen, with whom he had thought Blair was in love, marries a Northern girl, Ruth Welch.

Red Rover, The. A sea tale by James Fenimore COOPER (1827) relating the exploits of the pirate "Red Rover." This bold and fearful seaman is finally brought to repent of his evil deeds and to render honest, patriotic service in the American Revolution.

reductio ad absurdum. A proof of inference arising from the demonstration that every other hypothesis involves an absurdity. In common parlance, the phrase has come to signify the opposite: an argument that brings out the absurdity of a contention made.

reduplicated or ricochet words. There are probably some hundreds of these words, which usually have an intensifying force, in use in English. The following, from ancient and modern sources, will give some idea of their variety: chit-chat, click-clack, clitter-clatter, dilly-dally, ding-dong, drip-drop, fal-lal, flim-flam, fiddle-faddle, flip-flap, flip-flop, handy-pandy, harum-scarum, helter-skelter, heyve-keyve, higgledy-piggledy, hob-nob, hodge-podge, hoity-toity, hubble-bubble, hugger-mugger, hurly-burly, mingle-mangle, mish-mash, mixy-maxy, namby-pamby, niddy-noddy, niminy-piminy, nosy-posy, pell-mell, ping-pong, pit-pat, pitter-patter, prattles and prabbles, randem-tandem, randy-dandy, razzle-dazzle, riff-raff, roly-poly, shilly-shally, slip-slop, slish-slosh, tick-tack, tip-top, tittle-tattle, wibble-wobble, wig-wag, wiggle-waggle, wish-wash, wishy-washy.

Redworth, Thomas. Diana's faithful friend and lover in Meredith's novel DIANA OF THE CROSSWAYS.

a broken or bruised reed. Something not to be trusted for support; a weak adherent. Egypt is called a broken reed, in which Hezekiah could not trust if the Assyrians made war on Jerusalem, "which broken reed if a man leans on, it will go into his hand and pierce it" (See 2 Kings xviii. 21; Is. vi. 6).

Lean not on Earth, 'twill pierce thee to the heart;
A broken reed at best, but oft, a spear

a reed shaken by the wind. A person blown about by every wind of doctrine, John the Baptist (said Christ) was not a "reed shaken by the wind," but from the very first had a firm belief in the Messiahship of the Son of Mary and this conviction was not shaken by fear or favor. Cf. Matt. xi. 7. Shaken With the Wind is the title of a novel (1942) by Miriam Allen deFord.

a thinking reed. Man. See PASCAL, BLAISE.

Reed, John (1887-1920). American journalist and author, known for his sympathies with the Socialist movement and his reporting of the Russian Revolution of 1917. He was one of the editors of THE MASSES, wrote and acted for the PROVINCETOWN PLAYERS, of which he was one of the founders, served as a war correspondent in Mexico and Europe, worked for the Bureau of International Revolutionary Propaganda, in connection with which he lectured on the revolution of the BOLSHIEVICS, and helped organize the first American COMMUNIST PARTY. His works include Insurgent Mexico (1914), dealing with the revolt of Pancho Villa; The War in Eastern Europe (1916); Red Russia (1919); and Ten Days That Shook the World (1919), his most famous work, a vivid eyewitness account of the Bolshevik revolution, which was later officially approved and came to be used as a textbook in the Russian schools.

Reed came of a wealthy and prominent Oregon family and was somewhat of a playboy before he became interested in Socialism. He was a friend of the Russian revolutionary leaders and was a member of the executive committee of the 1920 congress of the Communist International. After his death at Baku from typhus, he was treated as a Russian hero and buried in the Kremlin.

Reed, Sampson (1800-1880). A Swedenborgian whose Observations on the Growth of the Mind (1826) greatly influenced Ralph Waldo EMERSON.

Reed, Thomas Brackett (1839-1902). Speaker of the House of Representatives (1889-1891, 1895-1899); compiled a series of rules known as Reed's Rules (1890) which were an improvement on the former rules as to the powers of the speaker.

Reed, Walter (1851-1902). American army surgeon. He headed a commission, with James Carroll, Jesse Lazear, and Aristides Agramonte, to investigate yellow fever (1900).

As a result of his experiments, the carriers of the disease were identified and the manner of transmission established. The Walter Reed Hospital in Washington, D.C., is named in his honor. Cf. Yellow Jack, a play by Sidney HOWARD (1928).

Reedy, William Marion (1862-1920). American editor, whose St. Louis Sunday Mirror (from 1893), known as Reedy's Mirror, was distinguished by printing the first portions of The Spoon River Anthology by Edgar Lee MASTERS under the pseudonym of Webster Ford. Reedy was a great editor; as an encourager of American literature he was a decided influence on his time.

Reese, Lizette Woodworth (1856-1935). American lyrical poet of fine achievement. Thomas B. Mosher of Portland, Me., published Miss Reese's poems in limited editions. Her most famous poem is a sonnet called Tears. She was for the greater part of her life a school teacher, teaching at Western High School in Baltimore for 20 years. She published five books of poetry and a book of reminiscences called A Victorian Village.

Reeve, Arthur Benjamin (1880-1936). American writer of detective stories who created the character of "scientific detective" Craig Kennedy.

Reeve's Tale, The. One of the "broadest" in Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES, and fittingly placed in the mouth of one who is neither an ecclesiastic nor one of the "gentles," but an upper servant. The tale occurs frequently in the jest- and story-books of the 16th and 17th centuries. Boccaccio has it in the DECAMERON (Day xi, nov. vi), but Chaucer probably took it from Jean de Bove's fabliau, Gombert et des Deux Clercs. It concerns Simon Simkin, the Miller of Trompington, known as an arrant thief. Two scholars undertake to see that a sack of corn is ground for "Solar Hall College" without being tampered with, so one stands at the hopper and the other at the trough below. In the meantime, Simon Simkin lets loose the scholars' horse; while they go to catch it, he purloins half a bushel of the flour, which is made into cakes, and substitutes meal in its stead. But the young men have their revenge; they not only make off with the flour, meal, and cakes without payment, but also leave the miller well trounced.

referendum. The submission to the people in general of any act of legislature. In the U.S. about half the states can exercise the referendum as to state matters. In municipal affairs about 300 cities use this principle of action.

Reflections in a Golden Eye. A novel (1941) by Carson McCULLERS.

Reflections on the French Revolution. A treatise by Edmund BURKE (1790), attacking the leaders and principles of the French Revolution for their violence and excesses, and urging reform rather than rebellion as a means of correcting social and political abuses. This work was, in turn, attacked by Thomas PAINE.

Reformation. In Church history, the movement leading to the various Protestant schisms of the 16th century. The leaders were: in Germany, Martin LUTHER; in France, John CALVIN; in Switzerland, Ulrich ZWINGLI; in Scotland, John KNOX. The Reformation was caused by the need for certain reforms in the church of Rome.

Regan. The second of King Lear's unfilial daughters in Shakespeare's tragedy KING LEAR. She is characterized as "most barbarous, most degenerate." She is married to the Duke of Cornwall.

Regan, Michael. Titular hero of Edward Sheldon's drama THE BOSS.

Regent Street. A street in London containing many fine shops; it was originally (1813) designed to connect Carlton House, then the residence of the Regent, with Regent's Park.

Regicide. In English history, one of the judges involved in the execution of King Charles I. There were about eighty-four Regicides. Twenty-five were imprisoned for life, ten were executed; others escaped, several of them to the American colonies. At New Haven, Connecticut, a cave on the outskirts of the town, on the West Rock, is still known as "Judges' Cave," named after the Regicides William Goffe and Edward Whalley who hid there in 1661.

Regillus, Lake. A lake near Rome, scene of a battle in which the Romans defeated the Latins (498 B.C.), and concerning which Macaulay wrote one of his ballads.

regius professor. The incumbent of a professorship instituted by a king. The first English regius professorships were founded by Henry VIII (1540) at Cambridge University. Six years later five further regius professorships were established at Oxford University and still others have been added since.

Regler, Gustav (1898-). German novelist who fled to France and was acquainted with André Malraux, André Gide, etc. He joined the International Brigade during the Spanish Civil War and participated in the defense of Madrid. He was wounded and came to America, where he stayed with Ernest Hemingway who wrote a preface for his book, The Great Crusade (1940).

Régnier, Henri de (1864-1936). French poet and novelist, at first one of the PARNAS-

SIANS, later a disciple of MALLARMÉ and a member of the school of SYMBOLISM. His poetry is characterized by serenity of mood, semi-mythological subject-matter, and the wide use of free verse, of which Régnier is regarded by some critics as a master. His works include Poèmes anciens et romanesques (1890); Tel qu'en songe (1892); Les Jeux rustiques et divins (1897); Les Médailles d'Argiles (1900); La Sandale Ailée (1906); Le Miroir des heures (1910); Scènes Mythologiques suivies de petites fables modernes (1924); Vestigia Flammae (1928). Régnier, who was the son-in-law of José-Maria de HEREDIA, was elected to the French Academy in 1911.

Rehan, Ada (1860-1916). Irish-born American actress. Played over 200 parts in the company of Augustin Daly (1879-1899). Especially known for Shakespearean roles.

Rehearsal, The. A famous farce by George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham (1671), designed for a satire on the pretentious "heroic" plays of the time. The chief character, BAYES, is meant for DRYDEN, the Poet Laureate. See also BRENTFORD.

Rehoboam. In the Old Testament (1 Kings xii), the son and successor of Solomon. His remark, "My father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions," cost him the allegiance of the greater part of his kingdom. See JEROBOAM.

Reid, Forrest (1876-1946). Irish novelist, biographer and critic. A stylist and student of abnormal psychology. Spring Song (1916) and its sequel, Pirates of the Spring (1919) are his best novels. Excellent biographies of Walter DE LA MARE and William Butler YEATS.

Reid, Samuel Chester (1783-1861). American naval officer. Commanded privateer General Armstrong in War of 1812; in repulsing a British attack at Fayal, 1814, he detained British ships on their way to New Orleans, enabling Jackson to make adequate preparations to save the city. Designed present U.S. flag, with 13 stripes and the addition of a star for each new state. The first one, made by his wife Mary, was hoisted over the Capitol April 12, 1818.

Reid, Thomas Mayne (1818-1883). Irish-born writer of popular fiction who served in the U.S. army during the Mexican War and distinguished himself at the storming of Chapultepec. In London he found the publisher for his adventure stories, among which are The Rifle Rangers (1850); The Scalp Hunters (1851); Afloat in the Forest (1865). The Quadroon (1856) was the basis for a successful play, The Octoroon (1859), by Dion BOUTCAULT.

Reid, Whitelaw (1837-1912). U.S. ambassador to Great Britain (1905-1912), who had made his reputation as a war correspondent in the Civil War. Editor, New York Tribune (1872-1905). His son Ogden Mills Reid (1882-1946) also was editor of the New York Tribune (1913).

Reigneir. Duke of Anjou and Lorraine and titular king of Naples, introduced in all three parts of Shakespeare's Henry VI. The name is more accurately spelled RENÉ and under this form the Duke is a character in Scott's ANNE OF GEIERSTEIN.

Reign of Terror. A term applied to a period of anarchy, bloodshed, and confiscation in the French Revolution. It began after the fall of the Girondists (May 31, 1793), and extended to the overthrow of ROBESPIERRE and his accomplices (July 27, 1794). During this short time thousands of persons were put to death.

Reilley, Weary. In James T. Farrell's STUDS LONIGAN, a vicious, dissipated young braggart, an associate of Studs. Weary Reilley's rape of a girl named Irene at a wild New Year's Eve Party in 1929 is one of the outstanding scenes of sordidness and vice in the novel.

Reinach. Name of three distinguished French brothers: Joseph Reinach (1856-1921) was a member of the Chamber of Deputies and conducted a campaign (1897-1906) to prove the innocence of Captain Alfred Dreyfus. Salomon Reinach (1858-1932) was an archeologist whose two most notable treatises are Apollo: A General History of the Plastic Arts (1904) and Orpheus: A General History of Religions (1909). He toured the U.S. in 1923, producing his pageant-play, The Miracle. Regularly every year at Salzburg he produced the mystery play Everyman. Upon Hitler's coming to power, Reinhardt left the continent, worked in England and America, became a film director in Hollywood, and, in 1937, put on Werfel's Eternal Road in New York City.

Réjane. Stage name of Gabrielle Charlotte Réju (1856-1920). French actress who in her first year on the stage became a huge success both in vaudeville and at the Odéon. She founded and managed the Théâtre Réjane (1905). She appeared successfully at the Gaiety Theater in London as Catherine in Mme Sans Gêne which also had a long run in New York.

Rejected Addresses. A collection of parodies (1812) by James and Horace SMITH.

relief. Popular and journalistic term during the 1930's for governmental assistance given to persons who were unemployed, in the form either of money allotments or jobs provided at public expense. Relief was one of the chief features of the NEW DEAL. The CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS, Public Works Administration, and Works Progress Administration provided relief through made work, or "work relief."

Religio Medici. See BROWNE, Sir THOMAS.

Reliques of Ancient English Poetry. See PERCY, Bishop THOMAS.

Remarkable Providences Illustrative of the Earlier Days of American Colonization. A pseudo-scientific work by Increase MATHER (1684). It is a collection of reports of puzzling natural phenomena, unusual happenings, amazing escapes from danger, apparitions, demons, and the like, considered to have been compiled by several hands at an earlier date, to which Mather added comments, speculations, and reports of his own experiences or of authors he had read, in An Essay for the Recording of Illustrious Providences. He meant it to be a proof of the existence of the supernatural.

Remarque, Erich Maria. Original surname Krämer (1897-). German novelist, known for his dramatic, realistic accounts of the devastations of World War I and the depression period of the early 1920's among German youth. These are ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT, English translation of Im Westen nichts Neues (1929), a sensational best-seller in Europe and the U.S., dramatized as a successful American motion picture; The Road Back (Der Weg zurück; 1931); Three Comrades (Drei Kameraden; 1937); Floresam (1941). Remarque served in the German army (1915-1918) and held a number of menial jobs in Germany before his success as a novelist. During World War II, he sought refuge in the U.S. and wrote the best-seller Arch of Triumph (1946).

Rembrandt van Rijn, Paul (1606-1669). One of the most famous painters in the world. Born in Leiden, he is the principal representative of the Dutch school of painting and distinguished by his handling of light and shadow. He settled in Amsterdam and married a wealthy woman known as Saskia, of whom he painted several portraits. Some of his most famous pictures are The Anatomy Lesson of Dr. Tulp; The Sortie of the Banning Cocq Company (known familiarly as The Night Watch); The Syndics; and many religious and mythological canvases.

Remember the Alamo. A phrase arising from the war between the U.S. and Mexico when a gallant band of insurgent Texans defended to the last the Alamo, a mission building at San Antonio, against the Mexican government troops.

Remember the Maine. A slogan used in the Spanish American War after the destruction of the battleship Maine in Havana Harbor.

Remembrance of Things Past. English title for A la Recherche du temps perdu, the most famous work of Marcel PROUST. It consists of the following separate books, published 1913-1928: Du Côté de Chez Swann (1918), translated as SWANN'S WAY (1923); A l'Ombre de jeunes Filles en Fleurs (1918), translated as WITHIN A BUDDING GROVE (1924); Le Côté de Guermantes (1920-1921), as THE GUERMANTES WAY (1925); Sodome et Gomorrhe (1921-1922), as CITIES OF THE PLAIN (1928); La Prisonnière (1923), as The Captive (1929); Albertine disparue (1926), as THE SWEET CHEAT GONE (1930); Le Temps Retrouvé (1928), as THE PAST RECAPTURED (1932). This long novel, an outstanding example of the ROMAN-FLEUVE, presents the author's theories of time and memory, developed under the influence of Henri BERGSON, with respect to the social groups with whom he associated in his youth, in combination with details of the life of the narrator, "Marcel," which are considered to be in part autobiographical.

Three definite groups are treated in Remembrance of Things Past: the GUERMANTES family and their friends, representing the aristocracy; Charles SWANN and his friends, representing the established bourgeoisie; and the VERDURINS, nouveaux riches, considered vulgar by the Guermantes, and the various artists and intellectuals who come to their weekly salons. In addition to lengthy accounts of social gatherings attended by the narrator in the company of one or another of these groups, and of the personal intrigues in which numerous of their members are involved, the novel describes Marcel's relations with his family, his love affair with Albertine Simonet and his adoration from afar of Mme de Guermantes and Gilberte Swann, his preferences in painting, music, literature, and the theater, and numerous examples of introspection during which he analyzes minutely his feelings, motives, memories, and desires with regard to a given situation. The book also gives an amazing portrayal of homosexuality among both men and women.

Remembrance of Things Past is particularly noted for its social and individual portraiture and its psychological analysis. With THE MAGIC MOUNTAIN and ULYSSES, it is ranked among the greatest novels of the 20th century. The title of the English translation is from a quotation from one of Shakespeare's sonnets:

When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past . . .

This translation, by Charles SCOTT-MONCRIEFF (except the final volume) is considered one of the most masterly ever made.

Remigius, St. See under SAINTS.

Remington, Frederic Sackrider (1861-1909). American painter who worked on a ranch as a cowboy in the West and was in Cuba during the Spanish-American War (1898) as an artist-correspondent. Best known for his scenes of the American West and his drawing of horses. He wrote and illustrated Pony Tracks (1895); Crooked Trails (1898); and The Way of an Indian (1906).

Remington, Richard. The hero and supposed narrator of Wells' NEW MACHIAVELLI.

Remizov, Aleksei Mikhailovich (1877-). Russian novelist; follower of Gogol and Pushkin. Collected Works (8 vols.; 1910-1912).

remora. A sucker-disked fish which attaches itself to larger fish and to vessels, and which, in ancient times, was fabled to be able to check their progress.

Remus, see UNCLE REMUS.

renaissance (Fr., "re-birth"). The term was applied, broadly, to the movement and period of transition between the medieval and modern worlds which, beginning with PETRARCH and the Italian humanists in the 14th century, was immensely stimulated by the fall of Constantinople (1453), resulting in the dissemination of Greek scholarship and Byzantine art, the invention of printing (about the same time), and the discovery of America (1492). In England, this revival first manifested itself in the early years of the 16th century.

Renan, Ernest (1823-1892). French scholar, critic, and author, best known for his La Vie de Jésus (The Life of Jesus; 1863), a study of Christ as a man which popularized the "HIGHER CRITICISM" of the Bible. Among his other works are L'Avenir de la Science (1849), a testament of faith in science and social progress under the guidance of scientist rulers; Averroès et L'Averroïsme (1852), on Aristotelianism among the Arabs of the Middle Ages; Histoire générale des Langues Semitiques (1855); Essais de Morale et de Critique (1859); Histoire des Origines du Christianisme (1866-1881), a social, historical, and geographical study of Christianity, of which La Vie de Jésus was the first volume; Histoire du Peuple d'Israël (1887-1895); Dialogues Philosophiques (1876); Souvenirs d'Enfance et de Jeunesse (1883), personal reminiscences; Drames Philosophiques (1888).

Renan was brought up in poverty and was a student preparing for the priesthood when he lost his faith in orthodox religion under the influence of German philosophy and Semitic philology. His dominant ideas were later skeptical and politically liberal, based on the principle that the various systems of religious, scientific, and historical knowledge have only a relative value, no one system being wholly true. Renan influenced the 19th- and 20th-century conception of religious history and had an important effect on the writings of Anatole FRANCE, Paul BOURGET, and Maurice BARRÈS.

Renaissance. A poem by Edna St. Vincent MILLAY, written in octosyllabic couplets and first published in 1912. It describes a mystic experience by the poet, in which she first acquires a cosmic knowledge of sin and suffering and then is given a rebirth of innocence and knowledge of God. This was the first poem to win public acclaim for Millay.

Renault or Renaud of Montauban or Reynold of Montalban. One of Charlemagne's knights and paladins, better known by his Italian name RINALDO.

René. A romance by CHATEAUBRIAND (1807). Much of the setting is in America, where the hero René tells the story of his restless wanderings to his adopted American Indian father Chactas and the French missionary Father Souel. René is a violently unhappy, morbid, introspective youth, typical of the heroes of the romantic school. See ROMANTICISM. His passion for his sister Amélie and his scorn of civilization are at the root of his misery. LES NATCHES is a sequel to René.

René, Le bon Roi (1408-1480). Son of Louis II, Duc d'Anjou, Comte de Provence, father of Margaret of Anjou. He was the last minstrel monarch, just, joyous, and debonair; a friend to the chase and the tilt, but still more so to poetry and music. He gave in largesses to knights-errant and minstrels (so says Thiebault) more than he received in revenue. He appears in Scott's ANNE OF GEIERSTEIN and also, under the name of Reignier, in all three parts of Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Reni, Guido (1575-1642). Well-known Italian painter whose most famous works include The Crucifixion of St. Peter; Concert of Angels; Triumph of Phoebus; Massacre of the Innocents; Ecce Homo; etc.

Renn, Ludwig see VIETH VON GOLSSENAU.

Renoir, Pierre Auguste (1841-1919). French impressionist painter, well-known for harmony of line and brilliance of color. His best canvases include Lise; Madame Charpentier et ses Enfants (at the Metropolitan Museum in New York); Baigneuses; portraits of Monet, Sisley, Wagner; many nudes; etc.

Repington, Charles à Court (1858–1925). British soldier and military correspondent whose gossipy Diary (1920) was much discussed, sometimes unfavorably.

reply churlish. Sir, you are no judge; your opinion has no weight with me. Or, to use TOUCHSTONE's illustration (As You Like It, v. 4), "If a courtier tell me my beard is not well cut, and I disable his judgment, I give him the reply churlish, which is the fifth remove from the lie direct, or, rather, the lie direct in the fifth degree." See COUNTERCHECK QUARRELSOME.

Repplier, Agnes (1858–). American writer, known for the grace, wit, and learning of her personal essays. Among these are Books and Men (1888); Essays in Miniature (1892); Essays in Idleness (1893); The Fireside Sphinx (1901); Compromises (1904); Americans and Others (1912); Counter Currents (1916); Under Dispute (1924); To Think of Teal (1932); In Pursuit of Laughter (1936). She also wrote biographies of Roman Catholic subjects.

Representative Men. A collection of essays (1850) on Plato, Swedenborg, Montaigne, Napoleon, Goethe, etc., by Ralph Waldo EMERSON.

reproof valiant. Sir, allow me to tell you that is not the truth. This is TOUCHSTONE's fourth remove from the lie direct, or, rather, the lie direct in the fourth degree. See COUNTERCHECK QUARRELSOME.

The reproof valiant, the countercheck quarrelsome, the lie circumstantial, and the lie direct, are not clearly defined by Touchstone. The following, perhaps, will give the distinction required. That is not true; How dare you utter such a falsehood; If you said so, you are a liar; You are a liar, or you lie.

Republic, The. A famous philosophical treatise by PLATO, in which he describes the workings of an imaginary ideal state. See COMMONWEALTHS, IDEAL.

Republican.

Black Republicans, see under BLACK.

Red Republicans, see under RED.

Republican Queen. Sophie Charlotte, wife of Frederick I of Prussia.

republic of letters, the. The world of literature; authors generally and their influence. GOLDSMITH, in The Citizen of the World, No. 20 (1762), says it "is a very common expression among Europeans"; it is found in Molière's Mariage forcé, Sc. vi (1664).

Rescue, The. A novel by Joseph CONRAD (1920). Like THE ARROW OF GOLD, The Rescue deals with the snares and pitfalls which a sophisticated woman of the world can throw about a simple-hearted, romantic young man. The hero is Captain Lingard, who appears in his later life as the powerful trader Rajah Laut of some of Conrad's other tales. The last words of the novel, "Steer North," signify his escape from Edith Travers, the dangerous woman he still loves.

Research Magnificent, The. A novel by H. G. WELLS (1915), narrating the life of William Benham and his search for the worthwhile in life.

Reserve Officers' Training Corps (R.O.T.C.). A students' corps, maintained by the War Department in schools and colleges throughout the U.S., pursuing studies of military science and tactics. Its graduates are eligible for commissions in the army or navy reserve.

Resolution and Independence. A poem by William WORDSWORTH (1807), sentimentally portraying the sad lot of an old and crippled leech-gatherer encountered on one of the poet's country walks; from the subject, the poem is also known as The Leech-Gatherer. It was parodied by Edward LEAR, in Incidents in the Life of My Uncle Arly, and by Lewis CARROLL in The White Knight's Ballad.

Respighi, Ottorino (1879–1936). Italian composer, well-known as pianist and conductor in the U.S., having appeared (1926–1935) in Philadelphia, New York, and Chicago. His Pines of Rome has often been conducted by Arturo TOSCANINI.

Restaud, Mme de. In Balzac's Father Goriot (Le Père Goriot), one of the ungrateful daughters of old GORIOT.

Restif de la Bretonne. Literary name of Nicolas Edmé Restif (1734–1806). French novelist often labeled as the "Rousseau of the Gutter" or the "Voltaire of Chambermaids."

Restoration. In English history, the period after the time of Cromwell and the Commonwealth, when the Stuart dynasty returned to England in the person of Charles II. It was a very licentious period, marked in the field of English letters by characteristic developments in the drama (DRYDEN and CONGREVE) and a remarkable flourishing of diarists (PEPYS and EVELYN).

Resurrection. A novel by Leo TOLSTOI (1899). The young, noble and light-hearted hero, Nekhludov, is one of the jury to decide upon the case of a girl who has poisoned a merchant for his money. To his horror he recognizes Maslova, whom he has seduced on his aunt's estate years before. Tormented by a sense of responsibility that completely upsets his previous scheme of life, Nekhludov determines to follow her to Siberia and marry her.

The novel deals with the working out of this strange undertaking. Maslova is also known as Katusha.

resurrection men. Grave robbers, body-snatchers. The term was first applied to Burke and Hare, in 1829, who rifled graves to sell the bodies for dissection, and sometimes even murdered people for the same purpose.

Reszke, Jean de. Originally Jan Mieczyslaw (1850–1925). Polish operatic tenor who sang often in the U.S. toward the end of the 19th century and at the beginning of the 20th. He was best known in Faust; Romeo and Juliet; Aida; and Benvenuto Cellini. His brother, Édouard de Reszke (1855–1917), was a basso who also toured this country and was successful in Wagnerian roles.

retort courteous, the. Sir, I am not of your opinion; I beg to differ from you; or, to use TOUCHSTONE's illustration (As You Like It, v. 4), "If I said his beard was not cut well, he was in the mund it was." The lie seven times removed; or rather, the lie direct in the seventh degree. See COUNTERCHECK QUARRELSOME.

Return of Peter Grimm, The. A drama by David BELASCO (1911). Peter Grimm is an old Dutch nursery man who comes back in the spirit after his death.

Return of the Druses. A tragedy by Robert BROWNING (1841). The Druses, a semi-Mohammedan sect of Syria, attacked by Osman, take refuge in one of the Sporades and place themselves under the protection of the knights of Rhodes. These knights slay their sheiks and oppress the fugitives. In the sheik massacre, Djabal is saved by Maāni, and entertains the idea of revenging his people and leading them back to Syria. To this end he proclaims that he is Hakim, the incarnate god, returned to earth, and soon becomes the leader of the exiled Druses. A plot is formed to murder the prefect of the isle, and to betray the island to Venice, if Venice will supply a convoy for their return. Aneal, a young woman, stabs the prefect, and dies of bitter disappointment when she discovers that Djabal is a mere impostor. Djabal stabs himself when his imposition is made public, but Loys, a Breton count, leads the exiles back to Lebanon.

Return of the Native, The. A novel by Thomas HARDY (1878). Clym Yeobright, tired of city life, returns from Paris to open a school on Egdon Heath, and in spite of the opposition of his mother marries Eustacia Vye, a passionate, pleasure-loving girl who hopes to persuade him to return to Paris. She has been in love with Damon Wildeve, "one in whom no man would have seen anything to admire and in whom no woman would have seen anything to dislike," but Wildeve now marries Clym's cousin Thomasin. Almost immediately Clym's eyesight fails and he becomes, for the time being, a furze cutter. With the idea of becoming reconciled to her son, Mrs. Yeobright takes the long walk over the heath to his cottage, but Eustacia, who is entertaining Wildeve, does not answer the door until after Clym's mother leaves in despair. Overcome with fatigue and suffering, she sinks down and is found by Clym, unconscious and dying from an adder bite. Clym learns enough to blame Eustacia and the couple part. Eustacia meets Wildeve at a midnight rendezvous, but throws herself into a pool, and in attempting to rescue her, Wildeve also drowns. Thomasin later marries Diggory Venn, a reddleman who has long been devoted to her, and Clym becomes an itinerant preacher.

Retz or Rais, Baron de. Gilles de Laval (1404?–1440). Marshal of France who fought with Joan of Arc against the English; notorious for his cruelty, especially to children. According to some his history begot the tale of Bluebeard. See Charles PERRAULT. Retz was finally burned alive.

Reuben. In the Old Testament, the oldest son of the patriarch JACOB; also, the tribe of his descendants. Of Reuben Jacob said, "Unstable as water, thou shalt not excel."

Reunion in Vienna. A comedy (1931) by Robert E. SHERWOOD, starring Alfred LUNT and Lynn FONTANNE.

Reuter, Baron Paul Julius von. Original name Israel Beer Josaphat (1816–1899). German-English capitalist who established in Aachen (1849) a telegraphic and pigeon post bureau for the collection and transmission of news. This was the beginning of Reuter's News Agency, which later (1851) established its headquarters in London.

Reuter Dahl, Henry (1871–1925). Swedish-American painter and illustrator who was a correspondent during the Spanish-American War and was noted for his naval paintings and illustrations. His painting of the Combat Between the Monitor and the Merrimac is in the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C.

Revendal, Vera. The heroine of Zangwill's MELTING POT. Her father is also a prominent character.

Revenge, The. A poem by TENNYSON (1878). The Revenge is a ship under the command of Sir Richard GRENVILLE, anchored at Flores, in the Azores, when a fleet of fifty-three Spanish ships comes in sight.

Revenger's Tragedy, The. A play (1607) by Cyril TOURNEUR.

Reventlow, Count Ernst zu (1869–1943). Pan-German journalist. During World War I, he was an ardent supporter of the von Tirpitz policy of unrestricted submarine warfare. He wrote a 3-volume work on the Russo-Japanese War (1904-1906) and a book on Nationalistic Socialism in the New Germany (1932).

reverberator. In the best-known novels of Henry JAMES, a character who mediates between the reader and the plot, observing the events that take place in the novel but standing aside from them and thereby serving as someone with whom the reader may identify himself. One of James's novelettes is entitled The Reverberator (1888).

Revere, Paul. See PAUL REVERE'S RIDE.

Reveries of a Bachelor. A narrative, or rather a series of essays, which Donald Grant Mitchell published under the pseudonym of Ik Marvel (Am., 1850). There was a sequel entitled Dream Life (1851).

It was edited by Emily Clark, assisted by James Branch Cabell and other Southern writers. Its discoveries among Southern writers included Julia Peterkin, Frances Newman, Paul Green and Du Bose Heyward. (See those names.)

Revised Version. See BIBLE, THE ENGLISH.

Revival of Letters. A term applied to the RENAISSANCE in so far as the movement reacted on literature. It really commenced earlier—at the close of the DARK AGES—but it received its chief impulse from the fall of Constantinople (1453) and the consequent dispersal over Europe of Greek manuscripts and Greek scholars. Also referred to as Revival of Learning.

Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. See under NANTES.

Revolt of Islam, The. A poem by SHELLEY written in his youth (1818). The hero and heroine, Laon and Cynthia, are united by burning enthusiasm for the cause of liberty as well as by the ties of love. When Othman, the tyrant, seizes Cynthia and commands that Laon be burned alive, Cynthia escapes and perishes with him.

Revolt of the Angels, The (La Révolte des anges). A satiric novel by Anatole FRANCE (1914). A group of angels, tired of life in heaven, seek to amuse themselves in modern Paris and finally join the company of Satan.

Revolutionary calendar. The calendar of the first French republic, dated from the 22 of September, 1792. It was divided into twelve months of thirty days with five additional days (six every fourth year) for celebration. The year began at midnight on the day of the autumnal equinox. Every month was divided into three groups of ten days each. The names of the months were: Vendémiaire (Vintage), from September 22; Brumaire (Fog), from revue (Fr.). A kind of musical comedy concerning current events, expressed in songs, tableaux, skits, etc.

Reymont, Wladyslaw Stanislaw (1868-1925). Polish novelist, chiefly known for his four-volume masterpiece, The Peasants, for which he received the Nobel prize for literature (1924).

Reynard. A fox.

Reynard the Fox. A medieval beast-epic, satirizing contemporary life and events in Germany, in which all the characters are animals. The chief of them, Reynard, typifies the church; his uncle, Ysengrim the wolf, the baronial element; and Nobel the lion, the regal. The plot turns on the struggle for supremacy between Reynard and Ysengrim. Reynard uses all his endeavors to victimize everyone, especially his uncle Ysengrim, and generally succeeds.

The germ of the story is found in Aesop's fable, The Fox and the Lion. This was built upon by more than one writer, but the Roman as we now know it goes back to the work of a Fleming named Willem, of the early 13th century, of which a new and enlarged version was written about 1380 by an unknown author. William CAXTON made his translation from a late 15th century Dutch version of this, which was probably by Herman Barkhusen.

Reynard's globe of glass. Reynard, in Reynard the Fox, says he has sent this invaluable treasure to her majesty the queen as a present, but it never comes to hand, inasmuch as it has no existence except in the imagination of the fox. It is supposed to reveal what is being done—no matter how far off—and also to afford information on any subject that the person consulting it wishes to know. Hence, Your gift was like the globe of glass of Master Reynard, means a great promise, but no performance.

False Reynard. By this name DRYDEN describes the Unitarians in his Hind and Panther.

John MASEFIELD is the author of a long narrative poem called Reynard the Fox (1919).

Reynardine. In Reynard the Fox, the eldest of Reynard. He assumes the names of Dr. Pedanto and Crabron. His brothers are Rossel and Reinikin.

Reynaud, Paul (1878-). Premier of France in 1940 when the French were defeated by Germany. The Pétain Government interned him in September. In 1942 he became one of the principal defendants in the war-guilt trials at Riom, which were inconclusive. He was imprisoned in Germany in 1943.

Reynold of Montalban, see RENAULT.

Reynolds, Jeremiah N. (1799?-1858). American author, chiefly remembered as propagator of an extraordinary theory about the construction of the world, originally thought up by a certain Captain J. C. Symmes, Jr. This theory, which assumed polar openings in a world composed of five concentric spheres, influenced Edgar Allan Poe in his story The Unparalleled Adventure of One Hans Pfaall. After returning from South America, Reynolds made an impassioned plea to Congress for a polar expedition, and part of his address appears in Poe's The Narrative of Arthur Gordon Pym. Reynolds' story of Mocha Dick, a fierce white whale, which was published in the Knickerbocker Magazine, is said to have been the source of Moby Dick by Herman Melville.

Reynolds, Sir Joshua (1723-1792). Famous English portrait painter. At his suggestion the Literary Club was founded in London (1764), its chief members being Dr. Johnson, Garrick, Goldsmith, Burke, Boswell, and Sheridan. He was painter to the king (1784) and did many portraits, one of the most famous being that of the actress Mrs. Siddons as the Tragic Muse. His failing eyesight compelled him to stop painting in 1790.

Rezánov, Nikolai Petrovich (1764-1807). Russian organizer of a Russian-American fur trading company (1801), which had a monopoly in the coast of northwest America. His visit to California and his romance are the subject of Gertrude Atherton's novel, Rezánov (1906). There is also a poem about Rezánov by Bret Harte in Concepcion de Arguello.

Rhadamanthus. In Greek mythology, son of JUPITER and EUROPA. He reigned in the Cyclades with such impartiality, that at death he was made one of the judges of the infernal regions. Rhadamanthine means severe.

Rhadames. The hero of Verdi's opera AIDA.

Rhapsody in Blue. See under BLUES; GERSHWIN, GEORGE.

Rhea. In Greek mythology, wife of CRONUS, her brother, and "Mother of the Gods," i.e., of ZEUS, POSEIDON, HERA, DEMETER, etc. She became identified with the Asiatic CYBELE.

Rheingold, Das (The Rhine Gold). An opera by Richard Wagner, one of the four of the RING DES NIBELUNGEN.

rhetorical question. A question solely for effect, with no answer expected.

Rhétoriqueurs, Les Grands. A group of French poets of the first half of the 16th century, whose work is characterized by elaborate and complicated stanza forms, rhyme schemes, metaphors, alliteration, onomatopoeia, etc., with either lyric or didactic subject-matter. The leading members of the group, which is regarded as representative of the decadence of medieval poetry at the time, were Jean Meschinot (1420-1491), Guillaume Crétin (fl. ca. 1520), and Jean Lemaire de Belges (ca. 1473-ca. 1520). The name was derived from Le Grand et Vrai Art de Pleine rhétorique (1522), by Pierre Fabri, a treatise supplying the ambitious poet with rules for winning a patron's favor by his verses.

Rhett Butler, see BUTLER, RHETT.

Rhinedaughters. In Wagner's Ring (not in actual mythology), the three innocent nymphs Flosshilda, Woglinda, and Wellgunda, set to guard the Nibelungen Hoard in the Rhine.

Rhine Gold, The. See RING DES NIBELUNGEN.

Rhoda. In Virginia Woolf's THE WAVES, one of the six characters whose lives are presented as the novel unfolds. As a child, Rhoda is shy and retiring, conscious of no definite existence or personality of her own, imitating JINNY or SUSAN in her overt actions. Her sense of isolation and unreality persists when she matures. She has a brief love affair with Louis but leaves him.

Rhoda Fleming. A novel by George MEREDITH (1865). The plot concerns the tireless efforts of the titular heroine Rhoda, aided by her lover Robert Armstrong, to set right the affairs of her sister, Dahlia, who has been seduced by Edward Blancove, an irresponsible young nobleman. Rhoda goes in search of Dahlia, obstinately believes in her innocence through a long series of revealing episodes, and when she learns the truth, as obstinately forces her to marry a worthless man under the conviction that her only hope lies in becoming a married woman.

Rhode, John, see STREET, CECIL.

Rhodes, Cecil John (1853-1902). Famous British financier who amalgamated the diamond mines around Kimberley in South Africa under a corporation called the De Beers Consolidated Mines (1888). As prime minister of Cape Colony (1890-1896) he sought to establish a federal South African dominion under Great Britain. He instigated the JAMESON RAID (1895) in pursuit of his imperialistic aims. Its failure compelled him to resign as premier, but in spite of this he is remembered in South Africa as a great figure. He founded the Rhodes scholarships which have enabled young men from all over the British Empire, from the U.S., and from Germany to study at Oxford University.

Rhodes, Eugene Manlove (1869-1934). American writer of Western stories, called by Bernard De Voto "the novelist of the cattle kingdom." His principal books are Good Men and True (1910); Blansford in Arcadia (1914); West is West (1917); Beyond the Desert (1934); and The Proud Sheriff (1935). He was a cowboy for 25 years and knew thoroughly the life of which he wrote.

Rhodes, Harrison Garfield (1871-1929). American writer, chiefly noted for his stage version (1915) of the novel Ruggles of Red Gap by Harry Leon Wilson.

Rhodes, James Ford (1848-1927). American historian whose nine-volume History of the United States (1899-1928) won him the Pulitzer prize for history in 1918.

Rhodes scholarships. See under RHODES, CECIL. Under the provisions of Cecil Rhodes' will, there are 202 Rhodes scholarships: 100 British, 96 American, and 6 German. They are provided for three years, and one-third of their total number is awarded every year. The candidates must be unmarried, between nineteen and twenty-five years of age, and fully matriculated students. Awards are made on a competitive basis.

Rhodopis. Tennyson alludes in The Princess to the unfounded tradition that the Greek courtesan Rhodopis built the third pyramid. Even without a pyramid, she was a considerable character in her time. One of the poems of Sappho is directed against her under the name of Doricha.

Rhoecus. A poem by James Russell LOWELL (1843). Rhoecus falls in love with a Dryad, but, because he neglects her messenger, she disappears. The story is from classic mythology.

Rhondda, Viscount. David Alfred Thomas (1856-1918). Welsh mine operator. A Gladstonian liberal who was president of the local government board in Lloyd George's cabinet (1916) and stopped speculation and black-market practices while in office as wartime food controller. Lady Rhondda is a well-known feminist, backer of the Liberal periodical Time and Tide, for which E. M. DELAFIELD wrote.

double or feminine rhyme. A bisyllabic rhyme, such as tender, slender; ocean, motion. See under FEMININE.

internal rhyme. Rhyme within the line, as—

We were the first that ever burst into that silent sea.
Coleridge, The Ancient Mariner.

Once upon a midnight dreary while I pondered weak and weary—

Poe, The Raven.

triple rhyme. Three-syllable rhyme, as—

Father all glorious,
O'er all victorious,
Come and reign over us,
Ancient of Days.

rhyme royal. A stanza of seven lines of heroic or five-foot iambic verse, rhyming ababbcc. It was called the rhyme royal from James I of Scotland who was both king and poet, and was also widely known as Troilus verse because Chaucer employed it in his TROILUS AND CRISEYDE, the first stanza of which is as follows:

The double sorwe of Troilus to tellen,
That was the king Priamus sone of Troye,
In lovinge, how his adventures fellen
Fro wo to wele, and after out of joye,
My purpos is, er that I part fro ye,
Thesiphone, thou help me for t'endyte
Thise woful verse that wepen as I wryte.

Rhymes to be Traded for Bread. An early collection of poems by Vachel LINDSAY actually composed upon his travels through the West, when he was making the experiment of exchanging his rhymes for a night's lodging on the road. Cf. his Adventures while Preaching the Gospel of Beauty (1914).

rhyming slang. A kind of slang popular in Great Britain in the early 20th century, in which the word intended was replaced by one that rhymed with it, as "Charley Prescott" for waistcoat, or "plates of meat" for feet. When the rhyme was a compound word, the rhyming part was almost invariably dropped, leaving one who did not know the idiom somewhat in the dark. Thus Chivy (Chevy) Chase rhymes with "face"; by dropping the "chase," chivy remains, and becomes the accepted slang word. Similarly, daisies became boots, thus: daisy-roots will rhyme with boots; drop the rhyme and daisy remains. By the same process, sky is slang for pocket, the compound word which gave birth to it being "sky-rocket." "Christmas," a railway guard, as "ask the Christmas," is, of course, from "Christmas-card"; and "raspberry," heart, is "raspberry-tart."

Rhys, Ernest (1859-1946). Welsh poet and anthologist. Editor of EVERYMAN'S LIBRARY (from 1905). Began his career as a coal-mine worker.

Rialto (From rivo alto). A famous island and commercial district in Venice, Italy. Shakespeare mentions it in The Merchant of Venice. Also, a marble bridge in Venice built (ca. 1590) across the Grand Canal.

Ribaut, Jean (ca. 1520-1565). French Huguenot navigator who laid claim to the territory of Florida for France in 1562 and wrote an account of his expedition and discovery of the Terra Florida. A modern account of it is to be found in Pioneers of France in the New World (1865) by Francis PARKMAN.

Ribbentrop, Joachim von (1893-1946). German national socialist diplomat, who had begun his career as a champagne salesman. Ambassador to Great Britain (1936); minister of foreign affairs (1938). He negotiated the German-Japanese anti-Comintern agreement (1936); the Russo-German non-aggression pact (1939); and the Italo-German-Japanese alliance (1940). Tried at Nuremberg and executed by hanging.

Ricardo, David (1772-1823). Famous English economist. It was the encouragement of James Mill (father of John Stuart MILL) that led to the publication of his Principles of Political Economy and Taxation (1817). He developed a theory of rent, property, and wages; and a quantity theory of money. He wrote economic studies, of which particularly one on bullion caused great discussion at the time of its publication.

Riccabocca, Dr. In BULWER LYTTON's My Novel, an Italian philosopher, a close friend of the Caxton family.

rice. The custom of throwing rice after a bride comes from India, rice being, with the Hindus, an emblem of fecundity. The bridegroom throws three handfuls over the bride, and the bride does the same over the groom. Among Americans, the rice is thrown by neighbors and friends.

Rice Christians. Converts to Christianity for worldly benefits, such as a supply of rice to Indians. The term implies a profession of Christianity born of lucre, not faith.

Rice, Mrs. Alice Caldwell, née Hegan (1870-1942). Popular American novelist, chiefly remembered for such books as Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch (1901); Lovey Mary (1903); etc. Her husband, Cale Young Rice (1872-1943), was a well-known American poet who received, however, more praise in England than in his own country; his Bridging the Years (1939) is an account of his literary life. He committed suicide after his wife's death.

Rice, Elmer. Original surname Reizenstein (1892-). American playwright, known for his use of experimental technique, his realism, and his portrayal of the problems of his time, especially social injustice; his more important plays so characterized alternated with comedy and melodrama of greater commercial appeal. His dramatic works include On Trial (1914); THE ADDING MACHINE (1923); Wake Up, Jonathan (1928); STREET SCENE (1929); Cock Robin (1929), written with Philip BARRY; Close Harmony (1929), written with Dorothy PARKER; The Subway (1929); See Naples and Die (1929); The Left Bank (1931); Counsellor-at-Law (1931); Black Sheep (1932); We, the People (1933); Judgment Day (1934), dealing with the trials held by the German Nazi government (see NAZIS); for the burning of the Reichstag building; Between Two Worlds (1935); American Landscape (1938); Two on an Island (1940); Flight to the West (1941); Dream Girl (1946). A Voyage to Purulia (1930), is a satire on Hollywood, and Imperial City (1937), dealing with life in New York City, is a novel. Rice first wrote plays for the Morningside Players, a little-theater group (see LITTLE THEATER) in New York.

Rice, Grantland (1880-). Well-known American sports-writer who wrote for years a widely syndicated column called "The Sportlight." His column in the New York Sun is called "Setting the Pace." He has also written Songs of the Stalwart (1917) and Songs of the Open (1924).

Riceyman Steps. A novel by Arnold BENNETT (1923), presenting a study of a miser, a book-seller, who influences his wife to the adoption of his parsimonious habits, starves himself to death, and brings about her death as well.

Rich, John (1682?-1761). A theatrical producer in London forevermore connected with John GAY, because he produced The Beggar's Opera, a play that became so successful that it was said to have "made Rich gay and Gay rich."

Rich, Obadiah (1783-1850). London bookseller whose catalogues were found very valuable by such historians as Washington Irving, Prescott, and George Bancroft.

Rich, Penelope, née Devereux (1562?-1607). Heroine of the sonnets by Sir Philip Sidney, which were collected under the title of Astrophel and Stella (1591).

Rich, Richard (fl. 1609-1610). British adventurer, whose News from Virginia, a well-known ballad based upon his encountering shipwreck in the Bermudas and his adventures in the Virginia Colony, is said to have suggested to Shakespeare certain scenes in The Tempest.

Richard I. See RICHARD COEUR DE LION.

Richard II (1367-1400). King of England (1377-1399) of the House of Plantagenet. Son of the Black Prince. As a young man at the time of the Peasants' Revolt under Wat Tyler (1381), he betrayed the people. Finally defeated by Henry of Bolingbroke (the later Henry IV), he was deposed by Parliament and probably killed in prison. He is the subject of a tragedy by Shakespeare.

Richard III (1452-1485). King of England (1483-1485) of the House of York. Known as "Crouchback." Cf. Crouchback by Carola Oman. He was the supposed murderer of the Princes in the Tower, who were the rightful king, Edward V, and his brother, the Duke of York. The story is told in Sir Thomas More's History of King Richard III, and is the subject of a famous painting by Sir John Everett Millais (1878). Richard III was finally defeated at Bosworth Field (August, 1485) by the Earl of Richmond, as Henry VII the first of the Tudors. He is the subject of a tragedy by Shakespeare. As Richard Plantagenet, duke of Gloucester, he appears in two parts of Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Richard, Poor, see POOR RICHARD.

Richard Carvel. A novel by Winston Churchill (1899), dealing with the Revolutionary period. As a young man in Maryland, Carvel falls in love with Dorothy Manners, but is forced to see her taken to England with a view to contracting a more ambitious marriage. Carvel's subsequent adventures, largely brought on by his uncle's jealousy of his position as heir of the family estates, include kidnapping by pirates, capture by John Paul Jones, a period in the debtor's prison of London, from which he is rescued by Dorothy, life in England, with such men as Horace Walpole and George Fox as his associates, and a series of exciting experiences during the Revolution. He serves with John Paul Jones, who has become his firm friend, is wounded, nursed back to health by Dorothy, and at last wins back his estate and succeeds in making her his wife.

Richard Cœur de Lion or Richard I (1157-1199). This king of England appears in three of Scott's novels. In The Betrothed (1825) he takes part in the siege of the Castle of Garde Doloureuse with his father Henry II. THE TALISMAN shows him crusading in the Holy Land, the enemy and friend of Saladin. In IVANHOE he appears at the tournament disguised as the Black Knight. He is the hero of Maurice Hewlett's RICHARD YEA-AND-NAY.

Richard Feverel, The Ordeal of. A novel by George Meredith (1859) with the sub-title A History of Father and Son. The plot has to do with the tragic working out of Sir Austin Feverel's self-evolved "system" of education, a system that implies the exclusion of most, if not all, normal interests. His son Richard, who is tutored at home by an uncle, Adrian Feverel, and carefully protected from any stray influences of sex, falls in love, nevertheless, with Lucy Desborough, a farmer's niece whom he happens to meet, and goaded by opposition, marries her before he is twenty. Sir Austin refuses to see Lucy and attempts to punish Richard by maneuvering to keep the two apart, with the result that Richard succumbs to the attractions of a clever woman of the world, while Lucy, in his absence, is annoyed by an aristocratic libertine. Bessie Berry, Richard's old nurse, a person much loved for her good judgment and large heart, finally succeeds in extricating Lucy from her difficulties. In the meantime, the repentant Richard lingers abroad until his Uncle Austin Wentworth, a man of tolerance and understanding, effects a reconciliation between Lucy and Sir Austin. Richard now returns, hears of the insult upon Lucy's honor, challenges his enemy to a duel, is badly wounded and on recovery learns that Lucy has died of brain fever.

Richard Roe. See under JOHN DOE. Also, hero of Human Being (1932) by Christopher Morley.

Richards, Grant (1872-1948). English publisher and writer. He was the second publisher of A. E. HOUSMAN and wrote Housman: 1859-1936 (1940) as well as several light novels and Memories of a Misspent Youth (1932).

Richards, Ivor Armstrong (1893-). English literary critic, psychologist, and aesthetician, known for his studies and experiments in aesthetic meaning and experience, especially in connection with the science of SEMANTICS, and for his insistence that the ostensible statements in poetry be considered in a different light from the statements involved in scientific exposition or factual information. His works include The Foundations of Aesthetics (1922), written with C. K. Ogden and James Wood; Principles of Literary Criticism (1924); Science and Poetry (1926); Practical Criticism: A Study of Literary Judgment (1929); Mencius on the Mind (1932), "experiments in multiple definition"; Coleridge on Imagination (1934); The Meaning of Meaning (1936), written with C. K. Ogden; The Philosophy of Rhetoric (1936); Interpretation in Teaching (1938); How to Read a Page (1942); The Republic of Plato (1942), a new version in BASIC ENGLISH. Richards had an important influence on literary criticism in England and the U.S. during the 1920's and 1930's, turning it from individual impressionism and moral and political consideration into more systematic and exact scientific channels.

Richards, Mrs. Laura Elizabeth, née Howe (1850-1943). Daughter of Julia Ward Howe; author of children's books and a biography of her mother which was awarded the Pulitzer prize for biography in 1917. Cf. Long, Long Ago by Alexander WOOLLCOTT.

Richardson, Dorothy M. (1882-). English novelist; a pioneer and outstanding exemplar of the STREAM-OF-CONSCIOUSNESS school. Her novels, grouped under the general title of Pilgrimage, are almost entirely concerned with the exploration of the human consciousness.

Richardson, Henry Handel. Pen name of Mrs. Henrietta Robertson, née Richardson (1880?-1946). Australian-born novelist. Her The Fortunes of Richard Mahony (1930), a trilogy including Australia Felix, The Way Home, and Ultima Thule, has been compared to Buddenbrooks by Thomas Mann and Jean Christophe by Romain Rolland.

Richardson, Samuel (1689-1761). English novelist, known for his contributions to the study of character and domestic and social manners in the development of the form of the novel in 18th-century England. His leading works, which influenced later writers of fiction, are PAMELA, OR VIRTUE REWARDED (1740), regarded as the first modern English novel; CLARISSA HARLOWE (1747-8); and SIR CHARLES GRANDISON (1753). Richardson was a joiner's son, a printer, and, for a while, a village letter-writer, which influenced him in the epistolary technique of his most famous novels. In 1741 he published a collection of prepared letters on various subjects for the use of people unable to write.

Richard Yea-and-Nay, The Life and Death of. A historical romance by Maurice HEWLETT (1900), dealing with the Third Crusade and the love affair of Richard the Lionhearted (see RICHARD COEUR DE LION) and Jehane Saint-Pol. The supposititious author is Abbot Milo, Richard's confessor and friend.

Riel, Hervé, see HERVÉ RIEL.

Rienzi, Cola di. Real name Niccolò Gabrini (1313-1354). Italian patriot, often called the "last of the Romans," who, for a time, restored the old Roman system of government, but failed and went to his death. He is the hero of Bulwer-Lytton's historical romance, Rienzi, the Last of the Tribunes (1835) and Wagner's opera Rienzi founded on the novel (1841).

Riesenberg, Felix (1879-1939). American author whose father was a sea captain and who followed the sea for a dozen years himself. His first novel, Under Sail (1915), celebrates the last of the sailing ships out of Maine. His East Side, West Side became a moving picture before the days of the talking film (1927). His non-fiction, too, concerns for the most part the sea.

rift in the lute. A small defect which mars the general result.

Unfaith in aught is want of faith in all
It is the little rift within the lute
That by-and-by will make the music mute,
And ever widening slowly silence all.
Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien: Vivien's Song.

Rigdon, Sidney (1793-1876). American Mormon leader. From his rewriting of a religious novel may have grown the Book of Mormon. See JOSEPH SMITH. He was excommunicated after Smith's assassination and founded his own church in Pittsburgh.

Rigdom Funnidos. A character in Carey's burlesque of Chrononhoton-Thologos (1734).

The name of this character supplied the sobriquet given by Sir Walter Scott to John Ballantyne (1774-1821), his publisher, because he was full of fun.

Riggs, Lynn (1899-). American playwright, author of plays dealing with life and characters in Oklahoma and Texas, especially in the framework of folk-themes of that region. These include Roadside (1930); Green Grow the Lilacs (1931), his best-known play, dramatizing a Western folk-song, basis of the sensationally successful musical play OKLAHOMA!; Russet Mantle (1936); The Cherokee right. In politics, the right is the Conservative party, because in the continental chambers the Conservatives sit on the right-hand side of the Speaker, and the Liberals, Radicals, and Labor on the left.

Night (1936), on the decline of the Cherokee Indians in Oklahoma.

right as a trivet. Quite right; in an excellent state. The trivet was originally a three-legged stand—a tripod—and the allusion is to its always standing firmly on its three legs.

right foot foremost. It is still considered unlucky to enter a house, or even a room, on the left foot, and in ancient Rome a boy was stationed at the door of a mansion to caution visitors not to cross the threshold with their left foot, which would have been an ill omen.

right-hand man. An invaluable, or confidential, assistant; originally applied to the cavalryman at the right of the line, whose duties were of great responsibility.

right of way. The legal right to make use of a certain passage whether high road, by-road, or private road. Private right of way may be claimed by immemorial usage, special permission, or necessity.

Right of Way, The. A novel (1901) by Sir Gilbert PARKER.

Rights, Declaration of. An instrument submitted to William and Mary and accepted by them (February 13, 1689), setting forth the fundamental principles of the constitution. The chief items are: The Crown cannot levy taxes without the consent of Parliament, nor keep a standing army in times of peace; the Members of Parliament are free to utter their thoughts, and a Parliament is to be convened every year; elections are to be free, trial by jury to be inviolate, the right of petition not to be interfered with, and the Sovereign should take the oath against Transubstantiation and agree not to marry a Roman Catholic.

to rights. In apple-pie order.

to put things to rights. To put every article in its proper place.

Rights of Man, The. A political work by Thomas PAINE (1791–1792), defending the French Revolution against attacks made on it by Edmund BURKE. In it, Paine argues that civil government exists only through a contract with the majority of men for the safeguarding of the individual, and that if man's "natural rights" are interfered with by the government, revolution is permissible. As a result of this tract, Paine found himself forced to flee to France and was tried in England in his absence as a traitor. See also SOCIAL CONTRACT.

Rigoletto. An opera by VERDI (1851) based on Victor Hugo's drama Le Roi s'amuse (The King Amuses Himself). The opera scene is laid in 16th century Mantua instead of the court of Francis I, and the principal character becomes Rigoletto instead of Triboulet. In the opera, Rigoletto is the jester and attendant of the Duke of Mantua, and it is his daughter Gilda who is finally seduced by the amorous Duke. Rigoletto, who has assisted his master in many adventures of this nature, and indeed unknowingly in this one, vows a horrible vengeance. But the assassins whom he hires agree, in deference to a woman's plea, to save the Duke if a substitute can be found. Gilda, who has overheard, appears in man's attire, and when the jester comes to carry away the body of his victim in a sack, he finds it is his daughter.

Rig-Veda. See VEDA.

Riis, Jacob Augustus (1849–1914). American journalist and reformer, of Danish birth, known for his crusade against slum conditions in New York City. His books, through which he called attention to the social ills of his time, include How the Other Half Lives (1890); The Children of the Poor (1892); Nisby's Christmas (1893); Out of Mulberry Street (1898); A Ten Years' War (1900); The Making of an American (1901), his autobiography and his best-known book; The Battle with the Slum (1902); Peril and Preservation of the Home (1903). Riis first came to the U.S. as a penniless immigrant, later worked as a police reporter on the N.Y. Tribune, his experiences in this capacity serving to interest him in social reform, and was eventually made secretary of the N.Y. Small Parks Commission in 1897. Theodore ROOSEVELT gave him assistance in his work.

Rikki-Tikki-Tavi. A pet mongoose in KIP-LING's The Jungle Book (1894), who twice saves his boy master from danger and once his master's father and mother.

Riksdag. The Swedish legislature. The word is identical with German Reichstag. In English it is normally referred to as the Diet.

Riley, James Whitcomb (1849–1916). The "Hoosier poet," best known for his dialect poems of Indiana, such as Little Orphant Annie, Waitin' for the Cat to Die, The Raggedy Man, etc.

Rilke, Rainer Maria (1875–1926). German lyric poet, influenced by BAUDELAIRE and the romantics (see ROMANTICISM), known for his mysticism and his later use of a highly developed system of symbolism. Among English or American translations of his work are the following: The Notebook of Malte Laurids Brigge (Die Aufzeichnungen des Malte Laurids Brigge; 1922), also translated as The Journal of My Other Self (1930); Translations from the Poetry of Rainer Maria Rilke (1931); Stories of God (Vom lieben Gott und andere Geschichten; 1932), short mystical tales; The Tale of the Love and Death of Cornet Christopher Rilke (Die Weise von Liebe und Tod des Cornets Christopher Rilke, 1932); Letters to a Young Poet (Briefe an einen jungen Dichter; 1934); Poems (1934); Requiem, And Other Poems (1935); Sonnets to Orpheus (Sonette an Orpheus, Eng., 1936, Am., 1942); Later Poems (1938); Fifty Selected Poems (1940); Wartime Letters, 1914-1921 (1940); Duino Elegies (Duineser Elegien; 1939); Selections from The Book of Hours (Das Stundenbuch, 1937; 1941); Letters, 1893-1910 (1945) and Selected Letters: 1902-1926 (1946).

An intense interest in Rilke's poetry sprang up in England and the U.S. in the 1930's, Stephen SPENDER and Muriel RUKEYSER being among the poets whose work then showed his influence in part. For a study of the poet and his work, consult Rainer Maria Rilke, by E. M. Butler.

Rima. The "bird-girl," heroine of W. H. Hudson's GREEN MANSIONS.

Rimbaud, Arthur (1854-1891). French poet, considered an important forerunner of SYMBOLISM and in some respects of SURREALISM. His poetry is characterized by dramatic and imaginative vision, especially in the realm of hallucination, extreme sensibility, the partial use of free verse, the distortion of common meaning and syntax, the use of words for tone-color (as expressed in his famous Sonnet des Voyelles), and the grouping of images and associations about a single central metaphor. His best-known works are Les Illuminations, prose poems, Le Bateau Ivre (The Drunken Boat), and Une Saison en Enfer (A Season in Hell), a prose-poem, called a "psychological autobiography," describing the poet's tortured spiritual experiences. Rimbaud was a striking and enigmatic personality, brought up in poverty and strict religious home training by a widowed mother. He was an industrious, quiet, and irreproachably mannered student in a provincial school until the age of fifteen, when suddenly, in savage rebellion, he turned to cruelty, perversion, and dissolute wanderings in Paris, Brussels, and London. He studied occult writings, especially PLATO, the CABALA, and Buddhist scriptures, to make himself a seer, believing the rôle of poetry to be one of mystic revelation, and deliberately debauched himself in order to reach a transcendent world through sin and suffering and "become God." For awhile he was associated intimately with Paul VERLAINE and had a powerful influence—morally corruptive but aesthetically fruitful—on the older poet. All of Rimbaud's known poetry was written before he was twenty years old; the remainder of his life he spent as a trader in Africa. He came to be regarded by many critics as an authentic genius and had an important influence on a number of 20th-century poets. A translation of Une Saison en Enfer by Delmore SCHWARTZ was published in 1940. For a study of his life and works, consult Arthur Rimbaud, by Enid Starkie.

Rimini, Francesca di, see FRANCESCA DI RIMINI.

Rimmon. The Babylonian god who presided over storms. Milton, in PARADISE LOST, identifies him with one of the fallen angels:

Him followed Rimmon, whose delightful seat
Was fair Damascus, on the fertile bank
Of Abbana and Pharpar, lucid streams Bk 1, 467

to bow the knee to Rimmon. To palter with one's conscience; to do that which one knows to be wrong so as to save one's face. The allusion is to NAAMAN's obtaining Elisha's permission to worship the god when with his master (2 Kings, v. 18).

Rimski-Korsakov, Nikolai Andreievich (1844-1908). Famous Russian composer. Member of the nationalist "Five." Professor of composition at the Conservatory of Music in St. Petersburg (1871). Best known for the symphonic suites Antar, Russian Easter, and Schéherazade. His operas, based on Russian legends, include the famous Le Coq d'or.

Rinaldi, Dr. In Ernest Hemingway's A FAREWELL TO ARMS, an Italian physician and friend of Frederic HENRY, the hero. Rinaldi, essentially a light-hearted Latin, is cast down by the monotony, horror, and suffering of war that he sees about him in his hospital work.

Rinaldo. One of the great heroes of medieval romance (also called Renault of Montauban, Regnault, Reynold, etc.), a paladin of Charlemagne, cousin of ORLANDO, and one of the four sons of Aymon. He is the owner of the famous horse Bayardo, and is always painted with the characteristics of a borderer; he is valiant, ingenious, rapacious and unscrupulous.

In Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO, he appears as the son of the fourth Marquis d'Este, Lord of Mount Auban or Albano, eldest son of Amon or Aymon, nephew of Charlemagne, and Bradamant's brother. He is the rival of his cousin Orlando for the favor of the fair Angelica, but Angelica detests him. Pulci introduces the same character in his burlesque poem entitled MORGANTE MAGGIORE.

In Tasso's JERUSALEM DELIVERED, Rinaldo is the Achilles of the Christian army, despising gold and power but craving renown. He is the son of Bertoldo and Sophia, and nephew of Guelpho. At the age of fifteen he joins the Crusaders as an adventurer, and, having slain Gernando, is summoned by Godfrey to public trial, but goes into voluntary exile.

Rinehart, Mary Roberts (1876-). American novelist, short-story writer, and playwright, best known for her humorous stories and popular detective novels. These include The Circular Staircase (1908); The Man in Lower Ten (1909); the numerous Tish stories; The Door (1930). My Story (1931) is an autobiography.

Rinehart, Stanley M., Jr. (1897-). Son of Mary Roberts Rinehart. With his brother, Frederick Rinehart (1902-), and John Farrar (1896-), founded the publishing house of Farrar & Rinehart which preceded (to 1945) Rinehart & Co. and Farrar and Straus. Alan Rinehart, a writer, is the third son.

Ring and the Book, The. A long poem (20,934 lines), by Robert BROWNING (1872), telling twelve times over, from different points of view, the story of a cause célèbre of Italian history (1698). Guido Franceschini, a Florentine nobleman of shattered fortune, marries Pompilia, an heiress, to repair his state. Pompilia is a supposititious child of Pietro, supplied by his wife, Violante, to prevent certain property going to an heir not his own. When the bride discovers the motive of the bridegroom, she reveals to him this fact, and the first trial occurs to settle the said property. The count treats his bride so brutally that she quits his roof under the protection of Caponsacchi, a young priest, and takes refuge in Rome. Guido follows and has them arrested; a trial ensues, and a separation is permitted. Pompilia is sent to a convent and Caponsacchi is suspended for three years. Pompilia's health gives way, and as the birth of a child is expected she is permitted to leave the convent and live with her putative parents. She pleads for a divorce, but, pending the suit, the child is born. The Count, hearing thereof, murders Pietro, Violante, and Pompilia but, being taken red-handed, he is executed.

The poem is a series of dramatic monologues, in which the whole of the evidence is weighed and sifted. The Pope pronounces the final judgment. He names Pompilia "perfect in whiteness," and calls her "my rose I gather for the breast of God." Of Caponsacchi he says

And surely not so very much apart
Need I place thee, my warrior-priest.

The title is explained thus: The book is a parchment-covered book Browning picked up in a square in Florence in the Piazza San Lorenzo, containing the records of the Franceschini murder case.

The story . . . forms a circle of evidence to its one central truth; and this circle was constructed in the manner in which the worker in Etruscan gold prepares the ornament circlet which will be worn as a ring. The pure metal is too soft to bear hammer or file; it must be mixed with alloy to gain the necessary power of resistance. The ring once formed and embossed, the alloy is disengaged, and a pure gold ornament remains.—Mrs. Orr, Handbook to Browning.

Ring des Nibelungen, Der. A series of four music-dramas or operas by Richard WAGNER based on old Scandinavian legends and first performed together at Bayreuth in 1876. Although Wagner's principal source was not the NIBELUNGENLIED but the VOLSUNGA SAGA, the Nibelungenlied, the Elder and Younger Eddas and the Eckelied were also drawn upon for material. The interest centers about the magic ring made from the Rhine gold and the curse it brought to all who owned it.

The four operas may be briefly summarized as follows:

(1) Das Rheingold (The Rhine Gold; 1869). In the bottom of the Rhine is a hoard of gold guarded by the Rhine Maidens. Alberich, the dwarf, forswears love to gain this hoard, which confers boundless power upon its possessor. From it he makes a magic ring. Meantime Wotan, chief of the gods, has given Freya, the goddess of youth and love, to the giants as payment for their labor in building for him the castle Valhalla. Without Freya, everything grows old, even the gods. To get her back, Wotan and Loki steal the ring and the hoard from Alberich and trade them for the goddess. Alberich has put a curse on the ring; and almost immediately the giant Fafner kills his brother Fasolt. As the opera ends, the gods go over the rainbow bridge to Valhalla.

(2) Die Walküre (The Valkyr; 1870). Wotan is the father of two children, Siegmund and Sieglinde, who grow up on earth in ignorance of each other but who, by the desire of Wotan, are to mate in the interests of the coveted ring. Sieglinde has married Hunding, but when Siegmund comes, she goes with him into the forest. Fricka, Wotan's wife, the goddess of marriage, insists that Siegmund be punished, and Wotan finally yields and commissions the Valkyr Brunhild with the task. In spite of her orders, Brunhild tries to protect Siegmund, but Hunding, finally aided by the angry Wotan, kills him. She succeeds, however, in escaping with Siegmund, who is about to give birth to the hero Siegfried. Brunhild is punished by being made a mortal woman and is left asleep on a mountain peak, surrounded with flame through which only a hero can pass.

(3) Siegfried (1876). Siegfried, since the death of his mother Sieglinde, has been brought up to the trade of the smithy by Mime, the dwarf, whom he has learned to scorn. He remakes his father's sword and slays a dragon who is really the giant Fafner. A drop of the dragon's blood on his tongue makes him understand the language of the birds. Acting on the information they give him, he kills the treacherous Mime, secures the magic ring and finds Brunhild and marries her.

(4) Götterdämmerung (The Dusk of the Gods; 1876). Siegfried leaves the magic ring with Brunhild and goes to seek adventure. At the court of Gunther and his sister Gutrunne, their half-brother Hagen, son of the dwarf Alberich, gives Siegfried a magic potion that causes him to forget Brunhild and become a suitor for the hand of Gutrunne. He even agrees to secure Brunhild for Gunther and does so. Unable to understand his fickleness, Brunhild denounces him and enters into schemes for revenge with the wily Hagen. At a hunting feast, just as Siegfried is remembering his past and calling for Brunhild, he is killed by a thrust in the back from Hagen. The hero's body is burned on a funeral pyre; Brunhild sacrifices herself in the flames; Gunther and Hagen have perished in the struggle for the ring, which now returns to the Rhine Maidens, and Valhalla, with all the gods, is destroyed by fire.

Ringan, Fleda. The heroine of Susan Warner's QUEECHY.

Ringling. Name of five American brothers who built up their famous circus by acquiring, in addition to their own initial circus (organized in 1884), the Forepaugh-Sells Circus (1906) and the Barnum and Bailey Circus (1907). The eldest was born in 1852; the last one died in 1936.

Rintoul, Lord. In Barrie's LITTLE MINISTER, Babbie's fiancé from whom she wishes to escape.

Rio Bravo. Literally, the fine river. Another name, no longer in current use, of the Rio Grande.

Riordan, Mrs. Dante. In James Joyce's A PORTRAIT OF THE ARTIST AS A YOUNG MAN, a pious Irish woman who once studied to be a nun and turns against PARNELL. In an outstanding scene in the novel, Mrs. Riordan, a guest named Mr. Casey, and Simon Dedalus, father of Stephen DEDALUS, the hero, quarrel bitterly about Parnell and the Catholic Church during a Christmas dinner.

R. I. P. (Lat., requiescat in pace). "May he (or she) rest in peace"; a symbol used on mourning cards, tombstones, etc.

Ripheus. A Trojan, highly praised for his justice and nobility of character in Virgil's Aeneid (II. 426), and one of the two pagans whom DANTE, in his Paradiso (xx. 67), admits to heaven.

Ripley, George (1802-1880). Massachusetts transcendentalist who helped to organize and headed Brook Farm (1841-1847). After its failure he continued, with Parke Godwin, editing its organ, The Harbinger (1845-1849). He became a distinguished literary critic and edited with Charles A. DANA the New American Cyclopaedia (16 vols.; 1858-1863).

Ripley, Robert LeRoy (1893-). Began as a sports cartoonist. Creator of "Believe-It-or-Not" cartoons (1918), which were widely syndicated in various parts of the world.

Rip Van Winkle. The creation of Washington IRVING, one of the stories in the Sketch Book (1819). It tells how Rip Van Winkle, a Dutch colonist of New York in pre-Revolutionary days, met with a strange man in a ravine of the Catskill Mountains. Rip helps him to carry a keg, and when they reach the destination he sees a number of odd creatures playing nine-pins, but no one utters a word. This is the quaint Dutch crew of Hendrick Hudson. Van Winkle seizes the first opportunity to take a sip at the keg, falls into a stupor, and sleeps for twenty years. On waking, he finds that he is a tottering old man, his wife is dead and buried, his daughter is married, his native village has been remodeled, and America has become independent. The story was dramatized with great success, Rip being one of the notable rôles of Joseph Jefferson. In more recent years Percy MacKAYE wrote the libretto and Reginald de Koven the music for a folk opera Rip Van Winkle (1920). See also Peter KLAUS.

Rise of Silas Lapham, The. A novel by W. D. HOWELLS (1885). Silas Lapham is a self-made man whose crudities are in sharp contrast with the culture of the Boston aristocracy whom he would like to see his daughters meet on friendly terms. He has built up a huge fortune; finally he becomes involved in speculations and is ruined, but shows in disaster the sterling qualities of his character. Meantime the Laphams have taken it for granted that Tom Corey, who is a frequent caller, is a suitor for the hand of Irene Lapham, but developments show that it is her sister Penelope whom he loves. Irene also is able to count upon a hidden strength in calamity.

Silas Lapham is one of the great triumphs of modern fiction. He is a type and yet he is intensely individual . . . Strong, gentle, pushing, pertinacious, bragging, unconsciously scrupulous with the scrupulousness of the New England conscience, provincial, limited in his ideas, and yet not hostile to the light in so far as he can perceive it, Silas Lapham is an American type which has never before been so boldly presented.

Brander Matthews, London Saturday Review.

Rise of the Dutch Republic, The. The principal work of the American historian John Lothrop MOTLEY (1856).

Risorgimento. Italian, literally "resurrection." The word is used (1) as a synonym of Italian Renaissance and (2) for the revolutionary movement in Italy at the time of MAZ-ZINI and GARIBALDI. It was the name of a newspaper founded (1847) by Count Cavour.

Ristori, Adelaide (1822-1906). Famous Italian tragedienne who first visited New York in 1866, and toured the country successfully. Her most notable roles were Francesca da Rimini, Maria Stuart, Medea, Phaedra, and Lady Macbeth.

Rita, Doña. The heroine of Conrad's ARROW OF GOLD.

Ritchey, George Willis (1864-). American astronomer and optical inventor, who designed (1931) and constructed the forty-inch reflecting telescope in the U.S. Naval Observatory in Washington, D.C.

Ritchie, Anne Isabella, née Thackeray (1837-1919). Eldest daughter of William Makepeace THACKERAY, a novelist in her own right.

Ritson, Joseph (1752-1803). English antiquary, remembered for his aggressive criticism, as in his attack on STEEVENS' edition of Shakespeare. He published several collections of old English songs. He also produced a valuable Bibliographia Poetica, a catalogue of the English poets from the 12th to the 16th centuries.

Rittenhouse, Jessie Belle (1869-1948). American poet and anthologist, chiefly known for her anthologies of contemporary American verse and an excellent appraisal of newer American poets after the turn of the century, The Younger American Poets (1904).

Rivals, The. A comedy by R. B. SHERIDAN (1775). The rivals are Bob ACRES and Ensign BEVERLY (alias Captain Absolute), and Lydia LANGUISH is the lady for whom they contend.

Rivera, Diego (1886-). Famous Mexican painter, especially known for his murals. His fresco in Rockefeller Center in New York was removed because it was felt to be too radical in its political allusions. It was repainted in Mexico City.

Rivera y Orbaneja, Miguel Primo de (1870-1930). By a military coup d'état he proclaimed a directorate of army and naval officers in Spain (September 12, 1923) and made himself dictator. He later restored the original government and made himself premier. Shortly before his death he resigned.

Rivers, Guy. Hero of Simms' novel Guy RIVERS.

Rives, Amélie. Princess Troubetzkoy (1863-1945). Popular American novelist and playwright who married Prince Pierre Troubetzkoy of Russia.

Rizal, José (1861-1896). National hero of the Filipinos. The Spanish Government sent him into exile because of his political story Noli Me Tangere (1886). In 1896, on his return to the Philippines, he was charged with fomenting revolution and executed. Before his death he wrote the remarkable poem Mi Ultimo Adiós, which has been translated by Murat Halstead.

Rizpah. A poem (1880) by Tennyson. Cf. 2 Sam. xxi. 8-10.

Rizzio, David (1533?-1566). Italian musician who entered the service of Mary Queen of Scots, became her private foreign secretary, arranged her marriage with Darnley, and finally attained such influence that he was attacked and killed in Queen Mary's apartment at Holyrood Palace in Edinburgh by Darnley, Morton, and Lindsay. Swinburne treats this event in Mary Stuart. A Tragedy (1881), and Maurice Hewlett tells of it in THE QUEEN'S QUAIR.

Road to Rome, The. A comedy (1927) by Robert SHERWOOD.

Roads of Destiny. A book of short stories (1909) by O. HENRY.

Roan Stallion. A symbolical narrative by Robinson JEFFERS (1925), dealing with the half-religious love for a beautiful and powerful roan stallion which grows up in the emotions of a California farmer's wife, repelled and disgusted by her brutal husband. Eventually she permits the horse to trample her husband to death, but herself shoots the animal which has been to her the symbol of a beautiful and passionate ideal.

Roaring Girl, The. A comedy by Thomas MIDDLETON and Thomas DEKKER, produced in 1611. The leading character is Moll CUTPURSE, who was a celebrated thief at the time the authors wrote. To win the consent of his father to his marriage with Mary Fitzallard, Sebastian Wentgrave persuades Moll to assist him in a little deception whereby he pretends to be eager to marry the notorious female cutpurse. The play is particularly noted for its realistic atmosphere of Jacobean London.

roaring forties. In the language of sailors, the part of the ocean between the 40th and 50th degrees of latitude, north or south, where there are usually very strong "brave west winds."

rob. rob Peter to pay Paul. Take away from one person in order to give to another; or merely to shift a debt—to pay it off by incurring another one. Fable has it that the phrase alludes to the fact that on December 17, 1550, the abbey church of St. Peter, Westminster, was advanced to the dignity of a cathedral by letters patent; but ten years later it was joined to the diocese of London again, and many of its estates appropriated to the repairs of St. Paul's Cathedral. But it was a common saying long before this date, and had been used by Wyclif about 1380:

How should God approve that you rob Peter, and give this robbery to Paul in the name of Christ?—Select Works, III, 176.

The hint of the President Viglius to the Duke of Alva when he was seeking to impose ruinous taxation in the Netherlands (1569) was that—it was not desirable to rob St. Peter's altar in order to build one to St. Paul.—Motley, Dutch Republic, III, v.

Robarts, Lucy. Sister of the vicar in TROLLOPE's Framley Parsonage. The author said of her that she was "perhaps the most natural English girl that I ever drew—the most natural, at any rate, of those who have been good girls."

Rev. Mr. Robarts. The vicar of Framley Parsonage, a man of good intentions but weak will, who is overwhelmed by debt.

Robbers, The. A drama by SCHILLER (1781), which, following the publication of Goethe's Werther, had a great influence on the romantic movement of the STURM-UND-DRANG period. The hero of the drama is Karl Moor, a young man of good birth and supposedly high motives, who turns robber because of his reaction against a society that will tolerate such injustice as has been shown him by a hypocritical brother.

Robbery under Arms. A novel (1888) by Rolf Boldrewood, pseudonym of Thomas Alexander Browne (1828–1915), who wrote some thirty novels and stories of adventure in Australia.

Robbia, Luca della (1400?–1482). Famous Florentine sculptor, best-known for a series of panels called the Singing Galleries. His nephew and pupil, Andrea della Robbia (1437–1528), became a terra-cotta sculptor.

Robert Elsmere. A novel by Mrs. Humphry WARD (1888), dealing with 19th century religious problems. The hero is a young clergyman whose intellectual convictions force him to leave the church. His wife Catherine loves him but cannot share his changing faith.

Robert of Gloucester (fl. 1260–1300). English chronicler. Author or co-author of a famous metrical chronicle bringing the history of England down to the latter part of the 13th century.

Robert of Lincoln. A poem by William Cullen BRYANT, on the song of the bobolink.

Roberto vincera. During World War II, an Italian slogan. Literally, "Robert will win." Roberto is contracted from Rome, Berlin, Tokyo.

Roberts, Cecil (1892–). A versatile English writer of short stories, novels, plays, etc. His first novel, Scissors (1922), introduced Rupert Brooke and Philip Gibbs as "Ronald Stream" and "Phipps."

Roberts, Sir Charles George Douglas (1860–1943). Leading Canadian poet and novelist. Cousin of Bliss CARMAN. His historical romances (A Sister to Evangeline, etc.) and animal stories (The Kindred of the Wild, etc.) were widely read. Hamlin GARLAND called The Heart of the Ancient Wood (1900) a beautifully written and deeply-felt sylvan romance.

Roberts, David. In Galsworthy's Strife, the chief spokesman for the strikers.

Roberts, Elizabeth Madox (1886–1941). American novelist, poet, and short-story writer, known for her treatments, humorous, lyrical, and dramatic, of the pioneers and the "poor whites" of Kentucky and the Virginias. Among her works are The Time of Man (1926); My Heart and My Flesh (1927); Jingling in the Wind (1928); The Great Meadow (1930), her best-known novel, dealing with the settlement of Kentucky by the pioneers; A Buried Treasure (1931); The Haunted Mirror (1932) and Not by Strange Gods (1941), short-story collections; He Sent Forth a Raven (1935); Black Is My Truelove's Hair (1938); In the Great Steep's Garden (1915), Under the Tree (1922), and Song in the Meadow (1940), verse.

Roberts, Frederick Sleigh. 1st Earl Roberts of Kandahar. Known as Bobs or Bobs Bahadur (1832–1914). Famous British field marshal who compelled the surrender of the Boers in 1900. He annexed the Transvaal and, after his retirement, devoted himself to the creation of a citizen army. He wrote The Rise of Wellington (1895) and Forty-One Years in India (1897). Cf. Kipling's poem, Bobs.

Roberts, Kenneth Lewis (1885–). American historical novelist. Best known for his Rabble in Arms (1933). His Oliver Wiswell (1940) is a study of an American Tory at the time of the Revolution. He has a real gift for re-creating a historical period.

Roberts, Morley (1857–1942). English writer of fiction who led a roving life reflected in his books.

Roberts, Owen Josephus (1875–). Associate Justice, U.S. Supreme Court (from 1930).

Robertson, Eileen Arbuthnot. English author. Her best-known novel is Four Frightened People (1931), which exemplifies her biting wit and was made into a moving picture.

Robertson, Morgan (1861–1915). A sea-roving American writer, best known for his stories of the sea.

Robertson, William (1721–1793). Scottish historian and king's historiographer. Best known for his History of the Reign of Emperor Charles V (1769), which drew the praise of both Gibbon and Voltaire and was an important source for SCHILLER's Don Carlos.

Robert the Devil or Le Diable. (1) Robert, Duke of Normandy (1028–1035), father of William the Conqueror. He supported the English against CANUTE, and made the pilgrimage to Jerusalem. Many legends grew up regarding his daring and cruelty. The Norman tradition is that his wandering ghost will not be allowed to rest till the Day of Judgment. He is also called Robert the Magnificent.

Meyerbeer's opera Roberto il Diavolo (1831), founded on this story, shows the struggle in Robert between the virtue inherited from his mother, and the vice imparted by his father. The latter, Bertram, is a sort of arch fiend who invariably appears at the critical moment to lure his son away from duty. In the end, by the aid of his foster-sister Alice, Robert breaks the spell and wins the love of Isabella, princess of Sicily. The libretto is by Scribe and Delavigne.

(2) Robert François Damiens (1715–1757), who attempted to assassinate Louis XV, was also called Robert le Diable.

Robeson, Paul (1898–). Celebrated American Negro singer and actor. He has appeared in The Emperor Jones (1923), Porgy and Bess, All God's Chillun Got Wings, Show Boat, Othello, etc. He has sung Negro spirituals in concert appearances and has gone on concert tours in Europe and in Russia. His political sympathies lie with the latter country.

Robespierre, Maximilien François (1758–1794). Known as "the Sea-Green Incorruptible." A leader in the French Revolution who was practically prime minister of the Committee of Public Safety in the year 1793–1794. To him must be laid the responsibility for most of the REIGN OF TERROR. He was overthrown by the Revolution of the Ninth Thermidor in 1794 and sent to the guillotine. His death ended the Reign of Terror.

Robin. In Shakespeare's MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR, the page of Sir John FALSTAFF.

Robin, Fanny. In Hardy's FAR FROM THE MADDING CROWD, a former love of Sergeant Troy.

Robin Adair. A famous song written by Lady Caroline Keppel, daughter of the second Earl of Albemarle. She married (after the usual run of true love) Robert Adair, a young Irish surgeon, in 1758. The air was the old Irish tune of "Eileen Aroon," which her lover had sung to her.

Robin and Makyne. An ancient Scottish pastoral. Robin is a shepherd for whom Makyne sighs. She goes to him and tells her love, but Robin turns a deaf ear, and the damsel goes home to weep. After a time the tables are turned, and Robin goes to Makyne to plead for her heart and hand; but the damsel replies,

The man that will not when he may Sall have nocht when he wald.

Percy, Reliques, etc., series ii.

Robin Goodfellow. A "drudging fiend," and merry domestic fairy, famous for mischievous pranks and practical jokes; also known as Puck, the son of Oberon, and the fairies' jester. The story is that at night-time he will sometimes do little services for the family over which he presides. There is a ballad by this title, attributed to Ben JONSON.

Robin Gray, Auld. See under AULD.

Robin Hood. This traditionary outlaw and hero of English ballads is mentioned by the Scottish historian Fordun, who died about 1386, and also in the Vision of Piers Plowman, Bk. V, 402 (see PIERS PLOWMAN), but which of these is the earlier is uncertain. It is doubtful whether he ever lived—the truth probably being that the stories associated with his name crystallized gradually around the personality of some popular local hero of the early 13th century—but the legends are that he was born in 1160 at Locksley, Notts, or, alternatively, that he was the outlawed Earl of Huntingdon, Robert Fitzooth, in disguise. His chief haunt was Sherwood Forest, in Nottinghamshire. Ancient ballads abound with anecdotes of his personal courage, his skill in archery, his generosity and his great popularity. It is said that he robbed the rich, but gave largely to the poor, and that he protected women and children with chivalrous magnanimity. According to tradition, he was treacherously bled to death by a nun, at the command of his kinsman, the prior of Kirkless, in Notts.

Robin Hood's companions in Sherwood Forest and Barnsdale, Yorks, were Little John, Friar Tuck, Will Scarlet, Allen-a-Dale, George-a-Greene and Maid Marian. According to one tradition, Robin Hood and Little John were two heroes defeated with Simon de Montfort at the battle of Evesham.

The first published collection of ballads about the hero was the Lytel Geste of Robin Hood, printed by Wynkyn de Worde about 1490. The stories about him formed the basis of early dramatic representations and were later amalgamated with the MORRIS DANCES and May-day revels.

a Robin Hood wind. A cold thaw-wind. Tradition runs that Robin Hood used to say he could bear any cold except that which a thaw-wind brought with it.

epitaph of Robin Hood.

Hear underneath this latil stean,
Laiz Robert earl of Huntington;
Nea arcir ver az hie sac geud,
An pipl kauld him Robin Heud.
Sich utlaz az he an hiz men
Viil England nivr si agen.

Obit. 24, Kalend Dikembris, 1247.

Notwithstanding this epitaph, other traditions assert that Robin Hood lived into the reign of Edward III, and died in 1325. One of the ballads relates how Robin Hood took service under Edward II.

Robin Hood and Guy of Gisborne. Robin Hood and Little John, having had a tiff, part company, and Little John falls into the hands of the sheriff of Nottingham, who binds him to a tree. Meanwhile, Robin Hood meets with Guy of Gisborne, sworn to slay the "bold forrester." The two bowmen struggle together, but Guy is slain, and Robin Hood rides till he comes to the tree where Little John is bound. The sheriff mistakes him for Guy of Gisborne, and gives him charge of the prisoner. Robin cuts the cord, hands Guy's bow to Little John, and the two soon put to flight the sheriff and his men. (Percy, Reliques.)

to sell Robin Hood's pennyworth. To sell things at half their value. As Robin Hood stole his wares, he sold them, under their intrinsic value, for just what he could get on the nonce.

An excellent sketch of Robin Hood is given by DRAYTON in his Polyolbion, xxvi. Sir Walter SCOTT introduces him in two novels—IVANHOE and THE TALISMAN. In the former he first appears as Locksley the archer, at the tournament. He is also called "Dickon Bend-the-Bow." Ritson, in 1791, published all the ballads, songs, and poems extant on this famous outlaw; and T. L. PEACOCK, in 1822, wrote a romance called Maid Marian, on the subject. He is also the hero of a number of dramas and operas, especially a successful light opera by Reginald DE KOVEN (Am.), and has been played in moving pictures by Douglas FAIRBANKS and Errol Flynn.

Robin of Bagshot. One of the highwaymen in Gay's BEGGAR'S OPERA, noted for the number of his aliases.

Robin Redbreast. The tradition is that when our Lord was on His way to Calvary, a robin picked a thorn out of His crown, and the blood which issued from the wound falling on the bird dyed its breast with red.

Another fable is that the robin covers dead bodies with leaves; this is referred to in Webster's White Devil, V, 1 (1612):

Call for the robin-red-breast and the wren,
Since o'er shady groves they hover,
And with leaves and flowers do cover
The friendless bodies of unburied men.

And in the ballad The Babes in the Wood—

No burial this pretty pair
From any man receives,
Till Robin Redbreast piously
Did cover them with leaves.

Robins, Elizabeth. Pseudonym C. E. Raymond (1862–). American actress and writer who appeared in England in several of Ibsen's plays and in Paolo and Francesca by Stephen Phillips. One of her novels, My Little Sister (1913), dealing with the white-slave traffic, was a sensational success.

Robins, Raymond (1873–). American social economist who studied conditions in Russia in 1933. His wife, Margaret Dreier, also a social economist, was president of the International Congress of Working Women in Vienna in 1923. Brother of Elizabeth ROBINS.

Robinson, Bill (1878–). American Negro buck-and-wing dancer, vaudeville actor, tap-dancer, etc., known as "the soft-shoe king."

Robinson, Boardman (1876–). Painter and illustrator. Well known for his murals and lithographs. He illustrated John Reed's The War in Eastern Europe (1916) having accompanied the author on a tour through Russia and the Balkans.

Robinson, Corinne Roosevelt (1861–1933). Sister of president Theodore ROOSEVELT. Known for her social service and Red Cross work, and also as a poet and the biographer of her brother.

Robinson, Edwin Arlington (1869–1935). American poet, known for his narrative poems and his objective psychological portraits of New England characters, many of them representing tragedy and frustration, written usually in blank verse or dramatic monologue form, in the simple imagery and irregular rhythms of everyday speech. The influence of Thomas HARDY and Robert BROWNING has been found in his work. Collections of Robinson's poetry include The Torrent and the Night Before (1896); The Children of the Night (1897); Captain Craig (1902); The Town Down the River (1910); The Man Against the Sky (1916); The Three Taverns (1920); Collected Poems (1922), winner of the Pulitzer Prize; Dionysus in Doubt (1925);

Sonnets (1928); Nicodemus (1932). Among his narrative and dramatic poems are: Van Zorn (1914); The Porcupine (1915); Merlin (1917); Lancelot (1920), and Tristram (1927, awarded the Pulitzer prize in 1928), a trilogy on themes of ARTHURIAN ROMANCE; Avon's Harvest (1921); Roman Bartholow (1923); The Man Who Died Twice (1924, awarded the 1925 Pulitzer prize); Cavender's House (1929); The Glory of the Nightingales (1930); Matthias at the Door (1931); Talifer (1933); Amaranth (1934); King Jasper (1935). These works are marked by somberness, tragedy, moral conflict, and emphasis on the individual.

Robinson worked at uncongenial occupations in New York City in the early years of his career until Theodore ROOSEVELT became interested in his poetry and secured a position for him in the N.Y. Customs House in 1905. See also TILBURY TOWN.

Robinson, Henry Crabb (1775-1867). English diarist and friend of the Lake poets. His diary and general reminiscences are of enormous value for the study of Lamb, Coleridge, Wordsworth, Blake, etc.

Robinson, Hyacinth. A character in THE PRINCESS CASAMASSIMA by Henry James.

Robinson, Jack. See under JACK.

Robinson, James Harvey (1863-1936). American historian. Some of his works were written in collaboration with Charles A. Beard, J. H. Breasted, etc. The Mind in the Making (1921) discusses the relation of intelligence to social reform.

Robinson, Lennox (1886-). Irish dramatist and anthologist. His The Golden Treasury of Irish Verse is one of the best collections of Irish poetry extant. His most successful play was The Whiteheaded Boy (1916).

Robinson, Mary. Known as Perdita (1758-1800). English actress who became famous as Perdita in a production by David Garrick of The Winter's Tale. In that rôle she attracted the attention of the Prince of Wales (George IV), whose mistress she became after having received a bond for £20,000 which was never paid. When the prince cast her off, she wrote novels, plays, and poems under the nostalgic pen name of Perdita. Portraits of her exist by Reynolds, Romney, Gainsborough, etc.

Robinson, William Heath (1872-1942). English comic illustrator for The Sketch; The Graphic; Strand Magazine; etc. Also designer of fantastic sets for London theater productions and illustrator of books. Like Rube Goldberg, he was fond of drawing fantastic, involved "gadgets" and machines.

Robinson Crusoe. A famous tale by Daniel DEFOE (1719). Robinson Crusoe runs away to sea, is wrecked, and leads for many years a solitary existence on an uninhabited island of the tropics. He relieves the weariness of life by numberless ingenious contrivances. At length he meets a human being, a young native, whom he saves from death on a Friday. He calls him his "Man Friday" and makes him his companion and servant. Defoe founded this story on the adventures of Alexander Selkirk, sailing-master of the privateer Cinque Ports Galley, who, at his own request, was left by Captain Stradling on the desolate island of Juan Fernandez off the coast of Chile for four years and four months (1704-1709). He was rescued by Captain Woodes Rogers and brought to England.

Robles Quiñones, José María Gil (1898-). Spanish Catholic political leader of the Acción Popular. Minister of war (1935); fled to Portugal at the outbreak of the Civil War (1936).

Roberts, Amy. One of the principal characters in Scott's KENILWORTH.

Rob Roy (Robert the Red). A nickname given to Robert M'Gregor (1671-1734), a noted Scottish outlaw and freebooter, on account of his red hair. He assumed the name of Campbell about 1716, and was protected by the Duke of Argyle. He may be termed the Robin Hood of Scotland.

Scott's novel Rob Roy was published in 1817. The hero of the novel is Frank Osbaldistone, who gets into divers troubles, from which he is rescued by Rob Roy. Rob's last service is to kill Rashleigh Osbaldistone, whereby Frank's great enemy is removed, and Frank then marries Diana Vernon. The following description of Rob Roy may be quoted:

Rather beneath the middle size than above it, his limbs were formed upon the very strongest model that is consistent with agility. . . . Two points in his person interfered with the rules of symmetry; his shoulders were so broad . . . as to give him the air of being too square in respect to his stature; and his arms, though round, sinewy, and strong, were so very long as to be rather a deformity.—Ch. xxiii.

Robson, Eleanor (1879-). English actress who came to America at a very early age and was a great success in Merely Mary Ann (1903-1905). After her marriage to August Belmont, she retired from the stage and has been connected with many public and charitable enterprises, especially the Metropolitan Opera Association.

Robson, May (1865-1942). Australian-born American actress. A member, chiefly in comedy roles, of the company of Daniel Frohman, the Lyceum Theater Company, and Charles Frohman's Company. Also in moving pictures (from 1932).

roc. In the Arabian Nights, notably in the story of SINBAD THE SAILOR, a fabulous white bird of enormous size and such strength that it can "truss elephants in its talons," and carry them to its mountain nest, where it devours them.

roc's egg. Something unattainable.

Rodeheaver, Homer Alvan (1880-). Musical director with Billy SUNDAY in his evangelistic campaigns (1909-1931). Author of Song Stories of the Sawdust Trail (1917); 20 Years with Billy Sunday; etc.

Roderick or Rodrigo. A Spanish hero round whom many legends have collected. He was the thirty-fourth and last of the Visigothic kings, came to the throne in 710, and was routed, and probably slain, by the Moors under Tarik in 711.

SOUTHEY took him as the hero of his Roderick, the Last of the Goths (1814), where he appears as the son of Theodofred. Witiza, the usurper, puts out the eyes of Theodofred, and murders Favila, a younger brother of Roderick. But Roderick recovers his father's throne and puts out the eyes of the usurper. In an evil moment he now violates Florinda, the daughter of COUNT JULIAN, thus making a powerful enemy. The sons of Witiza, joining with Count Julian, invite the aid of Muza ibn Nozeir, the Arab chief, who sends Tarik into Spain with a large army. Roderick is routed at the Battle of Guadalete, near Xeres de la Frontera (711). He himself disappears from the battlefield, and the Spaniards transform him into a hero who will come again to save his country. One legend relates that he is befriended by a shepherd who is then rewarded with the royal chain and ring. Roderick passes the night in the cell of a hermit, who tells him that by way of penance he must pass certain days in a tomb full of snakes, toads, and lizards. After three days, the hermit goes to see him, and he is unhurt, "because the Lord kept His anger against him." The hermit goes home, passes the night in prayer, and goes again to the tomb. There Rodrigo says, "They eat me now, they eat me now, I feel the adder's bite." So his sin is atoned for, and he dies. According to other versions, he does not die but will come again in time of need. After a year of penance, so the story goes, he reappears at the Battle of Cova-dango with the old rallying cry "Roderick the Goth! Roderick and victory!" and saves the day, but is seen no more.

Scott in his Vision of Don Roderick (1811) portrays Roderick descending into an ancient vault near Toledo where he is shown a panoramic vision of Spanish history to the beginning of the 19th century. Walter Savage Landor made the Roderick legend the subject of his poetic drama, Count Julian (1812).

Another famous Spanish hero named Roderigo is the Cid.

Roderick Hudson. A novel by Henry JAMES (1876). The titular hero is a talented young American sculptor who goes to study in Rome at the instance of a wealthy benefactor and becomes gradually disillusioned about his art and utterly demoralized by his experience. He neglects his New England fiancée, becomes involved in a love affair with Christina Light and finally leaps over a cliff.

Roderick Random. A novel by SMOLLETT (1748). The titular hero is a young Scotch scapegrace in quest of fortune. At one time he revels in prosperity, at another he is in utter destitution. Roderick is led into many different countries (whose peculiarities are described), and falls into the society of wits, sharpers, courtiers and harlots. Strap, his devoted follower, lends him money in his necessity, but the heartless Roderick wastes the loan, treats Strap as a mere servant, fleeces him at dice, and cuffs him when the game is adverse. At the end of the novel he wins the hand of Narcissa.

Roderigo. (1) The Spanish hero known as the Cid. RODERICK is also called Roderigo.

(2) In Shakespeare's OTHELLO, a Venetian gentleman in love with Desdemona.

Rodgers, Richard (1902-). American composer. Collaborated with Lorenz (Larry) Hart in many musical comedy successes, Hart supplying the lyrics and Rodgers the music. After Hart's death, Oscar Hammerstein II collaborated with Rodgers.

Rodin. A crafty Jesuit priest in Sue's WANDERING JEW.

Rodin, François Auguste René (1840-1917). French sculptor, whose romantic groups or figures, Le Baiser, Le Penseur, L'Homme qui marche, etc., and statues or busts of Victor Hugo, Bernard Shaw, Balzac, etc. are internationally known. It has been said of him that he was not afraid of the impossible problem of showing emotion by motion in static marble.

Rodman, Selden (1909-). American poet. Author of a dramatic narrative poem concerning T. E. LAWRENCE, Lawrence: The Last Crusade (1937); a narrative poem, celebrating the achievements of fliers from ICARUS to the pilots of our own time, The Airmen (1941); a three-act tragedy in free verse dealing with TOUSSAINT L'OUVERTURE and Henri Christophe, The Revolutionists (1942); etc.

Rodney, George Brydges. 1st Baron Rodney (1719-1792). English admiral who captured seven Spanish ships out of eleven off Cape St. Vincent (1780) and defeated de Grasse off Dominica (1782).

Rodó, José Enrique (1872-1917). Uruguayan writer. Author of a famous essay on Rubén Darío (1899). His chief work, Motives of Proteus (1909), won him high praise. "The greatest master of Spanish prose," in the opinion of at least one Latin American critic.

Rodogune. A tragedy by CORNEILLE (1645), the author's own favorite, which contrasts to the terrifying events of the main plot the devotion to each other of the two sons of Cleopatre, the heroine. They are both in love with Rodogune, their mother's rival, but each wishes to sacrifice his own happiness for that of his brother.

Rodomont. In Carolingian legend, one of the most notable of the Saracen heroes. He appears in both ORLANDO INNAMORATO and ORLANDO FURIOSO. Rodomont is King of Sarza or Algiers, Ulien's son, and is called the "Mars of Africa." He is commander both of horse and foot in the Saracen army sent against Charlemagne, and may be termed the Achilles of the host. His lady-love is Doralis, Princess of Granada, who runs off with Mandricardo, King of Tartary. At Rogero's wedding-feast, Rodomont rides up to the King of France in full armor, and accuses ROGERO, who has turned Christian, of being a traitor to King Agramant, his master, and a renegade; whereupon Rogero meets him in single combat, and slays him.

Rodrigo. See RODERICK and RODERIGO.

Rodzinski, Artur (1894-). Assistant conductor under STOKOWSKI of the Philadelphia orchestra (1926-1929); conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic orchestra (1929-1933) and of the New York Philharmonic orchestra (1943-1946). Frequently at odds with his sponsors.

Roe, Edward Payson (1838-1888). Popular American novelist. His first novel Barriers Burned Away (1872) was a great success; his succeeding books followed the same somewhat melodramatic pattern.

Roe, Richard. See under DOE, JOHN.

Roebing, John Augustus (1806-1869). German-born American civil engineer who designed suspension bridges including the one over the Niagara River at Niagara Falls. He made preliminary plans for the Brooklyn Bridge and his son, Washington Augustus Roebing (1837-1926), carried the bridge to completion (1869-1883). Cf. the long poem by Hart CRANE, The Bridge.

Roentgen, Wilhelm Konrad (1845-1923). German physicist who discovered X-rays, which are often (in German always) called Roentgen rays (1895). He received the Nobel prize for physics (1901).

Roger.

Roger Bon Temps. See BONTEMPS.

the Jolly Roger. The black flag with skull and cross-bones, the favorite ensign of pirates.

Roger de Coverley, Sir. The simple, good, and altogether delightful country squire created by Richard STEELE as the chief character in the club that was supposed to write for the SPECTATOR. He was developed by ADDISON, and it is to the latter that we are indebted for this perfect portrait of a perfect English gentleman. He has left his name to a popular country dance which, he tells us, was invented by his great-grandfather. Coverley is intended for Cowley, near Oxford.

Roger Malvin's Funeral. A well-known story by HAWTHORNE in his Mosses from an Old Manse (1846). In a lonely and dangerous spot in the wilderness the young Reuben Bourne leaves his dying father-in-law to save his own life, promising to return. Later, fate has it that he unintentionally kills his own child on the very spot of his broken promise.

Rogero or Ruggiero. One of the principal figures in Carolingian legend, a hero of the Saracen army. In Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO he appears as the brother of Marphisa, and son of Rogero and Galacella. His mother is slain by Agolant and his sons, and he is nursed by a lioness. He is brought up by Atlantes, a magician, who gives him a shield of such dazzling splendor that everyone quails who sets eyes on it, but, holding it unknighly to carry a charmed shield, he throws it into a well. He deserts from the Moorish army to Charlemagne and is baptized, and his marriage with Bradamant, Charlemagne's niece, and election to the crown of Bulgaria conclude the poem.

In Tasso's JERUSALEM DELIVERED, Rogero is brother of Boemond, and son of Roberto Guiscard, of the Norman race. He is one of the band of adventurers in the crusading army, and is slain by Tisaphernes (Bk. xx).

Rogers, Bruce (1870-). Well-known American printer. With university presses in Cambridge, England, and Cambridge, Mass. Associated with William Edwin RUDGE and Emery Walker, Ltd. in London. Known for his fine book designs.

Rogers, Henry Huddleston (1840-1909). American financier. Chief executive officer of the Standard Oil interests.

Rogers, John (1829-1904). Massachusetts sculptor who made realistic statuettes of plaster or bronze, known as Rogers groups. Each one told a little story through the situation portrayed.

Rogers, Robert (1731-1795). American frontier captain whose rangers became famous in 1756. As a royalist, he was imprisoned at the start of the Revolution, but escaped and organized the Queen's Rangers. He fled to England (1780) where he received a pension from the government.

Rogers, Robert Cameron (1862-1912). American poet, chiefly known for his poem, The Rosary, which has been set to music and is sung widely. His son, Cameron Rogers (1900-), is a well-known essayist and biographer. Colonel Bob Ingersoll (1927), etc.

Rogers, Samuel (1763-1855). English poet and patron of men of letters. A friend of Wordsworth, Scott, and Byron. Noted for his table talk and his records of his conversations with his friends. On the death of Wordsworth he was offered the laureateship of England but declined.

Rogers, Will (1879-1935). American actor and humorist, widely popular in the U.S. for his vaudeville act of talking while swinging a lasso. Active in moving pictures (1929-1935), interpreting characters by Irvin Cobb, George Ade, etc. One of his pictures was made from the famous novel, David Harum. He also ran an extremely popular syndicated column on the news of the day. He was killed while flying with Wiley Post in Alaska.

Roget, Peter Mark (1779-1869). English scholar, compiler of the famous Thesaurus of English Words and Phrases, classified and arranged so as to facilitate the expression of ideas and assist in literary composition (1852). The book, like Webster's dictionary, has grown through many editions until it became Roget's International Thesaurus: New Edition: The Complete Book of Synonyms and Antonyms in American and British Usage (1946).

rogue literature. A type of literature, written in prose, which was popular in the Elizabethan period in England. It dealt realistically and exuberantly with the lives and adventures of thieves, vagabonds, and tricksters in the "underworld" of London or the highways of the rural districts, often expanding from fact to fiction, and is regarded as one of the fore-runners of the English novel. Robert GREENE and Thomas DEKKER were the outstanding authors of rogue literature.

Rohde, Ruth née Bryan (1885-). Daughter of William Jennings BRYAN. U.S. minister to Denmark (1933-1936), the first U.S. woman diplomat.

Röhm, Ernst (1887-1934). Nazi leader who took part in the Hitler Putsch in Munich (1923). He commanded the Brown Shirts and Black Shirts (1931), and became the secretary of state in Bavaria. In the purge of conspiratorial members of the Nazi party (June 1934), Röhm, who had been one of the first supporters and an intimate friend of Hitler, was executed.

Rohmer, Sax. Pen name of Arthur Sarsfield Ward (1886-). British writer of widely-read mysteries with rather flamboyant Far Eastern backgrounds. He made popular the character of Fu-Manchu, an imperturbable Oriental who is the villain of many hair-raising adventures.

Roi d'Yvetot, Le. A ballad (1813) by the French poet Béranger about the imaginary country and its king, whose code was pleasure while his actions were those of a contented bon enfant. It is a characteristic expression of the state of mind of the French people after the Napoleonic Wars. They were fed up with glory and longed for the delights of petty-bourgeois quietude. Thackeray made a very good translation of the song.

Roisin Dubh. An Irish metaphorical name for Ireland. It means literally, "dark little rose."

Roi Soleil, Le. Literally, "the Sun King." A title adopted by Louis XIV when he took the sun as his emblem.

Roister Doister, Ralph. See RALPH ROISTER DOISTER.

Rokeby. A poem in six cantos by Sir Walter Scott (1813), the tale of the love of Wilfrid Wycliffe for Matilda, heiress of the Knight of Rokeby.

Rokesmith, John. A leading character in Dickens' novel, OUR MUTUAL FRIEND. He also appears as John Harmon.

Roland or Orlando. The most famous of Charlemagne's paladins, slain at the battle of Roncesvalles (778), called "The Christian Theseus" and "the Achilles of the West." He was Count of Mans and Knight of Blaives, and son of Duke Milo of Aiglant, his mother being Bertha, the sister of Charlemagne. Fable has it that he was eight feet high, and had an open countenance, and he is represented as brave, loyal and simple-minded. On the return of Charlemagne from Spain, Roland, who commanded the rear-guard, fell into the ambushcade at Roncesvalles, in the Pyrenees, and perished with all the flower of Frankish chivalry.

His achievements are recorded in the Chronicle attributed to TURPIN, Archbishop of Rheims, which was not written till the 11th or 12th century, and he is the hero of the Song of Roland, Boiardo's ORLANDO INNAMORATO, and Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO. In Pulci's MORGANTE MAGGIORE he is also a principal character, and converts the giant Morgante to Christianity.

In Orlando Furioso (Orlando Mad), although married to Aldabella, he falls in love with Angelica, daughter of the infidel King of Cathay. She marries Medoro, a Moor, with whom she flees to India, whereupon Orlando goes mad, or rather his wits are taken from him for three months by way of punishment, and deposited in the moon. Astolpho goes to the moon in Elijah's chariot, and St. John gives him an urn containing the lost wits. On reaching earth again, Astolpho first binds the madman, then, holding the urn to his nose, cures Orlando of both his madness and his love.

a Roland for an Oliver. A blow for a blow, tit for tat. The exploits of Roland and Oliver, another of the paladins of Charlemagne, are so similar that it is difficult to keep them distinct. What Roland did Oliver did, and what Oliver did Roland did. At length the two met in single combat, and fought for five consecutive days on an island in the Rhine, but neither gained the least advantage. Shakespeare alludes to this similarity in the phrase, "England all Oliver's and Rolands bred" (1 Henry VI, i. 2).

The Song (Chanson) of Roland. The 11th-century chanson de geste ascribed to the Norman trouvère Théroutle, or Turoldeus, which tells the story of the death of Roland and all the paladins at Roncesvalles, and of Charlemagne's vengeance. When Charlemagne has been six years in Spain he sends Ganelon on an embassy to Marsilius, the pagan king of Saragossa. Ganelon, out of jealousy, betrays to Marsilius the route which the Christian army is designed to take on its way home, and the pagan king arrives at Roncesvalles just as Roland is conducting through the pass a rear-guard of 20,000 men. He fights until 100,000 Saracens are slain, and only fifty of his own men alive. At this juncture another army, consisting of 50,000 men, pours down from the mountains. Roland now blows his enchanted horn, and blows so loudly that the veins of his neck burst. Charlemagne hears the blast, but comes too late. Roland dies of his wounds.

The Song runs to 4,000 lines, and it was probably parts of this that—as we are told by Wace in the Roman de Rou—the Norman minstrel sang to encourage William's soldiers at the battle of Hastings:

Taillefer, the minstrel-knight, bestrode
A gallant steed, and swiftly rode Before the Duke, and sang the song
Of Charlemagne, of Roland strong,
Of Oliver, and those beside Brave knights at Roncevaux that died.
Arthur S. Way's rendering.

like the blast of Roland's horn. Roland had a wonderful ivory horn, named Olivant, that he won from the giant Jutmundus. When he was set upon by the Gascons at Roncesvalles, he sounded it to give Charlemagne notice of his danger. At the third blast it cracked in two, but it was so loud that birds fell dead and the whole Saracen army was struck with horror. Charlemagne heard the sound at St. Jean Pied de Port and rushed to the rescue, but arrived too late.

Roland's sword. Durindana, or Durandal, which was fabled to have once belonged to Hector, and which—like the horn—Roland won from the giant Jutmundus. It had in its hilt a thread from the Virgin Mary's cloak, a tooth of St. Peter, one of St. Denis' hairs, and a drop of St. Basil's blood. Legend relates that, to prevent Durandal from falling into the hands of the Saracens after he had received his death-wound, he strove to break it on a rock. Finding it unbreakable he hurled it into a poisoned stream, where it remains for ever.

Roland. In Clyde Fitch's drama THE TRUTH, the father of the heroine.

Roland, Childe, see CHILDE ROLAND.

Roland, Jeanne Manon, née Philpon (1754–1793). Famous character in the French Revolution, commonly known as Madame Roland, who was guillotined in 1793. According to tradition, her last words on the scaffold were, "Oh Liberty! What crimes are committed in thy name!"

Roland de Vaux. In The Bridal of Triermain (1813) by Sir Walter Scott, the Baron of Triermain is so called. The name is also used in Christabel by Samuel Taylor COLERIDGE.

Rolfe, Frederick William Serafino Austin Lewis Mary. Pen name Baron Corvo (1860–1913). Versatile and eccentric English novelist and historical writer. Brilliantly original, but unbalanced and somewhat of a charlatan. A musician, photographer, and fine swimmer. Cf. his biography by A. J. A. Symons, The Quest for Corvo (1934). One of his best books is Chronicles of the House of Borgia (1901).

Rolfe, John (1585–1622). See under POCAHONTAS.

Rolland, Henry Augustus (1848–1901). First professor of physics at Johns Hopkins University (1875–1901). Conducted researches on the solar spectrum.

Rolland, Romain (1866–1944). French novelist, known for his idealism, cosmopolitanism, tendency toward hero-worship, and interest in music and the problems of the artistic temperament. His most famous work is JEAN CHRISTOPHE (1904–1912), in ten volumes, considered to be the first true example of the ROMAN-FLEUVE; it consists of L'Aube (Dawn), L'Adolescent (Adolescence), La Révolte (Revolt), La Foire sur la Place (The Market on 'Change), Antoinette, Dans la Maison (At Home), Les Amies (The Friends), La Nouvelle Journée (The New Day). Other works of Rolland are COLAS BREUGNON (1919); Pierre et Luce (1921), a tragedy of lovers in war; Clérambault (1920); L'Âme Enchantée (The Enchanted Soul; 1922–1934), another cyclical novel, seven volumes, in its English translation divided into Annette and Sylvie, Summer, Mother and Son, The Death of a World, and A World in Birth; Le Jeu de L'Amour et de la Mort (The Game of Life and Death; 1926), a play; Above the Battle (Au Dessus de la Mêlée; 1916), articles and letters on World War I; Les Léonides (1921); Pâques Fleuries (Palm Sunday; 1926), a play; Goethe and Beethoven (1930); Beethoven: Les Grandes Époques Creatrices (1928–1937), translated as Beethoven the Creator; The Revolt of the Machines (1932); Quinze Ans de combat (1935), translated as I Will Not Rest; Danton (1936), a drama; Les Loups (The Wolves; 1937); Le Quatorze Juillet (July 14; 1936), and Robespierre (1939), dramas.

Rolland was much interested in music and from 1904 to 1912 was Professor of the History of Music at the Sorbonne in Paris. During the 1920's he became interested sympathetically in the U.S.S.R.

Rolle, Richard. Known as the Hermit of Hampole (1290?–1349). English recluse who wrote religious treatises and the poem The Pricke of Conscience in seven books. It is an early protest against certain pretensions of the papacy.

Rolling Stones. A volume of short stories by O. HENRY (1913). The allusion is to the old proverb "A rolling stone gathers no moss," that is, one who roams about and refuses to settle down will never grow wealthy. Robert W. SERVICE entitled a volume of verse Rhymes of a Rolling Stone (1912).

Rollins, Carl Purington (1880–). Printer and typographical expert. With the Yale University Press (from 1918) and printer to Yale University (1920–1948). Editor of The Compleat Collector in the Saturday Review of Literature. Honorary member of the American Institute of Graphic Arts.

Rollins, Hyder Edward (1889–). American educator. Professor at Harvard (since 1926). Editor of Old English Ballads (1920); The Pepys Ballads (8 vols.; 1929–1932); England's Helicon (2 vols.; 1935); and Shakespeare's Poems in the New Variorum Shakespeare (1938).

Rollo. Called the Ganger or Walker (860?–?931). Viking leader who received through a treaty territory in France which was the beginning of Normandy. He was the ancestor of Norman dukes and kings.

Rollo Books. A once popular series of books for children by Jacob Abbott. The Lucy, Jonas and Franconia books were by the same author. They told of simple adventures in a New England town and countryside and were packed with information and a fair amount of "morals."

Rølvaag, Ole Edvart (1876-1931). Norwegian-American novelist, known for his dramatic and realistic accounts of the life of Norwegian pioneers in the Dakotas, marked particularly by psychological studies of the characters. His works, all written in Norwegian and later translated into English, include Letters from America (1912), semi-autobiographical; Giants in the Earth (1927), Peder Victorious (1929), and Their Fathers' God (1931), a trilogy, the author's best-known work; Pure Gold (1930); The Boat of Longing (1933). Rølvaag himself was an immigrant to the U.S. and from 1907 to his death taught Norwegian at St. Olaf's College in Minnesota.

Romains, Jules. Pseudonym of Louis Fari-goule (1885-). French novelist and dramatist, known for his fictional modification of the tradition of NATURALISM according to his early theory of UNANIMISM. His best-known work is Men of Good Will (Les Hommes de bonne Volonté), begun in 1931, a gigantic representative of the ROMAN-FLEUVE. Among his other works are La Vie Unanime (1908), a collection of poetry expressing his Unanimist ideas; Le Bourg Régénéré (1906); Mort de Quelqu'un (1911); Les Copains; Donogoo-Tonka (1920), called a conte cinématographique; Lucienne (1922), Le Dieu des corps translated as The Body's Rapture (1928), and Quand le Navire . . . (When the Boat . . .; 1929), constituting a trilogy, Psyché, on domestic and sexual relations; Knock, ou Le Triomphe de la Médecine (1923), Le Dictateur (The Dictator; 1926), Cromedeire-le-Vieil and Jean Le Maufranc, plays; Grâce Encore pour la Terre (1941); Une Vue des Choses (1941); Salsette Discovers America (Salsette Découvre L'Amérique; 1942).

Roman. Pertaining to Rome, especially ancient Rome, or to the Roman Catholic Church. As a surname or distinctive title the adjective has been applied to:

Giulio Pippi, Giulio Romano (1492-1546), the Italian artist.

Adrian van Roomen (1561-1615), the famous mathematician, Adrianus Romanus.

Stephen Picart (1631-1721), the French engraver, Le Romain.

Jean Dumond (1700-1781), the French painter, Le Romain.

Marcus Terentius Varro (116-27 B. C.) was called the Most Learned of the Romans, and Rienzi (1313-1354), the Italian patriot and "last of the Tribunes," was known as Ultimus Romanorum, the Last of the Romans—an honorific title later applied to Horace Walpole, Charles James Fox, and others.

King of the Romans. The title usually assumed by the sovereign of the Holy Roman Empire previous to his actual coronation in the Holy City. Napoleon's son, afterwards the Duke of Reichstadt, was styled the King of Rome at his birth in 1811. See also AIGLON, L'.

Roman birds. Eagles; so called because the ensign of the Roman legion was an eagle.

Roman à clef. Literally, key-novel. Romans à clef and dramas à clef contain one or more characters based on actual persons. Cf. Literary Characters Drawn From Life (1936), by Earle Walbridge. See also LA CALPRENÈDE; SCUDÉRY.

Roman Bartholow. A narrative poem (1923) by Edwin Arlington ROBINSON.

romance. Applied in linguistics (see below) to the languages, especially Old French, sprung from the Latin spoken in the European provinces of the Roman Empire; hence, as a noun, the word came to mean a medieval tale in Old French or Provençal describing, usually in mixed prose and verse, the marvelous adventures of a hero of chivalry. The transition to the modern meanings—a work of fiction in which the scenes, incidents, etc., are more or less removed from common life and are surrounded by a halo of mystery—or the atmosphere of strangeness and imaginary adventure itself—is simple.

The medieval romances fall into three main groups or cycles, viz., the Arthurian, the Charlemagne cycle, and the cycle of Alexander the Great. Nearly, but not quite, all the romances are connected with one or other of these.

Romance languages. Those languages which are the immediate offspring of Latin, as the Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, and French.

Romance. (1) A novel by Joseph Conrad and Ford Madox FORD (1903). The plot is one of complicated intrigue in the Jamaica and Cuba of the early 19th century. The hero, John Kemp, finally marries Seraphina, a Spanish girl.

(2) A drama by Edward SHEDDEN (1913), presenting the love story of Madame Cavallini, an Italian opera singer.

Romancers, The (Les Romanesques). A drama by Edmund ROSTAND (1894). The plot turns on the attempts of two neighbors to bring about a match between their romance-loving children by providing sufficient obstacles. The high wall between the two places is an important piece of stage setting, now up, now torn down. After some unexpected twists, the romantic young lovers, Perinet and Sylvette, are married at last.

Roman de la Rose. See under ROSE.

Roman des Romans. A French version of AMADIS OF GAUL, greatly extended by Gilbert Saunier and Sieur de Duverdier.

Romanes, George John (1848–1894). British biologist and professor of physiology at the Royal Institution of London. Friend of Charles DARWIN and founder (1891) of the Romanes Lecture at Oxford, which was to be given annually on some scientific or literary topic.

Romanesque. An intermediate style of architecture which existed in Europe between the Roman and the Gothic, during the period approximately from 600 A. D. to 1200 A. D. A form of the Romanesque in England is the Norman architecture.

roman-fleuve (Fr., "river-novel"). French term for the type of lengthy novel, dealing with a given set of characters through a period of years, which came to be characteristic of the fiction of France during the first half of the 20th century. Outstanding examples of the roman-fleuve are JEAN CHRISTOPHE, by Romain Rolland; REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST, by Marcel Proust; LES THIBAUTS, by Roger Martin du Gard; and Men of Good Will, by Jules Romains.

Romanov or Romanoff. The name of the rulers of Russia whose dynasty was ended by the revolution of March 12, 1917. The Romanoff dynasty was founded by Michael Romanov (1598–1645) who became czar in 1613.

Romans, The Epistle to the. One of the books of the New Testament, a letter written by the Apostle PAUL (see under SAINTS).

Romantic Comedians, The. A novel (1926), by Ellen GLASGOW.

romanticism or the romantic revival. Term applied to the movement in European literature and other arts, which began at the end of the 18th century, emphasizing the imagination and emotions over reason and the intellect and revolting against the conventional strictness of NEO-CLASSICISM. Called "romanticism" because it was ostensibly defended as a return to the freer fancies and methods of ROMANCE, the movement is interpreted by many critics as the response of the artist's psychology to the growing complexity of an increasingly mechanized industrial and scientific civilization, which came into being with the industrial revolution of the mid-18th century. The leading characteristics of romanticism are individualism, nature-worship, PRIMITIVISM, a fondness for the Middle Ages, the Orient, and vanished or alien cultures in general, philosophic IDEALISM, a paradoxical tendency toward both free thought and religious mysticism, revolt against political authority and social convention, the exaltation of physical passion and the encouragement of sexual inconstancy, the cultivation of emotion and sensation for their own sake, and a persistent attraction to the supernatural, the morbid, the melancholy, and the cruel.

The French writer J. J. ROUSSEAU is considered the father of romanticism, although its first manifestation as an organized movement appeared in Germany, in the work of SCHILLER, GOETHE, NOVALIS, KLEIST, and TIECK, early romantic leaders there, and especially in the idealist philosophy of KANT, FICHTE, SCHELLING, and HEGEL. Scattered English forerunners of romanticism in the later 18th century were GRAY, COLLINS, COWPER, BURNS, CHATTERTON, BLAKE, and the GOthic NOVEL. The movement was given impetus by the publication of PERCY's Reliques and Macpherson's OSSIAN, and was powerfully stimulated by the French Revolution. Under the influence of Rousseau, Percy's Reliques, and German idealist doctrines, English romanticism flowered (1798–1832) in the work of WORDSWORTH, COLERIDGE, SHELLEY, BYRON, KEATS, SOUTHEY, CAMPBELL, MOORE, Leigh HUNT, HOOD, BEDDOES, SCOTT, LAMB, HAZLITT, DE QUINCEY, and LANDOR.

In France, Mme de STAËL and CHATEAUBRIAND were forerunners of romanticism after Rousseau, but there was no definite French romantic movement until about 1820, lasting until about 1843. The chief influences were German (GOETHE, SCHILLER, and the TALES OF HOFFMAN) and English (Shakespeare, Macpherson's Ossian, Byron, and Scott); the outstanding literary representatives were LAMARTINE, NODIER, BÉRANGER, HUGO, MUSSET, VIGNY, GAUTIER, George SAND, DUMAS père, STENDHAL, SAINTE-BEUVE, and MÉRIMÉE. In the U.S., romanticism developed at a later date than in Europe and was less well defined, exhibiting modifications from the peculiar nature of American culture of the time, with a strong emphasis on humanitarianism and reform. Foreign influences were chiefly German idealism, Rousseauistic nature-worship, the Gothic novel, and the historical romance and pseudo-popular ballad of Scott. Among American romantic writers were Charles Brockden BROWN, COOPER, IRVING, SIMMS, BRYANT, POE, EMERSON, THOREAU, VERY, HAWTHORNE, MELVILLE, LONGFELLOW, WHITTIER, LOWELL, and WHITMAN. TRANSCENDENTALISM (ca. 1830–1860) is regarded as the clearest example of romanticism in the U.S.

Among the arts other than literature, romanticism is exemplified by BEETHOVEN, BERLIOZ, SCHUBERT, MENDELSSOHN, and SCHUMANN in music, and by DELACROIX, INGRES, COROT, and MILLET in painting.

The romantic movement was arrested in its development in England after 1832, with only a brief revival under the PRE-RAPHAELITE BROTHERHOOD, and in the U.S. it was rapidly absorbed by native tendencies and other influences. In Germany, however, it persisted, continuing especially in the philosophy of SCHOPENHAUER and NIETZSCHE, and in the various works of WAGNER, MANN, Stefan GEORGE, and RILKE. In France, dominant romantic characteristics were developed by BAUDELAIRE and through him passed to the DECADENTS, the Symbolists (see SYMBOLISM), and, ultimately, the surrealists (see SURREALISM).

For a study of the romantic movement and its characteristics, cf. The Romantic Agony, by Mario Praz.

Romany. A gypsy; or the gypsy language, the speech of the Roma or Zingali. The word is from Gypsy rom, a man, or husband.

Romany rye. One who enters into the gypsy spirit, learns their language, lives with them as one of themselves, etc. Rye is gypsy for gentleman. Borrow's book with this title (a sequel to LAVENGRO), was published in 1857.

Rome. The greatest city of the antique world, according to legend founded (753 B.C.) by ROMULUS and named after him; but in all probability so called from Greek rhoma, "strength," a suggestion confirmed by its other name Valentia, from Latin valens, "strong."

Oh, that all Rome had but one head, that I might strike it off at a blow! Caligula, the Roman emperor, is said to have uttered this amiable sentiment.

Rome's best wealth is patriotism. So said Mettius Curtius, when he jumped into the chasm which the soothsayers prophesied would never close till Rome threw therein "its best wealth."

Rome was not built in a day. Achievements of great pith and moment are not accomplished without perseverance and considerable time. It is an old saying, and is to be found in Heywood's Collection (1562).

'tis ill sitting at Rome and striving with the Pope. Don't tread on a man's corns when you are living with him or are in close touch with him—especially if he's powerful.

when you go to Rome, do as Rome does. Conform to the manners and customs of those amongst whom you live. St. Monica and her son St. Augustine said to St. Ambrose: "At Rome they fast on Saturday, but not so at Milan; which practice ought to be observed?" To which St. Ambrose replied, "When I am at Milan, I do as they do at Milan; but when I go to Rome, I do as Rome does!" (Epistle xxxvi).

Rome saved by geese. See under GOOSE.

Rome Haul. Title of Walter D. EDMONDS' first novel (1929). Its theme is the Erie Canal.

Romeo and Juliet. Shakespeare's tragedy (first published 1597) is founded on the story of the lovers of Verona as told in Arthur Brooke's poem, The Tragicall Historie of Romeus and Juliet, containing a rare example of love constancie, with the subtilt counsels and practices of an old Fryer (1562), and a story in Painter's Palace of Pleasure (1567). The story had appeared earlier, notably in Bandello's Novelle (1554). The plot is well known. Romeo, though a despised Montague, attends the great ball of the Capulets and falls in love with Juliet, the daughter of the house. Because of the deadly feud between the Montagues and Capulets, the lovers are married secretly in the cell of Friar Laurence. Romeo now becomes involved, against his will, in a street quarrel between members of the two houses and is banished from Verona. In desperation Juliet, who is about to be married to Paris against her will, takes a sleeping potion given her by the Friar to bring on a semblance of death. Romeo, hearing of her death before the Friar's explanation reaches him, returns and drinks poison at Juliet's tomb. When she wakes up a few moments later to find him dead, she stabs herself. There is an opera Roméo et Juliette by Gounod (1867).

Romney, George (1734-1802). English historical and portrait painter.

Romola. A novel by George ELIOT (1863). The scene is laid in medieval Florence, and the great reformer SAVONAROLA is a prominent figure. It is in him and his cause that Romola finds consolation when she is forced to admit the failure of her marriage with the attractive but weak and selfish Tito Melema. Tito has been brought up as the adopted child of the wealthy scholar, Baldassare Calvo, but after a shipwreck in which he is separated from Calvo, he sells his father's gems for his own benefit, turns a deaf ear to letters from his father asking for ransom from slavery, and refuses to acknowledge him when he appears. Although in love with Romola, he goes through a wedding ceremony with the pretty peasant, Tessa, and continues to visit her after his marriage to Romola. The latter gradually learns Tito's true character, and when he sells the library which her father has spent his life collecting and has left to her in trust for the people of Florence, she gives up all hope of happiness with him and spends herself in work for Savonarola's cause. Savonarola is finally brought to trial and condemned. Tito has managed to win favor in both local parties, but he is unmasked at last, pursued by an angry mob, and, at the end of his strength, is choked to death by the embittered Baldasare Calvo. Romola cares for Tessa and her children.

Romulus. With his twin brother Remus the legendary and eponymous founder of Rome. They were sons of Mars and Rhea Silvia, who, because she was a vestal virgin, was condemned to death and her sons exposed. They were, however, suckled by a she-wolf, and eventually set about founding a city but quarreled over the plans, and Remus was slain by his brother in anger. Romulus was later taken to the heavens by his father, Mars, in a fiery chariot, and was worshiped by the Romans under the name of Quirinus.

the second Romulus. Camillus was so called because he saved Rome from the Gauls (365 B.C.).

the third Romulus. Caius Marius, who saved Rome from the Teutons and Cimbri (101 B.C.).

we need no Romulus to account for Rome. We require no hypothetical person to account for a plain fact.

Roncesvalles. A defile in the Pyrenees, famous for the disaster which here befell the rear of Charlemagne's army, on the return march from Saragossa (778). Ganelon betrayed ROLAND to Marsillus, King of the Saracens, and an ambushade, attacking the Franks, killed every man, including Roland, Oliver, and all the paladins. See Song of Roland under ROLAND.

rondeau. A verse-form, best-known in French literature, which usually consists of fifteen lines in three stanzas, with two rhymes only used throughout. The first line of the first stanza serves as a refrain ending the second and third stanzas. The rondeau is used mostly in light or witty verse. A. C. SWINBURNE devised a variation on the rondeau which he called the roundel and used frequently in his poetry. See also RONDEL.

rondel. A verse-form composed of three stanzas and two rhymes, with the first two lines of the first stanza usually repeated as the last two lines of the second and third stanzas. Chaucer in his Parliament of Fowls uses a "roundel" which employs the first two lines of the first stanza as a refrain at the end of the second stanza, and the whole first stanza of three lines as the refrain of the third stanza:

Now welcom somer, with thy sonne softe,
That hast this wintres wedder over-shake,
And driven away the longe nightes blake!
Seynt Valentyn, thou art ful hy on-lofte;—
Thus singen smale foules for thy sake—

Now welcom somer, with thy sonne softe,
That has this wintres wedders over-shake.
Wel han they cause for to gladen ofte,
Sith ech of hem recovered hath his make;
Ful blisful may they singen whan they wake;
Now welcom somer, with thy sonne softe,
That hast this wintres wedders over-shake,
And driven away the longe nightes blake.
Chaucer, The Parliament of Fowls.

Ronin. The Loyal League of Forty-Seven Ronin, Or The Chushingura. A famous play of the Japanese marionette theater, first performed in Yedo (Tokyo) in 1748. The story it embodies is a very popular one; it had previously been dramatized on the regular stage and has furnished the inspiration for many of the most famous of Japanese color prints. It is founded on an incident that took place in 1701. A certain Japanese noble is so insulted by his instructor in court etiquette that he draws his weapon within the court precincts. This offense is punishable by death; he is compelled to commit HARA-KIRI, his property is confiscated and his retainers become ronin or leaderless men. The play deals with the conspiracy by which forty-seven of these ronin secure revenge for their lord's death. Cf. also John Masefield's play The Faithful.

Ronsard, Pierre de (1525–1585). French poet, leading member of the PLÉIADE, best known for his light and graceful amorous verse, especially in the form of the sonnet and the ode, which was written during the first period of his career (1550–1560) under the influence of PETRARCH, HORACE, PINDAR, THEOCRITUS, and PROPERTIUS. Between 1560 and 1574, when he was official court poet under Henry II and Charles IX, he wrote elegies and nationalistic and oratorical poetry, and in retirement during the last period of his life turned to melancholy nature poems. Among his works are Odes (1550); Sonnets (1553); Bocage Royal and Mélanges (1554); Hymnes (1555); Continuation des Amours (1555–1556); Discours des Misères de ce Temps, Continuation du Discours, and Remonstrance au Peuple de France (1562–1563); Elegies, Mascarades, Bergeries (1565); Franciade (1572), an uncompleted French epic poem; Sonnets pour Hélène; Dernières Amours; Bocage Royal (last part).

Ronsard, of noble birth, was a page at the court of Francis I and served in a diplomatic capacity in Scotland and England before an illness left him deaf. While a student at the Collège de Coqueret, he began his long association with Joachim du BELLAY. Ronsard was hailed as the greatest French poet of his day and had an important influence on the Elizabethan writers of sonnets.

Roof of the World. The Pamirs, a plateau north of India.

Roosevelt, Anna Eleanor, née Roosevelt (1884-). Wife of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, prominent in social welfare and widely known through her newspaper column My Day. Also author of the autobiography This is My Story (1937) and several other books.

Roosevelt, Franklin Delano (1882-1945). Thirty-second president of the U.S. (1933-1945). Coming to office during the Great Depression, he sponsored a broad program of RELIEF. This, with permanent social legislation, constituted the NEW DEAL. He stands in the great tradition of American liberalism with JEFFERSON, JACKSON, LINCOLN, Theodore ROOSEVELT, and WILSON. The New Deal platform, says Henry S. Commager, was "carried out more fully perhaps than any other party platform." Like Wilson, Roosevelt put the international issues of World War II on a moral plane. After his death many volumes were written concerning him, among the best being: F.D.R.: His Personal Letters, Early Years (1947) and F.D.R.: His Personal Letters, 1905-1928 (1948), edited by Elliott Roosevelt; Roosevelt and Hopkins: An Intimate History, by Robert E. SHERWOOD (1948).

Roosevelt, Kermit (1889-1943). One of the sons of President Theodore Roosevelt; wrote War in the Garden of Eden (1919); The Happy Hunting Grounds (1920); etc. Died on active duty in Alaska.

Roosevelt, Nicholas (1893-). American journalist and diplomat. Vice-governor of the Philippines (1930); U.S. minister to Hungary (1930-1933). On staff of New York Herald Tribune and New York Times. Author of The Philippines, a Treasure and a Problem (1926); A New Birth of Freedom (1938); etc.

Rope of Ocnus. See OCNUS.

Roque, Louise. In Flaubert's SENTIMENTAL EDUCATION, a country girl, a childhood neighbor of Frederic MOREAU, with whom she is intensely in love in early adolescence. Later she marries his friend Deslauriers but leaves him to run off with a singer.

Rory O'More. A novel (1836) and ballad by Samuel Lover.

Rory o' the Hill. The signature adopted in 1880 by the writer of threatening letters to Irish landlords, to those who paid their rents, to those who occupied the farms of ejected tenants, etc. These letters were written under the authority of the "Irish Land League."

Rosa, Salvator (1615-1673). Painter of the Neopolitan school; known chiefly for his landscapes and battle scenes. Also a poet.

Rosa Dartle, see DARTLE, ROSA.

Rosalba. The heroine of Elinor Wylie's Venetian Glass Nephew (1925).

Rosalba, Princess. A character in Thackeray's ROSE AND THE RING.

Rosalia or Rosalie, St. See under SAINTS.

Rosalind. (1) The anagrammatic name under which SPENSER introduces his early love, Rosa Daniel (sister of Samuel DANIEL, the poet), into the SHEPHERD'S CALENDAR, he himself figuring as COLIN CLOUT.

(2) In Shakespeare's As You Like It, the daughter of the banished Duke, brought up with Celia in the court of Frederick, the Duke's brother, and usurper of his dominions. After sundry adventures, in the course of which she disguises herself as a youth and Celia as a peasant-girl, she obtains her father's consent to marry her lover, Orlando.

Rosaline. In Shakespeare's ROMEO AND JULIET, the niece of Capulet, with whom Romeo is in love before he sees Juliet. Mercutio calls her "a pale-hearted wench," and Romeo says she does not "grace for grace and love for love allow," like Juliet. Rosaline is frequently mentioned in the first act of the play, but is not one of the dramatis personae.

Rosamond, the Fair. Higden, monk of Chester, writing about 1350, says: "She was the fayre daughter of Walter, Lord Clifford, concubine of Henry II, and poisoned by Queen Elinor, 1177 A. D. Henry made for her a house of wonderful working, so that no man or woman might come to her. This house was named Labyrinthus, and was wrought like unto a knot in a garden called a maze. But the queen came to her by a clue of thredde, and so dealt with her that she lived not long after. She was buried at Godstow, in an house of nunnes, with these verses upon her tombe:

His jacet in tumba Rosa mundi, non Rosa munda;
Non redolet, sed olet, quae redolere solet."

This "evidence," dating nearly 200 years after the supposed event, is all the substantiation we have for the popular legend about the labyrinth, and there is none for the stories that Rosamund Clifford was the mother of William Longsword and Geoffrey, Archbishop of York. She is introduced by SCOTT in two of his novels—The Talisman and Woodstock—and a subterranean labyrinth in Blenheim Park, near Woodstock, is still pointed out as "Rosamond's Bower."

Jane Clifford was her name, as books aver Fair Rosamund was but her nom de guerre.

another Roscius. So CAMDEN terms Richard Burbage (d. 1619).

the British Roscius. Thomas Betterton (1635-1710), of whom Cibber says, "He alone was born to speak what only Shakespeare knew to write." The title was also accorded to Garrick.

the Roscius of France. Michel Boyron (1653-1729), generally called Baron.

the Young Roscius. William Henry West Betty (1791-1874).

Roscoe, Sir Henry Enfield (1833-1915). English chemist, son of the historian, William Roscoe (1753-1831), who, with Bunsen, laid the foundations of photochemistry.

rose. Medieval legend asserts that the first roses appeared miraculously at Bethlehem as the result of the prayers of a "fayre Mayden" who had been falsely accused and was sentenced to death by burning. As Sir John MANDEVILLE tells the tale (Travels, ch. vi), after her prayer sche entered into the Fuyer; and anon was the Fuyer quenched and oute; and the Brondes that weren brennyng, becomen red Roseres; and the Brondes that weren not kyndled, becomen white Roseres, fulle of Rosas. And these weren the first Roseres and Roses, both white and rede, that ever any Man saugh. And thus was this Mayden saved be the Grace of God.

The Rose has been an emblem of England since the time of the Wars of the Roses, a civil contest that lasted thirty years, in which eighty princes of the blood, a large portion of the English nobility, and some 100,000 common soldiers were slain. It was a struggle for the crown between the houses of York (White rose) and Lancaster (Red). When the parties were united in the person of Henry VII, the united rose was taken as his device.

under the rose (Lat. sub rosa). In strict confidence. The origin of the phrase is wrapped in obscurity, but the story is that Cupid gave Harpocrates, the god of silence, a rose, to bribe him not to betray the amours of Venus. Hence the flower became the emblem of silence. In 1526 it was placed over confessionals.

the little black rose. Ireland.

Rose, John Holland (1855-1942). English historian, author of The Life of Napoleon I (1902); The Development of the European Nations (1923); etc.

Rose, The Romance of the. An early French poem of over 20,000 lines, an elaborate allegory on the Art of Love beneath which can be seen a faithful picture of contemporary life. It was begun by Guillaume de LORRIS in the first half of the 13th century, and continued by Jean de Meung in the second part of the 13th. The poet is accosted by Dame Idleness, who conducts him to the Palace of Pleasure, where he meets Love, accompanied by Sweet-Looks, Riches, Jollity, Courtesy, Liberality, and Youth, who spend their time in dancing, singing, and other amusements. By this retinue the poet is conducted to a bed of roses, where he singles out one and attempts to pluck it, when an arrow from Cupid's bow stretches him fainting on the ground, and he is carried far away from the flower of his choice. As soon as he recovers, he finds himself alone, and resolves to return to his rose. Welcome goes with him, but Danger, Shame-Face, Fear, and Slander obstruct him at every turn. Reason advises him to abandon the pursuit, but this he will not do; whereupon Pity and Liberality aid him in reaching the rose of his choice, and Venus permits him to touch it with his lips. Meanwhile, Slander rouses up Jealousy, who seizes Welcome and casts him into a strong castle, giving the key of the castle door to an old hag. Here the poet is left to mourn over his fate, and the original poem ends.

In the second part—which is much the longer—the same characters appear, but the spirit of the poem is altogether different, the author being interested in life as a whole instead of solely in love, and directing his satire especially against women.

A 15th century English version, the Romaunt of the Rose, is often published with CHAUCER's works, and it is probable that the first 1,700 lines or so are by Chaucer.

Rose and the Ring, The. A burlesque fairy tale by THACKERAY (1855). The fun arises from the fact that the magic rose, which belongs to Prince Bulbo of Crim Tartary, and the magic ring worn by Prince Giglio of Paflogonia make their possessors seem both lovely and lovable. So long as she is allowed to wear either the rose or the ring, the Princess Angelica, Giglio's cousin, who has been wrongfully put in his place by her father, appears the most charming of individuals, but the moment she is deprived of them, she becomes the most ill-tempered and ugly. Rosalba, the deposed princess of Crim Tartary, shares with Giglio the favor of the all-powerful Fairy Blackstick, and although at their christenings she gave them each a little misfortune, she stands by them in their difficulties and brings their affairs to a happy ending.

Rose Aylmer. A short lyric by Walter Savage LANDOR (1806) in memory of Rose Aylmer, who had been his companion on his walks about Swansea in Wales. She died in India in 1800.

Rose Aylmer whom these wakeful eyes
May weep but never see
A night of memories and sighs
I consecrate to thee.

Rosecrans, William Starke (1819-1898). American army commander who defeated the Confederates at Murfreesboro (1863) and was, in turn, defeated at Chickamauga in the same year. He commanded the Department of the Missouri (1864) and was U.S. minister to Mexico (1868-1869) and congressman from California (1881-1885).

Rosedale, Simon. A rich but objectionable Jew in Edith Wharton's House of Mirth.

Rose Mary. A ballad by Dante Gabriel ROSSETTI in his Ballads and Sonnets (1881). It deals with a magic beryl stone in which only the pure in heart can see the truth.

Rosenbach, Abraham S. Wolf (1876-). American bibliophile and rare book collector. Author of The Unpublishable Memoirs (1917); A Book Hunter's Holiday (1936); etc.

Rosenberg, Alfred (1893-1946). German Nazi leader and writer who directed the foreign policy office of the Nazi party in 1933. His most influential book was Der Mythos des XX. Jahrhunderts (1930), in which the racial ideology of National Socialism was given the status of a mythology or religion. Tried as a war criminal at Nuremberg.

Rosenberg, Isaac (1890-1918). English poet, killed in action in the first World War. After his death his poems were collected by several literary friends and issued as Collected Works (1937).

Rosencrantz and Guildenstern. Time-serving courtiers, willing to betray anyone, and do any "genteel" dirty work to please a king. They are characters in Shakespeare's HAMLET.

Rosenfeld, Paul (1890-1946). American music and art critic. Musical Portraits (1920); Music Chronicle (1923); By Way of Art (1926); Discoveries of a Music Critic (1936); etc.

Rosenwald, Julius (1862-1932). American merchant and philanthropist. President, Sears Roebuck & Co. (1910-1925). Created the Julius Rosenwald Fund for the "well-being of mankind." The endowment has built Negro schools in the South and supported Negro education at Howard, Fisk, Atlanta, and Dillard Universities, etc., and was exhausted by 1948.

Rose of Sharon. A flower mentioned in the Old Testament. Also, the name of a character in The Grapes of Wrath by John Steinbeck. In the illiterate speech of the Okies it is reduced to Rosasharn.

Rose Tavern. A meeting place in Covent Garden which is referred to in eighteenth-century literature.

Rose Theatre. A theater (founded in 1592) in SOUTHWARK where Shakespeare once acted.

Rosetta stone. A stone found in 1799 by M. Boussard, a French officer of engineers, in an excavation made at Fort St. Julien, near Rosetta, in the Nile delta. It has an inscription in three different languages—the hieroglyphic, the demotic, and the Greek. It was erected 195 B.C., in honor of Ptolemy Epiphanes, because he remitted the dues of the sacerdotal body. The great value of this stone is that it furnished the French Egyptologist Jean François Champollion (1790-1832) the key whereby he deciphered the Egyptian hieroglyphics.

Rosicrucian Society. A secret philosophical society of religious reformers, probably founded after 1614, the year of publication of two anonymous pamphlets, probably written by the German Johann Valentin Andreae and describing (no doubt fictitiously) just such a society going back to one Christian Rosenkreuz (hence the name) who would have organized it in 1484. John Inglesant by SHORTHOUSE has a good deal of information about the Rosicrucians.

Rosinante or Rozinante. In Cervantes' DON QUIXOTE, the steed of Don Quixote. The name implies "that the horse had risen from a mean condition to the highest honor a steed could achieve, for it was once a cart-horse, and rose to become the charger of a knight-errant."

Rosinante was admirably drawn, so lean, lank, meagre, drooping, sharp-backed, and raw-boned, as to excite much curiosity and mirth.—Pt. I. ii. 1.

Rosin Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Rosmersholm. A drama by Henrik Ibsen (1886). The principal characters are Rosmer, his wife Beata, and Rebecca West, a scheming young woman of ultra-modern ideas. The unhappy Beata commits suicide. Under Rebecca's influence Rosmer has gradually become a free thinker, but when it comes out that Rebecca had planned his wife's misery as a part of her project of setting him free as a leader of men, Rosmer rebels, and he and Rebecca together leap into the mill stream.

Rosmonda or Rosmunda. A historical character, the daughter of Cunimond, king of the Gepidae. She was compelled to marry Alboin, King of the Lombards, who put her father to death 567 A.D. Alboin made her drink from the skull of her own father, and Rosmonda induced Perideus, the secretary of Helmichild, her lover, to murder the wretch. She then married Helmichild, fled to Ravenna, and later sought to poison her second husband, that she might marry Longin, the exarch, but Helmichild, apprised of her intention, forced her to drink the mixture she had prepared for him. She is the titular heroine of two Italian tragedies. The first by Rucellai in 1525, dramatizing the first part of her career, was one of the earliest of modern tragedies. The second, by Alfieri in 1783, deals with her later life. SWINBURNE also has a poetic tragedy, Rosamund, Queen of the Lombards, dealing with her fate.

Ross. In Shakespeare's MACBETH, a Scotch nobleman who tells Macduff that his castle has been besieged, and his wife and children savagely murdered by Macbeth.

Ross, Betsy (1752–1836). Reputed to have made the first American flag at the special request of George Washington. The Stars and Stripes was adopted as the national emblem by the Continental Congress on June 14, 1777.

Ross, Sir Ronald (1857–1932). British physician, director of the Ross Institute and Hospital for Tropical Diseases in London. Awarded the Nobel prize (1902) for physics and medicine. Author of The Prevention of Malaria (1910), and other works.

Rossetti, Christina Georgina (1830–1894). English poet of Italian parentage, sister of D. G. and W. M. Rossetti, associated with the PRE-RAPHAELITE BROTHERHOOD and known for her ballads and her mystic religious lyrics, marked by symbolism, vividness of detail, and intensity of feeling. Among her works are Goblin Market, and Other Poems (1862); The Prince's Progress (1866); Sing-Song (1872), a collection of verse for children; Annus Domini (1874); A Pageant (1881); Time Flies (1885), prose and verse; The Face of the Deep (1892), an interpretation of the Apocalypse. Goblin Market, THE CONVENT THRESHOLD, and Monna Innominata are her best-known single works.

The father of Christina Rossetti and her brothers was Gabriele Rossetti, an Italian scholar exiled from his native land; his children had the advantage of early contact with other distinguished Italian exiles—painters, literary men, and musicians—who were his friends. Christina published her first poems in THE GERM, and frequently served as a model for the Pre-Raphaelite painters. After a serious illness in 1874, she was left an invalid and rarely received visitors or left her home. See also CAYLEY, CHARLES.

Rossetti, Dante Gabriel. In full Gabriel Charles Dante Rossetti (1828–1882). English poet and painter of Italian parentage, brother of Christina Rossetti. He was the leader of the PRE-RAPHAELITE BROTHERHOOD and became known for his paintings and his lyric poems, the latter being distinguished by richness and vividness of detail, mysticism and fantasy, and the use of a modified ballad form. His books of poetry are The Early Italian Poets (1861), translations of the lyrics of Dante ALIGHIERI and of Italian poets preceding and contemporaneous with Dante; Poems (1870), a group of poems that was at first buried in the coffin of Elizabeth SIDDALL, Rossetti's wife; Ballads and Sonnets (1881). His best-known single works are THE BLESSED DAMOZEL, Sister Helen, Troy Town, THE HOUSE OF LIFE. He also made a number of translations from the Italian, German, and French, the most outstanding of which is THE BALLAD OF DEAD LADIES of François VILLON. See also FLESHLY SCHOOL, THE.

William Michael Rossetti (1829–1919), brother of Dante Gabriel, was an art critic and author and one of the original members of the Pre-Raphaelites, serving as an editor of THE GERM. He wrote a translation of Dante (1865), a Life of Keats (1887), and memoirs of both his brother (1895) and his sister Christina (1904).

Rossi, Bruno (1905-). Italian physicist, chiefly known for his investigations of cosmic rays.

Rossini, Gioacchino Antonio (1792-1868). Italian composer of the bel-canto school of opera. His best-known works are the operas The Barber of Seville (1816) and William Tell (1829), and the celebrated Stabat Mater (1842).

Rostand, Edmond (1868-1918). French dramatist, known for his wit and satire, his talent for romantic and dramatic scenes, and his attempts to revive the French poetic drama. His works include Les Musardises (1890), verse; Les Romanesques (THE ROMANCERS; 1894); La Princesse Loiraine (The Faraway Princess; 1895); La Samaritaine (1897); CYRANO DE BERGERAC (1897); L'AIGLON (The Eaglet; 1900); Chantecler (CHANTICLEER; 1910); Le Vol de la Marseillaise (1919), a series of nationalist lyrics; La Dernière Nuit de Don Juan (The Last Night of Don Juan; 1921).

Rosten, Leo Calvin. Pseudonym Leonard Q. Ross (1908-). Polish-born American economist and author, best known for *The Education of H*y*m*a*n K*a*p*i*a*n* (1937), a series of amusing sketches based on his experiences as part-time teacher of English to adult immigrants.

Rosten, Norman (1914-). American poet and writer for the radio. His books are Return Again, Traveler (1940); The Fourth Decade (1943); The Big Road (1946).

Roswitha or Hrotsvitha (fl. 10th century). A nun in the Benedictine convent of Gandersheim, in Saxony, regarded as Germany's first dramatist, since she tried to combat the influence of the comedies of TERENCE by adapting them as vehicles for the life stories of outstanding saints and virgins. She also wrote a poem celebrating the military deeds of the Emperor Otto I. With HÉLOÏSE and MARIE DE FRANCE, Roswitha is considered one of the three noteworthy women authors of the Middle Ages.

Rota. In full Sacra Romana Rota. In the Roman Catholic Church, the supreme court for both ecclesiastical and secular cases.

Rotarian. A member of one of the local clubs of the International Association of Rotary Clubs. The Rotary Club is a friendly association of business and professional men, formed in Chicago (1905), which holds regular meetings and endeavors to promote local civic interests. It was frequently the object of satire in American fiction during the 1920's.

Rough and Ready. So General Zachary Taylor (1784-1850), twelfth president of the United States, was called.

Rougon-Macquart novels. A series of twenty novels by Emile ZOLA (1871-1893), tracing the complete social history of a family of the Second Empire. The Rougon-Macquart family springs from sordid origins. Adelaide Fouqué, the daughter of an insane father, marries a stupid gardener named Rougon, and the pair have a son, Pierre Rougon, who grows up to enter business. In the meantime, after the death of the elder Rougon, Adelaide and a drunken smuggler named Macquart have two illegitimate children, Antoine and Ursule. In time the former becomes as great a drunkard as his father and marries a market woman; the latter marries a good, honest workman named Mouret. So much of the family history is related in the first volume of the series, La Fortune des Rougons (The Rougon Family; 1871) and in the nineteen succeeding novels the experiences of Adelaide's offspring and their children are followed in some detail.

Of these novels the following are probably the best known:

L'Assommoir (The Dram Shop; 1877). This novel first brought Zola his reputation. The central figure is Gervaise, the daughter of Antoine. At the age of fourteen she is driven from home on account of an affair with a lover who, shortly after, deserts her and her two illegitimate children in Paris. She marries Coupeau, a tinsmith, but betters her fortunes only temporarily. The novel traces in detail the poverty and slow demoralization of the family.

Nana (1880). This novel relates the subsequent career of Nana, the daughter of Gervaise, who has grown up in the squalid atmosphere depicted in L'Assommoir. Possessed of great physical beauty, she attracts the attention of a theater manager and makes her début on the stage. In spite of her utter lack of ability as an actress, men become so infatuated with her that her success is assured and she enters upon a life of luxury and dissipation. Eventually, however, she dies a horrible death of black smallpox, deserted by her friends.

La Terre (The Soil; 1888). This novel of peasant life has as its theme the greed for land. Its climax is the murder of Jean Macquart's wife by her sister.

La Débâcle (The Downfall; 1892). This novel treats of the Franco-Prussian War, with the siege of Sedan as its central episode. The hero is Jean Macquart, a young French corporal; the plot concerns his friendship for Maurice Levasson, a private in his company, and his love for Maurice's sister, Henriette Weiss, whom the siege of Sedan leaves a widow. Under pressure of war he kills his friend unknowingly, and in spite of their mutual passion, this incident brings about the separation of the two lovers.

Roumestan, Numa, see NUMA ROUMESTAN.

roundel. See under RONDEAU.

Roundheads. Puritans of the Civil War period; especially Cromwell's soldiers. They are so called because they wore their hair short, while the Royalists wore long hair covering their shoulders.

Round Table, the. The table fabled to have been made by MERLIN at Carduel for Uther Pendragon. Uther gave it to King Leodegrance, of Camelard, who gave it to King Arthur when the latter married GUINEVERE, his daughter. It was circular to prevent any jealousy on the score of precedence; it seated 150 knights, and a place was left in it for the HOLY GRAIL. The first reference to it is in Wace's Roman de Brut (1155), but the fullest legendary details are from Malory's Morte d'Arthur, III. i and ii.

Knights of the Round Table. According to Malory (Morte d'Arthur, III. i, ii), there were 150 knights who had "sieges" at the table. King Leodegrance brought 100 when, at the wedding of his daughter Guinevere, he gave the table to King Arthur. Merlin filled up twenty-eight of the vacant seats, and the King elected Gawain and Tor; the remaining twenty were left for those who might prove worthy.

Of all the knights of King Arthur's court there were, however, always twelve who held positions of the highest honor. The twelve vary in different accounts, but the following names hold the most conspicuous places: (1) Lancelot, (2) Tristram, (3) Lamoracke, the three bravest; (4) Tor, the first made; (5) Galahad, the chaste; (6) Gawain, the courteous; (7) Gareth, the big-handed; (8) Palomides, the Saracen or unbaptized; (9) Kay, the rude and boastful; (10) Mark, the dastard; (11) Modred, the traitor. The twelfth must be selected from one of the following names, all of which are seated with the prince in the frontispiece attached to the Morte d'Arthur by Sir Thomas Malory published in 1470: Sirs Acolon, Ballamore Belcibus, Belvoire, Bersunt, Bors, Ector de Maris, Ewain, Floll, Gaheris, Galohalt, Grislet, Lionell, Marhaus, Paginet, Pelleas, Percival, Sargris, Superabilis, and Turquine.

There Galahad sat with manly grace,
Yet maiden meekness in his face;
There Morolt of the iron mace,
And love-lorn Tristrem there;
And Dinadam with lively glance,
And Lanval with the fairy lance,
And Mordred with his looks askance, Brunor and Bevidere.
Why should I tell of numbers more?
Sir Cay, Sir Banier, and Sir Bore.
Sir Caradoc the keen.
The gentle Gawain's courteous lore,
Hector de Mares, and Pellinore,
And Lancelot, that evermore
Looked stol'n-wise on the queen.

Scott, Bridal of Triermain, ii, 13.

a round table conference. A conference between political parties in which each has equal authority, and at which it is agreed that the questions in dispute shall be settled amicably and with the maximum amount of "give and take" on each side.

The expression came into prominence in connection with a private conference in the house of Sir William Harcourt, January 14, 1887, with the view of reuniting, if possible, the Liberal party, broken up by Gladstone's Irish policy.

Rourke, Constance Mayfield (1885-1941). American biographer who wrote the first article on Paul Bunyan (New Republic, 1918) to appear in an American magazine. Her best-known books are Trumpets of Jubilee (1927); Troupers of the Gold Coast (1928); Davey Crockett (1934); Audubon (1936); and The Roots of American Culture (1942).

Rousseau, Jean Jacques (1712-1778). Swiss-born French author and thinker, one of the most outstanding and most influential personalities of his age. He is considered the most important forerunner of ROMANTICISM, and his life and writings show the characteristics of the typical romantic personality: extreme individualism, bordering on megalomania at times; excessive sensibility; emotional instability and moral irresponsibility; a passionate love of nature; rebellion against the established social and political order; the glorification of feelings over ideas; imagination and intense introspection; an idealization of sensual love; prolific expression of sentiment; and exaltation of the primitive and "natural." See NOBLE SAVAGE; PRIMITIVISM. Among Rousseau's works are his CONFESSIONS (1781-1788), regarded as one of the greatest and most candid of autobiographies; Julie, ou La Nouvelle Héloïse (JULIE, OR THE NEW HELOISE; 1761), a novel; Discours sur les Sciences et les Arts (1750), asserting that science and art are partially responsible for corrupting mankind; Discours sur l'Origine et les Fondements de l'Inégalité parmi les Hommes (1755), celebrating the "natural man" and indicting private property and the political state as the cause of inequality and oppression; THE SOCIAL CONTRACT (Le Contrat Social; 1762), his most famous and most influential work; ÉMILE (1762), an "educational romance," regarded as partly fictional and partly autobiographical.

A child prodigy and the son of a watchmaker, Rousseau led an erratic and adventuresome life, having set out from Geneva at the age of sixteen to seek his fortune in France. He was assisted by women of both high and low social estate, became a success in social and intellectual circles in Paris, quarreled with his friends, was exiled from France because of Émile, wandered from country to country, and died at last in Paris. William GODWIN and the leaders of the French Revolution of 1789 were among those influenced by his political ideas; LAMARTINE and Alfred de MUSSET were influenced by his style. A contemporary disciple was Bernardin de SAINT-PIERRE. He later married his mistress, Therese le Vasseur, who bore him five children.

Royal Exchange. The building in London where all exchange business is conducted. The original Royal Exchange was built by Sir Thomas Gresham in 1566 and was named by Queen Elizabeth.

Royal Society of London for Improving Natural Knowledge, The. An English scientific academy, founded in 1660 for the purpose of studying the whole field of knowledge. Abraham COWLEY and the chemist Robert Boyle had presented plans for such an organization, and among its members were included some of the leading literary, diplomatic, and scientific figures of the day. Samuel PEPYS, who was admitted to the Society in 1665 and later became its president, has a number of references to its meetings and its experiments in his famous diary, and John WINTROP and Cotton and Increase MATHER were the leaders of a group of New England correspondents of the Royal Society. Thomas SPRAT, Bishop of Rochester, was historian of the organization, which sought, among other aims, to improve the English prose style of the time, making it simpler, clearer, and more suited to the needs of scientific exposition than the usual literary style then current. In this connection, an international language of symbols was proposed by Bishop Wilkins, considered to have been the Society's most important member.

The Royal Society was satirized in frequent contemporary works, including Shadwell's Virtuosi (1676), Samuel Butler's THE ELEPHANT IN THE MOON, and Jonathan Swift's Gulliver's Travels (see GULLIVER, LEMUEL), Book III, A Voyage to Laputa. See LAPUTA.

Royall, Charity. The heroine of Edith Wharton's SUMMER. Her guardian, Lawyer Royall, is also an important character.

Royce, Josiah (1855-1916). American philosopher who wished to unite absolute idealism with social realism. His famous theory of the Absolute appeared first in The Religious Aspect of Philosophy (1885). Royce believed that it was possible to prove ultimate truths.

r's, the three. Reading, writing and arithmetic; or phonetically "readin', ritin', 'n' rith-metic." Hence it means the elementary principles; the fundamentals of education.

R.S.V.P. (Fr. Répondez s'il vous plaît, "Answer, if you please.") Letters frequently affixed to an invitation requiring an answer.

Ruach. In Rabelais' GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL, the isle of winds, visited by Pantagruel and his companions on their way to the oracle of the Holy Bottle. The people of this island live on wind, such as flattery, promises and hope. The poorer sort are very ill-fed, but the great are stuffed with huge mill-draughts of the same unsubstantial puffs.

Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám, The. It was translated by Edward FITZGERALD (1859). The oldest known manuscript, which is in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, is dated from Shiraz, A.H. 865 (1460 A.D.). Rubai means "quatrain." See OMAR KHAYYAM.

Rubempré, Lucien de. A young journalist and poet who appears in a number of the novels of Balzac's COMÉDIE HUMAINE, notably Scenes from a Courtesan's Life (Les Splendeurs et misères des courtisanes) and The Last Incarnation of Vautrin (La dernière Incarnation de Vautrin). As a promising young man from the provinces he is introduced by D'Arthez into the Cénacle, a congenial club, but finds the path to success full of difficulties and grows despondent. He is befriended by a Spanish priest who is in reality a noted criminal, Jacques COLLIN. Lucien now falls madly in love with the courtesan, Esther Van Gobseck, is the half unwitting tool of Collin in the affair, and finally is committed to prison for participation in Collin's crimes. Unable to endure the shame and remorse, he hangs himself.

Rubens, Peter Paul (1577-1640). Celebrated Flemish painter. Among his works are The Descent from the Cross (in Antwerp Cathedral), The Rape of the Sabines (in London), etc.

Rubicon.

to pass the Rubicon. To take some step from which it is not possible to recede.

The Rubicon was a small river separating ancient Italy from Cisalpine Gaul (the province allotted to Julius Caesar). When, in 49 B.C., Caesar crossed this stream, he passed beyond the limits of his own province and became an invader of Italy, thus precipitating the Civil War.

Ruck, Berta (1878-). Prolific English novelist, married to Oliver ONIONS. Her first novel, His Official Fiancée (1914), was made into a silent moving picture.

Rudder Grange. A novel by Frank R. STOCKTON (1879). It relates in whimsical fashion the adventures of the maid Pomona, her blood-and-thunder tastes in literature, her honeymoon in a lunatic asylum, and the charms of her entertaining child. The Rudder Grangers, who have as servant the irrepressible Pomona, are happy-go-lucky folk who live now in a canal boat, now in a deserted tavern, now in a tent on the edge of their own estate. Their adventures are continued in The Rudder Grangers Abroad (1891) and Pomona's Travels (1894).

Ruddymane. The infant son of Sir Moriant, in Spenser's FAÉRIE QUEENE (II, i, iii); he is so called because his hand is red with his mother's blood. She stabbed herself because her husband was paralyzed by a draught from an enchanted stream.

Rudge, Barnaby. The hero of Dickens' novel, Barnaby Rudge (1841), a half-witted young man, three and twenty years old. He is rather spare, of a fair height and strong make. His hair, of which he has a great profusion, is red, and hangs in disorder about his face and shoulders. His face is pale, his eyes glassy and protruding. His dress is green, clumsily trimmed here and there with gaudy lace. He has a large raven, named Grip, which he carries at his back in a basket, a most knowing imp, which cries out in a hoarse voice, "Halloa!" "I'm a devil!" "Never say die!" "Polly, put the kettle on!"

Barnaby joins the GORDON RIOTERS for the proud pleasure of carrying a flag and wearing a blue bow. He is arrested and condemned to death, but by the influence of Gabriel Varden, the locksmith, the poor half-witted lad is reprieved, and lives the rest of his life with his mother in a cottage and garden near the Maypole.

Here he lived, tending the poultry and the cattle, working in a garden of his own, and helping every one. He was known to every bird and beast about the place, and had a name for every one. Never was there a lighter-hearted husbandman, a creature more popular with young and old, a blither and more happy soul than Barnaby.—Ch. lxxxii.

Mr. Rudge. The father of Barnaby, supposed to have been murdered the same night as Mr. Haredale, to whom he was steward. The fact is that Rudge himself is the murderer both of Mr. Haredale and also of his faithful servant, to whom the crime was falsely attributed. After the murder, he is seen by many haunting the locality, and is supposed to be a ghost. He joins the Gordon rioters and is sent to Newgate, but makes his escape with the other prisoners when it is burnt down.

Mrs. Mary Rudge. Mother of Barnaby, and very like him, "but where in his face there was wildness and vacancy, in hers there was the patient composure of long effort and quiet resignation."

Rudge, William Edwin (1876-1931). New York printer, distinguished for his book designing; associated with such experts as Goudy, Bruce Rogers, Frederic Warde and W. A. Dwiggins.

Rüdiger. Margrave of Bechelaren, liege-man of King Etzel, and one of the principal characters in the NIBELUNGENLIED. He is sent to Burgundy by King Etzel, to conduct Kriemhild to Hungary if she will consent to marry the Hunnish king. When Gunther and his suite go to pay a visit to Kriemhild, he entertains them all most hospitably, and gives his daughter in marriage to Kriemhild's youngest brother, Giselher. When the broil breaks out in the dining-hall of King Etzel, and Rudiger is compelled to take part against the Burgundians, he fights with Kriemhild's second brother, Gernot. Rudiger strikes Gernot "through his helmet," and the Prince strikes the Margrave "through shield and morion," and "down dead dropped both together, each by the other slain."

Rüdiger, Clotilde von. The heroine of Meredith's TRAGIC COMEDIANS.

Rudkis, Jurgis and his wife Ona Rudkis. Slav immigrants, the leading characters of Upton Sinclair's novel THE JUNGLE.

Rudolf or Rudolph of Hapsburg (1858-1889). Archduke and crown prince of Austria, the only son of Emperor Francis Joseph. His love for the Baroness Marie Vetsera resulted in the tragedy of the hunting lodge of MAYERLING where the couple was found dead. The official explanation was double suicide, but investigation into the cause of death was suppressed.

Rudolph. The poet hero of Puccini's opera LA BOHÈME.

Rudolstadt, Count Albert of. The hero of George Sand's novel CONSUELO.

Rudra (Sans., rud, "to weep," and dra, "to run"). Father of the tempest gods in the Hindu mythology of the Vedas. The legend says that the boy ran about weeping because he had no name, whereupon Brahma said, "Let thy name be Rud-dra."

Rudy. In James Joyce's ULYSSES, the son of Leopold BLOOM. The child died in infancy a number of years before the time of the action of the novel, but Bloom constantly thinks of him and imagines how he would look if he had lived. Stephen DEDALUS becomes for a while a substitute for the lost son.

Rue de la Paix. A street in Paris on which are situated the most expensive shops.

Rufus. Surname of William II of England (1087-1100). So called because of his fiery complexion.

Rugby. A famous PUBLIC SCHOOL in England, founded in 1567. Its headmaster from 1828 to 1842 was Thomas Arnold, the father of Matthew ARNOLD. Rukeyser, Muriel (1913-). American poet, on first publication acclaimed as among the most promising poets of her generation. Her first work was marked by proletarian sympathies and Marxist convictions (see MARXISM IN LITERATURE; PROLETARIAN LITERATURE), emotional intensity, and an attempted use of 20th-century industrial and scientific symbols in dealing with social injustice and personal problems; critics found here the influence of the British revolutionary poets AUDEN, SPENDER, and DAY LEWIS. Her later work, considered to show the influence of Rainer Maria RILKE, became concerned more extensively with personal emotions and the problem of symbolism, written in a condensed and extremely elliptical style. Her books include Theory of Flight (1935), in which symbols from aviation are used; U. S. 1 (1938), dealing with the exploitation of working-people living along the American highway so named; A Turning Wind (1940); Wake Island (1942), dealing with a battle during World War II; Willard Gibbs (1942), a biography of the American scientist of that name.

Ruksh or Rakush. The horse of the Persian hero RUSTUM.

And Ruksh, his horse,
Followed him, like a faithful hound, at heel—
Ruksh, whose renown was noised through all the earth
Matthew Arnold, Sohrab and Rustem.

Rumpelstiltskin or Rumpelstilzchen. A passionate little deformed dwarf of German folklore. A miller's daughter is enjoined by a king to spin straw into gold, and the dwarf does it for her, on condition that she give him her first child. The maiden marries the king, and grieves so bitterly when the child is born that the dwarf promises to relent if within three days she can find out his name. Two days are spent in vain guesses, but the third day one of the queen's servants hears a strange voice singing—

Little dreams my dainty dame
Rumpelstilzchen is my name.

She tells the queen of this, and the dwarf destroys himself in anger at having lost his bargain.

Rundstedt, Karl Rudolf Gerd von (1875-). German field marshal, who commanded the southern armies against Poland (1939), the center group of armies against France (1940), and was commander in chief of the German army of occupation in France (from 1942).

runes. Characters in the alphabet used by the early Germanic peoples, especially the Anglo-Saxons and Scandinavians. They were formed by the modification of the Roman alphabet to eliminate horizontal strokes, so that inscriptions might be carved in wood; as new diphthongs arose through sound-changes in the languages, new runes were devised, each of which was named for a common or proper noun beginning with the character in question. The best-known rune is the "thorn" (þ), used throughout Anglo-Saxon and Middle English to represent the th sound and so named for the thorn which it resembles. In the poems attributed to CYNEWULF, there are passages containing runes which spell out the author's name.

Runkle, Bertha. American novelist, author of several best-sellers, notably The Helmet of Navarre (1901); The Truth about Tolna (1906); The Scarlet Rider (1913); etc.

Runnymede. An island (Charter Island) in the Thames in Surrey, where King John, on June 15, 1215, was forced to sign the Magna Carta. Cf. Kipling's poem, The Reeds of Runnymede. Some say the document was signed in the meadow on the south side of the Thames.

Runyon, Damon (1884-1946). American journalist and popular short-story writer who has interpreted the semi-literate American, in slangy Americanese and with unusual observation. He has been called a master of "the art of anonymity in the first person." After his death by cancer, a large sum was raised for a cancer research foundation to bear his name.

Rupert, Prince. Count Palatine of Rhine and Duke of Bavaria (1619-1682). Son of Frederick V, Elector Palatine, and Elizabeth, daughter of James I of England. After having played a minor part in the Thirty Years' War, he became cavalry leader for his uncle Charles I during the English Civil War. He distinguished himself by his gallantry and won the nickname of "the Mad Cavalier." Upon surrendering Bristol to Fairfax (1645), his uncle took his offices away from him, but he was later cleared by a court-martial. He commanded the King's fleet (1648-1650), and became admiral of the fleet (1673) and first lord of the admiralty (1673-1679). Besides his warlike exploits he was an artist and experimental scientist. He improved the mezzotint process, made gunpowder experiments, and invented the alloy which is known as Prince Rupert's or Prince's metal. See also PRINCE RUPERT'S DROPS.

Ruppert, Jacob (1867-1939). American brewer. Owner of the New York Yankees.

R.U.R. A play by Karel ČAPEK, produced in 1923. It deals with an imagined future state in which robots, enslaved to do work for men, revolt against their masters. The initials in the title stand for "Rossum's Universal Robots," the name of the commercial firm which manufactures the mechanical creatures.

Rural Rides. A book of descriptions of the English countryside and of agricultural and social conditions in England by William COBBETT (1830).

Ruritania. The imaginary kingdom in which occurs the action of The Prisoner of Zenda (1894) and Rupert of Hentzau (1898) by Anthony HOPE.

Rush, Benjamin (1745?-1813). American physician, member of the Continental Congress (1776-1777), and signer of the Declaration of Independence.

Rush, Friar. A legendary house-spirit who originated as a kind of ultra-mischievous and evil-dispositioned Robin Goodfellow in medieval German folk-tales (Bruder Rausch, i.e., "intoxication"). His particular duty was to lead monks and friars into wickedness and keep them in it. A prose History of Friar Rush appeared in English as early as 1568, and in 1601 Henslowe records a comedy (now lost), Friar Rush and the Proud Woman of Antwerp, by Day and Houghton.

Rush, Richard (1780-1859). Son of Benjamin RUSH. Comptroller of the Treasury (1811); attorney general (1814-1817); minister to England (1817-1825); etc. He was prominent in the negotiations which led to the promulgation of the Monroe Doctrine.

Ruskin, John (1819-1900). English painter, art critic, and essayist, associated with the PRERAPHAELITE BROTHERHOOD, known for his rebellion against the materialistic standards of Victorian England, his attraction to the Middle Ages, his interest in economic theory and social experimentation, and his rich and eloquent prose style. His works include MODERN PAINTERS (1843-1860); The Seven Lamps of Architecture (1849), an attempt to relate artistic value to morality; The Stones of Venice (1851-1853), a celebration of Gothic architecture and an attack on "the pestilent art of the Renaissance"; Unto This Last (1862), a series of articles on wealth, published in the Cornhill Magazine; Munera Pulveris (1862-1863), a similar series of articles in Fraser's Magazine, published in 1873; Sesame and Lilies (1863), three lectures; The Crown of Wild Olive (1866), a collection of lectures tending toward social and economic interpretations of war, England's future, labor, etc.; Fors Clavigera (1871-1884), a series of open letters addressed to English workmen on a number of subjects; Praeterita (1885-1889), an account of the author's early life.

Ruskin was the son of a well-to-do London wine merchant, pampered and isolated in his youth. Like William MORRIS, he tried to reform the prevailing Victorian taste in art, and at Oxford University, where he lectured on art from time to time, he attempted the founding of guilds based on the system in use in the Middle Ages, so that each worker might become a master craftsman. St. George's Guild, The Hinksey Diggers, and other groups were established as the result of Ruskin's efforts. He also led a movement to prevent the railroads from spoiling the natural beauty of the landscape, and advocated state control of the railroad systems in order to accomplish his aim.

Russell, Annie (1869-1936). English-born American actress. Under the management of Charles Frohman (1896). Created the title rôle in Major Barbara by George Bernard Shaw (1906). Under her own management (1912-1914).

Russell, Bertrand Arthur William. 3rd Earl Russell (1872-). English philosopher and author, known for his studies in logic and mathematics, his essays and lectures on philosophic problems in a semi-popularizing vein, his early advocacy of PACIFISM, and his interest in politics and such social problems as divorce and sexual relations. Among his works are Principia Mathematica (1910); The Problems of Philosophy (1911); Mysticism and Logic (1918); The Practice and Theory of Bolshevism (1920); Analysis of the Mind (1921); The A.B.C. of Atoms (1923); The A.B.C. of Relativity (1925); Skeptical Essays (1928); Marriage and Morals (1929); The Conquest of Happiness (1929); Our Knowledge of the External World (1929); Education and the Modern World (1932); Freedom versus Organization, 1814-1914 (1934), on European politics; In Praise of Idleness (1935), essays; Religion and Science (1935); Power: A New Social Analysis (1938); Why I Am Not a Christian (1940); An Inquiry into Meaning and Truth (1940); Let the People Think (1941).

Russell's unorthodox opinions involved him in frequent difficulties with English and American authorities. During World War I in England he was fined and imprisoned for his pacifist views. An experimental nursery school conducted by him and his wife beginning in 1927 was severely criticized, and in 1939 an appointment he had received to the mathematics department of the College of the City of New York was withdrawn on the grounds that his teachings were immoral. He later quarreled with Albert Barnes, wealthy art collector of Merion, Pa., at whose Foundation he lectured.

Russell, Charles Edward (1860-1941). American journalist. Repeatedly Socialist candidate for governor and mayor of New York. Pulitzer prize in biography (1928) for The American Orchestra and Theodore Thomas. Author of many other books both on Socialistic themes and in the realm of biography and history.

Russell, Charles Taze (1852-1916). American religious leader, known as "Pastor Russell." His followers, the Russellites, became organized into a society called the International Bible Students' Association. He taught that the second coming of Christ had taken place invisibly in 1874 and that forty years later a period of social revolution and chaos would begin, ultimately to be followed by the establishment of Christ's kingdom on earth.

Russell, Elizabeth Mary. Countess Russell. Née Mary Annette Beauchamp (1866-1941). See (3) under ELIZABETH.

Russell's Bookstore. A bookstore in Charlestown, S.C., where, in the 1850's, a number of Southern writers such as TIMROD, SIMMS, and HAYNE used to meet. Their meetings resulted in Russell's Magazine (1857-1860), which was edited by Hayne and modeled on Blackwood's in Edinburgh.

Russell Square. A residential square in London referred to by Thackeray in describing the wealthy homes of certain people in his novels.

Russian. For the Russian Byron, the Russian Murat, etc.; see under BYRON, MURAT.

Rustam or Rustum. Chief of the Persian mythical heroes, son of Zal "the Fair," King of India, and regular descendant of Benjamin, the beloved son of Jacob the patriarch. His story is told in the Persian epic SHAH NAMAH. He delivers King Caicus from prison, but afterwards falls into disgrace because he refuses to embrace the religious system of ZOROASTER. Caicus sends his son Asfendiar (or Isfendiar) to convert him, and, as persuasion avails nothing, the logic of single combat is resorted to. The fight lasts two days, and then Rustam discovers that Asfendiar bears a "charmed life," proof against all wounds. The valor of these two heroes is proverbial, and the Persian romances are full of their deeds of fight. Rustam is also famous for his victory over the white dragon Asdeev. In Matthew ARNOLD's poem Sohrab and Rustum, Rustum fights with Sohrab, overcomes him, and finds too late he has slain his own son.

Rutgers College. An institution of learning, founded (1766) under the name of Queen's College at New Brunswick, N.J., and renamed Rutgers College (1825) in honor of its benefactor Henry Rutgers (1745-1830). Among its famous former students are the poet Joyce KILMER, who died in action in World War I, and the Negro singer and actor Paul ROBESON, who was an All American football star while in college.

Ruth. Heroine of a love story of the Old Testament told in the book of Ruth. She is a Moabitess, and the chief appeal of the idyll lies in her devotion to her Hebrew mother-in-law, Naomi, after the death of her husband, Naomi's son. She accompanies Naomi back to Bethlehem with the words, "Entreat me not to leave thee and to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people and thy God my God." In Bethlehem she becomes a gleaner in the fields of Boaz, a rich kinsman, and he falls in love with her and marries her.

Ruth, George Herman. Known as Babe Ruth (1894-1948). American professional baseball player, voted the most valuable player in the American League in 1923. In 1927 he made 60 home runs. Retired in 1935.

Rutherford, Ernest. 1st Baron Rutherford of Nelson (1871-1937). British physicist who taught at McGill University in Canada and at Manchester, England. In 1919 he succeeded in transmuting chemical elements by artificial means and formulated the theory that the atom is not indivisible but consists of a nucleus round which electrons revolve in planetary orbits. Won the Nobel prize for chemistry (1908).

Rutherford, Mark, see MARK RUTHERFORD.

Rutledge, Ann (1816-1835). Abraham Lincoln's early love; she was the daughter of his landlord at New Salem, Illinois, and died suddenly of malarial fever. The affair has been much written about by novelists and poets.

Saba, Queen of. See SHEBA.

Sabaoth (Hebrew, "armies" or "hosts"). In the New Testament, the phrase "the Lord of Sabaoth" is translated by the "Lord of Hosts."

Sabatini, Rafael (1875-). Italian novelist, author of best-selling historical and adventure romances in English, the best-known of which are Scaramouche (1921), Captain Blood (1922), and The Sea-Hawk (1923). He was at the height of his popularity in the early 1920's.

Sabbatical year. One year in seven when all land with the ancient Jews was to lie fallow for twelve months. This law was founded on Ex. xxiii. 10, etc.; Lev. xxv. 2-7; Deut. xv. 1-11. It is used for a missionary's furlough, or a year of vacation from a profession.

Sabines. An ancient Italian people, subjugated by the Romans about 290 B. C. The rape of the Sabine women, an important incident in the legendary history of Rome, was instigated by Romulus who needed wives for his men and solved the problem by telling them to help themselves to Sabine virgins after he had lured the male population away. It is the subject of many paintings, as for instance by Giordano and Rubens.

sabotage. Wilful and malicious destruction of tools, plants, machinery, materials, etc., by discontented workmen or strikers, or by enemy agents in war time. The term came into use after the great French railway strike of 1912, when the strikers cut the shoes (sabots) holding the railway lines.

Sabra. The legendary daughter of Ptolemy, King of Egypt, rescued by St. George (see under SAINTS) from the fangs of the dragon and ultimately married to her deliverer. She is represented as pure in mind, saintly in character, a perfect citizen, daughter, and wife. Her three sons, born at one birth, were named Guy, Alexander and David. Sabra died from the "pricks of a thorny brake."

Sabre, Mark. The hero of Hutchinson's IF WINTER COMES. He says of himself that he is "unsatisfactory, because I've got the most infernal habit of seeing things from about twenty points of view."

Sabrina. The Latin name of the river Severn, but in British legend the name of the daughter of LOCRINE and his concubine Estrildis. Locrine's queen, Guendolen, vowed vengeance against Estrildis and her daughter, got an army together, and overthrew her husband. Sabrina fled and jumped into the Severn; NEREUS took pity on her, and made her goddess of the river, which is hence poetically called Sabrina.

There is a gentle nymph not far from hence,
That with moist curb sways the smooth Severn stream
Sabrina is her name, a virgin pure.
Milton, Comus, 840

Sacco Benedetto or San Benito (Span., "the blessed sack or cloak"). The yellow linen robe with two crosses on it, and painted over with flames and devils, in which persons condemned by the Spanish Inquisition were arrayed when they went to the stake. See AUTO DA FÉ. In the case of those who expressed repentance for their errors, the flames were directed downwards. Penitents who had been taken before the Inquisition had to wear this badge for a stated period. Those worn by Jews, sorcerers, and renegades bore a St. Andrew's cross in red on back and front.

Sacco-Vanzetti Case. A famous court case during the period of the "Red scare" in the early 1920's, in which two Italian-born radicals, Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, were arrested, tried, and convicted for murder committed during a payroll robbery by a gang of bandits in South Braintree, Massachusetts (1920). The evidence was considered flimsy, and a world-wide protest was raised on the charge that the two men were the victims of injustice, but they were finally executed in 1927. The case inspired several literary works, including Justice Denied in Massachusetts (1927), a poem by Edna St. Vincent Millay; Boston (1928), a novel by Upton Sinclair; Fire-head (1929), a narrative poem by Lola Ridge; and Winterset (1935), a play by Maxwell Anderson.

Sacher-Masoch, Leopold von (1836-1895). German novelist, author of Das Vermächtnis Kains (1870-1877); Die Messalinen Wiens (1874); etc. From his name is derived the term MASOCHISM, denoting a sexual abnormality (pleasure in being hurt) depicted in some of his novels.

Sacheverell, Henry (1674?-1724). English preacher, whose political sermons attacking the Whig ministry made him the idol of the Tory party. He was impeached and suspended from preaching, but selected to preach the Restoration sermon (1713).

Sachs, Hans. In Wagner's opera THE MEISTERSINGER, the town cobbler, singer, and poet of Nuremberg, the central figure of the opera. Sachs was a real person, who lived 1494-1576, and left behind him thirty-four folio vols. of MS., containing 208 plays, 1700 comic tales, and about 450 lyric poems.

Here Hans Sachs, the cobbler-poet, laureate of the gentle craft, Wisest of the Twelve Wise Masters, in huge folios sang and laughed.

Longfellow, Nuremberg

sack (from Fr. sec, "dry"). Originally a dry wine, later any of a variety of wines from southern Europe, frequently mentioned in Elizabethan drama and the literature of the 17th century; particularly "Sherris sack" is referred to by Shakespeare.

sack, to give one the. To dismiss from further service. At one time, manufacturers who employed those who worked at home put the work to be done in a bag or sack. If, when brought back, the work was satisfactory, the bag or sack was filled again with materials; if not, it was laid empty on the counter, and this indicated that the person would no longer be employed by the firm.

Sackville, Charles. 6th Earl of Dorset, 1st Earl of Middlesex (1638-1706). English poet and courtier. Friend and patron of poets, including Prior, Wycherly, Dryden, and others. His best-known poem is, "To all you Ladies, now at land," written (1665) in the first Dutch war at sea, the night before an engagement.

Sackville, Thomas. 1st Earl of Dorset and Baron Buckhurst (1536-1608). English poet and statesman, known for his authorship of the last two acts of the Tragedy of Gorboduc (see GORBODUC; 1562), an important work in the history of the English drama, the first three acts of which were written by Thomas Norton, and especially for his Induction to the 1563 edition of THE MIRROR FOR MAGISTRATES. The latter piece is the most famous part of the Mirror, considered by many critics to be the most outstanding poem written in England between the death of Chaucer and the publication of Spenser's SHEPHERD'S CALENDAR. Sackville followed his Induction with an account of the life of Henry, Duke of Buckingham, also included in the 1563 edition.

In later life, Sackville devoted himself to a public career, serving variously as a Member of Parliament, an ambassador, a member of the Privy Council, Lord Treasurer, and Chancellor of Oxford University.

Sackville-West, Edward Charles (1901-). English novelist; nephew of Victoria Mary SACKVILLE-WEST. Author of light and witty novels, as Piano Quintet (1925); The Sun in Capricorn (1934); etc.

Sackville-West, Victoria Mary (1892-). English novelist, poet, and critic, a descendant of Thomas SACKVILLE and associated with the Bloomsbury Group. Her works include Poems of East and West (1917), Orchard and Vineyard (1921), The Land (1926), King's Daughter (1930), and Collected Poems (1933), books of poetry; Heritage (1919), The Dragon in Shallow Waters (1922), Challenge (1923), Gray Wethers (1923), Seducers in Ecuador (1924), The Edwardians (1930), All Passion Spent (1931), Family History (1932), The Dark Island (1934), and Pepita (1937), novels; The Heir (1922) and Thirty Clocks Strike the Hour, and Other Stories (1932), collections of short stories; Knole and the Sackvilles (1922), a family history; Andrew Marvell (1929), criticism; St. Joan of Arc (1936); Country Notes in Wartime (1940).

Miss Sackville-West, of a noble English family, was brought up in the picturesque Knole Castle, in Kent, an ancestral possession which originally was a gift from Queen Elizabeth to Thomas Sackville; the family background is incorporated in several of the author's works. She married Harold Nicolson, also a writer, in 1913. Orlando, by Virginia Woolf, is said to be a portrait of Knole Castle and V. Sackville-West herself, who was a close friend of Mrs. Woolf.

sacrament. Originally "a military oath" (Lat. sacramentum) taken by the Roman soldiers not to desert their standard, turn their back on the enemy, or abandon their general. The early Christians used the word to signify "a sacred mystery," and hence its application to baptism, the Eucharist, marriage, confirmation, etc.

The five sacraments are Confirmation, Penance, Orders, Matrimony, and Extreme Unction. These are not counted "Sacraments of the Gospel." Cf. Thirty-nine Articles, Article xxv.

The seven sacraments are Baptism, Confirmation, the Eucharist, Penance, Orders, Matrimony, and Extreme Unction.

The two sacraments of the Protestant Churches are Baptism and the Lord's Supper.

Sainte-Beuve, Charles-Augustin (1804-1869). French literary critic and author, successively influenced in his thought by scientific skepticism, physiology and POSITIVISM, ROMANTICISM, Saint-Simonism, liberal Catholicism, Swiss Calvinism, and other intellectual movements of his time. His criticism is sometimes divided into three periods: one, in which he was the spokesman for the romantic school; the second, in which he developed his biographical and psychological approach, studying a literary work through the life and personality of its author; and a third, in which he emphasized historical background and social environment in his studies in a method similar to that of NATURALISM in the novel. His standards of judgment are taste, truth in the portrayal of life, moderation, and artistic unity.

Sainte-Beuve's works include Vie, Poésies, et Pensées de Joseph Delorme (The Life, Poetry, and Thought of Joseph Delorme; 1829), an autobiographical work, morbid in tone; Consolations (1831); Pensées d'Aout (1837); Le Livre d'Amour (1843); Volupté (1834), an autobiographical novel in the romantic vein, ending in a conversion of the hero to religion; Tableau de la Poésie Française au XIVe Siècle (1828); Port-Royal (1840-1860), a study of the Jansenists; Chateaubriand et son Groupe Littéraire, Causeries du Lundi (1851-1862) and Nouveaux Lundis (1863-1870), weekly critical articles; Portraits Littéraires (1862-1864); Portraits Contemporains (1869-1871).

Sainte-Beuve had a reputation for extreme variability in his friendships, personal loyalties, and intellectual affiliations. Le Livre d'Amour celebrates with great frankness the critic's early love-affair with the wife of Victor Hugo and aroused a great deal of scandal on its publication.

St. Brendan's Voyage. See St. Brendan or Brendan under SAINTS.

St. Clare, Augustin. In Harriet Beecher Stowe's UNCLE TOM'S CABIN, the kind, indulgent master of Uncle Tom. He is beloved by all his slaves.

Evangeline St. Clare or Little Eva. The daughter of Mr. St. Clare, the good angel of the family, adored by Uncle Tom. Her sentimental death scene is famous. For an amusing parody, cf. Season in the Sun (1946) by Wolcott Gibbs.

Miss Ophelia St. Clare. Cousin of Augustin. She is a New England Puritan.

St. Cleve, Swithin. One of the chief characters in Hardy's TWO ON A TOWER.

St. Cloud. A suburb of Paris, notable for its palace where many important events in French history took place. Built by Louis XIV (1658) on the site of an older castle, it was bought by Louis XVI for Marie Antoinette, and was later a favorite residence of Napoleon I and Napoleon III. It was badly damaged during the Franco-Prussian War, and afterwards demolished.

Saint-Cyr. A convent school for daughters of the French nobility founded at the village of that name, near Versailles, by Mme de Maintenon. In 1806 it became the famous French military school which corresponded to Sandhurst in England.

St. Denis, Ruth. Real name Ruth Dennis. American dancer and teacher of the modern dance. Married Ted Shawn (now separated) and organized the Denishawn School of Dancing. Toured with the Denishawn Dancers in the U.S., England, and the Orient.

St. Elmo or St. Elmo's Fire. The corpusant (Port. corpo santo, "sacred body"), or corposant, an electrical luminosity often seen on the masts and rigging of ships on dark, stormy nights. There is no saint of this name, and the suggestions are that "Elmo" is a corruption of St. Anselm (of Lucca), St. Erasmus (the patron saint of Neapolitan sailors), or of Helena, sister of Castor and Pollux, by which twin-name the St. Elmo's Fire is also known.

St. Elmo is the name of the title and hero of a once popular novel by Augusta Jane Evans Wilson (Am., 1866).

Saint-Evremond, Seigneur de. Charles de Marguetel de Saint-Denis (1610?-1703). French wit and littérateur, involved in the fall of Fouquet. Attacked Mazarin and fled to England (1661), where he was well received by Charles II and became a member of Hortense MANCINI's London salon. Among his works are critical essays, poems, dialogues, etc., all published after his death.

Saint-Exupéry, Antoine de (1900-1945). French aviator and writer. His books are poetic in style, mostly about flights he made. His work was recognized at once. Awarded the Prix Fémina-Vie Heureuse (1931) and the Grand Prix of the French Academy (1939). His Wind, Sand and Stars (1939) was a best-seller in the U.S.; his children's book, The Little Prince (1943), illustrated by himself, is a delightfully wise fairy tale. Killed in an airplane accident.

Saint-Gaudens, Augustus (1848-1907). Irish-born American sculptor. His Reminiscences, in two volumes, were published in 1913. Member, American Hall of Fame (1920).

Saint-Germain-en-Laye. French town and castle on the left bank of the Seine, eight miles from Paris, where James II resided during his exile.

Saint-Germain, Treaty of. The peace treaty between Austria and the Allies after World War I (September 10, 1919). Among other provisions, it prohibited Anschluss (union with the Reich).

St. Helena. A British-owned island in the South Atlantic where Napoleon was exiled after the battle of Waterloo (1815-1821).

St. James's Park. A public park in London. Charles II modeled it on the gardens of Holland. It served both the Palaces of St. James and of Whitehall. Mention of it is made in the diaries of Pepys and Evelyn.

Saint John Lateran. The cathedral of the Pope in Rome, in which ecclesiastical councils are held. Known as "the mother and head of all churches."

Saint-Just, Louis Antoine Léon de (1767-1794). French revolutionary leader and intimate of ROBESPIERRE. He was active in overthrowing the Girondists and instrumental in bringing on the Reign of Terror. Guillotined together with Robespierre (1794).

St. Leger. A famous English horse-race established by Colonel St. Leger (1776) and second in importance only to the Derby.

St. Louis Blues. See under BLUES.

Saint-Loup, Robert. In Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST, the nephew of Baron de CHARLUS and friend of the narrator Marcel. At first he is a morally upright young man, but later, after experience in the army and in aristocratic society, he is unmoved by the most outrageous practices. RACHEL is his mistress; eventually, however, he marries GILBERTE, the daughter of Charles SWANN.

St. Maël. The old Breton monk whom Anatole France in his satire PENGUIN ISLAND portrays as preaching to a congregation of penguins.

Saint-Mihiel. A French town on the Meuse river. In World War I, scene of an American, French, and British offensive (September 12-13, 1918) designed to free the railway lines in that vicinity which the Germans had held since 1914.

St. Nicholas. A monthly magazine for children edited (1873-1905) by Mary Mapes Dodge. Among its contributors were Louisa M. Alcott, Frank R. Stockton, Edward Eggleston, Mark Twain, Kipling, Palmer Cox (the inventor of the Brownies), Howard Pyle, and others.

St. Patrick's Purgatory. See St. Patrick under SAINTS.

St. Paul's. Anglican cathedral in London. The original (Gothic) building was destroyed in the Great Fire of 1666. Christopher WREN designed the present St. Paul's (completed in 1701). It has a huge, high dome. Inside are the tombs of Wellington, Nelson and other notables, including the architect. The German bombing of 1940-1941 destroyed the eastern section; the dome was not hurt.

St. Peter's in Rome is the largest church in Christendom. It can accommodate fifty thousand people, and in it most of the important papal functions are held. Donato Bramante laid out the plan in the form of a Greek cross. This was modified but Michelangelo used Bramante's ideas in bringing the plan to completion. The famous dome is Michelangelo's work.

Saint-Pierre, Jacques Henri Bernardin de (1737-1814). French author, a direct follower of J. J. ROUSSEAU, known for his sentimental worship of nature and his doctrine that everything in the universe was created for the special benefit of man. His best-known works are Études de la Nature (1784) and PAUL AND VIRGINIA (1788), a novel dealing with Rousseauistic natural education and natural feeling.

St. Pol, Jehane. Heroine of Maurice Hewlett's RICHARD YEA-AND-NAY.

St. Prioux. The amant of JULIE, in Rousseau's novel entitled Julie ou la Nouvelle Héloïse.

St. Ronan's Well. A novel by Sir Walter Scott (1823). The tale is involved, but chiefly concerns Clara Mowbray of St. Ronan's and the two sons of the Earl of Ethrington. One of them is Frank Tyrrel, the son of the Earl's wife, but said to be illegitimate. The other is Valentine, the child of Mrs. Bulmer married in bigamy. Clara is deceived into a private marriage with Valentine, supposing him to be the heir of the title. After it is proved that Frank Tyrrel is not illegitimate, and therefore the true heir, Clara dies, and Valentine is slain in a duel. This novel contains the famous Meg Dods of the Clachan or Mowbray Arms Inn.

For fictitious names and titles of books beginning with Saint, see under separate entries. See also lists of SAINTS OF SPECIAL COMPETENCIES below. Among the most important saints of Christian tradition are the following:

St. Adrian. The patron saint of the Flemish brewers is represented in art with an anvil and a sword or axe close by it. He had his limbs cut off on a smith's anvil, and was afterwards beheaded.

St. Agatha. A saint who was tortured and martyred in Sicily during the Decian persecution of 251. She is sometimes represented in art with a pair of shears or pincers, and holding a salver on which are her breasts, these having been cut off. The Veil of St. Agatha is a miraculous veil belonging to St. Agatha, and deposited in the church of the city of Catania, in Sicily, where the saint suffered martyrdom. It is believed to be a sure defense against the eruptions of Mount Etna.

St. Agnes. A saint martyred in the Diocletian persecution (ca. 303) at the age of 13. She was tied to a stake, but the fire went out, and Aspasius, set to watch the martyrdom, drew his sword, and cut off her head. There is a picture of the incident by Domenichino. St. Agnes is the patron of young virgins. She is commemorated on January 21.

One of KEATS' best known poems is THE EVE OF ST. AGNES.

St. Alexis. Patron saint of hermits and beggars. The story goes that he lived on his father's estate as a hermit till death, but was never recognized. It is given at length in the Gesta Romanorum (Tale xv). He is represented in art with a pilgrim's habit and staff. Sometimes he is drawn as if extended on a mat, with a letter in his hand, dying.

St. Ambrose. Bishop of Milan in the 4th century. He is represented in Christian art in the robes of a bishop. His attributes are (1) a beehive, in allusion to the legend that a swarm of bees settled on his mouth when he was lying in his cradle; (2) a scourge, by which he expelled the Arians from Italy.

St. Andrew. One of the twelve disciples of Jesus; the brother of St. Peter. He is depicted in Christian art as an old man with long white hair and beard, holding the Gospel in his right hand, and leaning on a cross like the letter X, termed St. Andrew's cross. His day is November 30. It is said that he suffered martyrdom in Patrae (70 A. D.).

St. Anne. The mother of the Virgin Mary and wife of St. JOACHIM.

St. Anthony the Great. The patron saint of swineherds. He lived in the 3rd or 4th century, and was the founder of the fraternity of ascetics who lived in the deserts. The story of his temptations by the devil is well known in literature and art. It forms the subject of FLAUBERT's novel, La Tentation de St. Antoine. His day is January 17. Not to be confused with St. Anthony of Padua, who was a Franciscan of the 13th century, and is commemorated on June 13.

St. Anthony's cross. The tau-cross, T; used as a sacred symbol and in heraldry.

St. Anthony's fire. Erysipelas is so called from the tradition that those who sought the intercession of St. Anthony recovered from the pestilential erysipelas called the sacred fire, which proved so fatal in 1089.

St. Anthony's pig. A pet pig, the smallest of the litter, also called the "tantony pig"; in allusion to St. Anthony's being the patron saint of swineherds. The term is also used of a sponger or hanger-on.

St. Augustine (354-430). Bishop of Hippo, and, with St. Ambrose, Jerome, and Gregory the Great, one of the four great Fathers of the Church. Born in Tagaste, Algeria, of a Christian mother and a pagan father, he first sought his salvation in Manichaeism, and led a life of promiscuous pleasure-seeking. He sought to establish himself as a rhetorician first at Tagaste, later at Carthage, Rome and Milan. In Milan, listening to the sermons of Bishop AMBROSE, he was converted to Christianity (386), after which he returned to his hometown. Invited to preach at Hippo Regius, the modern Bona, he so impressed the congregation that he was appointed assistant to the aging bishop, whom he succeeded into the bishopric (395). His most important work, THE CONFESSIONS (397), constitutes the first completely honest self-analysis in the history of literature. See also THE CITY OF GOD (begun 413). His total work is enormous in volume and encyclopedic in scope. He has justly been called the "Christian Aristotle," for it is he who first succeeded in compacting the truths of religion into a system. His theology has been of lasting influence on Christian dogma and philosophy.

St. Augustine (d. 631). First Archbishop of Canterbury; led an expedition of monks to England, landing in Thanet (597). Settled in Canterbury and converted Ethelbert, King of Kent. Pope Gregory gave him authority over the Celtic Churches in Britain. Founded a monastery in Canterbury, and is known as the "Apostle of the English."

St. Barbara. The patron saint of arsenals and powder magazines. Her father delivered her up to Martian, governor of Nicomedia, for being a Christian. After she had been subjected to the most cruel tortures, just as her unnatural father was about to strike off her head, a lightning flash laid him dead at her feet. Hence, St. Barbara is invoked against lightning.

St. Barnabas. A fellow laborer of the Apostle Paul (Acts iv. 36-37). According to tradition he was martyred at Salamis. His day is June 11.

St. Bartholomew. One of the twelve disciples of Jesus. The symbol of this saint is a knife, in allusion to the knife with which he was flayed alive. He is commemorated on August 24. See BARTHOLOMEW FAIR.

St. Basil (329?-379). Bishop of Caesarea.

St. Bernadette of Lourdes. Full name, Bernadette Soubirous (1844-1879). French peasant girl, who joined the Sisters of Charity (1866) and took perpetual vows (1878). She claimed to have seen visions of the Virgin Mary who instructed her about the healing powers of the waters at Lourdes, which was subsequently made a shrine. Bernadette is the subject of Franz WERFEL's novel The Song of Bernadette (1942), which has been made into a successful motion picture.

St. Bernard of Clairvaux (1091-1153). Great French ecclesiastic, called "Thaumaturgus of the West." Founded the Cistercian monastery of Clairvaux, France, and was its first abbé. Bitterly opposed ABÉLARD's rationalism as heresy. Wrote epistles, sermons, theological treatises. Made Doctor of the Church by Pope Pius VIII. Canonized 1173.

St. Bernard of Menthon (922-1008). Archdeacon of Aorta, who founded the hospices of Great and Little Saint Bernard (ca. 962). He is the patron saint of all mountain climbers.

St. Bernard dog, or Great St. Bernard. A large and handsome breed of dog, so called because for many years they have been bred at the Hospice of St. Bernard at the Great St. Bernard Pass, Switzerland, and trained to track travelers lost in the snow.

St. Blaise. Patron saint of wool-combers, because he was torn to pieces with iron wool-combs. He is invoked for diseases of children and cattle.

St. Boniface (680-750). The apostle of Germany, an Anglo-Saxon whose original name was Winifred or Winfrith. He was made archbishop of Mayence by Pope Gregory III. St. Boniface was murdered in Friesland by some peasants. His day is June 5.

St. Bonaventura. Real name Giovanni di Fidanza (1221-1274). Known as "the Seraphic Doctor." Celebrated medieval mystic and writer. General of the Franciscan Order (1257); Bishop of Albano (1273); made a Cardinal. Canonized in 1482, and declared Doctor of the Church in 1587. He appears as a saint in DANTE's Paradiso.

St. Brendan or Brendan. A semi-legendary Irish saint, said to have died and been buried at Clonfert (at the age of about 94), in 577, where he was abbot over 3,000 monks.

He is best known on account of the very popular medieval story of his voyage in search of the Earthly Paradise, which was supposed to be situated on an island in mid-Atlantic. The voyage lasted for seven years, and the story is crowded with marvelous incidents, the very birds and beasts they encountered being Christians and observing the fasts and festivals of the Church! As late as 1755 St. Brandon's Island, or the Island of San Borandán, was set down in geographical charts as west of the Canary group. According to legend it is the retreat of the Spanish Roderigo or RODERICK and the Portuguese Don Sebastian.

St. Catherine. St. Catherine was a virgin of royal descent in Alexandria (4th century), who publicly confessed the Christian faith at a sacrificial feast appointed by the Emperor Maximinus, a confession for which she was put to death by torture by means of a wheel like that of a chaff-cutter. Hence:

Catherine wheel, a sort of firework; also, a turning head over heels on the hands. Boys in the street, etc., often do so to catch a penny or so from passers-by.

Catherine-wheel window. A wheel-window, sometimes called a rose-window, with radiating divisions.

to braid St. Catherine's tresses. To live a virgin.

St. Cecili, Cecily, or Cecile. The heroine of the SECOND NUN'S TALE in CHAUCER's CANTERBURY TALES.

St. Cecilia. A Roman lady who underwent martyrdom in the 3rd century. She is the patron saint of the blind, being herself blind; also patroness of musicians, and "inventor of the organ." According to tradition an angel fell in love with her for her musical skill, and used nightly to visit her. Her husband saw the heavenly visitant, who thereupon gave to both a crown of martyrdom which he brought from Paradise. DRYDEN and POPE have written odes in her honor, and both speak of her charming an angel by her musical powers.

St. Christopher. Legend relates that St. Christopher was a giant who one day carried a child over a brook, and said, "Child, thou hast put me in great peril. I can bear no greater burden." To this the child answered, "Marvel thou nothing, for thou hast borne all the world upon thee, and its sins likewise." As Christopher sank beneath his load, the child told the Giant He was Christ, and Christopher resolved to serve Christ and Him only. He died three days afterwards, and was canonized. The Greek and Latin Churches look on him as the protecting saint against floods, fire, and earthquake.

St. Clement. Patron saint of tanners, having himself been a tanner. His day is November 23, and his symbol is an anchor, because he is said to have been martyred by being thrown into the sea with an anchor around his neck.

St. Cosme. Patron of surgeons, born in Arabia. He practiced medicine in Cilicia with his brother St. Damien, and both suffered martyrdom under Diocletian in 303 or 310. Their fête day is December 27. In the 12th century there was a medical society called Saint Cosme.

St. Crispin. Crispin and Crispian were two brothers, born at Rome, from which place they traveled to Soissons, in France (ca. 303 A. D.), to propagate the gospel. They worked as shoemakers, so that they might not be chargeable to anyone. The governor of the town ordered them to be beheaded the very year of their arrival, and they were made the tutelary saints of shoemaking. St. Crispin's Day is October 25.

St. Cuthbert. A Scotch monk of the 6th century.

St. Cuthbert's beads. Joints of the articulated stems of encrinurites, used for rosaries, so called from the legend that St. Cuthbert sits at night on the rock in Holy Island, forging these "beads." The opposite rock serves him for anvil.

On a rock of Lindisfarne
St. Cuthbert sits, and toils to frame
The sea-born beads that bear his name,
Sir W. Scott, Marmion (1808).

St. Cyprian. Full name Thascius Caecilius Cyprianus (ca. 200-258). The first Christian Bishop to suffer martyrdom. Son of a wealthy patrician family, he was converted to Christianity (246), made Bishop of Carthage (248), and there beheaded as a martyr (258). His Letters are an important source of information about the early Christian church.

St. David (fl. 6th century A. D.). The patron saint of Wales. Legend relates that he was son of Xantus, Prince of Cereticu, now called Cardiganshire; he was brought up a priest, became an ascetic in the Isle of Wight, preached to the Britons, confuted Pelagius, and was preferred to the see of Caerleon or Menevia (i.e., main aw, narrow water or firth). Here the saint had received his early education, and when Dyvrig, the archbishop, resigned his see to him, St. David removed the archiepiscopal residence to Menevia, which was henceforth called St. David's. The waters of Bath "owe their warmth and salutary qualities to the benediction of this saint."

St. David's Day, March 1. The leek worn by Welshmen on this day is in memory of a complete victory obtained by them over the Saxons (March 1, 640). This victory is ascribed "to the prayers of St. David," and his judicious adoption of a leek in the cap, that the Britons might readily recognize each other. The Saxons, having no badge, not unfrequently turned their swords against their own supporters.

St. Denys or Denis. The apostle to the Gauls and patron saint of France. He is said to have been beheaded at Paris in 272, and, according to tradition, carried his head, after martyrdom, for six miles in his hands and laid it on the spot where stands the cathedral bearing his name. The tale may have taken its rise from an ancient painting of the incident, in which the artist placed the head between the martyr's hands so that the trunk might be recognized.

St. Dominic (1170-1221), who preached with great vehemence against the Albigenses, was called by the Pope "Inquisitor-General," and was canonized by Gregory IX. He is represented with a sparrow at his side, and a dog carrying in its mouth a burning torch. The Devil, it is said, appeared to the saint in the form of a sparrow, and the dog refers to the story that his mother, during her pregnancy, dreamed that she had given birth to a dog, spotted with black and white spots, which lighted the world with a burning torch.

St. Dorothea. A martyr under Diocletian about 303. She is represented with a rose branch in her hand, a wreath of roses on her head, and roses with fruit by her side; sometimes with also an angel carrying a basket with three apples and three roses. The legend is that Theophilus, the judge's secretary, scoffingly said to her, as she was going to execution, "Send me some fruit and roses, Dorothea, when you get to Paradise." Immediately after her execution, while Theophilus was at dinner with a party of companions, a young angel brought to him a basket of apples and roses, saying, "From Dorothea in Paradise," and vanished. Theophilus, of course, was a convert from that moment. The story forms the basis of MASSINGER's tragedy, The Virgin Martyr (1622).

St. Dunstan. Archbishop of Canterbury (961), and patron saint of goldsmiths, being himself a noted worker in gold. He is represented in pontifical robes, carrying a pair of pincers in his right hand, the pincers referring to the legend that on one occasion at Glastonbury (his birthplace) he seized the Devil by the nose with a pair of red-hot tongs and refused to release the hateful fiend till he promised never to tempt him again.

St. Dymphna. The tutelary saint of the insane. She is said to have been the daughter of an Irish prince of the 7th century, and was murdered at Gheel, in Belgium, by her own father, because she resisted his incestuous passion. Gheel has long been a center for the treatment of the mentally afflicted.

St. Edmund. See St. Sebastian below.

St. Elizabeth of Hungary. Patron saint of queens, being herself a queen. She died in 1231 at the age of 24, and her day is November 19. She gave so bountifully to the poor that she starved her own household. One day her husband met her going out with her apron filled with something heavy, and demanded of her what she was carrying. "Only flowers, my lord," said Elizabeth, and to save the lie God converted the loaves of bread into flowers. She is the heroine of KINGSLEY's dramatic poem The Saint's Tragedy (1846).

St. Eloi or Eligius. Patron saint of artists and smiths. He was a famous worker in gold and silver, and was made Bishop of Noyon in the reign of Dagobert (6th century). His day is December 1.

St. Eulalie. A virgin martyr born at Barcelona. When she was only twelve the persecution of Diocletian broke out, and she, in the presence of the Roman judge, cast down the idols he had set up. She was martyred February 12, 304, and is the patron saint of Barcelona and of sailors.

Longfellow calls EVANGELINE the "Sunshine of St. Eulalie."

St. Filumena. A saint unknown till 1802, when a grave was discovered in the Catacomb of St. Priscilla on the Salarian Way (leading from Rome to Ancona), with this inscription on tiles: "lumena paxte cymfi," which, being rearranged, makes Pax tecum Filumena. Filumena was at once accepted as a saint, and so many wonders were worked by "her" that she has been called La Thaumatourge du dix-neuvième siècle. She is commemorated on August 10.

Filomena. Longfellow called Florence Nightingale (1820-1910) St. Filomena, not only because Filomena resembles the Latin word for a nightingale, but also because this saint, in Sabatelli's picture, is represented as hovering over a group of sick and maimed, healed by her intercession.

A Lady with a Lamp shall stand
In the great history of the land,
A noble type of good Heroic womanhood.
Nor even shall be wanting here
The palm, the lily, and the spear,
The symbols that of yore
Saint Filomena bore.
Longfellow, Santa Filomena.

St. Florian. Patron saint of Poland. He was martyred by being drowned in the Enns, near Lorch, about 230. He is also the patron of mercers, having been himself of the same craft.

St. Francis. Founder of the Franciscan order (1181?-1226), one of the best loved of all the saints. Poverty was a fundamental principle with St. Francis. He is famed for his love of all living things; the story of his preaching to the birds is particularly well known.

The Wolf of Gubbio by Josephine Preston PEABODY (Am., 1913) is based on the life of St. Francis.

St. Francis' distemper. Impecuniosity; being moneyless. Those of the Order of St. Francis were not allowed to carry any money about them.

St. Francis of Sales. Fr. St. François de Sales (1567-1622). Savoyard noble, bishop of Geneva (1602). Canonized (1665). Patron saint of authors (since 1922).

St. Genevieve (422-512). The sainted patroness of the city of Paris. Her day is January 3, and she is represented in art with the keys of Paris at her girdle, a devil blowing out her candle, and an angel relighting it, or she is shown restoring sight to her blind mother or guarding her father's sheep. She was born at Nanterre, and was influential in averting a threatened attack on Paris by Attila, the Hun.

St. George. The patron saint of England since about the time of the institution of the Order of the Garter (ca. 1348), when he was "adopted" by Edward III. He is commemorated on April 23. St. George had been popular in England from the time of the early Crusades, for he was said to have come to the assistance of the Crusaders at Antioch (1089), and many of the Normans (under Robert, son of William the Conqueror) then took him as their patron.

St. George was probably a Cappadocian who suffered martyrdom under Diocletian in 303. There are various versions of his Acta, one saying that he was a tribune and that he was asked to come and subdue a dragon that infested a pond at Silene, Libya, and fed on the dwellers in the neighborhood. St. George came, rescued a princess (Sabra) whom the dragon was about to make its prey, and slew the monster after he had wounded it and the princess had led it home in triumph by her girdle.

That St. George is an historical character is beyond all reasonable doubt; but the somewhat hesitant assertion of GIBBON (Decline and Fall, Ch. xxiii) that the patron saint of England was George of Cappadocia, the turbulent Arian bishop of Alexandria, who was torn to pieces by the populace in 360 and revered as a saint by the opponents of Athanasius, has been fully disproved by the Jesuit Papebroch, Milner, and others. He is now believed to have been an official in Diocletian's army, martyred April 23, A. D. 304.

The legend of St. George and the dragon is simply an allegorical expression of the triumph of the Christian hero over evil, which St. John the Divine beheld under the image of a dragon. Similarly, St. Michael, St. Margaret, St. Sylvester, and St. Martha are all depicted as slaying dragons; the Savior and the Virgin as treading them under their feet; St. John the Evangelist as charming a winged dragon from a poisoned chalice given him to drink. BUNYAN avails himself of the same figure when he makes CHRISTIAN prevail against Apolyon.

The legend forms the subject of an old ballad given in Percy's Reliques. Spenser introduces St. George into his Faërie Queene as the RED CROSS KNIGHT.

St. George was for England, St. Denis was for France. This refers to the war-cries of the two nations—that of England was "St. George!" that of France, "Montjoye St. Denis!"

St. George's cross. Red on a white field. when St. George goes on horseback, St. Yves goes on foot. In times of war it was supposed that lawyers have nothing to do. St. George is the patron of soldiers, and St. Yves or Yvo, an early French judge and lawyer noted for his incorruptibility and just decrees (d. 1303, canonized 1347), of lawyers.

St. Gertrude. An abbess (d. 664), aunt of Charles Martel's father, Pepin. She founded hospices for pilgrims, and so is a patron saint of travelers, said to harbor souls on the first night of their three days' journey to heaven. She is also the protectress against rats and mice, and is sometimes represented as surrounded by them, or with them running about her distaff as she spins.

St. Giles. Patron saint of cripples. The tradition is that Childeric, king of France, accidentally wounded the hermit in the knee when hunting; and the hermit, that he might better mortify the flesh, refusing to be cured, remained a cripple for life. His day is September 1, and his symbol a hind, in allusion to the "heaven directed hind" which went daily to his cave near the mouth of the Rhone to give him milk. He is sometimes represented as an old man with an arrow in his knee and a hind by his side. Churches dedicated to St. Giles were usually situated in the outskirts of a city, and originally without the walls, cripples and beggars not being permitted to pass the gates.

St. Gudule or Gudila. Patron saint of Brussels, daughter of Count Witger, who died 712. She is represented with a lantern, from a tradition that she was one day going to the church at St. Morgelle with a lantern, which went out, but the Holy Virgin lighted it again with her prayers.

St. Helena. Mother of Constantine the Great. She is represented in royal robes, wearing an imperial crown, because she was empress. Sometimes she carries in her hand a model of the Holy Sepulcher, an edifice raised by her in the East; sometimes she bears a large cross, sometimes she also bears the three nails by which the Savior was affixed to the cross. She died about 328, and is commemorated on August 18.

St. Hilda or Hild (614-680). English abbess, famous for her wisdom. Founded the monastery at Whitby (657); known also as Abbess of Whiby.

St. Hubert. Patron saint of huntsmen (d. 727). He was the cousin of King Pepin. Hubert was so fond of the chase that he neglected his religious duties for his favorite amusement, till one day a stag bearing a crucifix menaced him with eternal perdition unless he reformed. Upon this warning he entered the cloister and became in time Bishop of Liège and the apostle of Ardennes and Brabant. Those who were descended of his race were supposed to possess the power of curing the bite of mad dogs. In art he is represented as a bishop with a miniature stag resting on the book in his hand, or as a huntsman kneeling to the miraculous crucifix borne by the stag.

St. Ignatius. According to tradition, St. Ignatius was the little child whom Christ set in the midst of His disciples for their example. He was a convert of St. John the Evangelist, was consecrated Bishop of Antioch by St. Peter, and is said to have been thrown to the beasts in the amphitheater by Trajan (ca. 107). He is commemorated on February 1, and is represented in art accompanied by lions, or chained and exposed to them, in allusion to his martyrdom.

St. Ignatius Loyola (1491-1556). The founder of the Society of Jesus (the order of Jesuits). He is depicted in art with the sacred monogram I.H.S. on his breast, or as contemplating it, surrounded by glory in the skies, in allusion to his claim that he had a miraculous knowledge of the mystery of the Trinity vouchsafed to him. He was a son of the Spanish ducal house of Loyola, and after being severely wounded at the siege of Pampeluna (1521) he left the army and dedicated himself to the service of the Virgin. His Order of the Society of Jesus, which he projected in 1534, was confirmed by Paul III in 1540. His Spiritual Exercises (Exercitia; 1548), a manual of devotions and prayer, is considered a remarkable treatise on applied psychology as an inducement to mystic vision.

St. James. There were two of the twelve disciples of Christ named James.

(1) The Apostle St. James the Great, brother of John and son of Zebedee, is the patron saint of Spain. Legend states that after his death in Palestine his body was placed in a boat with sails set, and that next day it reached the Spanish coast; at Padron, near Compostella, they used to show a huge stone as the veritable boat. According to another legend, it was the relics of St. James that were miraculously conveyed in Spain in a ship of marble from Jerusalem, where he was a bishop. A knight saw the ship sailing into port, his horse took fright, and plunged with its rider into the sea. The knight saved himself by "boarding the marble vessel," but his clothes were found to be entirely covered with scallop shells. The saint's body was discovered in 840 by divine revelation to Bishop Theodomirus, and a church was built at Compostella for its shrine. St. James is commemorated on July 25, and is represented in art sometimes with the sword by which he was beheaded and sometimes attired as a pilgrim, with his cloak covered with shells. He is also known as Santiago, a variation of St. James (Span. San Diego).

(2) St. James the Less. His attribute is a fuller's club, in allusion to the instrument by which he was put to death after having been precipitated from the summit of the temple at Jerusalem in 62 A. D. He is commemorated on May 1. Less means the shorter of stature.

The Court of St. James's. The British court, to which foreign ambassadors are officially accredited. King George V held drawing-rooms and levées in St. James's Palace, Pall Mall, but Queen Anne, the four Georges, and William IV resided in this palace.

St. Januarius. The patron saint of Naples, a bishop of Benevento who was martyred during the Diocletian persecution, 304. He is commemorated on September 19, and his head and two vials of his blood are preserved in the cathedral at Naples. This congealed blood is said to bubble and liquefy three times a year, on the Saturday before the first Sunday in May, September 19, and December 16; also whenever the head is brought near to the vials.

St. Jerome. (ca. 340-420). A father of the Western Church, and translator of the Vulgate. He is generally represented as an aged man in a cardinal's dress, writing or studying, with a lion seated beside him. Legend has it that while St. Jerome was lecturing one day, a lion entered the schoolroom and lifted up one of its paws. All the disciples fled, but Jerome, seeing that the paw was wounded, drew out of it a thorn and dressed the wound. The lion, out of gratitude, showed a wish to stay with its benefactor. Hence the saint is represented as accompanied by a lion.

St. Joachim. The father of the Virgin Mary. According to legend, he is generally represented as an old man carrying in a basket two turtledoves, in allusion to the offering made for the purification of his daughter. His wife was St. Anne.

St. John, also St. John the Evangelist or the Divine. One of the twelve, frequently called "the beloved disciple" from his being referred to as "that disciple whom Jesus loved" in the narrative of the Gospel of St. John or "Fourth Gospel." He was one of the sons of Zebedee, brother of St. James the Great. His day is December 27, and he is usually represented bearing a chalice from which a serpent issues, in allusion to his driving the poison from a cup presented to him to drink. Tradition says that he took the Virgin Mary to Ephesus after the Crucifixion, that in the persecution of Domitian (96) he was plunged into a cauldron of boiling oil, and was afterwards banished to the isle of Patmos (where he is said to have written the Book of Revelation), but shortly returned to Ephesus, where he died.

St. John of the Cross (San Juan de la Cruz). Real name Juan de Yepis y Álvarez (1542-1591). Spanish mystic and religious reformer. With St. Theresa, founded the order of the discalced Carmelites, and was imprisoned repeatedly by those Carmelites who opposed the severe reformed rule of the new order. Author of mystical poems, some of which were translated by Arthur Symonds in Images of Good and Evil. Also wrote The Ascent of Mount Carmel. Canonized by Pope Benedict XIII (1726).

St. John the Baptist. Patron saint of missionaries, because he was sent "to prepare the way of the Lord." His day is June 24, and he is represented in a coat of sheepskins (in allusion to his life in the desert), either holding a rude wooden cross, with a pennon bearing the words, Ecce Agnus Dei, or with a book on which a lamb is seated; or he is shown holding in his right hand a lamb surrounded by a halo, bearing a cross on the right foot. He baptized Jesus in the river Jordan. John the Baptist was a fearless denouncer of the sins of his contemporaries and was thrown into prison, and later beheaded, because he opposed Herod's act of making away with his brother to secure his brother's wife Herodias. For the use of this story in drama and opera, see SALOME.

St. Joseph. Husband of the Virgin Mary, and the reputed father of Jesus. He is the patron saint of carpenters, because he was of that craft. In art, Joseph is represented as an aged man with a budding staff in his hand. His day is March 19.

St. Jude. One of the twelve disciples, also known as Thaddeus. He is represented in art with a club or staff, and a carpenter's square, in allusion to his trade. His day is October 28. According to tradition, he was shot to death by arrows in Armenia.

St. Julian. Patron saint of travelers and of hospitality, looked upon in the Middle Ages as the epicure of saints. Thus, after telling us that the Frankleyn was "Epicurus owne sone," Chaucer says:

An householdere, and that a greet was he;
Saint Julian he was in his contree.

Canterbury Tales; Prologue, 339.

In art he is represented as accompanied by a stag in allusion to his early career as a hunter. He is also shown either receiving the poor and afflicted or ferrying travelers across a river.

St. Kenelm. An English saint, son of Kenwulf, King of Wessex in the early 9th century. He was only seven years old when, by his sister's order, he was murdered at Clente-in-Cowbage, Gloucestershire. The murder, says Roger of Wendover, was miraculously reported at Rome by a white dove, which alighted on the altar of St. Peter's, bearing in its beak a scroll with these words:

In Clent cow pasture, under a thorn
Of head bereft, lies Kenelm king-born.

St. Kenelm's day is July 17.

St. Kentigern (ca. 510-601). The patron saint of Glasgow, born of royal parents. He is said to have founded the cathedral at Glasgow, where he died. He is represented with his episcopal cross in one hand, and in the other a salmon and a ring, in allusion to the well-known legend:

Queen Langoureth had been false to her husband, King Roderich, and had give her lover a ring. The king, aware of the fact, stole upon the knight in sleep, abstracted the ring, threw it into the Clyde, and then asked the queen for it. The queen, in alarm, applied to St. Kentigern, who after praying, went to the Clyde, caught a salmon with the ring in its mouth, handed it to the queen and was thus the means of restoring peace to the royal couple, and of reforming the repentant queen.

The Glasgow arms include the salmon with the ring in its mouth, and also an oak tree, a bell hanging on one of the branches, and a bird at the top of the tree:

The tree that never grew,
The bird that never flew,
The fish that never swam.
The bell that never rang.

The oak and bell are in allusion to the story that St. Kentigern hung a bell upon an oak to summon the wild natives to worship.

St. Kentigern is also known as "St. Mungo," for Mungho (i.e., dearest) was the name by which St. Servan, his first preceptor, called him. His day is January 13.

St. Kevin. An Irish saint of the 6th century, of whom legend relates that, like St. Senanus, he retired to an island where he vowed no woman should ever land. Kathleen tracked him to his retirement, but the saint hurled her from a rock, and her ghost never left the place while he lived. A rock at Glendalough (Wicklow) is shown as the bed of St. Kevin. Moore has a poem on this tradition (Irish Melodies, iv).

St. Keyne. A Celtic saint, daughter of Brychan, King of Brecknock in the 5th century. Concerning her well, near Liskeard, Cornwall, it is said that if a bridegroom drinks therefrom before his bride, he will be master of his house, but if the bride gets the first draught, she will rule. SOUTHEY has a ballad, The Well of St. Keyne (1798), on this tradition. The man leaves his wife at the porch and runs to the well to get the first draught, but when he returns his wife tells him his labor has been in vain, for she has "taken a bottle to church."

St. Lawrence. The patron saint of curriers, who was broiled to death on a gridiron. He was deacon to Sextus I and was charged with the care of the poor, the orphans, and the widows. In the persecution of Valerian (258), being summoned to deliver up the treasures of the church, he produced the poor, etc., under his charge, and said to the praetor, "These are the church's treasures." He is generally represented as holding a gridiron, and is commemorated on August 10.

The phrase lazy as Lawrence is said to take its origin from the story that when being roasted over a slow fire he asked to be turned, "for," said he, "that side is quite done." This expression of Christian fortitude was interpreted by his torturers as evidence of the height of laziness, the martyr being too indolent even to wriggle.

St. Leonard. A Frank at the court of Clovis in the 6th century. He founded the monastery of Noblac, and is the patron saint of prisoners, Clovis having given him permission to release all whom he visited. He is usually represented as a deacon, holding chains or broken fetters in his hand.

St. Louis. Louis IX, King of France (b. 1215, reigned 1226-1270).

St. Loyola. See ST. IGNATIUS LOYOLA.

St. Lucia. A virgin martyr, put to death at Syracuse in 304. Her fête-day is December 13. The "thorn" referred to in the phrase struck on St. Lucia's thorn, meaning "in torment, perplexed," is in reality the point of a sword, shown in all paintings of the saint, protruding through the neck.

St. Lucy. Patron saint for those afflicted in the eyes. She is supposed to have lived in Syracuse and to have suffered martyrdom there about 303. One legend relates that a nobleman wanted to marry her for the beauty of her eyes, so she tore them out and gave them to him, saying, "Now let me live to God." Hence she is represented in art carrying a palm branch and a platter with two eyes on it. Her day is December 13.

St. Luke. Patron saint of painters and physicians and author of the Gospel of St. Luke and the Acts of the Apostles in the New Testament. Tradition says he painted a portrait of the Virgin Mary. Col. iv. 14. states that he was a physician. His day is October 18. In art he is usually represented with an ox lying near him, and is often shown with painting materials.

as light as St. Luke's bird. Not light at all, but quite the contrary. St. Luke is generally represented writing, while behind him is an ox, symbolical of sacrifice, St. John the Evangelist, with whom he was generally represented, being accompanied by an eagle. The suggestion of the ox is that St. Luke begins his gospel with the priest sacrificing in the Temple.

St. Margaret. The chosen type of female innocence and meekness, represented as a young woman of great beauty, bearing the martyr's palm and crown, or with the dragon as an attribute. Sometimes she is delineated as coming from the dragon's mouth, for legend says that the monster swallowed her, but on her making the sign of the cross he suffered her to quit his maw. Another legend has it that Olybrius, governor of Antioch, captivated by her beauty, wanted to marry her, and, as she rejected him with scorn, threw her into a dungeon, where the Devil came to her in the form of a dragon. Margaret held up the cross, and the dragon fled.

St. Margaret is the patron saint of the ancient borough of Lynn Regis, and on the corporation seal she is represented as standing on a dragon and wounding it with the cross. The inscription is "Sub . Margareta . Teritur . Draco . Stat . Cruce . Laeta." She is commemorated on July 20.

St. Mark. Author of the Gospel of St. Mark, the second book of the New Testament. Little is known about his life. He is famed as the patron saint of Venice.

St. Martha. The sister of Lazarus and Mary. When Jesus came to their house, Mary sat at his feet and listened, but Martha "was cumbered about much serving" and complained of her sister to Jesus. She is the patron saint of good housewives and is represented in art in homely costume, bearing at her girdle a bunch of keys and holding a ladle or pot of water in her hand. Like St. Margaret, she is accompanied by a dragon bound, for she is said to have destroyed one that ravaged the neighborhood of Marseilles, but she has not the palm and crown of martyrdom. She is commemorated on July 29, and is patron of Tarascon.

St. Martin. The patron saint of innkeepers and drunkards, usually shown in art as a young mounted soldier dividing his cloak with a beggar. He was born of heathen parents but was converted in Rome, and became Bishop of Tours in 371, dying at Caudes forty years later. His day is November 11, the day of the Roman Vinalia, or Feast of Bacchus; hence his purely accidental patronage (as above), and hence also the phrase Martin drunk.

The usual illustration of St. Martin is in allusion to the legend that when he was a military tribune stationed at Amiens, he once, in mid-winter, divided his cloak with a naked beggar, who craved alms of him before the city gates. At night, the story says, Christ Himself appeared to the soldier, arrayed in this very garment.

Martin drunk. Very intoxicated indeed; a drunken man "sobered" by drinking more. Baxter uses the name as a synonym of a drunkard.

St. Martin's bird. The goose, whose blood was shed "sacrificially" on November 11, in honor of that saint. See below.

St. Martin's heads, jewelry, lace, rings, etc. Cheap, counterfeit articles. When the old collegiate church of St. Martin's le Grand was demolished at the Dissolution of the Monasteries, hucksters established themselves on the site and carried on a considerable trade in artificial jewels, Brummagem ornaments, and cheap ware generally. Hence the use of the saint's name in this connection in Elizabethan and 17th-century writings.

St. Martin's goose. November 11, St. Martin's Day, was at one time the great goose feast of France. The legend is that St. Martin was annoyed by a goose, which he therefore ordered to be killed and served up for dinner. He died from the repast, and the goose was "sacrificed" to him on each anniversary.

St. Martin of Bullions. The St. Swithin of Scotland. His day is July 4, and the saying is that if it rains then, rain may be expected for forty days.

St. Martin's running footman. The Devil, traditionally assigned to St. Martin for such duties on a certain occasion.

St. Mary the Virgin. The mother of Jesus, who was "conceived by the Holy Ghost." Her husband was St. Joseph.

As the Virgin, she is represented in art with flowing hair, emblematic of her virginity.

As Mater Dolorosa, she is represented as somewhat elderly, clad in mourning, head draped, weeping over the dead body of Christ.

As Our Lady of Dolours, she is represented as seated, her breast being pierced with seven swords, emblematic of her seven sorrows.

As Our Lady of Mercy, she is represented with arms extended, spreading out her mantle, and gathering sinners beneath it.

As The glorified Madonna, she is represented as bearing a crown and scepter, or a ball and cross, dressed in rich robes and surrounded by angels.

Her seven joys. The Annunciation, Visitation, Nativity, Adoration of the Magi, Presentation in the Temple, Finding Christ amongst the Doctors, and the Assumption.

Her seven sorrows. Simeon's Prophecy, the Flight into Egypt, Christ Missed, the Betrayal, the Crucifixion, the Taking Down from the Cross, and the Ascension, when she was left alone.

MAETERLINCK's Sister Beatrice (1901) is a miracle play of the Virgin Mary. The Miracle, a spectacular Gest-Geddes-Reinhardt production of 1924 for which the Century Theater in New York was turned into a medieval cathedral, was a dramatic presentation of one of her miracles.

St. Mary Magdalene. Patron saint of penitents, being herself the model penitent of Gospel history. Seven devils were cast out of her by Jesus. In art she is represented either as young and beautiful, with a profusion of hair and holding a box of ointment, or as a penitent, in a sequestered place, reading before a cross or skull. MAETERLINCK has made her the subject of a drama, Mary Magdalene (1909).

St. Mathurin. Patron saint in France of idiots and fools. He was a priest of the 3rd century, and was particularly popular in the Middle Ages. His day is November 1.

the malady of St. Mathurin. Folly, stupidity. A French expression.

St. Matthew. Matthew, or Levi, one of the twelve disciples of Jesus, was a publican or collector of tolls paid for goods and passengers coming to Capernaum by the Sea of Galilee. He is the author of the Gospel of St. Matthew, the first book of the New Testament. According to tradition Matthew was slain by the sword in Parthia. His day is September 27.

St. Matthias. The apostle chosen by the eleven to supply the place of Judas. He is said to have been first stoned and then beheaded. His day is February 24.

St. Médard. The French "St. Swithin"; his day is June 8.

Quand il pleut à la Saint-Médard
Il pleut quarante jours plus tard.

He was Bishop of Noyon and Tournai in the 6th century, and founded the Festival of the Rose at Salency, which was continued even in the 20th century, the most virtuous girl in the parish receiving a crown of roses and a purse of money. Legend says that a sudden shower once fell which wetted everyone to the skin except St. Médard; he remained dry as toast, for an eagle had spread his wings over him, and ever after he was termed maître de la pluie (master of the rain).

St. Michael. The great prince of all the angels and leader of the celestial armies.

And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not.—Rev. xii, 7, 8.

Go, Michael, of celestial armies prince,
And thou, in military prowess next,
Gabriel; lead forth to battle these my sons
Invincible; lead forth my armed Saints
By thousands and by millions ranged for fight.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vi, 44.

His day (St. Michael and All Angels) is September 29 (see MICHAELMAS), and in the Roman Church he is also commemorated on May 8, in honor of his apparition in 492 to a herdsman of Monte Gargano. In the Middle Ages he was looked on as the presiding spirit of the planet Mercury, and bringer to man of the gift of prudence.

In art St. Michael is depicted as a beautiful young man with severe countenance, winged, and clad in either white garments or armor, bearing a lance and shield, with which he combats a dragon. In the final judgment he is represented with scales, in which he weighs the souls of the risen dead.

St. Nicholas. One of the most popular saints in Christendom, especially in the East. He was the patron saint of Russia, of Aberdeen, of parish clerks, of scholars (who used to be called clerks), of pawnbrokers (because of the three bags of gold—transformed to the three gold balls—that he gave to the daughters of a poor man to save them from earning their dowries in a disreputable way), and of little boys (because he once restored to life three little boys who had been cut up and pickled in a salting-tub to serve for bacon). He is invoked by sailors (because he allayed a storm during a voyage to the Holy Land) and against fire. Finally, he is the original of SANTA CLAUS.

Little is known of his life, but he is said to have been Bishop of Myra (Lycia) in the early 4th century. One story relates that he was present at the Council of Nice (325) and there buffeted Arius on the jaw. His day is December 6, and he is represented in episcopal robes with three purses of gold, three gold balls, or three small boys, in allusion to one of the above legends.

St. Olaf. The first Christian king of Norway, slain in battle by his pagan subjects in 1030. He is usually represented in royal attire, bearing the sword or halbert of his martyrdom, and sometimes carrying a loaf of bread, as a rebus on his name, which in Latin is Holofius or Whole-loaf. According to legend he built the great cathedral at Drontheim.

St. Pancras. One of the patron saints of children, martyred in the Diocletian persecution (304) at Rome at the age of 13. His day is May 12, and he is usually represented as a boy, with a sword in one hand and a palm branch in the other. The first church to be consecrated in England (by St. Augustine, at Canterbury) was dedicated to St. Pancras.

St. Patrick (ca. 373-464). The apostle and patron saint of Ireland (commemorated on March 17) was not an Irishman, but was born at what is now Dumbarton, his father, Calpornius, a deacon and Roman official, having come from "Bannavem Taberniae," which was probably near the mouth of the Severn. As a boy he was captured in a Pictish raid and sold as a slave in Ireland. He escaped to Gaul about 395, where he studied under St. Martin at Tours before returning to Britain. There he had a supernatural call to preach to the heathen of Ireland, so he was consecrated and in 432 landed at Wicklow. He at first met with strong opposition, but, going north, he converted first the chiefs and people of Ulster, and later those of the rest of Ireland. He founded many churches, including the cathedral and monastery of Armagh, where he held two synods. He is said to have died at Armagh and to have been buried either at Down or Saul. One tradition gives Glastonbury as the place of his death and burial. Downpatrick Cathedral claims his grave.

St. Patrick left his name to numerous places in Great Britain and Ireland, and many legends are told of his miraculous powers—healing the blind, raising the dead, etc. Perhaps the best known tradition is that he cleared Ireland of its vermin.

The story goes that one old serpent resisted him, but he overcame it by cunning. He made a box, and invited the serpent to enter it. The serpent objected, saying it was too small, but St. Patrick insisted it was quite large enough to be comfortable. After a long contention, the serpent got in to prove it was too small. St. Patrick slammed down the lid and threw the box into the sea.

In commemoration of this, St. Patrick is usually represented banishing the serpents; he is shown with a shamrock leaf, in allusion to the tradition that when explaining the Trinity to the heathen priests on the hill of Tara he used this as a symbol.

St. Patrick's Cross. The same shape as St. Andrew's Cross (X), only different in color, viz. red on a white field.

St. Patrick's Purgatory. A cave in a small island in Lough Derg (a lake near Pettigoe in Donegal). In the Middle Ages it was a favorite resort of pilgrims who believed that it was the entrance to an earthly Purgatory. The legend is that Christ Himself revealed it to St. Patrick and told him that whoever would spend a day and a night therein would witness the torments of Hell and the joys of Heaven. Henry of Saltrey tells how Sir OWAIN visited it, and Fortunatus, of the old legend, was also supposed to be one of the adventurers. It was blocked up by order of the Pope on St. Patrick's Day, 1497, but the interest in it long remained, and the Spanish dramatist CALDERÓN wrote a play on the subject, El Purgatorio de San Patricio. See also MARIE DE FRANCE.

St. Paul. The great apostle and missionary of Christianity, author of the principal Epistles of the New Testament. As Saul of Tarsus he was originally one of the most bitter persecutors of the early Christians, but he was converted by a vision on the road to Damascus.

His great missionary travels, described in the Acts of the Apostles, took him "in journeyings often, in peril of rivers, in peril of robbers . . . in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren." He was finally beheaded at Rome. He is patron saint of preachers and tentmakers (see Acts xviii. 3). Originally called Saul, his name, according to tradition, was changed in honor of Sergius Paulus, whom he converted (Acts xiii. 6-12).

His symbols are a sword and open book, the former the instrument of his martyrdom, and the latter indicative of the new law propagated by him as the apostle of the Gentiles. He is represented of short stature, with bald head and grey, bushy beard; legend relates that when he was beheaded at Rome (66 A. D.), after having converted one of Nero's favorite concubines, milk instead of blood flowed from his veins. He is commemorated on June 30.

St. Paul the Hermit. The first of the Egyptian hermits. When 113 years old, he was visited by St. Antony, himself over 90. When he died in 341, St. Antony wrapped his body in the cloak given to him by St. Athanasius, and his grave was dug by two lions. His day is January 15, and he is represented as an old man, clothed with palm-leaves and seated under a palm-tree, near which are a river and a loaf of bread.

St. Peter. One of the twelve disciples of Jesus, noted for his impulsive nature. More incidents are related of him in the Gospels than of any other disciple. He was first called Simon, but Jesus changed his name and addressed to him the words on which the authority of the Papacy is based "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock (Lat. petra, "rock") I will build my church; and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it; I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of Heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in Heaven."

At the time of his Master's trial, Peter denied three times that he knew him before the cock crew, as he had been warned that he would. After the crucifixion he became the "Apostle to the Gentiles" and many of his missionary activities are related in the Acts. He figures in numerous popular tales as the keeper of the door to Heaven, to whom saints and sinners present themselves for admittance. Peter is the patron saint of fishermen, having been himself a fisherman. His day is June 29, and he is usually represented as an old man, bald, but with a flowing beard, dressed in a white mantle and blue tunic, and holding in his hand a book or scroll. His peculiar symbols are the keys and a sword. Tradition tells that he confuted Simon Magus, who was at Nero's court as a magician, and that in 66 he was crucified with his head downwards at his own request, as he said he was not worthy to suffer the same death as our Lord.

St. Peter's fingers. The fingers of a thief. The allusion is to the fish caught by St. Peter with a piece of money in its mouth. They say that a thief has a fishhook on every finger.

to rob Peter to pay Paul. See ROB.

St. Philip. One of the twelve disciples of Jesus and a missionary of the early church. Tradition has it that he was hanged on a pillar at Hierapolis in Phrygia. His day is May 1.

St. Remigius or Remy (438-533). Bishop and confessor, represented as carrying a vessel of holy oil, or in the act of anointing therewith Clovis, who kneels before him. When Clovis presented himself for baptism, Remy said to him, "Sigambrian, henceforward burn what thou hast worshipped, and worship what thou hast burned."

St. Robert. See CISTERCIAN ORDER.

St. Roch or Roque. Patron of those afflicted with the plague, because "he worked miracles on the plague-stricken, while he was himself smitten with the same judgment." He is depicted in a pilgrim's habit, lifting his dress to display a plague-spot on his thigh, which an angel is touching that he may cure it. Sometimes he is accompanied by a dog bringing bread in his mouth, in allusion to the legend that a hound brought him bread daily while he was perishing in a forest of pestilence. His feast day, August 16, was formerly celebrated in England as a general harvest-home, and styled "the great August festival."

St. Roch et son chien (St. Roch and his dog). Inseparables, Darby and Joan.

St. Rosalia or Rosalie. The patron saint of Palermo, in art depicted in a cave with a cross and skull, or else in the act of receiving a rosary or chaplet of roses from the Virgin. She lived in the 12th century, and is said to have been carried by angels to an inaccessible mountain, where she dwelt for many years in the cleft of a rock, a part of which she wore away with her knees in her devotions. A chapel has been built there, with a marble statue, to commemorate the event.

St. Sebastian. Patron saint of archers, because he was bound to a tree and shot at with arrows. As the arrows stuck in his body, thick as pins in a pincushion, he was also made patron saint of pinmakers. And as he was a centurion, he is patron saint of soldiers.

the English St. Sebastian. St. Edmund, the martyr King of East Anglia (855-870) has been so called. He gave himself up to the Danes in the hope of saving his people, but they scourged him, bound him to a tree, shot arrows at him, and finally cut off his head, which, legend relates, was guarded by a wolf till it was duly interred. The monastery and cathedral of St. Edmundsbury (Bury St. Edmunds) were erected on the place of his burial.

St. Senanus. The saint who fled to the island of Scattery, and resolved that no woman should ever step upon the isle. An angel led St. Canara to the isle, but Senanus refused to admit her. Moore has made this legend the subject of one of his Irish Melodies, St. Senanus and the Lady (1814).

St. Severus. Patron saint of fullers, being himself of the same craft.

St. Simeon. Usually depicted as bearing in his arms the infant Jesus, or receiving Him in the Temple. His feast-day is February 18.

St. Simeon Stylites. See STYLITES.

St. Simon (Zelotes). One of the twelve disciples of Jesus. He is represented with a saw in his hand, in allusion to the instrument of his martyrdom. He sometimes bears fish in the other hand, in allusion to his occupation as a fishmonger. His feast day is October 28.

St. Stephen. The first Christian martyr—the "protomartyr." He was accused of blasphemy and stoned to death (Acts vii. 58). He is commemorated on December 26; the name means "wreath" or "crown" (Gr. stephanos).

fed with St. Stephen's bread. Stoned. Of course, the allusion is to the stoning of Stephen.

the Crown of St. Stephen. The crown of Hungary, this St. Stephen being the first king of Hungary (1000-1038). He was a pagan, born at Gran about 969, and was converted to Christianity about 995. During his reign the faith became firmly established in his kingdom. He was canonized by Benedict IX shortly after his death, and is commemorated on September 2.

St. Swithin. If it rains on St. Swithin's day (July 15), there will be rain for forty days.

St. Swithin's day, gif ye do rain, for forty days it will remain;
St. Swithin's day, an ye be fair, for forty days 'twill rain nae mair.

The legend is that St. Swithin, Bishop of Winchester, who died ca. 862, desired to be buried in the church-yard of the minister, that the "sweet rain of heaven might fall upon his grave." At canonization the monks thought to honor the saint by removing his body into the choir, and fixed July 15 for the ceremony, but it rained day after day for forty days, so that the monks saw the saint was averse to their project, and wisely abandoned it.

The St. Swithin of France is St. Gervais and also St. Médard. The rainy saint in Flanders is St. Godeliève.

St. Tammany. See TAMMANY HALL.

St. Teilo. A Welsh saint, who took an active part against the Pelagian heresy. When he died, three cities contended for his body, but happily the multiplication of the dead body into three put an end to the strife.

St. Thecla. The protomartyress of the Eastern martyrologies, as St. Stephen is the protomartyr. All that is known of her is from the Acts of Paul and Thecla, pronounced apocryphal by Pope Gelasius. According to the legend she was born of a noble family in Iconium, and was converted by the preaching of St. Paul. Her day is September 23.

St. Theodore. The old patron saint of Venice before St. Mark became the city patron in the 14th century. He was an officer in the Roman army during the reign of Diocletian. After his conversion to Christianity he set fire to the temple of Cybele, and suffered martyrdom for his offense on November 9, 300.

St. Theophilus. A saint of Adana, in Cilicia (6th century). He was driven by slander to sell his soul to the Devil on condition that his character be cleared. The slander was removed, and no tongue wagged against the thin-skinned saint. Theophilus now repented of his bargain, and, after a fast of forty days and forty nights, he was visited by the Virgin, who bade him confess to the bishop. This he did, received absolution, and died within three days of brain fever.

St. Theresa (1515-1582). A Spanish nun who founded a number of convents and monasteries with stricter discipline than the one she had entered. She was famed for her trances and visions. George Moore has given the name to a modern novel of convent life, a sequel to EVELYN INNES.

St. Thomas. One of the twelve, the disciple of Jesus who doubted (John xxi. 25); hence the phrase, a doubting Thomas, applied to a skeptic. The story told of him in the Apocryphal Acts of St. Thomas is that he was deputed to go as a missionary to India, and, when he refused, Christ appeared and sold him as a slave to an Indian prince who was visiting Jerusalem. He was taken to India, where he baptized the prince and many others, and was finally martyred at Meliapore. His day is December 21.

Another legend has it that Gondoforus, King of the Indies, gave him a large sum of money to build a palace. St. Thomas spent it on the poor, "thus erecting a superb palace in heaven." On account of this he is the patron saint of masons and architects, and his symbol is a builder's square. Still another legend relates that he once saw a huge beam of timber floating on the sea near the coast, and, the king unsuccessfully endeavoring, with men and elephants, to haul it ashore. St. Thomas desired leave to use it in building a church. When his request was granted he dragged it easily ashore with a piece of packthread.

Thomasing. In some rural districts of England the custom still prevails of "Thomasing"—that is, of collecting small sums of money or obtaining drink from the employers of labor on the 21st of December, "St. Thomas's Day."

St. Thomas à Becket. Also St. Thomas Becket or Thomas of London (1118?-1170). English prelate, archbishop of Canterbury (from 1162) under Henry II against whose lay interference he defended the rights of the Church without compromise. He was forced to flee to France (1164). Papal pressure brought about his reconciliation with the king, but after his return to England (1170), he was murdered in Canterbury Cathedral. Canonized (1172). His shrine was plundered by Henry VIII (1538) and his name erased from the English Church calendar. Chaucer in his CANTERBURY TALES makes a pilgrimage to St. Thomas' shrine the object of the journey he describes. See also MURDER IN THE CATHEDRAL.

St. Thomas à Kempis. Properly Thomas Hamerken von Kempen (1380-1471). German ecclesiastic and mystic. Sub-prior of the Augustinian monastery Mt. St. Agnes (1425). He copied many manuscripts, wrote a chronicle of the monastery and original works relating to the secluded life of Christian devotion and benevolence he knew, as well as several biographies and many tracts. He was also most probably the author of the religious classic, Imitatio Christi. See IMITATION OF CHRIST.

St. Thomas Aquinas (ca. 1225-1274). Italian scholastic philosopher, known as the Angelic Doctor (Doctor Angelicus) and Prince of Scholastics (Princeps Scholasticorum). His school companions at Monte Cassino called him the "Dumb Ox." He entered the Dominican order and studied under Albertus Magnus at Cologne where he also began his career as a teacher. He taught (after 1252) at Paris, Rome, Bologna, and elsewhere. Dante, in the Purgatorio, suggests that he was poisoned. His major contribution to the history of human thought is the Summa Theologiae which is a systematic survey of catholic theology and assigns to him a rank of honor on a par with Aristotle and Augustine. His philosophy, currently called Thomism, is based on the axiom that knowledge springs from the wells of reason and revelation. See also Jacques MARITAIN; SCHOLASTICISM.

St. Uncumber. Formerly called St. Wilgefortis, a very mystical saint. "Women changed her name" (says Sir Thomas More) "because they reken that for a pecke of oats she will not faile to uncumber them of their husbandys." The tradition says that she was one of seven beautiful daughters born to a queen of Portugal. Wishing to lead a single life, she prayed that she might have a beard. The prayer was granted, and she was no more cumbered with lovers; but one of them, a prince of Sicily, was so enraged that he had her crucified.

St. Ursula. Ursula was a legendary Cornish princess, and, as the story says, was going to France with eleven thousand virgins in eleven galleys when they were driven by adverse winds to Cologne, where they were all massacred by the Huns. This extravagant legend is said to have originated in the discovery of an inscription to Ursula et Undecimilla Virgines, which could be rendered either "the virgins Ursula and Undecimilla," or "Ursula and her 11,000 (virgins)." Undecimilla was probably the name of a handmaid or companion of Ursula. Visitors to Cologne are still shown piles of skulls and human bones heaped in the wall, faced with glass, which the verger asserts are the relics of the 11,000 martyred virgins. The bones exhibited were taken from an old Roman cemetery, across which the wall of Cologne ran, and which was exposed to view after the siege in 1106.

St. Valentine. A priest of Rome who was imprisoned for succoring persecuted Christians. He became a convert himself, and although he restored the sight of his jailer's blind daughter he was martyred by being clubbed to death (February 14, 269).

St. Valentine's day. February 14, the day when, according to every ancient tradition, the birds choose their mates for the year. Chaucer refers to this (Parliament of Foules, 309), as also does Shakespeare:

Good morrow, friends! St. Valentine is past;
Begin these wood-birds but to couple now?
Midsummer Night's Dream, iv, 1.

It was an old custom in England to draw lots for lovers on this day, the person being drawn being the drawer's valentine, and being given a present, sometimes of an expensive kind, but oftener of a pair of gloves. Later it came to be frequently represented by a greeting card of a sentimental, humorous, or merely vulgar character. This custom is said to have had its origin in a pagan practice connected with the worship of Juno on or about this day.

St. Veronica. A late medieval legend says that a maiden handed her handkerchief to our Lord on His way to Calvary. He wiped the sweat from His brow, returned the handkerchief to the owner, and went on. The handkerchief was found to bear a perfect likeness of the Savior, and was called Vera-Icon (true likeness); the maiden became St. Veronica, and is commemorated on February 4. Milan Cathedral, St. Sylvester's at Rome, and St. Bartholomew's at Genoa all lay claim to the handkerchief.

St. Vincent. A deacon of Saragossa, martyred in the Dacian persecution (304) and commemorated on January 22. He is a patron saint of drunkards, for no apparent reason; an old rhyme says:

If on St. Vincent's Day the sky is clear
More wine than water will crown the year.

St. Vitus. A Sicilian youth who was martyred with Modestus, his tutor, and Crescentia, his nurse, during the Diocletian persecution (303). All three are commemorated on June 15.

St. Vitus' dance. In Germany it was believed in the 16th century that good health for a year could be secured by anyone who danced before a statue of St. Vitus on his feast day. This dancing developed almost into a mania, and came to be confused with chorea, which was subsequently known as St. Vitus' dance, the saint being invoked against it.

St. Wilfrid. A noble of Northumbria, who became Abbot of Ripon in 661, and in 705 Bishop of Hexham. It was he who at the Synod of Whitby (664) succeeded in substituting the Roman uses and their observation of Easter in England for the Celtic. For many centuries his banner was carried to the wars.

St. Wilfrid's Needle. A narrow passage in the crypt of Ripon cathedral, built by Odo, Archbishop of Canterbury, and said to have been used to try whether young women were virgins or not, none but virgins being able to squeeze through.

St. William of Norwich. The celebrated child said to have been crucified by the Jews in 1137. He is represented as a child crowned with thorns, crucified, holding a hammer and nails in his hands, or wounded in his side with a knife. Cf. Drayton's Polyolbion, song xxiv.

St. Winifred. Patron saint of virgins, because she was beheaded by Prince Caradoc for refusing to marry him. She was Welsh by birth, and the legend says that her head falling on the ground originated the famous healing well of St. Winifred in Flintshire. She is usually drawn like St. Denis, carrying her head in her hand. Holywell, in Wales, is St. Winifred's Well, celebrated for its "miraculous" virtues.

St. Wulstan. A Saxon Bishop of Worcester, who received his see from Edward the Confessor, and died in 1075. He fought against William the Conqueror, and when ordered to resign his see, he planted his crozier in the shrine of the Confessor, declaring if any of his accusers could draw it out he would resign. As no one could do so but St. Wulstan himself, his innocence was admitted.

Saint-Saëns, Charles Camille (1835-1921). French organist, pianist, and composer of operas, symphonies, chamber music, choral works, etc. His works include the opera Samson et Dalila, and the humorous suite Le Carnaval des Animaux, as well as five well-known piano concertos.

Saintsbury, George Edward Bateman (1845-1933). Distinguished English literary critic and writer on the history of English and French literature. Among his works are Short History of French Literature (1882); Essays in English Literature (1895); A History of Criticism and Literary Taste in Europe (1900-1904); A History of English Prosody (1906-1921); The English Novel (1913); A History of the French Novel (1917-1919); Notes on a Cellar-Book (1920); and many volumes of essays.

Saint-Simon, Comte de. Claude Henri de Rouvroy (1760-1825). French philosopher and social reformer. His social doctrines were developed by his disciples into a system called Saint-Simonianism, which demands that all property be owned by the state, the worker sharing in it according to the amount and quality of his work.

Saint-Simon, Duc de. Louis de Rouvroy (1675-1755). French courtier and author, known for his aristocratic conservatism and for his Memoirs, which give a vivid and candid picture of life and personalities at the fashionable court of Louis XIV, to which Saint-Simon was attached for a number of years. He was unsympathetic to the age in which he lived and at court was always preoccupied with questions of etiquette, costume, and ceremony. The Memoirs were written during the last thirty years of Saint-Simon's life, which were spent in retirement. The manuscript was published in a degree of completeness only in the romantic period.

St. Valentine's day. February 14. See St. Valentine under SAINTS.

Saki, see MUNRO, HECTOR HUGH.

Saktism. A Hindu religious cult, originating about the 5th century A. D., based on the worship of the active producing principle (Prakriti) as manifested in the goddess consort of Siva (Durga, Kali, or Parvati), the female energy, or Sakti, of the primordial male. The rites of these worshipers of Sakti are in many cases mere orgies of lust.

Sakuntala. The heroine of Kalidasa's Sanskrit drama Sakuntala, translated into English (1789) by Sir William Jones. She is the daughter of a sage, Viswamita, and Menakâ, a water-nymph, and is brought up by a hermit. One day King Dushyanta comes to the hermitage during a hunt, and persuades her to marry him; later, giving her a ring, he returns to his throne. In due course a son is born, and Sakuntala sets out with him to find his father. On the way, while bathing, she loses the ring, and the King does not recognize her, owing to enchantment. Subsequently the ring is found by a fisherman in a fish he has caught, the King recognizes his wife, she is publicly proclaimed his Queen, and Bhârata, his son and heir, becomes the founder of the glorious race of the Bhâratas. The drama had considerable importance in the romantic movement of the early 19th century.

Sakyamuni. One of the names of Gautama SIDDHARTHA, the BUDDHA, founder of Buddhism.

Sakyasinha (Sansk., "the lion"). Epithet applied to Buddha.

Sala, George Augustus Henry (1828-1895). English journalist who contributed for some five years a weekly article or story to Household Words. Dickens sent him to Russia as correspondent during the Crimean War. Later he wrote a column for the Illustrated London News; for the Sunday Times; etc. He established and edited Temple Bar (1860) and published in it his best novel, The Strange Adventures of Captain Dangerous.

salad days. Days of green youth, while the blood is still cool.

[Those were] my salad days!
When I was green in judgment, cold in blood.
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, act i. sc. 5.

Saladin (1137-1193). A famous Saracen sultan, ruler over Syria and Egypt. Scott introduces him in THE TALISMAN, first disguised as Sheerkohf, Emir of Kurdistan, and subsequently as Adonbec el Hakim, the physician. He is the enemy but also the warm friend of RICHARD COEUR DE LION, "as noble adversaries ever love each other." He also appears in Scott's Betrothed. In Tasso's Italian epic, JERUSALEM DELIVERED, Saladin figures as Sultan Aladine.

Salamanca, the Bachelor of. See under BACHELOR.

Salamander. A sort of lizard, fabled to live in fire, which, however, it quenches by the chill of its body. Pliny tells us that he tried the experiment once but the creature was soon burnt to a powder. (Natural History, x. 67; xxix. 4.)

Salamis. An island off the coast of Greece, famous for the naval victory won by the Greeks over the Persians (480 B. C.) in the bay between it and Attica.

Salammô. A historical romance by FLAUBERT (1862), treating of the struggle of the city of Carthage against a band of mercenaries who have revolted, under unjust treatment, and stolen the Zaimph, or sacred veil, that guards the safety of the city. Their leader Matho is in love with the Carthaginian maiden Salammô, daughter of Hamilcar Barca, the famous general of the First Punic War. Urged by patriotic motives, Salammô enters Matho's tent at night and succeeds in bringing away the Zaimph. The mercenaries are vanquished, Matho is killed in horrible fashion by being forced to run the gauntlet, and Salammô dies also.

Salandra, Antonio (1853-1931). Prime minister of Italy (1914-1916) at the beginning of World War I; declared war on Austria (1915). Italian defeats forced him to resign (1916). Representative at Paris Peace Conference (1919). Opposed Fascist regime of MUSOLINI.

Salanio. In Shakespeare's MERCHANT OF VENICE, a friend of Antonio and Bassanio.

Salarino. In Shakespeare's MERCHANT OF VENICE, a friend of Antonio and Bassanio.

Salathiel. One of the names given to the WANDERING JEW. The original Salathiel ben Sadi was a mysterious Jew of 16th century Venice to whom the old legend became attached. The Rev. George Croly gave this name to a romance published in 1829 and republished in 1900 under the title Tarry Thou Till I Come.

Salazar y Torres, Agustín de (1642–1675). Spanish poet and playwright, chiefly known for his comedies, especially Segunda Celestina.

Salem witchcraft. A hysterical persecution of witches and wizards in Salem, Massachusetts, in 1692. Hundreds of persons were arrested, many were brought to trial, nineteen were hanged and one pressed to death. The subject was successfully dramatized in Witchcraft or the Martyrs of Salem by Cornelius Mathews (1817–1889). See also GILES COREY; MATHER, COTTON and INCREASE; SEWALL, SAMUEL; and cf. Charles W. Upham, Salem Witchcraft; also Narratives of the Witchcraft Cases (1648–1706) in Original Narratives of Early American History, edited by J. Franklyn Jameson.

Salic Law. A famous law, established by CLOVIS, limiting succession to the throne, land, etc., to heirs male to the exclusion of females, chiefly because certain military duties were connected with the holding of lands. In the early 14th century it became the fundamental law of the French monarchy, and the claim of Edward III to the French throne, based on his interpretation of the law, resulted in the Hundred Years War. It was, also, through the operation of the Salic Law that the Crowns of Hanover and England were separated when Queen Victoria came to the throne in 1837.

Saliens, the. In ancient Rome, a college of twelve priests of Mars traditionally instituted by Numa. The tale is that a shield fell from heaven, and the nymph Egeria predicted that wherever it was preserved the people would be the dominant people of the earth. To prevent its being surreptitiously taken away, Numa had eleven others made exactly like it, and appointed twelve priests as guardians. Every year these young patricians promenaded the city, singing and dancing, and they finished the day with a most sumptuous banquet, with the result that saliares coena became proverbial for a most sumptuous feast. The word saliens means dancing.

Salisbury, Earl of. William Longsword, natural son of Henry II, and Jane Clifford, "The Fair Rosamond." He appears in Shakespeare's KING JOHN, and in Scott's TALISMAN.

Salisbury Plain. High ground in Wiltshire, England, site of the group of stones known as STONEHENGE.

Sallust. In full Gaius Sallustius Crispus (86–34 B.C.). Roman historian. His History of the Jugurthine War and Conspiracy of Catiline are extant.

Sally Brass. See under BRASS, SAMPSON.

Sally in our Alley. A famous popular ballad in seven stanzas, by Henry CAREY (1737):

Of all the girls that are so smart
There's none like pretty Sally;
She is the darling of my heart,
And she lives in our alley.

Sally Lunn. A teacake named after the woman who made and sold them in Bath, England.

Salmagundi. A mixture of minced veal, chicken, or turkey, anchovies or pickled herrings, and onions, all chopped together, and served with lemon-juice and oil. The word appeared in the 17th century; its origin is unknown, but fable has it that it was the name of one of the ladies attached to the suite of Marie de Medici, wife of Henri IV of France, who either invented or popularized the dish.

In 1807–1808 Washington IRVING published a humorous periodical consisting of a series of satires on New York life, known as the Salmagundi Papers. J. K. Paulding contributed a few of the papers. Their avowed purpose was "simply to instruct the young, reform the old, correct the town, and castigate the age."

Salmasius, Claudius. Latinized form of Claude de Saumaise (1588–1653). French scholar; taught at Leyden at the time of Charles II's exile at The Hague. Charles had him draw up a document in defense of Charles I and against the Regicides. This document, the Defensio Regia pro Carolo I (1649), caused John Milton's rebuttal, Pro Populo Anglicano Defensio (1650).

Salminen, Sally (1906–). Finnish novelist writing in Swedish. Her first novel, Katrina (1936), was based on her experiences while she held a job as general house servant.

Salmoneus. A legendary king of Elis, noted for his arrogance and impiety. He wished to be called a god, and to receive divine honor from his subjects. To imitate Jove's thunder he used to drive his chariot over a brazen bridge, and darted burning torches on every side to imitate lightning, for which impiety the king of gods and men hurled a thunderbolt at him, and sent him to the infernal regions.

Salome. The daughter of Herodias and Herod Philip. Herodias divorced her husband and married his brother, Herod Antipater, governor of Judea. For his denunciation of this marriage, the prophet John the Baptist was thrown into prison. According to the New Testament narrative, Salome so pleased Herod by her dancing at his birthday feast that he promised her anything to the half of his kingdom. She followed her mother's advice and demanded the head of John the Baptist on a platter. According to medieval legend, Herodias had been in love with John; and in modern treatments of the story, Hermann SUDERMANN in his tragedy, The Fires of St. John (1897), and Oscar WILDE in Salomé (1894), make Salome also infatuated with the prophet and Herod infatuated with Salome. The opera Salome (1905) by Richard STRAUSS is based on Wilde's play. FLAUBERT has a short narrative called Herodias, the Story of Salomé (1887).

the salt of the earth. Properly, the elect; the perfect, or those approaching perfection (see Matt. v. 13); now, however, often used of the high and mighty ones, those with great power or even merely great wealth. Also, a man or woman of admirable qualities.

to eat a man's salt. To partake of his hospitality. Among the Arabs, to eat a man's salt was a sacred bond between the host and guest. No one who has eaten of another's salt should speak ill of him or do him an ill turn.

to sit above the salt. In a place of distinction. Formerly the family saler (salt cellar) was of massive silver, and placed in the middle of the table. Persons of distinction sat above the "saler"—i.e., between it and the head of the table; dependents and inferior guests sat below.

true to his salt. Faithful to his employers. Here salt means salary or interests.

to row up Salt River. To go against the stream, to suffer a political defeat.

There is a small stream called the Salt River in Kentucky, noted for its tortuous course and numerous bars. The phrase is applied to one who has the task of propelling the boat up the stream, but in political slang it is applied to those who are "rowed up," Inman.

Salteena, Mr. The hero of The Young Visitors, an imaginative narrative written by the nine-year-old Daisy ASHFORD.

Salten, Felix. Pen name of Felix Salzmänn (1869-1944). Austrian novelist. Best-known for his charming animal story Bambi (1928), which was a best-seller in the U.S., and was made into a feature-length animated cartoon by Walt DISNEY.

Salter, Sir James Arthur (1881-). English economist, best known for a book published in America during the depression, Recovery: The Second Effort (1932). Held important offices in the League of Nations. Professor at Oxford (since 1934).

Saltonstall, Leverett (1892-). Governor of Massachusetts 1939-1944. Now Senator from Massachusetts.

Saltus, Edgar Evertson (1855-1921). American novelist whose exotic first novel, Mr. In-coul's Misadventure (1877), contains astonishing descriptions of a bull fight and of the Paris Opera. Among his other works are The Peace That Kills (1889); Vanity Square (1906); The Monster (1912); etc. His Imperial Purple (1892) was a favorite of President Warren G. HARDING.

Salus. In Roman myth, the goddess of health and good fortune. She became identified with the Greek HYGIEIA, the daughter of AESCULAPIUS.

Salvation Army. A religious and charitable organization which grew out of the Christian Mission in Whitechapel in London, established by the Methodist evangelist William BOOTH in 1865. The name Salvation Army, together with the pseudo- or semi-militaristic setup it implies, was adopted in 1878 and goes back to a chance use of the phrase by Booth in reference to the work of his adherents. For a satirical treatment of the Salvation Army, its officers, its conversions, etc., cf. the play Major Barbara (1905) by G. B. SHAW.

Salvation Nell. A drama by Edward SHEDDON (1908), starring Mrs. Minnie Maddern FISKE. The scene is laid in the New York slums, and the heroine, Nell Saunders, is a scrub-woman. Her lover, Jim Platt, is involved in a brawl and sent to prison for eight years. Nell resists the temptation to go on the streets and becomes an officer of the Salvation Army. When Jim gets out of prison, he is eager for excitement and crime, but she wins him to a better life.

Salvation Yeo. The name of a character in Westward Ho! (1855) by Charles KINGSLEY.

Salvini, Tommaso (1829-1916). Famous Italian tragedian who played the title role in Othello with Edwin Booth as Iago (1886).

to stand Sam. To pay the reckoning. The phrase is said to be an Americanism, and to have arisen from the letters U.S. on the knapsacks of the soldiers. The government of "Uncle Sam" has to pay, or "stand Sam" for all; hence also the phrase Nunky pays for all.

Uncle Sam. The personification of the government, or the people, of the United States—a facetious adaptation of the initials. Fable has it that the inspectors of Elbert Anderson's store on the Hudson were Ebenezer Wilson and his uncle Samuel Wilson, who went by the name of "Uncle Sam." The stores were marked E.A.—U.S. (Elbert Anderson, United States), and one of the employers, being asked the meaning, said U.S. stood for "Uncle Sam." The joke took, and in the Revolutionary War the men carried it with them, and it became stereotyped. Another account places the store at Troy, N.Y., and dates the legend from the War of 1812.

upon my Sam or Sammy. A humorous form of asseveration; also, 'pon my sacred Sam!

Sam, Penrod and. See PENROD.

Samael or Sammael. The prince of demons in Rabbinical legend, who, in the guise of a serpent, tempted Eve; also called the angel of death.

Samaritan, a good. A philanthropist, one who attends upon the poor to aid them and give them relief (Luke x. 30-37).

Samarkand apple. See under APPLE.

Sambo (Span. zambo, "bow-legged," from Lat. scambus). A pet name given to anyone of Negro race; also, more specifically, applied to the male offspring of a Negro and mulatto. The first Negro character by this name to attain popularity on the American stage was a Sambo in Murdock's Triumph of Love (1795).

Little Black Sambo (1900), by Helen Bannerman, is a popular American children's book.

Sambourne, Edward Linley (1844-1910). Famous English illustrator and chief cartoonist of Punch (1900-1910). Also illustrator of Water Babies (1885) by Charles KINGSLEY.

Sam Hill. A mythical individual of American origin frequently referred to in such phrases as fight like Sam Hill, swear like Sam Hill. According to F. J. Wiltach, author of A Dictionary of Similes, the expression what in Sam Hill occurred at least as early as 1839 (in the Elmira, N.Y., Republican) and seems to have been well established in usage at that time. This date excludes a theory that Sam Hill was Sam Hall, the murderous chimney-sweep of an English song popular in 1848-1849. Mr. Wiltach is inclined to derive the fighting, swearing Sam Hill from the demon SAMMAEL and to see in references to him a satisfactory Puritan substitute for profanity. A simpler and not therefore necessarily less probable explanation considers the name a playful euphemism for "hell."

Samhin. "Fire of peace." One of the two great festivals observed by the druids, the other being Beltane, "fire of God." Samhin was held on Halloweve.

Samian.

Samian Hera. Hera, wife of Zeus, was born at Samos. She was worshiped in Egypt as well as in Greece.

the Samian letter. The letter Y, used by PYTHAGORAS as an emblem of the path of virtue and of vice. Virtue is like the stem of the letter. Once deviated from, the further the lines are extended the wider the divergence becomes.

When reason, doubtful like the Samian letter,
Points him two ways, the narrower the better.
Pope, The Dunciad, iv. (1742).

Et tibi quae Samios diduxit litera ramos.
Percius, Satires.

the Samian Sage. Pythagoras, so called because he was born at Samos.

Samiasa. In Byron's HEAVEN AND EARTH, a seraph, in love with Aholibamah the granddaughter of Cain. When the Flood comes, the seraph carries off his innamorata to another planet.

Sammael, see SAMMAEL.

Sammy. An American soldier. See SAM.

Sampford ghost, the. A kind of exaggerated "COCK LANE GHOST," or Poltergeist, which haunted Sampford Peverell for about three years in the first decade of the 19th century. Besides the usual knockings, the inmates were beaten; in one instance a powerful "unattached arm" flung a folio Greek Testament from a bed into the middle of a room. The Rev. Charles Caleb Colton (credited as the author of these freaks) offered £100 to anyone who could explain the matter except on supernatural grounds. No one, however, claimed the reward. Colton died in 1832.

samphire. A kind of plant common on the European seacoast. The word is of French origin and is a corruption of Saint Pierre, "Saint Peter." Shakespeare used it in a famous passage:

. . . half-way down
Hangs one that gathers samphire, dreadful trade!
King Lear IV, vi.

Sämpo. See KALEVALA.

Sampson, Dr. A Scotch physician in Charles Reade's novel HARD CASH.

Sampson, Dominic. One of Scott's most famous characters in GUY MANNERING, tutor to Harry Bertram, son of the laird of Ellangowan. His favorite exclamation is "Prodigious!" Sir Walter describes him as "a poor, modest, humble scholar, who had won his way through the classics, but fallen to the leeward in the voyage of life."

Sampson, William Thomas (1840-1902). American admiral. During the Spanish-American War, commander in chief of the North Atlantic squadron which destroyed the Spanish fleet under Cervera upon its attempt to escape from the harbor of Santiago de Cuba (July 3, 1898). The subsequent controversy as to the credit for the victory involved W. S. SCHLEY.

Sam Slick, see SLICK, SAM.

Samson. In the Old Testament (Judges xiii-xvi), a hero whose prodigious strength was dependent upon the fact that his hair had never been cut. He was famed for many remarkable feats by which he routed his enemies, the Philistines. Finally he became infatuated with a Philistine woman named Delilah who wormed out of him his secret and delivered him over to his enemies. His eyes were put out and he was forced to grind meal in the prison-house. When, at the great feast of the Philistine god Dagon, he was brought in to make sport for the people, he prayed to Jehovah so fervently that his strength returned and he was able to pull down the two great pillars that supported the entire edifice. He and all who were present were killed.

MILTON made Samson the hero of his choral drama Samson Agonistes (1671). The opera Samson et Dalila by SAINT-SAËNS (1877) also follows the Biblical story.

Samson's crown. An achievement of great renown, which costs the life of the doer thereof.

Samuel. In the Old Testament, a judge and prophet of early Israel. The books 1 and 2 Samuel are named after him. He was consecrated to the temple service by his mother HANNAH and as a mere child was communicated with by Jehovah in the night. After a long life as priest and leader, Samuel was forced to yield to the people's demand for a king and established Saul on the throne. He also anointed DAVID as future king.

Samuel, Sir Herbert Louis. 1st Viscount Samuel (1870–). Consistently liberal British politician who became chairman of the Liberal party in 1926. He was home secretary in 1931 but resigned the next year. From 1920 to 1925 he was first high commissioner to Palestine.

Samuel Slick, see SLICK, SAMUEL.

samurai (Japanese, "guard"). Title of the feudal warriors of Japan.

Sam Weller, see WELLER, SAM.

San Benito. See SACCO BENEDETTO.

Sanborn, John Pitts (1879–1941). Well-known music editor of the New York Globe (1905–1923), the Evening Mail (1924) and World-Telegram (1931). He edited, with Emil Hilb, The Metropolitan Book of the Opera (1937). Author of Prima Donna—A Novel of the Opera (1929).

Sancho Panza. The squire of DON QUIXOTE in Cervantes' romance, who becomes governor of Barataria; a short, pot-bellied rustic, full of common sense, but without a grain of "spirituality." He rides upon an ass, Dapple, and is famous for his proverbs. Panza, in Spanish, means paunch.

a Sancho Panza. A rough and ready, sharp and humorous justice of the peace. In allusion to Sancho, as judge in the isle of Barataria.

Sancho Panza's wife, called Teresa, Pt. II. i, 5; Maria, Pt. II. iv, 7; Juana, Pt. I. 7; and Joan, Pt. I. 21.

Sanctuary. A novel by William FAULKNER (1931), concerning the experiences of Temple Drake, an Alabama debutante, when she falls into the hands of a gang of bootleggers. The girl is horribly raped by Popeye, the degenerate leader of the gang, is sent by him to a brothel in Memphis, and is finally rescued and taken by her father to live abroad, although her mind has been affected by her sufferings. A henchman of Popeye is tried, convicted, and lynched for a murder committed by the leader, and Popeye, in his turn, is eventually executed for a killing for which he has not been responsible.

The novel created a sensation and was dramatized in a modified motion-picture version. The author stated in his preface to the Modern Library edition that he made it deliberately sensational so that it would have a successful sale.

sanctum sanctorum (Lat., "holy of holies"). A private room into which no one uninvited enters; properly the Holy of Holies in the Jewish Temple, a small chamber into which none but the high priest may enter, and that only on the Great Day of Atonement. A man's private house is his sanctuary; his own special private room in that house is the sanctuary of the sanctuary, or the sanctum sanctorum.

Sanctus. A passage in the liturgy of the Catholic Church, named from the first word in the Latin text and translated in the Episcopal Book of Common Prayer as "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Sabaoth." The bell, sounded at the Sanctus by the server at the Mass, is called the Sanctus bell.

Sand, George. Pseudonym of Amantine Lucile Aurore Dupin (1804–1876). French novelist, known for her numerous love affairs and her numerous emotional novels. Her work has been divided into three periods: (1) novels of passion, free love, and woman's suffering (1832–1836); (2) socialistic and humanitarian novels (1840–1848); (3) studies of nature and rustic manners (1848–1860). Her books include INDIANA (1832); LÉLIA (1833); Valentine (1832); Mauprat (1837); CONSUELO (1844); La Mare au Diable (1847); François le Champi (1846); La Petite Fadette (1848); Nanon (1872); etc.

Mme Sand, regarded as one of the founders of the social or "problem" novel, was at first unhappily married to the Baron Dudevant and had two children to whom she was sincerely devoted throughout her stormy later career. She was influenced by J. J. ROUSSEAU, traveled abroad, and was for a while interested in the Socialist doctrines of 1848. The most celebrated of her love affairs, on which she is considered to have drawn freely for use in her novels, were with Alfred de MUSSET and Frédéric CHOPIN. Her pseudonym "Sand" is said to have been derived from the name of Jules Sandeau, who helped her on her literary career.

Sandabar or Sindibad. Names given to a medieval collection of tales that are very much the same as those in the Greek Syntipas the Philosopher and the Arabic Romance of the Seven Viziers (known in Western Europe as The Seven Sages [Wise Masters]), and derived from the Fables of Bidpai. These names do not, in all probability, stand for the author or compiler, but result from Hebrew mistransliterations of the Arabic equivalent of Bidpai or Pilpay.

Sandalphon. One of the three angels of Rabbinical legend who receive the prayers of the faithful, and weave them into crowns.

And he gathers the prayers as he stands,
And they change into flowers in his hands,
Into garlands of purple and red.
Longfellow, Sandalphon.

Sandburg, Carl (1878-). American poet and journalist of Swedish ancestry, known for his free-verse poems written under the influence of Walt Whitman and celebrating industrial and agricultural America, American geography and landscape, figures in American history, and the American common people, frequently making use of contemporary American slang and colloquialisms. His works, many of which fall into the category of PROLETARIAN LITERATURE, include In Reckless Ecstasy (1904); CHICAGO POEMS (1916), which served to establish his reputation; Cornhuskers (1918); Smoke and Steel (1920); Slabs of the Sunburnt West (1922); Selected Poems (1926); THE AMERICAN SONGBOOK (1927), a collection of folk-ballads; Good Mornin', America (1928); Early Moon (1930); THE PEOPLE, YES (1937); Rootabaga Stories (1922), Rootabaga Pigeons (1923), The Rootabaga Country (1929), and Potato Face (1930), all books for children; ABRAHAM LINCOLN, a lengthy biography consisting of The Prairie Years (1926; two vols.) and The War Years (1939; four vols.), winner of the 1940 Pulitzer prize; Storm over the Land (1942), material concerning the Civil War, condensed from the Lincoln biography; and other prose works, such as The Chicago Race Riots (1919), Steichen the Photographer (1929), and Mary Lincoln, Wife and Widow (1932), written with Paul Angle.

Sandburg worked at a variety of odd jobs in his youth, traveled as a hobo to the West, served in the Spanish-American War, worked his way through college, and was an advertising writer, a newspaper reporter, a correspondent in Sweden and Norway, and an editorial writer for the Chicago Daily News. Early in his career he evinced Socialist sympathies, and his poetry had an important influence on a number of proletarian poets of the 1930's. A novel is Remembrance Rock (1948).

Sandford and Merton. The schoolboy heroes of Thomas Day's old-fashioned children's tale of this name (published in three parts, 1783-1789). "Master" Tommy Merton is rich, selfish, untruthful, and generally objectionable; Harry Sandford, the farmer's son, is depicted as being the reverse in every respect.

Sandhurst. A parish in Berkshire, England, seat of the Royal Military College which corresponds to Saint-Cyr in France and to West Point in the United States.

sandman. An elf or brownie of folklore who puts wakeful children to sleep at night by throwing sand in their eyes. One of the Andersen fairy tales is called The Sandman. See also DUSTMAN.

Sandoz, Mari (1901-). American novelist and biographer. Best known for the study of her father, a remarkable old American pioneer, in Old Jules (1935).

Sandra Belloni. A novel by George MEREDITH (1864) relating the adventures of the Italian titular heroine, a musical genius hemmed in and thwarted by her position in a group of thoroughly unsympathetic people. In the sequel Vittoria (1866) the heroine leaves her old life and under the name Vittoria wins great renown as a public singer. The action of Vittoria takes place during the Revolution of 1848. The earlier novel was first published under the title of Emilia.

Sandy Hook. A peninsula with a beacon at its northern tip, which guides vessels into New York Harbor. Fort Hancock is at the end of the peninsula which is also the location of an ordnance proving-ground.

Sandys, Frederick (1829-1904). English artist, associated with the Pre-Raphaelite group. He caricatured Millais and is known especially for his portraits in crayon of Tennyson, Matthew Arnold, Browning, etc.

San Francisco earthquake. An earthquake thought to have been the most severe in the history of the U.S. (April 18, 1906) and affecting a long stretch of the California coast; it wrecked many buildings in San Francisco and started a series of fires which got beyond control. The property loss was estimated at two hundred million dollars and many thousands of people were made homeless.

Sangar. A well-known poem by John REED dealing with an attempt on the part of a peacemaker to interfere in a battle between primitive tribes.

Sanger, Margaret, née Higgins (1883-). New York leader of the movement for birth control and author of several books on the subject.

Sanger's Circus. In Margaret KENNEDY's The Constant Nymph (1924), Albert Sanger, an eccentric musician, has around him a remarkable family of children both legitimate and illegitimate, all talented, and known collectively as Sanger's Circus. There was a famous English circus proprietor, John Sanger (1816-1889), later known as Lord John Sanger.

Sangraal or Sancgreal. See GRAIL, HOLY.

Sangrado, Dr. A name often applied to an ignorant or "fossilized" medical practitioner, from the humbug in Le Sage's GIL BLAS, a tall, meager, pale man, of very solemn appearance, who weighs every word he utters, and gives an emphasis to his sage dicta. "His reasoning was geometrical, and his opinions angular." He prescribes warm water and bleeding for every ailment, for his great theory is that "It is a gross error to suppose that blood is necessary for life." Gil Blas becomes his servant and pupil, and is allowed to drink any quantity of water, but to eat only sparingly of beans, peas, and stewed apples.

Other physicians make the healing art consist in the knowledge of a thousand different sciences, but I go a shorter way to work, and spare the trouble of studying pharmacy, anatomy, botany, and physics. Know, then, that all which is required is to bleed the patients copiously, and make them drink warm water.—Le Sage, Gil Blas, ii. 2

Sangster, Margaret Elizabeth (1838–1912). Editor of Harper's Bazaar (1889–1899), also a novelist and verse writer. Her granddaughter, of the same name (1894–), has been contributing editor of the Christian Herald (from 1913) and is the author of many novels and poems.

Sanhedrin or Sanhedrim (Gr. syn, "together," hedra, "a seat," i.e., a sitting together). The supreme council of the Jews, consisting of seventy priests and elders, and a president who, under the Romans, was the high priest. It took its rise soon after the exile from the municipal council of Jerusalem, and was in existence till about 425 A. D., when Theodosius the Younger forbade the Jews to build synagogues. All questions of the "Law" were dogmatically settled by the Sanhedrin, and those who refused obedience were excommunicated.

In Dryden's ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL, the Sanhedrim stands for the English Parliament:

The Sanhedrim long time as chief he ruled,
Their reason guided, and their passion cooled.

Saniette. In Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST, a pianist who is the constant butt of practical jokes at the artistic soirées held at the home of the VERDURINS.

San Jacinto, Battle of. The battle (April 21, 1836), that decided the independence of Texas. It ended with the defeat and capture by Sam Houston of the Mexican general Santa Anna.

Sankey, Ira David (1840–1908). American evangelist and writer of hymns associated with Dwight L. Moody. The series of Gospel Hymns (1875–1891) is his best-known compilation.

Sanscara. The ten essential rites of Hindus of the first three castes: (1) at the conception of a child; (2) at the quickening; (3) at birth; (4) at naming; (5) carrying the child out to see the moon; (6) giving him food to eat;

(7) the ceremony of tonsure; (8) investiture with the string; (9) the close of his studies; (10) the ceremony of "marriage," when he is qualified to perform the sacrifices ordained.

sans-culotte (Fr., "without knee breeches," perhaps because they wore trousers instead). A name given by the aristocratic section during the French Revolution to the extremists of the working-classes, the favorite leader of which was Henriot; hence sansculottism, the principles, etc., of "red republicans."

Sansfoy, Sansjoy, Sansloy. Three Saracen brothers in Spenser's FAERIE QUEENE (Bks. I and II), who cared for neither God nor man. The first (Faithless) typifies infidelity and unbelief, and is slain by the Red Cross Knight. The second (Joyless) typifies spiritual misery; he fights the Red Cross Knight but is saved by DUESSA, and carried in the car of Night to the infernal regions, where he is healed of his wounds by Aesculapius. The third (Lawless), having torn off the disguise of ARCHIMAGO and wounded the lion, carries off UNA into the wilderness. Her shrieks arouse the fauns and satyrs, who come to her rescue, and Sansloy flees. The reference is probably to the reign of Queen Mary, when the Reformation was held captive, and the lion was wounded by the "Falselaw of God."

The three were sons of Aveugle (Spiritual Blindness).

Sans Gène, Madame, see MADAME SANS GÈNE.

Sanson, Charles Henri (1740–1795). Official executioner of Paris. He executed Louis XVI. His son and colleague executed Marie Antoinette.

Sansovino, Andrea. Real name Andrea Contucci (1460–1529). Italian sculptor whose works include the tombs of several cardinals. His pupil, Jacopo Sansovino, real name Jacopo Tatti (1486–1570), became Venetian state architect.

Sans Souci (Fr., "free and easy, void of care"). The name given to the palace built by Frederick the Great near Potsdam (1747). the Philosopher of Sans-Souci. Frederick the Great (b. 1712, reigned 1740–1786).

Santa Anna, Antonio López de (1795?–1876). President of Mexico (1833–1835) who attempted to crush the Texan Revolution and seized the Alamo (1836) but was defeated and captured at SAN JACINTO by Sam Houston. Later on he was made dictator of Mexico, deposed, recalled, and made provisional president. He commanded an army against the U.S. (1846–1847) and was defeated by General Scott.

Santa Claus or Santa Klaus. The patron saint of children and bearer of gifts at Christmas. His name is a corruption of the Dutch form of St. Nicholas. His feast-day is December 6, and the vigil is still held in some places, but for the most part his name is now associated with Christmastide. The old custom used to be for someone, on December 5, to assume the costume of a bishop and distribute small gifts to "good children." The present custom is to put toys and other presents into a stocking late on Christmas Eve, when the children are asleep. When they wake on Christmas morning, they find in the stocking, hung by the mantelpiece, the gifts left by Santa Claus. According to modern tradition Santa Claus lives at the North Pole and comes driving down over the snow in his famous sleigh, driven by eight reindeer. Clement Clarke Moore's familiar poem for children, A Visit from Saint Nicholas, better known as The Night before Christmas, gives this picture of him:

As I drew in my head and was turning around Down the chimney St. Nicholas came with a bound.
He was dressed all in fur, from his head to his foot,
And his clothes were all tarnished with ashes and soot;
A bundle of toys he had flung on his back,
And he looked like a pedlar just opening his pack.
His eyes—how they twinkled! his dimples how merry!
His cheeks were like roses, his nose like a cherry!
His droll little mouth was drawn up like a bow
And the beard of his chin was as white as the snow.
He was chubby and plump, a right jolly old elf,
And I laughed when I saw him in spite of myself.

Santa Fe Trail. An early route to Santa Fe, New Mexico, from Independence, Missouri, opened (1821) by William Becknell, who has been called the "Father of the Santa Fe Trail." When the Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fe Railroad was built (1868), the old trail and its stage line (from 1850) were no longer useful. Its place is now taken by a modern automobile highway.

Santa Fe Trail, The. A humorous poem by Vachel LINDSAY, especially notable for the sound effects introduced in it.

Santa Sophia. The great metropolitan cathedral of the Orthodox Greek Church at Constantinople. It was built by Justinian (532-537), but since the capture of the city by the Turks (1453) has been used as a mosque. It was not dedicated to a saint named Sophia, but to the "Logos," or Second Person of the Trinity, called Hagia Sophia (Sacred Wisdom).

Santayana, George (1863-). Spanish-born American philosopher and author, known for his cosmopolitan viewpoint, his philosophic skepticism and MATERIALISM, his interest in the systems of PLATO and ARISTOTLE, and his fondness for the Greek and Roman classical ideals of beauty. Among his works, written in a style that has been compared to that of Walter PATER, are The Sense of Beauty (1896); The Life of Reason (1905-1906); Soliloquies in England (1922); Skepticism and Animal Faith (1923); Dialogues in Limbo (1925); Platonism and the Spiritual Life (1927); The Realm of Essence (1928); The Realm of Matter (1930); The Genteel Tradition at Bay (1931), a study of the decline of the New England traditions of CALVINISM and TRANSCENDENTALISM; The Last Puritan (1936), a novel; The Realm of Truth (1937); The Realm of Spirit (1940). Santayana was educated at Harvard University and taught philosophy there for a number of years (1889-1912). He also studied and lived in Germany, France, and England.

Santee, Ross (1889-). American illustrator, chiefly known for his pictures of cowboys, range riders, men and horses, etc. Has written Cowboy (1928); The Pooch (1931); Sleepy Black (1933); etc.

Santiago. St. James, the patron saint of Spain. See under SAINTS.

Sant' Ilario. One of the novels of F. Marion Crawford's SARACINESCA series.

Santos-Dumont, Alberto (1873-1932). Brazilian aeronaut in France whose airship won a prize (1901) for making the first flight from St.-Cloud around the Eiffel Tower and back. He also experimented with an airplane of a box-kite type (1906) and a monoplane (1909).

Santuzza. A peasant girl, the heroine of Mascagni's opera CAVALLERIA RUSTICANA.

Sanutec. See THE YEMASSE.

Saorstát Eireann. See IRISH FREE STATE.

Sapho. (1) Title and heroine of a famous novel by Alphonse DAUDET (1884), describing the adventures of a typical French courtesan.

(2) Mlle de SCUDÉRY, the French novelist and poet, went by this name among her own circle. See also SAPPHO.

Sapphics. A four-lined verse-form of classical lyric poetry, named after the Greek poetess Sappho, who employed it, the fourth line being an Adonic. There must be a caesura at the fifth foot of each of the first three lines, which run thus:

— — | — — — | — — | — — | — —

The Adonic is—

— — — — | — — or — —

The first and third stanzas of the famous Ode of Horace, Integer Vitae (i, 22), may be translated thus, preserving the meter:

He of sound life, who ne'er with sinners wendeth,
Needs no Moorish bow, such as malice bendeth,
Nor with poisoned darts life from harm defendeth,
Fuscus believe me.

Once I, unarmed, was in a forest roaming,
Singing love lays, when i' the secret gloaming
Rushed a huge wolf, which though in fury foaming,
Did not aggrieve me.

E. C. B.

Probably the best example of Sapphics in English is SWINBURNE's Sapphics.

Sapphira. A female liar (Acts v. 1). See ANANIAS.

Sappho (fl. ca. 600 B.C.). The famous Greek poetess of Lesbos, known as the "tenth Muse." She is fabled to have thrown herself into the sea from the Leucadian promontory because her advances had been rejected by the beautiful youth Phaon.

The subject has frequently been treated in literature, notably in LYL's comedy Sappho and Phaon (1584) and Percy MacKAYE's poetic drama Sappho and Phaon (1907). Sara TEASDALE has a poem entitled Sappho.

POPE used the name in his Moral Essays (II) for Lady Mary Wortley MONTAGU. See also ATOSSA; SAPHO. It has also been given to a number of woman poets of varying powers, among whom are the following:

the English Sappho. Mrs. Mary D. Robinson (1758-1800).

the French Sappho. Mlle Scudéry (1607-1701).

the Scotch Sappho. Catherine Cockburn (1679-1749).

the American Sappho. Mrs. Sarah Wentworth Morton (1759-1846) was so called. Her chief narrative poem was Ouabi or The Virtues of Nature (1790).

the Sappho of Toulouse. Clémence Isaure (ca. 1450-1500). She composed an Ode to Spring.

Saracen. An Arab, hence a Moslem.

Saracinesca. A novel by F. Marion CRAWFORD (1887), the first of a series dealing with the life of the Saracinesca family in Rome. The dominating figure of the four novels is old Prince Saracinesca, the head of the house. The first novel centers about the courtship and marriage of his son Giovanni Saracinesca and the noble Corona d'Astrardente; the second, Sant' Ilario (1889), treats of the jealousy with which the young husband all but wrecks their marriage. In Don Orsino (1892), the hero is their eldest son Orsino, who becomes involved in building schemes, and in Corleone (1896), Orsino and his brother Ippolito, a priest, meet with various adventures in their conflict with a gang of Sicilian bandits.

Saragossa, The Maid of. Augustina, a young Spanish girl (d. 1857) noted for her bravery in the defense of Saragossa against the French (1808). She was only twenty-two when she mounted the battery in the place of her lover who had just been shot.

Sarah or Sarai. In the Old Testament (Gen. xii-xxiii), the wife of ABRAHAM and mother of ISAAC. After Isaac's birth, which occurred in her old age in accordance with Jehovah's promise to make of Abraham a great nation, her name was changed from Sarai to Sarah. See also HAGAR.

Sarajevo. A town in Yugoslavia. Formerly the capital of Bosnia. It was here that in 1914 the Archduke Francis Ferdinand was assassinated, an event which was the immediate cause of World War I. See also PRINCIP, GAVRILLO.

Sarasvati. A sacred river in the Punjab, personified by the ancient Hindus as the wife of BRAHMA and goddess of the fine arts. The river loses itself in the sands, but was fabled to become united with the Ganges and Jumna.

Sarazen, Gene (1901-). Professional American championship golfer.

Sardanapalus. The Greek name of Asurbanipal (mentioned in Ezra iv. 10, as Asenappar), King of Assyria in the 7th century B. C. BYRON, in his poetic drama of this name (1821), makes him a voluptuous tyrant whose effeminacy leads Arbaces, the Mede, to conspire against him. Myrra, his favorite concubine, rouses him to appear at the head of his armies. He wins three successive battles, but is then defeated, and is induced by Myrra to place himself on a funeral pile. She sets fire to it, and, jumping into the flames, perishes with her master.

The name is applied to any luxurious, extravagant, self-willed tyrant.

Sardis, The Great Stone of. A story by Frank R. STOCKTON. Sardis was a city in Asia Minor.

Sardou, Victorien (1831-1908). French playwright. He was the most successful dramatist and master of stage technique of his day, writing comedies and historical dramas, many of the latter for Sarah BERNHARDT (Tosca, Fédora, Théodora, etc.), and two plays for Henry IRVING.

Sarett, Lew (1888-). American poet. A guide and forest ranger and later university teacher. His poetry concerns the American Indian. Levinson prize of Poetry: A Magazine of Verse (1922) and prize of the Poetry Society of America (1925).

Sarg, Tony (1882-1942). German-born American illustrator and marionette showman. Created "Tony Sarg's Marionettes" (1915). Illustrated Tony Sarg's Animal Book (1925); Tony Sarg's Wonder Zoo (1927); etc.

Sargasso Sea. A part of the North Atlantic Ocean which derives its name from the great amount of seaweed (gulfweed or Sargassum) floating in it.

Sargent, John Singer (1856-1925). Famous American painter. Chiefly known for his portraits. His mural decorations for the Boston Public Library are well known. In the Metropolitan Museum of Art of New York City are his Gitana, Hermit, The Wyndham Sisters, and portraits of W. M. Chase and Henry Marquand.

Saroyan, William (1908-). American short-story writer, novelist, and playwright of Armenian parentage, known for his impressionistic stories and sketches exalting his own emotions, personal freedom even amid poverty, romantic aspiration, America, kindness and brotherly love, men and women of all types, and life in general. He attracted a wider audience through his plays, which lack conventional dramatic form and plot and deal with the same themes as his sketches, making use of whimsical, fantastic, and sentimental incidents and a variety of picturesque characters. Saroyan's fiction includes The Daring Young Man on the Flying Trapeze (1934); Inhale and Exhale (1936); Three Times Three (1936); Little Children (1937); A Native American (1938); The Trouble with Tigers (1938); Love, Here Is My Hat (1938); Peace, It's Wonderful (1939); My Name Is Aram (1940); The Adventures of Wesley Jackson (1946). Among his plays are My Heart's in the Highlands (1939); The Time of Your Life (1939); Love's Old Sweet Song (1940); The Beautiful People (1941); Hello Out There (1942).

Saroyan attracted particular public notice by the combined naïveté, eccentricity, and outrageous self-confidence of his pronouncements on his own works. The Time of Your Life was awarded the Pulitzer prize of 1940, but the author declined it. His reception in other countries, notably France, has been lukewarm.

Sarpedon. In Homer's ILIAD, a favorite of the gods, who assisted Priam when Troy was besieged by the allied Greeks. When ACHILLES refused to fight, Sarpedon made great havoc in battle, but was slain by PATROCLUS.

Sarras. In the Grail legend, the country to which Joseph of Arimathea went from Jerusalem.

sarsen stones. Also druid stones. Erosion-resisting blocks of stone on the chalk downs of England; in popular tradition, thought to be remnants of old pagan monuments. The word sarsen is a corruption of "Saracen." Cf. John Masefield, Reynard the Fox:

The wind of the downland charmed his bones
So off he went for the Sarsen Stones.

Sarto, Andrea del. Family name Vannucci (1486-1531). Florentine artist, called "the Faultless Painter," and celebrated for his coloring and his command of chiaroscuro. His frescoes from the life of John the Baptist are in Florence. Other works are in the Pitti Palace, the Uffizi Gallery, the National Gallery in London. Cf. Browning's Andrea del Sarto.

Sartor Resartus. A philosophical satire by Thomas CARLYLE (first published in Fraser's Magazine, 1833-1834). This book, the title of which means "The Tailor Re-Tailored," purports to be the author's review of a German work on the philosophy of clothes, written by one Diogenes Teufelsdröckh, an eccentric old professor of Things in General at Weissenichtwo (Know Not Where). Together with philosophic passages supposedly translated from the original German and running comments by the English editor, there is interwoven a narrative of the life of this old German, which is frequently considered to have some autobiographical interest. The inner life is traced in some detail; the external events are few. Teufelsdröckh is left as a baby on the doorstep of Andreas and Gretchen Futteral, simple, kindly farmer folk who bring him up as their own son. Of a restless, sensitive, impressionable temperament, he passes as a young man through one painfully disillusioning experience after another. He attends the University, studies law, falls headlong in love with the Rose Goddess, Blumine, who makes him "immortal with a kiss," but discards him for a more eligible suitor. In his despair at the collapse of his ideals and aspirations he spends years in restless wandering before he comes at last to the steady conviction that "here, in this poor, miserable, hampered, despicable Actual, wherein thou even now standest, here or nowhere is thy Ideal; work it out therefrom; and working, believe, live, be free."

Sartre, Jean-Paul (1905-). French high priest of EXISTENTIALISM, philosopher, pedagogue, playwright. His first novel, Nausea, and first book of short stories, The Wall, attacked middle-class morality. Was a German prisoner of war in World War II. Sartre's philosophy has been called an emotional equivalent of surrealism. "Man is anguish!" he has declared. "Throw aside all restraint and enjoy your pessimism. Existentialism was not meant to hand Man over to despair," he says, but to "draw all the consequences of a coherent atheistic position." He considers existentialism optimistic, a doctrine of action. Sartre writes a melodrama of ideas in which his people are more or less puppets. He has given the American theater The Respectful Prostitute; Les Mains Sales (called, on Broadway, Red Gloves); and The Victors, concerned with the MAQUIS. His first film in America was titled The Chips Are Down. He is now more political than literary and is one of the founders of the French "Rally of Revolutionary Democrats," promulgating a sort of SOCIALISM without dictatorship, neither pro-American nor pro-Soviet.

Sassenach. Gaelic for Saxon; hence English.

Sassoon, Siegfried (1886-). English poet of Anglo-Jewish ancestry, known for his lyrics and his poems exposing the horrors of war and satirizing the English upper classes. These volumes include The Old Huntsman (1917); COUNTER-ATTACK (1918); Picture Show (1920); Recreations (1923); Satirical Poems (1926); The Heart's Journey (1928); Poems of Pinchbeck Lyre (1931); Vigils (1935); The World of Youth (1942). His first book of verse, Poems, was published in 1902, and seven others were privately printed between 1911 and 1916. In later years he wrote his autobiography, consisting of Memoirs of a Fox-Hunting Man (1928), at first published anonymously, Memoirs of an Infantry Officer (1930), and The Old Century and Seven More Years (1938). Sherston's Progress (1936) is a sequel to the Infantry Officer memoirs.

In his youth Sassoon led a pleasant existence in a well-to-do family, interested chiefly in fox-hunting. During World War I he was wounded twice in battle, won the Military Cross and Distinguished Service Cross for bravery, and received the rank of captain; he hated the war bitterly, nevertheless. It is said that once, in disgust, he threw his Military Cross into the sea and refused to go on fighting, but he was considered insane and sent to a sanatorium before being returned to active duty. Sassoon was a friend of Wilfred OWEN and encouraged the latter in his writing.

Satan. One of the most popular names for the chief of devils. According to the Talmud, Satan was once an archangel but was cast out of heaven. In medieval mythology, he holds the fifth rank of the nine demoniacal orders. Milton, in his PARADISE LOST and Paradise Regained, follows the tradition of his expulsion from heaven and makes him monarch of Hell. His chief lords are Beëlzebub, Moloch, Chemos, Thammuz, Dagon, Rimmon and Belial. His standard-bearer is Azazel.

He [Satan], above the rest
In shape and gesture proudly eminent,
Stood like a tower. His form had not yet lost
All her original brightness; nor appeared
Less than archangel ruined, and the excess
Of glory obscured . . . but his face
Deep scars of thunder had intrenched, and care
Sat on his faded cheek . . . cruel his eye, but cast Signs of remorse.

Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 589, etc.

In legendary lore, Satan is drawn with horns and a tail, saucer eyes, and claws; but Milton makes him a proud, selfish, ambitious chief, of gigantic size, beautiful, daring, and commanding. Satan declares his opinion that "'tis better to reign in Hell than serve in Heaven."

Satanic school. A name given to a group of writers in the early part of the 19th century, who were said to show a scorn for all moral rules, and the generally received dogmas of the Christian religion. The most eminent English writers of this school were BULWER LYT-

TON, BYRON, MOORE, and SHELLEY. Of French writers, the leaders were Paul de Kock, Rousseau, George SAND, and Victor Hugo. The term was first used by Southey in the preface of his Vision of Judgment (1822).

Immoral writers . . . men of diseased hearts and depraved imaginations, who (forming a system of opinions to suit their own unhappy course of conduct) have rebelled against the holiest ordinances of human society, and hating revelation which they try in vain to disbelieve, labour to make others as miserable as themselves by infecting them with a moral virus that eats into their soul. The school which they have set up may properly be called "The Satanic School."—Southey, Vision of Judgment (preface, 1822).

Satanism. Devil-worship. Its origin is obscure as the recesses of the human soul. During the reign of Louis XVI, it was prevalent in France.

Satie, Erik (1865–1925). French ultra-modern composer.

Satire, Father of. (Also French, Roman satire.) See under FATHER.

satrap. See RULERS, TITLES OF.

Satsuma. One of the early powerful clans in Japan. Satsuma ware is a brand of china.

Saturday Club. A dinner club in Boston, later called Magazine Club or Atlantic Club. After the foundation of the Atlantic Monthly (1857) it included such prominent figures as Emerson, Lowell, Longfellow, Holmes, etc.

Saturday Evening Post, The. An American weekly magazine of fiction and non-fiction, founded in 1821 (not, as it claims, by Benjamin Franklin in 1728). After 1900 it developed into a magazine of tremendous circulation through the adaptation of its contents to the literary standards and general outlook of the average middle-class American reader. Its editorial viewpoint was conservative and sympathetic to the businessman, attacking radicalism and the increase of governmental regulation, and it became the leading medium for advertising of its time. Its standardized short stories in the fields of mystery, adventure, humor, local color, and sentimental romance came to be regarded as typical of 20th-century American commercial fiction. Its greatest editor was GEORGE HORACE LORIMER (1899–1937).

Saturday Review of Literature, The. A weekly journal of book reviews featuring a number of different departments on drama, book publishing, revival of interest in old books, etc. Begun (1920) as an offshoot of the book review of the New York Evening Post under the title of The Literary Review, its first editor was Henry Seidel CANBY, who made it an independent publication in 1923. Original members of the staff were Amy Loveman, William Rose BENÉT, and Christopher MORLEY. The present editor is Norman COUSINS.

Saturn. A Roman deity, identified with the Greek CRONUS. He devoured all his children except Jupiter (air), Neptune (water), and Pluto (the grave). These Time cannot consume. The reign of Saturn was celebrated by the poets as a Golden Age. According to the old alchemists and astrologers, Saturn typified lead, and was a very evil planet to be born under. "The children of the sayd Saturne shall be great jangeleres and chyders . . . and they will never forgyve tyll they be revenged of theyr quarell." (Compost of Ptholomeus.)

Saturn's tree. An alchemist's name for the tree of Diana, or PHILOSOPHER'S TREE.

Saturnalia. A time of unrestrained disorder and misrule. With the Romans it was the festival of Saturn, and was celebrated the 17th, 18th, and 19th of December. During its continuance no public business could be transacted, the law courts were closed, the schools kept holiday, and no war could be commenced and no malefactor punished. Under the empire the festival was extended to seven days.

Satyrane. A blunt but noble knight in Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE, son of Thyamis (Passion) and a satyr. He typifies natural chivalry, and has been taken as representing Sir John Perrot (d. 1592), Lord Deputy of Ireland, in the political world, and as Martin LUTHER in the religious. His deliverance of UNA from the satyrs (I. vi) has been supposed to mean that Truth, being driven from the cities, takes refuge in caves, where for a time it lies concealed. At length Sir Satyrane (Luther) rescues Una (Truth) from bondage; but no sooner is this the case than she falls in with ARCHIMAGO, showing how very difficult it was at the Reformation to separate Truth from Error.

Satyricon. See PETRONIUS.

Satyr. In Greek legend, a race of immortal goat-men who dwelt in the woodlands. The most famous satyr was SILENUS.

Saul. In the Old Testament (1 Sam. ix-xv), the first King of Israel. He is remembered for his battles against the Philistines (in one of which he and his son Jonathan were finally slain), but even more for his relations with DAVID, whose harp-playing calmed his moods of despair, but whose friendship with Jonathan and general popularity aroused his envy and persecution.

Saul in Dryden's satire of ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL, is meant for Oliver Cromwell. As Saul persecuted David and drove him from Jerusalem, so Cromwell persecuted Charles II and drove him from England.

BROWNING has a poem Saul in the form of a dramatic monologue, with David as the speaker.

is Saul also among the prophets? An expression of astonishment or skepticism in reference to one who leaves the ranks of one party or cause and aligns himself with another. The allusion is to 1 Sam. x. 12.

Saul of Tarsus. See St. Paul under SAINTS.

Saunders, Hilary Aidan St. George. See under BEEDING, FRANCIS.

Saunders, Marshall (1861-1947). Canadian (woman) author of Beautiful Joe (1894), one of the world's most famous dog stories.

Saunders, Nell. The heroine of Sheldon's play SALVATION NELL.

Saunders, Richard. Benjamin Franklin's pen name under which he wrote the maxims in Poor Richard's Almanac (1732).

Saurat, Denis (1890-). French writer who has contributed to the New Age and shown a remarkable grasp of English. A. R. ORAGE wrote a preface to his The Three Conventions: Metaphysical Dialogues (1926).

Savage, Augusta Christine. American Negro sculptress, best known for her studies of Negro heads. One of the four women sculptors commissioned to do work for the World's Fair in New York (1939).

Savage, Henry Wilson (1859-1927). American theatrical producer who built the Castle Square Theatre in Boston. He produced The Girl of the Golden West, The Chocolate Soldier, etc.

Savage, Philip Henry (1868-1899). A Boston poet mentioned by Richard Hovey in Songs from Vagabondia (1894). His Poems were published in 1898.

Savage, Richard (1697?-1743). English poet; a friend of Dr. JOHNSON who wrote his biography in The Lives of the Poets. Some of his plays were acted in Drury Lane. In one of them, Sir Thomas Overbury (1723), he himself played the title rôle. He had an adventurous life and died in prison for debt.

Savage, Richard Ellsworth. In John Dos Passos' U.S.A., the son of a "good" New Jersey family, poor but genteel. Through a benefaction he goes to Harvard and becomes an aesthete; during World War I he serves as an ambulance driver in France and later as an officer in the U.S. army, rising to the rank of captain. He has a love affair with Anne TRENT but refuses to marry her when she becomes pregnant because he fears the marriage would injure his career in the employ of J. Ward MOOREHOUSE. He works with Moorehouse at the Peace Conference in 1919 and later, during the 1920's, becomes prosperous through his association with Moorehouse's public relations agency, eventually succeeding his employer.

saveloy. A kind of dry sausage referred to in English novels. From French cervelas.

Savery, William (1721-1787). American cabinet maker, examples of whose furniture are in the Palmer collection of the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City.

savory. In England, a course served at the end of dinner, as an anchovy or cheese, etc., but not a sweet.

Savoy, The. A precinct and parish of London between the Strand and the Thames, where once stood the famous Savoy Palace, the London residence of John of Gaunt, where Chaucer, the poet, was married. It was burned by the rebels under Wat Tyler, and rebuilt as a hospital. When Waterloo Bridge was built, the remains of the palace were all swept away. The Savoy Hotel and Theatre (1881) stand near the Strand, and the latter gave its name to the operas of Gilbert and Sullivan which were called the Savoy Operas. The Company that produced them was managed by D'Oyly Carte and any member of his company was called a Savoyard.

Savoyard, Vicar. A priest in Rousseau's educational romance EMILE, who remains in the church in spite of his unorthodox views. His "Confessions" are an important part of the book.

sawbuck. American slang for a ten-dollar bill, so called because the X on the bill resembled a sawhorse. The term has been shortened into buck which is used for a dollar bill.

sawdust trail. Western woodsmen, to find their way home, were in the habit of laying trails of sawdust. One of them, at a revivalist meeting of Billy SUNDAY's (who used a layer of sawdust instead of the floor he could not afford) felt reminded of the sawdust trails in the woods and coined the phrase, "they're hitting the sawdust trail," meaning "they come up to repent and confess."

Sawin, Birdofredum. One of the Yankee characters created by James Russell Lowell in his BIGLOW PAPERS.

Sawney. Nickname for Scotchman. The word is a corruption of Sandie which is a contracted form of Alexander.

Sawyer, Bob. In Dickens' PICKWICK PAPERS, a dissipated, struggling young medical practitioner, who tries to establish a practice at Bristol, but without success. Sam WELLER calls him "Mr. Sawbones."

Sawyer, Ruth (1880-). American writer of juveniles. Awarded the Newbery Medal (1937) for her Roller Skates.

Sawyer, Tom, see TOM SAWYER.

Saxe, John Godfrey (1816-1887). American wit and author of excellent light and comic verse. For six years he edited the weekly The Burlington Sentinel and contributed to the Knickerbocker Magazine.

Saxe, Marshal or Marshal de. Comte Hermann Maurice de (1696-1750). Famous Marshal of France who served under Marlborough and Prince Eugene. He was victor at Fontenoy (1745) and was created Marshal General (1747). He was a natural son of Augustus II of Saxony.

Saxon, Lyle (1891-1946). American writer from Louisiana. His best-known books are Father Mississippi (1927); Fabulous New Orleans (1928); Old Louisiana (1929); and Children of Strangers (1937).

Sayers, Dorothy Leigh (1893-). Considered one of the leading detective story writers in England. The hero of many of her stories is Lord Peter Wimsey. She has utilized many different settings and her earlier stories display great dexterity and vitality. Her early book of poems, Catholic Tales (1919), is a rarity and has much spirit. She has edited three superlative Omnibuses of Crime. Her introduction to the first has become a bible for many students of the art she practices.

Sayers, Tom (1826-1865). Famous English pugilist who became champion of England in 1857.

Sayre, Francis Bowes (1885-). American administrator. Married Jessie Woodrow Wilson, a daughter of President Wilson. Assistant secretary of state (1933-1939); high commissioner of the Philippines (1939-1942); deputy director of foreign relief under Herbert Lehman (1942); etc.

Scaevola, Gaius Mucius. According to Roman legend, a youth named Gaius Mucius Scaevola attempted to assassinate Lars Porsena when the latter besieged Rome (509 B. C.). Captured and asked for details of the plot he refused to confess and in order to show that any attempt to force him to talk by torture would be vain, he thrust his right hand into the fire, holding it there until it was completely consumed. Lars Porsena thereupon released him and negotiated peace with Rome.

Scala, della. A noble Italian family who ruled Verona. Cane Grande della Scala or Can Grande (1291-1329) was the patron of DANTE while he was in exile from Florence. Cf. Amy Lowell, Can Grande's Castle.

Scala, La. An opera house in Milan, inaugurated in 1778. It still is one of the largest in the world.

scalds or skalds. Court poets and chroniclers of the ancient Scandinavians. They resided at court, were attached to the royal suite, and attended the king in all his wars. They also acted as ambassadors between hostile tribes, and their persons were held sacred. These bards celebrated in song the gods, the kings of Norway, and national heroes.

Scaliger, Joseph Justus (1540-1609). The greatest scholar of the Renaissance. He has been called "the founder of historical criticism."

Scaliger, Julius Caesar. Originally Della Scala (1484-1558). Italian humanist, philosopher and practicing physician. Among his numerous works are commentaries on Aristotle, Hippocrates, Theophrastes, and others.

Scamander or Xanthos. A river near the ancient city of Troy. It figures largely in the accounts of the Trojan War. It is the modern Mendere.

Scanderbeg. Turkish Iskender Bey. Real name George Castriota (1403?-1468). Albanian national hero, known as "the Albanian Alexander." Cf. Longfellow's poem Scanderbeg.

Scanlan, Lucy. In James T. Farrell's STUDS LONIGAN, a young Irish-American girl of Chicago, one of the first loves of Studs.

scansion. A term in prosody, denoting the division of lines of poetry into their metrical feet and naming of the meter by analysis of the kind and number of feet. Metrical lines of two, three, four, five and six feet are called dimeter, trimeter, tetrameter, pentameter and hexameter, respectively. The principal varieties of metrical foot are:

iambus. A short syllable followed by a long, as perceive.

Trochee. A long syllable followed by a short, as number.

Spondee. Two equally accented syllables, as footfall.

Anapest. Two short syllables followed by a long, as colonnade.

Dactyl. A long syllable followed by two shorts, as metrical.

For examples, see under those entries; also under special terms as ALEXANDRINE, BALLAD METER, BLANK VERSE, ELEGIAC STANZA, FEMININE ENDING, FOURTEENER, HEROIC COUPLET AND VERSE, HEXAMETER, OTTAVA RIMA, PENTAMETER, PINDARIC VERSE, RHYME ROYAL, SONNET, SPENSERIAN STANZA, TERZA RIMA.

COLERIDGE wrote the following lines to illustrate for his small son Derwent the principal varieties of metrical feet:

Trochee ' trips from | long to | short,
From long to long in solemn sort
Slow Spon | dee stalks; | strong foot, | yet ill | able
Ever to | come up with | Dactyl tri | syllable
Iamb | ics march | from short | to long,
With a leap | and a bound | the swift An | apests throng.

scapegoat. Part of the ancient ritual among the Hebrews for the Day of Atonement laid down by Mosaic law (see Lev. xvi) was as follows: Two goats were brought to the altar of the tabernacle and the high priest cast lots, one for the Lord, and the other for AZAZEL. The Lord's goat was sacrificed; the other was the scapegoat. After the high priest, by confession, had transferred his own sins and the sins of the people to it, it was taken to the wilderness and suffered to escape.

the scapegoat of the family. One made to bear the blame of the rest of the family; one always chidden and found fault with, whoever may be in the wrong.

Scapin. A famous character in MOLIÈRE's comedy Les Fourberies de Scapin (1671). He is a clever and intrepid valet whose roguery provides the interest of the drama. As Scapino, this lively rascal had long been one of the stock characters of the Italian stage. In Molière's comedy he is the valet of Léandre, son of Signior GÉRONTE. Léandre falls in love with Zerbinette, supposed to be a gypsy, but in reality the daughter of Signior ARGANTE, stolen by the gypsies in early childhood. Her brother OCTAVE falls in love with Hyacinthe, whom he supposes to be Hyacinthe PANDOLPHE of Tarentum, but turns out to be Hyacinthe GÉRONTE, the sister of Léandre. Now the gypsies demand a large sum as the ransom of Zerbinette, and OCTAVE requires sufficient money for his marriage with Hyacinthe. Scapin obtains both these sums from the fathers under false pretenses. At the end of the comedy he is brought in on a litter, with his head bound as if on the point of death. He begs forgiveness, which he readily obtains; whereupon the "sick man" jumps from the litter to join the banqueters.

OTWAY made an English version of this play, called The Cheats of Scapin (1677), in which Léandre is Anglicized into "Leander," GÉRONTE is called "Gripe," and his friend ARGANTE, father of Zerbinette, is called "Thrifty" father of "Lucia."

Scaramuccia (It.). French Scaramouche, English Scaramouch. Literally, "skirmish." A stock character of the Italian commedia dell'arte. He took the place of the older Capitan when the Spaniards lost their influence in Italy and developed into an archetype of boastfulness and cowardice. He was introduced in France by Tiberio FIORELLI about 1640 and reached England soon after 1670. Rafael SABATINI gave the name Scaramouche to a historical romance (1921) dealing with the French Revolution.

Scarborough, Dorothy (1877-1935). American novelist and folk-lorist. Her doctoral dissertation, The Supernatural in Modern English Fiction (1917), is still authoritative. Her anonymous novel The Wind (1925), with a tragic theme, became a moving-picture vehicle for Lillian GISH. She wrote several books on collecting Southern folk songs. Her course in short-story writing at Columbia was very successful.

Scarborough warning. A warning given too late to be taken advantage of. Fuller says the allusion is to an event which occurred in 1557, when Thomas Stafford seized upon Scarborough Castle, before the townsmen had any notice of his approach.

Scarecrow, The. A "tragedy of the ludicrous" by Percy MacKAYE (1908), based on Hawthorne's Feathertop, a tale of a scarecrow brought to life. Goody Rickby and Dickon, "a Yankee improvisation of the Prince of Darkness" are responsible for the scarecrow, who appears as Lord Ravensbane, Marquis of Oxford, Baron of Wittenberg, Elector of Worms, and Count of Cordova. As such, he wins the love of Rachel Merton until she looks in the mirror and to her horror sees only a scarecrow. An impressive silent moving-picture version, called Puritan Passions, had in its cast Glenn Hunter (as the Scarecrow), Osgood Perkins and Eliot Cabot.

Scarlati, Alessandro (1659-1725). Italian composer who is regarded as the founder of modern opera. He left over 100 operas, instrumental pieces and other works. His son, Domenico Scarlati (1683-1757) was an organist and composer, especially known for his sonatas for the harpsichord, many of which are popular in adaptations for the piano.

Scarlet, Scadlock, or Scathelocke, Will. One of the companions of Robin Hood.

"Take thy good bowe in thy hande," said Robyn,
"Let Moche wend with the [thee],
And so shall Wylyam Scathelocke,
And no man abyde with me."

Ritson, Robin Hood Ballads, i. 1 (1520).

The tinker looking him about,
Robin his horn did blow;
Then came unto him little John
And William Scadlock too.

Ibid., ii. 7 (1656).

And there of him they made a Good yeoman Robin Hood, Scarlet and Little John,
And Little John, hey ho!

Ibid., appendix 2 (1790).

Scarlet Letter, The. A novel by Nathaniel HAWTHORNE (1850). The "scarlet letter" is an embroidered A which Hester Prynne is forced to wear on her breast as she stands in the public pillory holding her illegitimate child. Although publicly urged to do so by the young minister, Arthur Dimmesdale, Hester refuses to reveal the name of her companion in sin. She is seen thus, in the pillory, by her husband, Master Prynne, an English physician who sent her on to Boston two years previously and who has just landed. He is a cold, keen-witted over-studious man who urged Hester into her loveless marriage when she was very young. He suspects Dimmesdale, assumes the name of Roger Chillingworth, and becomes the clergyman's physician, taking a diabolical revenge, when his suspicions are confirmed, by subjecting his victim to the most cruel and prolonged mental torments. It is implied that he discovers a "scarlet letter" burned in Dimmesdale's flesh. Hester's pity for Dimmesdale's sufferings and her maternal love for the elfish and wilful little Pearl give her strength; when the minister finally conquers his hypocritical cowardice and mounts the pillory to make public confession, she takes her place by his side. He dies in her arms the same day.

Scarlet Pimpernel, The. A novel of the French Revolution (1905) by Baroness ORCZY, which was dramatized and made into a successful moving picture.

Scarlet Sister Mary. A novel (1928) about the Gullah Negroes by Julia Peterkin. It won the 1929 Pulitzer prize and was made into a play in 1930, featuring Ethel BARRYMORE.

Scarlet Woman or Scarlet Whore. The woman seen by St. John in his vision "arrayed in purple and scarlet color," sitting "upon a scarlet colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns," "drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs," upon whose forehead was written, "Mystery, Babylon the Great, the Mother of Harlots and Abominations of the Earth" (Rev. xvii. 1-6). The author was probably referring to Rome, which, at the time he was writing, was "drunken with the blood of the saints." Some controversial Protestants have applied the words to the Church of Rome, and some Roman Catholics, to the Protestant churches generally.

Scarlett, Sylvia. The heroine of Compton Mackenzie's Sylvia Scarlett and Sylvia and Michael. See SINISTER STREET.

Scarlett O'Hara, see O'HARA, SCARLETT.

Scarpia, Baron. A leading character, Chief of Police, in Puccini's opera LA TOSCA.

Scarron, Paul (1610-1660). French novelist, known for his realism and satire, notably evinced in Le Roman Comique (1651), a fictional account of the adventures of a company of wandering comedy-players, believed by some scholars to have been based on the troupe headed by MOLIÈRE. This work has been praised for its vigorous, swiftly moving narrative and its lifelike characterizations. Scarron, deformed in body, was notorious in his day for his loose morals. His wife, Françoise d'Aubigné, later became Mme de MAIN-TENON, one of the most influential women in the history of France.

Scenes from Clerical Life. Three stories by George ELIOT (1857). They are (1) The Sad Fortunes of the Reverend Amos Barton (see AMOS BARTON); (2) MR. GILFIL'S LOVE STORY; (3) JANET'S REPENTANCE.

Schacht, Horace Greeley Hjalmar (1877-). Well-known German financier. President of the Reichsbank (1923-1930; 1933-1939). He took part in the Dawes Committee discussions and the Reparations Commission's deliberations and acted as minister of national economy (1934-1937). Under Hitler, he earned the nickname of "the financial wizard of the Third Reich."

Schaff, Morris (1840-1929). American army officer who wrote Spirit of Old West Point (1907); Sunset of the Confederacy (1912); etc.

Schahriah. In the ARABIAN NIGHTS, the Sultan for whose pleasure the tales are told. Since his own wife proves unfaithful, and his brother's wife too, Schahriah imagines that no woman is virtuous. He resolves, therefore, to marry a fresh wife every night, and to have her strangled at daybreak. Scheherazade, the Vizier's daughter, marries him in spite of his vow, and contrives, an hour before daybreak, to begin a story to her sister in the Sultan's hearing, always breaking off before the story is finished. The Sultan gets interested in these tales, and, after a thousand and one nights, revokes his decree, bestows on Scheherazade his affection, and calls her the "liberator of her sex."

Schauffler, Robert Haven (1879-). American poet and musical biographer. His best-known poem, which deals with American immigrants, has the ironical title Scum o' the Earth (1912). He has written essays and lives of Brahms and Beethoven, and has edited The Poetry Cure (1927), an original kind of anthology, with music and pictures. His second wife (now divorced) was the writer Margaret WIDEMER.

Scheff, Fritz (1882?-). Viennese actress and singer. She joined the Metropolitan Opera Company in New York (1902) and became extremely popular in comic opera (1903-1913) and vaudeville. In the early 1930's she sang in New York in revivals of several operettas by Victor HERBERT.

Scheherazade. The mouthpiece of the tales related in the ARABIAN NIGHTS, daughter of the Grand Vizier of the Indies and wife of the Sultan SCHAHRIAH. Also title of a famous orchestral suite by RIMSKY-KORSAKOV, and a FOKINE ballet which is danced to its music.

Scheidemann, Philipp (1865-1939). German printer who became a political leader. After Kaiser Wilhelm had fled to Holland (1918), Scheidemann proclaimed the German Republic and was elected its first prime minister. He resigned when the National Assembly accepted the Treaty of Versailles (1919). Upon the rise of the Nazi Party, he went into exile and died in Denmark.

Schellhorn's Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Schelling, Ernest Henry (1876-1939). Well-known American composer, pianist, and conductor, brother of Felix Emanuel SCHELLING. Conductor of the Young People's Symphony concerts in New York (from 1922) and other cities; conductor, Baltimore Symphony Orchestra (1936-1938). Best-known composition, A Victory Ball, for piano and orchestra, suggested by a post-World War I poem by Alfred NOYES.

Schelling, Felix Emanuel (1858-1945). John Welsh Centennial Professor of English Literature at the University of Pennsylvania from 1893 until 1929, when a chair was founded in his name. Authority on Elizabethan literature and the Tudor period. He wrote criticism and edited many of the plays of Shakespeare as well as other Elizabethan dramas and poetry.

Schelling, Friedrich Wilhelm Joseph von (1775-1854). German philosopher of the era of romanticism. His philosophy is essentially an attempt to break the limitations of human cognition as formulated in Kant's criticism by faith in the power of "intellectual intuition."

Scherman, Harry (1887-). Originator of the BOOK-OF-THE-MONTH CLUB and its head. Also a writer on economic subjects, notably The Promises Men Live By (1938).

Schiaparelli, Elsa. Well-known French dress designer, who established a salon in Paris about 1927 and came to the U.S. in 1939.

Schiaparelli, Giovanni Virginio (1835-1901). Italian astronomer and director of the Milan observatory. He made important discoveries concerning comets, falling stars, etc., and introduced the term "canal" for the markings on Mars (1877).

Schickele, René (1883-1940). Alsatian novelist, poet, and playwright of French-German parentage writing in German. His play, Hans im Schnakenloch (Hans in the Mosquito Hole; 1914), when performed in 1916, was suppressed in Germany because of its pacifist trend and in France because it was considered "a piece of German war propaganda." Outstanding among his works is the trilogy Das Erbe am Rhein. The leitmotiv of all his novels is the tragic plight of a European for whom the war of nations spells fratricide.

Schicklgruber, see HITLER, ADOLF.

Schiefelin, Dr. William Jay (1866–). American chemist. A philanthropist who has worked actively for Negro education for a half-century. Trustee at Hampton Institute (from 1896); chairman of the board of trustees of Tuskegee Institute, Alabama (until 1946); etc. Also associated with civic activities in New York, The Citizens' Union, etc.

Schilda. The German GOTHAM, a city which acquired such a reputation for wisdom that the inhabitants (Schildburger) were forced to pretend to be fools in order to be left in peace. The legends concerning their folly were collected in The History of the Schildburgers (16th century). One of their characteristic acts was to build a house without windows and try to carry sunlight in.

Schildkraut, Rudolph (1862–1930). German actor, associated also with moving pictures in Hollywood. His son, Joseph Schildkraut (1896–), is well known for his acting the title role of Lilom and playing in Peer Gynt and in Eva Le Gallienne's Repertory Theatre, also as a film actor.

Schiller, Johann Christoph Friedrich von (1759–1805). German poet, dramatist, historian, and philosopher of the romantic period (see ROMANTICISM), known for his lyrical and philosophical poems and ballads and his historical dramas. His works include THE ROBBERS (Die Räuber; 1781) DON CARLOS (1787); WALLENSTEIN (1799), consisting of Wallenstein's Camp, The Piccolomini, and Wallenstein's Death; Maria Stuart (see MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS; 1800); Die Jungfrau von Orleans (The Maid of Orleans; 1801); Die Braut von Messina (1803); WILHELM TELL (1804); Philosophical Letters (1786), on questions of philosophy; Revolt in the Netherlands (1788) and The Thirty Years War (1789–1793), history. In his later career Schiller was professor of history at the University of Jena.

Schlegel, August Wilhelm von (1767–1845). German poet, scholar, and critic of the romantic period (see ROMANTICISM), known for his translations and studies of Shakespeare, whose plays he helped to introduce and popularize in Germany. His critical works include Lectures on Belles-Lettres and Art (1801–1803) and Lectures on Dramatic Art and Literature (1808). August Wilhelm, who had an important influence on Mme de STAËL and the English authors CARLYLE and COLERIDGE, edited the literary journal Athenaeum, which he helped to found in 1798, and was a professor at the University of Bonn. See also FROZEN MUSIC.

Friedrich von Schlegel (1772–1829), brother of August Wilhelm, was also a critic and poet and a leading spokesman for the typical theories and ideas of romanticism. His writings include Lucinde (1799), a fragmentary novel on the subject of free love; Alaricos (1802), a tragedy; History of Ancient and Modern Literature (1815); and Language and Wisdom of the Indians (1808). He was particularly known for his irony and his melancholy temperament.

The two brothers are important figures in the launching of romantic criticism and romantic standards of aesthetics, philosophy, and individual conduct, as well as founders of the sciences of comparative mythology and philology; in connection with philology, both did work in Indian languages. Their wives, Caroline, née Böhmer and Dorothea, née MENDELSSOHN, were both women of brilliant minds and literary talent; Dorothea and Friedrich were together converted to Roman Catholicism in 1808. The father and the uncle of Friedrich and August Wilhelm, Johann Elias Schlegel (1718–1749) and Johann Adolf Schlegel (1721–1793), respectively, were well-known men of letters of their own time. Johann Elias was a critic and playwright, an early admirer of Shakespeare; Johann Adolf was a publicist and critic.

Scio, now called Chios. One of the seven cities which claimed to be the birthplace of HOMER; hence he is sometimes called "Scio's Blind Old Bard." The seven cities referred to make an hexameter verse:

Smyrna, Chios, Colophon, Salamis, Rhodes, Argos, Athenae; or Smyrna, Chios, Colophon, Ithaca, Pylos, Argos, Athenae.

A Greek Epigram.

Scipio Africanus, Publius Cornelius (237-183 B. C.). Known also as "Scipio the Elder." Roman general and politician. His successful invasion of Carthage caused the Carthaginians to recall Hannibal from Italy. Scipio decisively defeated Hannibal in the battle of Zama (202).

Sciron. A robber of Greek legend, slain by THESEUS. He infested the parts about Megara, and forced travelers over the rocks into the sea, where they were devoured by a sea monster. It was from these cliffs (known as the Scironian rocks) that Ino cast herself into the Corinthian bay.

Scobellum. A very fruitful land mentioned in the Seven Champions of Christendom iii. 10 (see under SEVEN), whose inhabitants "exceeded the cannibals for cruelty, the Persians for pride, the Egyptians for luxury, the Cretans for lying, the Germans for drunkenness, and all nations together for a generality of vices." To punish them, the gods changed the drunkards into swine, the lecherous into goats, the proud into peacocks, scolds into magpies, idle women into milch-cows, jesters into monkeys, misers into moles, etc. Eventually four of the Champions restored them to their normal forms by quenching the fire of the Golden Cave.

Scogan's Jest. A popular jest-book in the 16th century, said by Andrew Boorde (who published it) to be the work of one John Scogan, reputed to have been court fool to Edward IV. He is referred to (anachronously) by Justice Shallow in 2 Henry IV, iii. 2, and must not be confused with Henry Scogan (d. 1407), the poet-disciple of Chaucer to whom Ben Jonson alludes:

Scogan? What was he?
Oh, a fine gentleman, and a master of arts
Of Henry the Fourth's times, that made disguises
For the king's sons, and writ in ballad royal Daintily well.

The Fortunate Isles (1624).

Scriblerus, Martinus. The hero of a merciless satire on the false taste in literature current in the time of Pope, for the most part written by John ARBUTHNOT, and published in 1741. Its full title was Memoirs of the Extraordinary Life, Works and Discoveries of Martinus Scriblerus. Cornelius Scriblerus, the father of Martin, is a pedant, who entertains all sorts of absurd notions about the education of his son. Martin grows up a man of capacity, but although he has read everything, his judgment is vile and his taste atrocious. POPE, SWIFT, and Arbuthnot founded a Scriblerus Club with the object of pillorying all literary incompetence, and these Memoirs were the first of a proposed series of satires on current topics.

Scripps. Name of a family of American newspaper publishers. Robert Paine Scripps (1895-1938) was the editorial director of the Scripps-McRae newspapers and, after the merger with the Howard interests under Roy Wilson Howard (1925), associate editorial director of the Scripps-Howard chain.

The ten chroniclers are Simeon of Durham, John of Hexham, Richard of Hexham, Ailred of Rievall, Ralph de Diceto (Archdeacon of London), John Brompton of Jorval, Gervase of Canterbury, Thomas Stubbs, William Thorn of Canterbury, and Henry Knighton of Leicester.

A similar collection of five chronicles was published by Thomas Gale (1691) as Scriptores Quinque.

Scrooge, Ebenezer. The principal character in Dickens' CHRISTMAS CAROL, partner, executor, and heir of old Jacob Marley, stockbroker. When first introduced, he is "a squeezing, grasping, covetous old hunk, sharp and hard as a flint," without one particle of sympathy, loving no one, and by none beloved. One Christmas Day, Ebenezer Scrooge sees three ghosts: The Ghost of Christmas Past, the Ghost of Christmas Present, and the Ghost of Christmas to Come. The first takes him back to his young life, shows him what Christmas was to him when a schoolboy, and when he was an apprentice; reminds him of his courting of a young girl, whom he forsook as he grew rich; and shows him that sweetheart of his young days married to another and the mother of a happy family. The second ghost shows him the joyous home of his clerk, Bob Cratchit, who has nine people to keep on 15s. a week, and yet can find wherewithal to make merry on this day; it also shows him the family of his nephew, and of others. The third ghost shows him what would be his lot if he died as he then was, the prey of harpies, the jest of his friends on 'Change, the world's uncared-for waif. These visions wholly change his nature, and he becomes benevolent and cheerful, loving all, and by all beloved.

Scudamore, Sir. The lover of Amoret in Spenser's FAERIE QUEENE (Bk. iv), and finally wedded to her. The name means "Shield of Love."

Scudder, Horace Elisha (1838-1902). American writer. Editor of Riverside Magazine for Young People (1867-1870) and of the Atlantic Monthly (1890-1898). Scudéry or Scudéri, Madeleine de. Known as Sapho. (1608-1701). French author of fiction, famous for her exaggerated, sentimental romances of historical times, the first ROMAN À CLEF, on which she collaborated with her brother George. The best-known of these works are Ibrahim, ou l'Illustre Bassa (1641); Artamène, ou le Grand Cyrus (see under CYRUS; 1648-1653); Clélie, Histoire Romaine (1654-1660), in ten volumes. George de Scudéry was associated with the Hôtel de RAMBOUILLET and Madeleine held elaborate gatherings at which competitions in précieux gallantry were carried on. Under the Scudérys, the sentimental romance is considered to have reached its apex, but was already the subject of attack in the authors' day. It is satirized in Molière's LES PRÉCIEUSES RIDICULES.

Scyld. In legendary history, the king of Denmark preceding BEOWULF. The Anglo-Saxon epic poem Beowulf (6th century) begins with the death of Scyld.

At his appointed time, Scyld deceased, very decrepit, and went into the peace of the Lord. They . . . bore him to the sea-shore as he himself requested. . . . There on the beach stood the ring-powered ship, the vehicle of the noble . . . ready to set out. They laid down the dear prince, the distributor of rings, in the bosom of the ship, the mighty one beside the mast . . . they set up a golden ensign high overhead . . . they gave him to the deep. Sad was their spirit, mournful their mood.—Beowulf (Kemble version).

Scylla. In Greek legend the name (1) of a daughter of King Nisus of Megara and (2) of a sea monster.

The daughter of Nisus promised to deliver Megara into the hands of her lover Minos and, to effect this, cut off a golden hair on her father's head while he was asleep. Minos despised her for this treachery, and Scylla threw herself from a rock into the sea. At death she was changed into a lark, and Nisus into a hawk.

The sea monster dwelt on the rock Scylla, opposite CHARYBDIS, on the Italian side of the Straits of Messina. HOMER says that she had twelve feet, and six heads, each on a long neck and each armed with three rows of pointed teeth, and that she barked like a dog. He makes her a daughter of Crataeis, but later accounts say that she was a nymph who, because she was beloved by GLAUCUS, was changed by the jealous CIRCE into a hideous monster.

between Scylla and Charybdis. Between two equal difficulties; between the Devil and the deep sea.

to fall from Scylla into Charybdis—out of the frying-pan into the fire.

Second Mrs. Tanqueray, The. A drama by A. W. PINERO (1893). Paula, "the second Mrs. Tanqueray," is a woman with a past, and in spite of Aubrey Tanqueray's hopes and efforts, is not very cordially accepted by his friends, nor can she win the affection of his nineteen-year-old daughter Ellean. Ellean goes to Paris with one of her mother's friends and there becomes engaged to Captain Ardale. Paula, who has formerly been Ardale's mistress, feels duty bound to break off the match. Ellean now confesses in her anger that she has guessed from the beginning what sort of woman Paula was and has shunned her on that account. Paula, in despair, kills herself.

Second Nun's Tale, The. One of Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES, the story of St. Cecile or Cecily, the daughter of noble Roman parents, and a Christian. One day, she tells her husband Valerian she has "an aungel . . . that with gret love, wher so I wake or slepe, is redy ay my body for to kepe." Valerian asks to see this angel, and Cecile tells him he must first go to St. Urban, and, being purged by him "fro synne, than schul ye se that aungel." Valerian is accordingly "cristened" by St. Urban, returns home, and finds the angel with two crowns, brought directly from Paradise. One he gives to Cecile and one to Valerian, saying that "bothe with the palme of martirdom schullen come unto God's blisful feste." Valerian suffers martyrdom first; then Almachius, the Roman prefect, commands his officers to "brenne Cecile in a bath of flammes red." She remains in the bath all day and night, yet "sat she cold, and felte of it no woe." Then they strike her three blows upon the neck, but they cannot smite her head off. She lingers on for three whole days, preaching and teaching, and then dies. St. Urban buries her body secretly by night, and her house he converts into a church, which he calls the church of Cecile.

Second Shepherd's Play, The (Secunda Pagina Pastorum). A medieval English MIRACLE PLAY, written at the end of the 14th century or the beginning of the 15th century and considered to have been from the hand of THE WAKEFIELD MASTER. It deals with the Nativity in a vein of rollicking, farcical, almost burlesque realism, in terms of country life in Yorkshire at the time of the play's composition. It was called the "Second" Shepherd's Play because in the manuscript in which it is preserved it follows a "Prima" Pagina Pastorum. The manuscript contains a total of thirty-two plays, one-third of which are believed to have been written by The Wakefield Master.

second sight. The power of seeing things invisible to others; the power of foreseeing future events by means of shadows thrown before them.

Secret Agent, The. A novel by Joseph CONRAD (1907), dealing with the London underworld and suggested by a mysterious explosion in Greenwich Park. Verloc "the secret agent" has been living for years as an ostensible anarchist paid to spy upon his comrades. Fearful of losing his job, and goaded by his employers into producing concrete evidence that will rouse public feeling against anarchistic organizations, he persuades Stevie, his stupid, trusting brother-in-law, to blow up Greenwich Observatory. Stevie is killed with his own bomb, and Verloc's wife, Winnie, whose whole life has been devoted to her brother, turns upon Verloc and murders him. The novel was filmed by Alfred Hitchcock as The Woman Alone.

Sedan. A city on the Meuse river in France, of great strategic importance and hence historical interest. The most famous battle of Sedan (September 1, 1870) caused the surrender to the Germans of an army of one hundred thousand men under the direct command of Napoleon III. In World War I, Sedan was an important point during the advance of the Germans into France. In 1940, it was the gateway through which the German army, skirting the MAGINOT LINE, poured westward.

Sedan, The Man of. See under MAN.

Sedgemoor. A place in Somerset, England, which (in 1685) was the scene of a battle between Royal troops and the Duke of MONMOUTH who had landed in England to lay claim to the crown as an illegitimate son of Charles II. Monmouth was defeated.

Sedgwick, Anne Douglas (1873-1935). Distinguished American writer. Her ninth novel, Tante (1911), was dramatized for Ethel Barrymore. She lived mostly in Paris and "thought out her stories in French." Of this The Little French Girl (1924) shows considerable traces.

Sedgwick, Ellery (1872-). Editor of the Atlantic Monthly (1908-1938). His brother, Henry Dwight Sedgwick (1861-), is the author of many books of essays.

Sedley, Amelia. One of the principal characters of Thackeray's VANITY FAIR, the school friend of the heroine BECKY SHARP. Amelia's fortunes form the second and contrasting plot of the novel, and Amelia's gentle, affectionate but not too clever personality is the more lovable by contrast with that of her friend. She was said by Thackeray to have been drawn from three women—Mrs. Brookfield, his mother, and his wife.

Joseph Sedley. Amelia's brother, a collector, of Boggley Wollah; a fat, sensual, conceited dandy. Becky Sharp sets her cap for him but fails to capture him. He flees from Brussels on the day of the battle between Napoleon and Wellington, and returns to Calcutta, where he brags of his brave deeds and makes it appear that he was Wellington's right hand; on the strength of his tale he obtains the sobriquet of "Waterloo Sedley." He later comes back to England and falls into Becky's clutches after her separation from Rawdon CRAWLEY.

Mr. Sedley. Amelia's father, a wealthy London stock-broker, brought to ruin by the fall of the Funds just prior to the battle of Waterloo. The old merchant then tries to earn a meager pittance by selling wine, coals, or lottery-tickets by commission, but his bad wine and cheap coals find few customers.

Mrs Sedley. Wife of Mr. Sedley, a homely, kind-hearted, motherly woman in her prosperous days, but soured by adversity, and quick to take offense.

Sedley, Sir Charles (1639?-1701). English writer of the RESTORATION, notorious for his wit and profligacy. Author of tragedies, comedies, vers de société, and songs, as Phyllis is My Only Joy. His daughter, Catherine Sedley (1657-1717), became a mistress of King James II.

to play the sedulous ape to. To study the style of another, and model one's own on his as faithfully and meticulously as possible; said, usually with more or less contempt, of literary men. The phrase is taken from R. L. STEVENSON, who, in his essay, A College Magazine (Memories and Portraits), said that he had—played the sedulous ape to Hazlitt, to Lamb, to Wordsworth, to Sir Thomas Browne, to Defoe, to Hawthorne, to Montaigne, to Baudelaire, and to Obermann. . . . That, like it or not, is the way to learn to write.

See, Thomas Jefferson Jackson (1866-). American astronomer, in charge of the U.S. Naval Observatory (1899-1902), and (from 1903) of the naval observatory at Mare Island, California.

Seeger, Alan (1888-1916). American poet, killed in action in World War I (July 4, 1916). His collected poems were published shortly after his death with an introduction by William Archer. He is best known for his poem I Have a Rendezvous With Death, which has been extensively anthologized.

Seelig, Dr. A Jewish physician, the leading character in the play As a Man Thinks by Augustus THOMAS.

Seghers, Anna. Pen name of Netty Radványi, née Reiling (1900-). German novelist. Author of the Book-of-the-Month Club novel, The Seventh Cross (1942), written while her husband was in a French concentration camp. Lived as a refugee in Paris; to U.S. after the fall of France.

Segrain, Jean Regnault de (1624-1701). French poet; collaborated with the Duchesse de Montpensier on several romances and himself wrote poetry (Athis, 1653) and the novel Bérénice (1648-1651).

Seian Horse. See under HORSE.

Seicento. The 16th and 17th centuries of Italian notables, the period of bad taste and degenerate art. The degraded art is termed Seicentista, and the notables of the period the Seicentisti. The style of writing was inflated and bombastic, and that of art was what is termed "rococo." The chief poet was Giovanni Battista Marino (1569-1625), the chief painter Caravaggio (1569-1609), the chief sculptor Bernini (1593-1680), and the chief architect Borromini (1599-1667).

Seidel, Emil (1864-1947). Mayor of Milwaukee (1910-1912), the first Socialist mayor in a large American city.

Seitz, Don Carlos (1862-1935). An American journalist who wrote biographies of Horace Greeley (1926); Joseph Pulitzer (1927); and The James Gordon Bennetts (1928).

Sejanus His Fall. A Roman tragedy (1603) by Ben JONSON, who frequently wrote dramas based on classical themes.

selah. A Hebrew word occurring often in the Psalms (and three times in Habakkuk iii), indicating some musical or liturgical direction, such as a pause, a repetition, or the end of a section.

Selden, John (1584-1654). English lawyer, scholar, and prose writer, known for his treatises, many of which were written in Latin and dealt with questions of law. Among his works are De Diis Syris (1617), a study of Oriental religion; History of Tithes (1618), which was suppressed after publication because the English clergy objected to it; Marmora Arundeliana (1624); De Successionibus (1631); Mare Clausum (1635); De Jure Naturali (1640); Judicature in Parliament (1640); Privileges of Baronage (1642); Fleta (1647); On the Nativity of Christ (1661); Table Talk (1689).

Selden, of humble birth, was an outstanding lawyer of his day and became especially known for his collection of Oriental manuscripts, which he willed to the Bodleian Library.

Seldes, George (1890-). American journalist and writer; brother of Gilbert SELDES. Author of You Can't Print That! (1929); The Truth Behind the News (1929); Sawdust Caesar (1932), a biography of MUSOLINI; The Vatican and the Modern World (1933); Lords of the Press (1938); etc. Editor of a weekly bulletin of "inside" news, In Fact, which has a circulation of over 100,000 copies.

Seldes, Gilbert Vivian (1893-). American journalist and critic. Best-known for his volume, The Seven Lively Arts (1924). Translated and adapted Lysistrata by Aristophanes for the American stage (1930). Also author of murder mysteries written under the pen name Foster Johns.

Selene. The moon goddess of Greek mythology, daughter of Hyperion and Thea, and roughly corresponding to the Roman DIANA, the chaste huntress. Selene had fifty daughters by ENDYMION, and several by ZEUS, one of whom was called "The Dew." Diana is represented with bow and arrow, running after the stag; but Selene is usually shown in a chariot drawn by two white horses, with wings on her shoulders and a scepter in her hand.

Seleucidae. The dynasty of Seleucus Nicator, one of ALEXANDER's generals (ca. 358-280 B.C.), who in 312 conquered Babylon and succeeded to a part of Alexander's vast empire. The monarchy consisted of Syria, a part of Asia Minor, and all the eastern provinces, and the line of the Selucids reigned till about 64 B.C.

Self-Denying Ordinance, the. The name given to an Act passed by the Long Parliament (1644), by which the members bound themselves not to accept certain posts, particularly commands in the army. The name was given also to an arrangement made respecting British naval promotions and retirements in 1870. It is sometimes used in a general sense, with obvious meaning.

self-determination. The theory in political economy that every nation, no matter how small or weak, has the right to decide upon its own form of government and to manage its own internal affairs. This principle was one of the political ideals and war aims of Woodrow WILSON, and there was an attempt to embody it in the European settlement provided for in the Treaty of VERSAILLES at the close of World War I.

Self-Reliance. An essay by Ralph Waldo EMERSON which was published (1841) in his first series of essays.

Selika. In Meyerbeer's opera L'AFRICAIN a native queen.

Selim. (1) The hero of Byron's poem THE BRIDE OF ABYDOS.

(2) The hero of the tale The Light of the Harem in Moore's LALLA ROOKH, in reality the Mogul emperor Jehangir. The story deals with his relations with his wife NOURMAHAL, "the Light of the Harem."

Selincourt, Hugh de (1878-). English novelist and playwright. One Little Boy (1923); etc.

Seljuks. A Perso-Turkish dynasty of eleven emperors over a large part of Asia, which lasted 138 years (1056-1194). It was founded by Togrul Beg, a descendant of Seljuk, chief of a small tribe which gained possession of Bokara.

Selkirk, Alexander (1676-1723). A Scotch sailor whose narrative of his actual experience as a castaway suggested Defoe's ROBINSON CRUSOE. He is the subject of a well-known poem by COWPER, which begins:

I am monarch of all I survey,
My right there is none to dispute.

Sellenger's round. An English country dance popular in the sixteenth century. The name is a corruption of St. Léger.

Sellers, Col. Mulberry. The principal character in THE GILDED AGE, a novel by Mark Twain and Charles Dudley Warner, which was later successfully dramatized (1876).

Sellers, Isaiah (1802?-1864). Mississippi steamboat pilot who used the pseudonym Mark Twain for his contributions to the New Orleans Daily Picayune before it was taken over and made famous by Samuel L. Clemens.

Sellwood, Emily. Wife of Lord TENNYSON, to whom she was married in 1850.

Selvaggio. The father of Sir Industry, and the hero of Thomson's CASTLE OF INDOLENCE:

In Fairy-land there lived a knight of old,
Of features stern, Selvaggio well y-clept;
A rough, unpolished man, robust and bold,
But wondrous poor. He neither sowed nor reaped;
No stores in summer for cold winter heaped.
In hunting all his days away he wore—
Now scorched by June, now in November steeped,
Now pinched by biting January sore,
He still in woods pursued the libbard and the boar.

ii. 5.

Selznick, David Oliver (1902-). American moving-picture producer; organized Selznick International Pictures (1935-1936) and produced Little Lord Fauntleroy; The Garden of Allah; The Prisoner of Zenda; Tom Sawyer; Gone With the Wind; etc.

Semaine, La. An epic poem by Guillaume du BARTAS (1578), celebrating from the Protestant point of view the Biblical theme of the Creation, based on Genesis. The work was extremely popular in its day, going through twenty editions in five years and being translated into Latin, Spanish, Italian, English, and German. Milton's PARADISE LOST is said to have been inspired in part by La Semaine, which was translated into English by Joshua SYLVESTER. In 1584 du BARTAS began issuing La Seconde Semaine, which was intended to carry the epic down to the Last Judgment; it was never completed, however.

semantics. The science of meanings and their relation to the words, or "signs," which represent them in language; a branch of SEMEIOLOGICS. Semantics came into particular prominence during the 1930's in England and the U.S. in connection with the analysis of PROPAGANDA and the study of poetic imagery and diction. Leading studies of semantics at this time were The Meaning of Meaning (1936), by C. K. Ogden and I. A. RICHARDS; The Tyranny of Words (1938), by Stuart Chase; The Theory of Meaning and Truth

(1940), by Bertrand Russell; Language in Action (1941), by S. I. Hayakawa; An Introduction to Semantics (1942), by Rudolf Carnap.

Sembrich, Marcella. Stage name of Praxede Marcelline Kochańska (1858-1935). Operatic soprano. American début as Lucia with the Metropolitan Opera Company in New York (1883); also on the concert stage.

Semele. In Greek mythology, the daughter of Cadmus and Harmonia. By ZEUS she was the mother of DIONYSUS, and was slain by lightning when he granted her request to appear before her as the God of Thunder.

Seminole. A tribe of Florida Indians mingled with Negro ex-slaves. They fought against the U.S. in the War of 1812. There were two Seminole Wars (1817-1818 and 1835-1842). In the first the Seminoles were put down by Andrew Jackson. The second war arose in the course of the partially successful execution of a plan to remove the Seminoles to the West.

semeiotics. The science, or theory, of signs, dealing with the various elements, processes, and relationships involved in the representation of meanings, objects, associations, etc., in language and expression in general. SEMANTICS is the best-known branch of semeiotics. For an introduction to semeiotics, cf. Foundations for the Theory of Signs, by Charles W. Morris, in the Encyclopaedia of Unified Science, I, 2; and Aesthetics and the Theory of Signs, by the same author, Journal of Unified Science, VIII, 1-3 (1939).

Semiramis. In legendary history, Queen of Assyria, wife of NINUS. She survived her husband, and the glory of her subsequent reign stands out so prominently that she quite eclipses all other monarchs of ancient Assyria. She is said to have built the city of Babylon and its famous hanging gardens. After a reign of forty-two years, she resigned the crown to her son Ninyas, and took her flight to heaven in the form of a dove. Semiramis was the daughter of Derceto the fish-goddess and a Syrian youth. Her mother abandoned her in infancy, but she was nursed by doves until some shepherds found her. She is the heroine of Calderón's drama The Daughter of the Air, of Voltaire's tragedy Sémiramis, and Rossini's opera Sémiramide, based on Voltaire's drama. The overture to this opera is very popular.

Semiramis of the North. (1) Margaret of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway (1353-1412); (2) Catherine II of Russia (1729-1796).

Semitic. Pertaining to the descendants of Shem (see Gen. x), viz. the Hebrews, Arabs, Assyrians, Aramaeans, etc., nowadays applied in popular use to the Jews, who, when the speaker means to be contemptuous, are often spoken of as the Semites.

the Semitic languages. Ancient Assyrian and Chaldee, Aramaean, Syriac, Arabic, Hebrew, Samaritan, Ethiopic, and old Phoenician. The great characteristic of this family of languages is that the roots of words consist of three consonants.

Sénancour, Étienne Pivert de (1770–1846). French man of letters, follower of Rousseau. Best-known for his pessimistic novel Obermann (1804) and as the author of Observations sur le Génie du Christianisme (1816).

Senanus, St. See under SAINTS.

Sender, Ramón José (1901–). Spanish novelist who served during the Civil War as a brigade commander in the republican army (until 1937). In André Malraux's novel, Man's Hope (1939), he appears as "Manuel." He has written The War in Spain (1937); Man's Place (1940); etc.

Seneca, Lucius Annaeus (4 B. C.–65 A. D.). Latin philosopher and dramatist, a member of the school of STOICISM, known for the rhetorical tragedies called by his name. These include Hercules, Tróades, Phoenissae, Medea, Phaedra, Agamemnon, Oedipus, and Thyestes. Marked by violence, bloodshed, bombast, and characters of little individuality or differentiation, they had an important influence on the tragic drama of Italy, France, and especially Elizabethan England.

Seneca was a tutor of NERO and, when the latter succeeded to the throne of emperor, became an important imperial official, building up a great fortune. When he lost favor, his fortune was confiscated and he committed suicide at Nero's command. His Naturales Questiones was used as a textbook of physical science during the Middle Ages.

the Christian Seneca. Joseph Hall (1574–1656), Bishop of Exeter and Norwich.

Sénécals. In Flaubert's SENTIMENTAL EDUCATION, a radical of Syndicalist views who, after the failure of the Revolution of 1848 and the successful coup d'état of Napoleon III, becomes a police officer under the Emperor. In his official capacity he kills the naïve Dusardier in a street riot.

senescent. Growing old or aging.

And now, as the night was senescent,
And star-dials pointed to morn .
Edgar Allan Poe, Utalume.

Sennacherib. An Assyrian king whose siege of Jerusalem in the days of Hezekiah is dramatically described in 2 Kings. In the night "the angel of Jehovah went forth and smote in the camp of the Assyrians a hundred fourscore and five thousand; and when men rose early in the morning, behold these were all dead bodies. So Sennacherib, King of Assyria, departed." BYRON has made this episode the subject of a famous lyric, The Destruction of Sennacherib, beginning:

The Assyrian came down like a wolf on the fold
And his cohorts were gleaming with purple and gold.
sense.

scared out of my seven senses. According to ancient teaching, the soul of man, or his "inward holy body," is compounded of the seven properties which are under the influence of the seven planets. Fire animates, earth gives the sense of feeling, water gives speech, air gives taste, mist gives sight, flowers give hearing, the south wind gives smelling; hence the seven senses are animation, feeling, speech, taste, sight, hearing, and smelling (see Ecclus xvii. 5).

Sense and Sensibility. A novel by Jane AUSTEN (1811), in which two sisters, Elinor and Marianne, represent "sense" and "sensibility" respectively. Each is deserted by the young man from whom she has been led to expect an offer of matrimony. Elinor is discretion itself, but Marianne, with the foolishly romantic notions of youth, is not content to let well enough alone. Elinor's lover, Edward Ferrars, who has felt honor bound to marry Lucy Steele, a girl of inferior social antecedents, is disinherited, and returns to Elinor when Lucy shifts her interest to his younger brother, the new heir. On the other hand, the dashing John Willoughby, whom Marianne follows to London, furnishes her little but disillusionment, and she finally marries the middle-aged Colonel Brandon.

Sensitive Plant, The. A poem (1820) by Percy Bysshe SHELLEY.

Senta. The heroine of Wagner's opera THE FLYING DUTCHMAN.

Sentences, Master of the. The Schoolman Peter Lombard (d. 1160), an Italian theologian and bishop of Paris, author of The Four Books of Sentences (Sententiarum libri iv), a compilation from the Fathers of the leading arguments pro and con, bearing on hair-splitting theological questions of the Middle Ages.

The medieval graduates in theology, of the second order, whose duty it was to lecture on the Sentences, were called Sententiatory Bachelors.

Sentimental Education, The (L'Éducation Sentimentale). A novel by Gustave FLAUBERT (1869), presenting a satirical picture of life among French dilettantes, intellectuals, and revolutionaries at the time of the Revolution of 1848. The hero, Frédéric MOREAU, is a young man from the provinces who has studied law and wishes to install himself in Paris as a dilettante in the arts and a young man of fashion and affairs, patterning his life according to the modes and principles of his time, in which the influence of the romantic period (see ROMANTICISM) is still strong. He falls in love with Mme ARNOUX, the beautiful and chaste wife of a crude and mercenary art dealer, and suffers from unrequited passion in the best romantic tradition. He sets out on an unsuccessful campaign to win Mme Arnoux as his mistress, but does not allow his passion to interfere with his taking Rosanette Bron as a temporary mistress, seeking a career in society, and eventually becoming the lover of Mme Dambreuse, wife of a prominent banker, in the hope of securing a fortune on the death of Dambreuse. As Frédéric's fortunes advance, Mme Arnoux's decline, her husband undertaking and failing in a variety of businesses, each of which is more humble than the one preceding it. Eventually M. Dambreuse dies, but his estate is far less than was anticipated. Frédéric, engaged to marry Mme Dambreuse, forfeits even the reduced inheritance by leaving her, in a sentimental gesture of fidelity to his old love, when the widow, in jealous spite, insists on buying at a creditor's sale of Mme Arnoux's household effects a small box that once belonged to the latter.

After this, Frédéric continues to be disillusioned in his attempts to apply in the changing life of his time the romantic principles he absorbed from his reading as an adolescent. In an ironic conclusion, Mme Arnoux, now old and a widow, at last comes to him and offers herself, but Frédéric, no longer in bondage to his early passion or fearing another and more profound disillusionment, refuses to accept her offer, whereupon she leaves, admiring him for his chivalry.

The action of the novel takes place against a background of the Revolution of 1848 and the establishment of the Second Empire, with careful documentation of the various incidents and events mentioned. Notable portrayals are the assorted artists, intellectuals, liberals, and radicals who are Frédéric's friends. Before the Revolution, they are all for the revival of the principles of 1789, but after Napoleon's successful coup they opportunistically become reactionary politically and support the Empire. See also HUSSONET; MOREAU, FRIDERIC; PEL-LERIN; ROQUE, LOUISE; VATNAZ, CLÉMENCE; SÉNÉCAL.

Sentimental Journey, A. A famous volume by Laurence STERNE (1768). It was intended to be a collection of sentimental sketches of a tour through Italy in 1764, but the author died soon after completing Part I.

Sentimental Tommy. A novel by J. M. BARRIE (1896), which, together with its sequel Tommy and Grizel (1900), relates the story of Thomas Sandys. Tommy is blessed, or cursed, with an over-supply of imagination, and, in whichever of many moods he may happen to be, he sees himself always as a hero playing a hero's part. His talent for writing leads him to adopt the career of author. The loyal Grizel adores but cannot understand him, nor can he, in spite of his spasmodic efforts, succeed in being the faithful lover and husband that she deserves. He meets an accidental death by hanging.

Sentry, Captain. One of the members of the club under whose auspices the SPECTATOR was professedly issued.

Sephardic Jews or Sephardim. Jews from Sepharadh, a region of vague identity, later associated with Spain. See also ASHKENAZIM.

sepooy. The Anglicized form of Hindu and Persian sipahi, "a soldier," from sipah, "army," denoting a native East Indian soldier trained and disciplined in the British manner, especially one in the British Indian Army.

September.

September Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

September Massacres. An indiscriminate slaughter, during the French Revolution, of Loyalists confined in the Abbaye and other prisons, lasting from September 2 to 5, 1792. As many as 8000 persons fell, among whom was the Princesse de Lamballe.

September Morn. French painting of a nude girl which achieved some notoriety in 1917.

Septimius Felton. An unfinished novel by HAWTHORNE, published in 1871 after his death.

Septuagint. A Greek version of the Old Testament and Apocrypha, so called because it was traditionally said to have been made by seventy-two Palestinian Jews in the 3rd century B. C., at the command of Ptolemy Philadelphus. They worked on the island of Pharos and completed the translation in seventy-two days.

This tradition applies, however, only to the Pentateuch; Greek translations of the other books were added by later writers, some, perhaps, being as late as the Christian era. The name Septuagint is frequently printed LXX—"for short."

Serafin, Tullio (1878-). Italian operatic conductor, who succeeded Toscanini as conductor of La Scala, Milan (1908). Conductor with the Metropolitan Opera Company, New York (1924-1935); guest conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra (1929-1930).

Seraglio. The former palace of the Sultan of Turkey at Constantinople, situated on the Golden Horn, and enclosed by walls seven miles and a half in circuit. The chief entrance was the Sublime Gate (see Sublime Porte);

the chief of the large edifices was the Harem, or "sacred spot," which contained numerous houses formerly in use, one for each of the Sultan's wives, and others for his concubines.

seraphic.

the Seraphic Doctor. See under DOCTOR.

the Seraphic saint. St. Francis d'Assisi (1182-1226). See under SAINTS.

seraphim. The highest order of angels in medieval angelology, so named from the seraphim of Is. vi. 2. The word is probably the same as saraph, "a serpent," from saraph, "to burn" (in allusion to its bite); and this connection with burning suggested to early Christian interpreters that the seraphim were specially distinguished by the ardency of their zeal and love. Elizabeth Barrett Browning wrote a poem titled The Seraphim (1838).

Serapis. An Egyptian deity, combining the attributes of Apis and Osiris. The temples of Serapis were called Serapea. The most famous Serapeum, at Memphis, was the burial place of the sacred bull Apis.

Serbonian Bog. A great morass, now covered with shifting sand, between the isthmus of Suez, the Mediterranean, and the delta of the Nile, that in Strabo's time was a lake stated by him to be 200 stadia long and 50 broad, and by Pliny to be 150 miles in length. TYPHON was said to dwell at the bottom of it; hence its other name, Typhon's Breathing Hole. The term is used figuratively of a mess from which there is no way of extricating oneself.

Serendipity. A happy coinage by Horace WALPOLE to denote the faculty of making lucky and unexpected "finds" by accident. In a letter to Mann (January 28, 1754) he says that he formed it on the title of a fairy story, The Three Princes of Serendip, because the princes—"were always making discoveries, by accidents and sagacity, of things they were not in quest of."

Serendip is an ancient name of Ceylon.

Serkin, Rudolf (1903-). Bohemian-born Austrian concert pianist, residing in the U.S. Regarded as one of the finest interpreters of Beethoven's piano works.

Sermon on the Mount. Matt. v-vii.

serpentine verses. Verses ending with the same word with which they begin. The following are examples:

Crescit amor nummi, quantum ipsa pecunia crescit.
(Greater grows the love of pelf, as pelf itself grows greater.)

Ambo florentes ætatis, Arcades ambo.
(Both in the spring of life, Arcadians both.)

The allusion is to the old representations of snakes with their tails in their mouths, which was emblematic of eternity—no beginning and no end.

Serra, Junípero (1713-1784). Spanish Franciscan missionary who worked among the Indians in Mexico City. He led other Franciscans into Upper California (1769), founding nine missions on the coast of California. He converted some six thousand Indians, teaching them to cultivate the mission lands.

Serrano Suñer, Ramón (1901-). Spanish politician, fanatical supporter of his brother-in-law, Francisco FRANCO. Minister of foreign affairs (1940-1942), and head of the Junta Política.

Servant in the House, The. A drama by Charles Rann KENNEDY (1907). In the guise of a new butler, Manson, the Bishop of Benares, comes into the troubled household of his brother, a vicar, and brings with him peace and a spirit of brotherhood. The vicar's drunkard brother Robert, a plumber, and his daughter Mary, who has been brought up in ignorance of her father, are important characters.

Servetus, Michael. Original Spanish name Miguel Serveto (1511-1553). Spanish physician and controversialist. Credited by some with the discovery of the circulation of the blood. See HARVEY. Opposed the church doctrine of the Trinity with the early essay De Trinitatis Erroribus (1531) and with Christianismi Restitutio (1553), which caused his apprehension by the Inquisition. After a lengthy trial, he was burned at the stake as a heretic upon the instigation of John CALVIN, the "pope of Geneva."

Service, Robert William (1874-). English-born Canadian author, sometimes called "the Canadian Kipling," best known for his poems and ballads of frontier life in the Far North, several of which have become genuine folk property. Among them are Songs of a Sourdough (1907); Ballads of a Cheechako (1907); The Spell of the Yukon (1908); Bar-Room Ballads (1940). Other books of verse include Rhymes of a Rolling Stone (1913); Rhymes of a Red Cross Man (1916); Ballads of a Bohemian (1920); The Trail of '98 (1910) and The Poisoned Paradise (1922), novels. The Shooting of Dan McGrew is his best-known ballad. His autobiography was published as Ploughman of the Moon (1945), and Harper of Heaven (1948).

Sesame, Open. The "pass-word" at which the door of the robbers' cave flew open in the tale of The Forty Thieves (Arabian Nights); hence, a key to a mystery, or anything that acts like magic in obtaining a favor, admission, recognition, etc.

Sesame is an East Indian annual herb, with an oily seed which is used as a food, a laxative, etc. In Egypt the natives eat sesame cakes, and the Jews frequently add the seed to their bread.

Sesame and Lilies. The title of a collection of lectures on reading, education of women, and the mysteries of life and art by John Ruskin (1865).

Sesha. In the mythology of India, the serpent king who supports the world on his head.

Sesphra. In Cabell's FIGURES OF EARTH, a limping figure modeled by MANUEL and given life by the magic of Queen Freydis, who reappears later to tempt Manuel to leave his wife and child and visit strange lands. He is called Sesphra of the Dreams, and Carl Van Doren has pointed out that his name is "phrases" transposed.

sesquipedalian. Literally, "a foot and a half in length." Applied, usually with a humorous intent, to very long words.

sesterce. A Roman coin equal to one quarter of a denarius, first issued in the third century B.C.

sestet. A stanza of six lines, especially the last six lines of the Italian SONNET.

sestiad. One of the six parts or cantos of a poem. The term was first used by Marlowe and Chapman in Hero and Leander, where it served with a corresponding number to designate the beginning of each new section. It has nothing to do with six (as sestina for instance has) but was originally derived from the place name Sestos (residence of Hero) after the model of Iliad.

sestina. A poem of six verses in which the final words of the first stanza appear in inverted order in all the others. Invented by Arnaud DANIEL; adopted by DANTE and PETRARCH and, through the medium of French models, by SWINBURNE.

Sestius or Sextius, Publius. Roman politician; instrumental in bringing about the recall of Cicero from exile (57 B.C.) after having helped him to crush the conspiracy of Catiline. He was defended by Cicero (56 B.C.) when he was accused of using illegal force as a tribune. During the civil war, he supported Pompey, but later joined Caesar.

Sestos. An ancient city on the European side of the HELLESPONT, where Hero dwelled in the legend of HERO AND LEANDER. See also ABYDOS.

Set. The Egyptian original of the Greek TYPHON, the god of evil, brother (or son) of OSIRIS, and his deadly enemy. He is represented as having the body of a man and the head of some unidentified mythological beast with pointed muzzle and high square ears.

Setebos. A savage god, spoken of in Shakespeare's TEMPEST as the deity worshiped by Sycorax, mother of CALIBAN, and described in some of the old books of travel among native tribes, notably Eden's History of Travaile (1577). Robert BROWNING wrote a poem with the title Caliban upon Setebos.

Seton, Ernest Thompson (1860-1946). Famous American writer on natural history. His best-known book is Wild Animals I Have Known (1898), illustrated by himself, as were most of his other works.

Settala, Lucio. The young sculptor in D'Annunzio's drama LA GIOCONDA.

Settembrini, Ludovico. In Thomas Mann's THE MAGIC MOUNTAIN, an Italian, one of the patients at the HAUS BERGHOF, who becomes a friend of Hans CASTORP. Settembrini is considered to represent the tradition of humanism, classicism, and political liberalism or republicanism, emphasizing form, reason, social morality, and education. Speaking eloquently, he tries to save Castorp from yielding to the insidious influence of the Magic Mountain, symbol of sterile aestheticism. Leo NAPHTA is Settembrini's intellectual foil, and the two argue ceaselessly, finally fighting a duel, after which Naphta commits suicide.

Settle, Elkanah (1648-1724). English playwright, chiefly remembered as a butt of ridicule for DRYDEN and POPE. His bombastic plays so annoyed Dryden that he pilloried him as Doeg in Absalom and Achitophel (1682).

Seurat, Georges (1859-1891). French painter of pointillistic canvases, with Paul Signac one of the founders of neo-impressionism. His style is best exemplified by Île de la Grand-Jatte.

Seuss, Dr., see GEISEL, THEODOR SEUSS.

seven. A mystic or sacred number; it is composed of four and three, which, among the Pythagoreans, were, and from time immemorial have been, accounted lucky numbers. Among the Babylonians, Egyptians, and other ancient peoples, there were seven sacred planets. The Hebrew verb to swear means literally "to come under the influence of seven things"; thus seven ewe lambs figure in the oath between Abraham and Abimelech at Beersheba (Gen. xxi. 28), and Herodotus (III. viii) describes an Arabian oath in which seven stones are smeared with blood.

There are seven days in Creation, seven days in the week, seven graces, seven divisions in the Lord's Prayer, and seven ages in the life of man; climacteric years are seven and nine with their multiples by odd numbers; and the seventh son of a seventh son was held notable.

Among the Hebrews, every seventh year was sabbatical, and seven times seven years was the jubilee. The three great Jewish feasts lasted seven days, and between the first and second were seven weeks. Levitical purifications lasted seven days; Baalam would have seven altars, and sacrificed on them seven bul-locks and seven rams; Naaman was commanded to dip seven times in Jordan; Elijah sent his servant seven times to look out for rain; ten times seven Israelites went to Egypt, the exile lasted the same number of years, and there were ten times seven elders. Pharaoh in his dream saw seven kine and seven ears of corn; Jacob served seven years for each of his wives; seven priests with seven trumpets marched round Jericho once every day, but seven times on the seventh day; Samson's wedding feast lasted seven days, on the seventh he told his bride the riddle, he was bound with seven withes, and seven locks of his hair were shorn; Nebuchadnezzar was a beast for seven years; etc.

In the Apocalypse, we have seven churches of Asia, seven candlesticks, seven stars, seven trumpets, seven spirits before the throne of God, seven horns, seven vials, seven plagues, a seven-headed monster, and the Lamb with seven eyes.

The old astrologers and alchemists recognized seven planets, each having its own "heaven"—

The bodies seven, eek, lo hem heer anoon;
Sol gold is, and Luna silver we threpe,
Mars yren, Mercurie quyksilver we clepe;
Saturnus leed, and Jubitur is tyn;
And Venus coper, by my fader kyn.
Chaucer, Prologue of the Canon's Yeoman's Tale.

And from this very ancient belief sprang the theory that man was composed of seven substances, and has seven natures. See under SENSE.

the Seven. Used of groups of seven people, especially (1) the "men of honest report" chosen by the Apostles to be the first Deacons (Acts vi. 5), viz., Stephen, Philip, Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas and Nicolas; (2) the Seven Bishops or (3) the Seven Sages of Greece.

Seven against Thebes. The seven Argive heroes (Adrastus, Polynices, Tydeus, Amphiarus, Capaneus, Hippomedon and Parthenopaeus), who, according to Greek legend, made war on Thebes with the object of restoring Polynices (son of OEDIPUS), who had been expelled by his brother Eteocles. See also THEBES.

Seven Bishops. Archbishop Sancroft, and Bishops Lloyd, Turner, Kew, White, Lake, and Trelawney, who refused to read James II's Declaration of Indulgence (1688), and were in consequence imprisoned for nonconforming.

seven bodies in alchemy. The Sun is gold, the Moon silver, Mars iron, Mercury quicksilver, Saturn lead, Jupiter tin, and Venus copper. Cf. the quotation from Chaucer above.

Seven Champions. The medieval designation of the national patron saints of England, Scotland, Wales, Ireland, France, Spain, and Italy. In 1596 Richard Johnson published a chap-book, The Famous History of the Seven Champions of Christendom. In this he relates that St. George of England was seven years imprisoned by the Almidor, the black king of Morocco; St. Denys of France lived seven years in the form of a hart; St. James of Spain was seven years dumb out of love for a fair Jewess; St. Anthony of Italy, with the other champions, was enchanted into a deep sleep in the Black Castle, and was released by St. George's three sons, who quenched the seven lamps by water from the enchanted fountain; St. Andrew of Scotland delivered six ladies who had lived seven years under the form of white swans; St. Patrick of Ireland was immured in a cell where he scratched his grave with his own nails; and St. David of Wales slept seven years in the enchanted garden of Ormandine, and was redeemed by St. George.

Seven Churches of Asia. Those mentioned in Rev. i. 11, viz.:

(1) Ephesus, founded by St. Paul, 57, in a ruinous state in the time of Justinian.

(2) Smyrna. Polycarp was its first bishop.

(3) Pergamus, renowned for its library.

(4) Thyatira, now called Ak-hissar ("the White Castle").

(5) Sardis, now Sart, a small village.

(6) Philadelphia, now called Allah Shehr (City of God), a small town.

(7) Laodicea, now a deserted place called Eski-hissar ("the Old Castle").

seven cities warred for Homer being dead. See HOMER.

the Island of the Seven Cities. A kind of "Dixie land" of Spanish fable, where seven bishops, who quitted Spain during the dominion of the Moors, founded seven cities. The legend says that many have visited the island, but no one has ever left it.

Seven Gifts of the Spirit. Wisdom, Understanding, Counsel, Power or Fortitude, Knowledge, Righteousness, and Godly Fear.

Seven Gods of Luck. In Japanese folklore, Benten, goddess of love, Bishamon, god of war, Daikoku, of wealth, Ebisu, of self-effacement, Fukurokujin and Jurojin, gods of longevity, and Hstei, god of generosity. These are really popular conceptions of the seven Buddhist Devas who preside over human happiness and welfare.

Seven Heavens. See HEAVEN.

Seven-Hilled City. In Latin Urbs Septicollis; ancient Rome, built on seven hills, surrounded by Servius Tullius with a line of fortifications. The seven hills are the Palatinus, the Capitolinus, the Quirinalis, the Caelius, the Aventinus, the Viminalis, and the Esquilinus.

Seven Joys. See St. Mary under SAINTS.

Seven Lamps of Architecture. A volume by RUSKIN (1849). The seven lamps are Sacrifice, Truth, Power, Beauty, Life, Memory, and Obedience.

seven mortal sins. Pride, wrath, envy, lust, gluttony, avarice and sloth.

seven names of God. The ancient Hebrews had many names for the Deity and the Seven over which the scribes had to exercise particular care were—El, Elohim, Adonai, YHWH (i.e., our Jehovah), Ehyeh-Asher-Ehyeh, Shaddai, and Zebaoth. In medieval times God was sometimes called simply, The Seven.

Now lord, for thy naymes sewyn, that made both moyn and starnys,
Well mo then I can neven thi will, lord, of me tharnys.
Towneley Mysteries, xiii, 191 (about 1460).

seven sciences. See SCIENCE.

seven seas. The Arctic and Antarctic, North and South Pacific, North and South Atlantic, and the Indian oceans. KIPLING called a volume of his poems The Seven Seas (1896).

Seven Sisters. An old name of the PLEIADES; also given to a set of seven cannon, cast by one Robert Borthwick and used at Flodden (1513)—

And these were Borthwick's "Sisters Seven,"
And culverins which France had given;
Ill omened gift! The guns remain
The conqueror's spoil on Flodden plain.

Scott, Marmion, iv.

Seven Sleepers. Seven noble youths of Ephesus, according to the legend, who fled in the Decian persecution (250) to a cave in Mount Celion. After 230 years, or, according to some versions, 309 years, they awoke, but soon died, and their bodies were taken to Marseilles in a large stone coffin, still shown in Victor's church. Their names are Constantine, Dionysius, John, Maximian, Malchus, Martinian, and Serapion. This fable took its rise from misapprehension of the words, "They fell asleep in the Lord"—i.e., died. According to the Koran, the Sleepers had a dog named KATMIR who kept watch over them (Ch. xviii).

Seven Sorrows. See St. Mary under SAINTS.

seven times Christ spoke on the cross.

(1) "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do"; (2) "To-day shalt thou be with Me in paradise"; (3) "Woman, behold thy son!" etc.; (4) "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" (5) "I thirst"; (6) "It is finished" (7) "Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit."

Seven Virtues. Faith, hope, charity, prudence, justice, fortitude, and temperance. The first three are called "the holy virtues."

Seven Weeks' War. That between Austria and Prussia, in 1866, for the supremacy of Germany. The war was declared by Austria, June 17, and the Peace of Presburg (giving Prussia the victory) was signed August 20.

Seven Wise Masters. A collection of Oriental tales supposed to be told by his advisers to an Eastern king to show the evils of hasty punishment, with his answers to them. Lucien, the son of the King (who, in some versions, is named Dolopathos), is falsely accused to him by one of his queens. By consulting the stars the Prince discovers that his life is in danger, but that all will be well if he remains silent for seven days. The "Wise Masters" now take up the matter; each one in turn tells the King a tale to illustrate the evils of ill-considered punishment, and as each tale ends the King resolves to relent; but the Queen at night persuades him to carry out his sentence. The seven days being passed, the Prince tells a tale which embodies the whole truth, whereupon the King sentences the Queen to death. This collection of tales is known as SANDABAR'S PARABLES.

seven wonders of the world. See under WONDER.

Seven Years' War. The third period of the War of the Austrian Succession, between Maria Theresa of Austria and Friedrich II of Prussia. It began in 1756, and terminated in 1763. At the close of the war, Silesia was handed over to Prussia.

Seven Arts, The. An American monthly periodical of literature and opinion, one of the best-known of the LITTLE MAGAZINES of the early 20th century, founded in 1916 and published until October, 1917. Its aim was to provide a vehicle for the expression of ideas and forms to which the conservative journals of the day were closed, and it failed as a financial venture because of its pacifist views. See PACIFISM. Van Wyck BROOKS and Waldo FRANK were among its editors, and its contributors included Sherwood ANDERSON, John REED, John Dos PASSOS, Randolph BOURNE, Theodore DREISER, and H. L. MENCKEN.

Seven Dials. A region in London, named after a column topped by seven dials which formerly occupied the center of a square in which seven streets converged. Seven Dials was at one time a very squalid neighborhood frequented by disreputable characters.

Seventeen. A story by Booth TARKINGTON (1916). Its hero is William Sylvanus Baxter, known as "Willie" at home and "Silly Bill" at school. He is smitten by the charms of Lola Pratt, a stranger in town whose chief accomplishment is talking baby talk to her pet dog Flopit and to her numerous admirers. Willie calls upon Lola in his father's dress suit with awful but amusing consequences. The story has been dramatized and made into a motion picture.

Severn. The second longest river in England. Its name corresponds to the Latin Sabina. According to legend, the name is derived from Sabra, who, together with her mother Estrildis, was thrown into the river by Queen Guendolen.

Severn, Joseph (1793-1879). English painter, chiefly remembered as a friend of John KEATS whom he accompanied to Italy (1820), and attended on Keats's deathbed.

Severus, St. See under SAINTS.

Sevier, John (1745-1815). American frontiersman, Indian fighter, and first governor of Tennessee (1796-1801; 1803-1809); a character in The Crossing (1904) by the novelist WINSTON CHURCHILL.

Séguin, Marquise de. Née Marie de Rabutin-Chantal (1626-1696). French author and social leader, famous for her letters, Lettres de Mme de Séguin, written to her daughter, Mme de Grignan, and to an intimate circle of friends, dealing with life at court, life in the city, the countryside, her domestic affairs, and her reading. They are marked by wit, imagination, intelligence, learning, and sincerity.

Sèvres. A town near Paris, famous for its porcelain.

Sewall, Samuel (1652-1730). English-born American statesman of early New England, known for his liberal views and for his Diary, written between 1674 and 1729, which gives a lively and vivid picture of life and personalities in the Boston of his day and has been compared to the similar and more famous work of Samuel PEPYS. Among his other writings are The Revolution in New England Justified (1691), which seeks to justify the deposition of the dictatorial English governor Andros; The Selling of Joseph (1700), an attack on slavery; and A Memorial Relating to the Kennebec Indians (1721), a humanitarian appeal with regard to the settlers' treatment of the Indians.

Sewall held a number of political offices in the colony of Massachusetts, serving as a deputy to the general court, a member of the Council, and eventually Chief Justice of the superior court. He was one of the judges at the SALEM WITCHCRAFT trials, but later repented publicly in church while his confession was read to the congregation. He is considered an excellent representative of the rising merchant class of New England of his time.

Sewanee Review. A literary quarterly published by the University of the South at Sewanee, Tennessee. It was established by W. P. TRENT in 1892 and is the oldest quarterly of its kind in the United States.

Seward, Anna (1747-1809). English poet who was known as "the Swan of Lichfield." She helped Boswell from her knowledge of Dr. Johnson. She bequeathed her poems to Sir Walter Scott, who published three volumes of them (1810) with a memoir. Cf. The Singing Swan, by Margaret Ashmun.

Seward, William Henry (1801-1872). Governor of New York (1839-1843) and U.S. senator (1849-1861). He denounced the DRED SCOTT DECISION and remarked that the issue of slavery was an "irrepressible conflict between North and South." He supported the "squatter sovereignty" plan of Douglas. Lincoln made him Secretary of State (1861). At the time of Lincoln's assassination, an attempt was made to assassinate Seward also, but he recovered and continued as Secretary of State under Andrew Johnson (until 1869). He negotiated the purchase of Alaska from Russia (1867), at one time spoken of as "Seward's folly."

Sewell, Anna (1820-1878). English author whose novel Black Beauty (1877) is one of the most famous horse stories in literature.

Sewell, Rev. David. A minister who plays a leading part in Howells' MINISTER'S CHARGE and appears also in THE RISE OF SILAS LAPHAM.

sextette. A group of six, especially of singers, as the Sextette from LUCIA, the Floradora Sextette, etc.

Seyd. In Byron's CORSAIR, Pasha of the Morea, assassinated by Gulnare, his favorite concubine.

Seymour, Mrs. Beatrice Kean. English novelist; author of a trilogy about a domestic servant, and other novels, uneven in treatment.

Seymour, Charles (1885-). Son of a professor of Greek at Yale, himself president of Yale (since 1937). Author of The Diplomatic Background of the War (1916); The Intimate Papers of Colonel House (4 vols.; 1926-1928); etc.

Seymour, Horatio (1810-1886). Governor of New York (1853-1855; 1863-1865). Helped to stop the Draft Riots in New York (1863); was Democratic candidate for president (1868); and helped Governor Tilden drive Boss Tweed from power.

Seyss-Inquart, Artur von (1892-). Austrian minister of the interior in the SCHUSCHNIGG cabinet. Chancellor and minister of defense after the German occupation (1938). He was appointed by Hitler governor of the Ostmark (Austria; 1938), deputy governor of occupied German territory in Poland (1939), and German high commissioner of the Netherlands (1940).

Seyton, Catherine. Heroine of Scott's novel THE ABBOT, a maid of honor in the court of Queen Mary.

Sforza. Name of a celebrated Italian family that ruled Milan. A descendant is the Italian statesman, Count Carlo Sforza (1873-1922), a leader of anti-Fascism in Italy (since 1922), who finally came to the U.S. (1940) and is the author of a number of books, including The Real Italians (1942); he returned to Italy after the victory of the United Nations.

Sganarelle. In the comedies of MOLIÈRE, a favorite name for the cowardly, domineering or unpleasant character:

(1) Sganarelle, ou Le Cocu imaginaire (1660). This is a farce hinging on the complexities brought about by Sganarelle's confiscation of a gentleman's miniature which he thinks has been dropped by his wife. In reality it is the portrait of Lélie which his sweetheart Clélie has lost.

(2) L'École des maris (1661). In this comedy Sganarelle and his older brother Ariste are the guardians of two young orphans, Isabelle and Leonor. The conceited and domineering Sganarelle expects to marry Isabelle but makes her lead such a dull, strict life in the meantime that she dupes him and marries Valère instead.

(3) Le Mariage forcé (1664). Here Sganarelle, a rich man of sixty-four, promises marriage to Dorimene, a girl under twenty, but decides at the last minute to draw back from the alliance. Dorimene's brother beats him ruthlessly until he consents to go to the altar.

(4) L'Amour médecin (1664). Sganarelle is the father of Lucinde in this play.

(5) Don Juan (1665). Here Sganarelle is Don Juan's rather foolish, cowardly valet.

(6) Le Médecin malgré lui (1666). In this final play, of which Le Cocu imaginaire is logically the sequel, Sganarelle is a faggot maker. Martine, his wife, to get even with him for striking her, tells some inquirers that he is a noted doctor but so eccentric that he will deny it until they beat him well. He is taken to the house of Lucinde, who is apparently dumb, but the shrewd Sganarelle sees through her pretense and brings her lover Léandre in the guise of an apothecary.

Shabby Genteel Story, A. An unfinished tale by THACKERAY usually printed as a sort of prologue to THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP, which continues the story. The heroine, Caroline Gann, is tricked into a sham wedding by a man named George Brandon.

Shacabac, see SCHACABAC.

Shackleton, Sir Ernest Henry (1874-1922). English explorer: Accompanied Robert F. Scott (1901) and nearly reached the South Pole in an expedition of his own (1909). In 1918-1919, he organized the winter equipment of the British North-Russian Expeditionary Force. He wrote accounts of his expeditions in Heart of the Antarctic (1909) and South (1919).

Shadow, The Man Without a. See under PETER SCHLEMIHLS WUNDERBARE GESCHICHTE.

Shadow-of-a-Leaf. A kind of elf who figures in several poems and a poetic drama by Alfred Noyes. He is used as a symbol of spiritual things.

Shadows on the Rock. A novel by Willa Cather (1931), dealing with life in the French settlement of Quebec in the 18th century. The characters include Bishop Laval; Monseigneur de Saint-Vallier; Mother Juschereau and her nuns; Euclide Auclair, an apothecary; Cécile Auclair, Euclide's daughter; Pierre Charron, a fur-trader; and Jacques, a friendless boy brought up by the Auclairs. Cécile and Charron eventually marry.

Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. Three Hebrews (Dan, iii, 22) who, because of their refusal to worship a golden image, were cast, by the command of NEBUCHADNEZZAR, into a fiery furnace. They received no injury, although the furnace was made so hot that the heat thereof "slew those men" that took them to the furnace.

Shadwell, Thomas (1642?-1692). English poet and playwright. His works include Sullen Lovers (1668), based on Les Fâcheux, by MOLIÈRE, Timon of Athens (1678), The Squire of Alsatia (1688), Epsom Wells (1673), and Bury Fair (1689), all plays; The Enchanted Island (1673), an opera based on Shakespeare's THE TEMPEST; The Medal of John Bayes (1682) and a translation of the Tenth Satire of Juvenal (1687), satires.

Shadwell is best known for his literary feud with John DRYDEN, during which the two poets exchanged satires directed against each other. MACFLECKNOE was directed by Dryden against Shadwell, and in the second part of ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL Shadwell again is attacked under the name of Og.

Shafites. One of the four sects of the SUNNITES; so called from Al-Shafei (d. 819), a descendant of MAHOMET. See also SHIITES.

Shafter, William R. (1835-1906). American major general of volunteers in the Spanish-American War (1898). Received the surrender of the city of Santiago de Cuba (July 17, 1898).

Shaftesbury, Anthony Ashley Cooper, 1st Earl of Shaftesbury (1621-1683). A supporter of King Charles I in the English Civil War. After the Restoration he became a member of the CABAL. He was also chancellor, a fomenter of the Popish plot, and a supporter of the Duke of Monmouth. He has been made famous by Dryden as the character Achitophel in Absalom and Achitophel.

Shafton, Sir Piercie. In Scott's Monastery, a fashionable cavalier, grandson of old Overstitch, the tailor of Holderness. Sir Piercie talks in the pedantic style of the Elizabethan courtiers and is noted for his affectations.

Shah. See RULERS, TITLES OF.

Shah Namah. The famous Persian epic of FIRDUSI, the most ancient in modern Persian. Rusten or RUSTAM is the Achilles, Feridun the model king, Zohak the cruel and impious tyrant, Kavah (the blacksmith) the intrepid patriot who marches against Zohak, displaying his apron as a banner.

Rusten's horse is called Rakush; the prophetic bird is Simurgh; Rusten's mother is Rudabeh. Her child (Rusten) is cut out of her side, and the wound is healed by milk and honey applied with a feather of the prophetic bird Simurgh. Rusten requires the milk of ten wet-nurses, and when a mere youth kills an elephant with a blow of his mace.

Shakers. A sect of Second Adventists, founded in the 18th century in England by a secession from the Quakers, and transplanted in America by Ann Lee (1736-1784), or "Mother Ann," as she is generally known. Their official name is "The United Society of Believers in Christ's Second Appearing" or "The Millennial Church"; their popular name was given them in derision at their contortions during the religious dances of which their public form of worship chiefly consists.

Shakespeare, William (1564-1616). English poet and dramatist of the Elizabethan and early Jacobean period, probably the most widely known author in all English literature. His plays, the plots of most of which were derived from traditional medieval legend, contemporary chronicles, classic literature, and existent dramas of his own day, are distinguished by a more profound understanding and conception of character than is found in the work of other Elizabethan playwrights and by superior poetry of great delicacy, sensitivity, variety, and dramatic appropriateness. His lyric and narrative poetry is closer to the conventional product of his time but, especially in his SONNETS and the songs from his plays, it is often marked by a combination of imagination, precision, and deep and sincere emotion that is lacking in similar work of his contemporaries.

The following is a list of the accepted canon of Shakespeare's thirty-seven plays, arranged in the classification sometimes used, and followed by the dates generally agreed upon, by 20th-century scholars:

Experiment.

- LOVE'S LABOR'S LOST (ca. 1590)

- The most famous of these are Hamlet, Romeo and Juliet, Macbeth, Othello, King Lear, A Midsummer Night's Dream, Julius Caesar, and As You Like It. Shakespeare's non-dramatic works are Venus and Adonis (1593), The Rape of Lucrece (1594), and his Sonnets (1609).

Beyond the fact that his birthplace was Stratford-on-Avon, that his father at one time was a butcher, that he was a player with the Lord Chamberlain's company, and that he lived for awhile as a country gentleman after his success in the theater, very little is known of Shakespeare's life; as a result, numerous writers have speculated on it and tried to find biographical significance in his works, especially his Sonnets. See W. H. There are also a great many curious theories ascribing Shakespeare's plays to other authors, notably BACON.

He was popular in his own day and much admired by his contemporaries, but during the later 17th century and the 18th century his value as a poet and dramatist was minimized. In the period of ROMANTICISM interest in him and his works was revived in the criticism of S. T. COLERIDGE, Charles LAMB, and William HAZLITT, and later Shakespearean enthusiasm grew to the point of adulation, with Germany and other European countries adopting the playwright as one of their own authors.

Shallow, Justice Robert. A character who appears in Shakespeare's 2 Henry IV and Henry V and, more prominently, in THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR; a weak-minded country justice, cousin to SLENDER. He is a great braggart, and especially fond of boasting of the mad pranks of his younger days, many of them imaginary. It is said that Justice Shallow is a satirical portrait of Sir Thomas Lucy of Charlecote, who prosecuted Shakespeare for deer-stalking.

Shamanism. A primitive form of religion; those who practice it believe that the world and all events are governed by good and evil spirits who can be propitiated or bought off only through the intervention of a witch-doctor, or Shaman. The word is Slavonic; it comes from the Samoyeds and other Siberian peoples, but is now applied to Red Indian and other primitive worship.

Shand, John and Maggie. The principal characters of Barrie's play WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS.

Shandon, Captain. A famous character in The History of Pendennis (1849-1850) by THACKERAY.

Shandy, Tristram. The hero of Sterne's novel TRISTRAM SHANDY. Tristram's father, Walter Shandy, his mother, Elizabeth Shandy, shanty songs (from Fr. chanter, "to sing"). Songs sung by sailors at work, to ensure united action; also called chanties. They are in sets, each of which has a different cadence adapted to the work at hand. Thus, in sheeting top-sails, weighing anchor, etc., one of the most popular of the shanty songs runs thus:

I'm bound away, this very day,
I'm bound for the Rio Grande.
Ho, you, Rio!
Then fare you well, my bonny blue bell,
I'm bound for the Rio Grande.

Shan Van Voght. This famous song (composed 1798) has been called the Irish Marseillaise. The title of it is a corruption of Ant-sean bhean bhocht (the poor old woman—i.e., Ireland). The last verse is:

Will Ireland then be free?
Said the Shan Van Voght. (repeat)
Yes, Ireland shall be free
From the centre to the sea,
Hurrah for liberty!
Said the Shan Van Voght.

Shapcott, Reuben. A pseudonym adopted by William Hale White (1829-1913), author of MARK RUTHERFORD.

Shapes of Clay. A volume of poems (1903) by Ambrose BIERCE.

Shapley, Harlow (1885-). American astronomer. Most of his writing is highly technical, but he can also write engagingly for the general public. Among his works are The Stars (1927); A Source Book on Astronomy (with H. E. Howarth; 1929); Flights From Chaos (1930); etc.

Sharp, Becky. See under BECKY SHARP.

Sharp, Margery (1905-). English writer whose best-selling novel has been The Nutmeg Tree (1937). She has contributed successfully to many popular magazines, and is the author of Cluny Brown (1945); and Briannia Mews (1946), deft, humorous novels.

Sharp, William. Pen name Fiona Macleod (1856?-1905). Scottish man of letters; promoter of the Celtic revival. Wrote under his own name several volumes of poetry and a number of biographies; as Fiona Macleod wrote Pharais (1894); The Sin-Eater (1895); The Immortal Hour (1900; a drama); etc. The identity of Sharp and Macleod was revealed only posthumously.

Shatov, Ivan. In Dostoyevsky's THE POSSESSED, a former peasant on the estate of Varvara Petrovna STAVROGIN, simple, earnest, confused, honest. He has been a member of the revolutionary band headed by Nikolay Stavrogin and Pyotr Stepanovich VERHOVENSKY, very much under the influence of Stavrogin, but he reforms and plans to start his life over. He is eventually murdered at the behest of Verhovensky for fear he will betray the band. Shatov, in the expression of his views on the salvation of Russia through religion and Christian love, is considered to serve as a mouthpiece of the author.

Darya Pavlovna Shatova. Ivan's sister, also a character in the novel. She is a servant in the household of Varvara Petrovna, a simple, meek, devoted, faithful-hearted girl who is in love with Nikolay Stavrogin and is instantly ready to do anything he asks. Before his suicide he asks her to come away with him and without a word she prepares to do so.

Marya Ignatyevna Shatova. Ivan's wife, once involved in a love affair with Nikolay Stavrogin. On the evening of Ivan's murder she gives birth to a child which, although it makes her husband deliriously happy, is suggested to be Stavrogin's.

Shaving of Shagpat, The. A whimsical oriental tale by George MEREDITH (1856), narrating the adventures of Shibli Bagarag who in due course of time becomes a barber and shaves Shagpat.

Shaw, Albert (1857-1947). Founder and editor (1891-1937) of the American Review of Reviews. Editor of the Literary Digest (1937-1939). Author of a number of books, including Abraham Lincoln (2 vols.; 1929).

Shaw, Anna Howard (1847-1919). English-born American woman suffrage leader. President of the National American Woman Suffrage Association (1904-1915).

Shaw, George Bernard (1856-). Irish dramatist, critic, essayist, and lecturer, one of the most celebrated and most discussed authors of the last decade of the 19th century and the first three decades of the 20th century. His writings, influenced by the ideas of Ibsen and Nietzsche and the theories of biological science and Fabian Socialism of the period of the author's prime, are characterized by fantasy, wit, satire, iconoclasm, and social perspective. The chief objects of his satirical attacks are social conventions, marriage and infidelity, orthodox religion and morality, social snobbery, philanthropy, social aristocracy, hypocrisy, and, especially, the politics and diplomacy of Great Britain.

Shaw's first works, written between 1879 and 1883, were novels, including Immaturity, The Irrational Knot, Cashel Byron's Profession, An Unsocial Socialist, and Love Among the Artists. Among his plays, the prefaces to the published versions of which became famous in their own right, are the following: Plays: Pleasant and Unpleasant (1898), two volumes containing ARMS AND THE MAN, CANDIDA, The Man of Destiny, You Never Can Tell, Widowers' Houses, The Philanderer, and MRS. WARREN'S PROFESSION; Three Plays for Puritans (1900), containing The Devil's Disciple, Caesar and Cleopatra (see CAESAR, CAIUS JULIUS), and CAPTAIN BRASSBOUND'S CONVERSION; MAN AND SUPERMAN (1903); JOHN BULL'S OTHER ISLAND (1904); MAJOR BARBARA (1905); The Doctor's Dilemma (1906); Getting Married (1908); PYGMALION (1912); ANDROCLES AND THE LION (1913); HEARTBREAK HOUSE (1919); BACK TO METHUSELAH (1921); Saint Joan (1923); The Apple Cart (1929); Too True to Be Good (1932); On the Rocks (1934); The Simpleton of the Unexpected Isles, The Six of Calais, and The Millionairess (1934); Geneva (1938), In Good King Charles's Golden Days (1939).

Other works of Shaw include Fabian Essays (1889), a collection edited by him; a number of political and economic treatises written according to Fabian views; Dramatic Opinions and Essays (1907); The Quintessence of Ibsenism (1891); The Sanity of Art (1895); The Intelligent Woman's Guide to Socialism and Capitalism (1928); Music in London, 1890-1894 (1932); The Adventures of the Black Girl in Her Search for God (1932), a fictional satire compared by critics to Voltaire's CANDIDE; American Boobs (1933), a lecture delivered in the U.S., also published in the same year under the title The Future of Political Science in America; Prefaces (1934); Short Stories, Scraps, and Shavings (1934).

Shaw, of a Protestant family of English descent, left school at the age of fourteen and was thenceforth self-educated. In 1885 he became a London newspaper critic, reviewing music and the drama until 1898. In 1884 he joined the Fabian Society and thereafter upheld the Fabian brand of Socialism. A vegetarian, the author early in his career became known for his eccentricity, biting wit, and persistent revolt against commonly accepted conventions and institutions, later extending his reputation by making deliberately shocking statements in public and to the press. He was very popular in the U.S., although he was as outspoken in his criticism of the Americans as of the British; at a public lecture in New York (1933) he once addressed his audience as "boobs."

Shaw, Henry Wheeler, see BILLINGS, JOSH.

Shaw, Irwin (1913-). American playwright and short-story writer, known for his early plays, proletarian (see PROLETARIAN LITERATURE) in character, and his short stories of contemporary New York life, published chiefly in THE NEW YORKER and often dealing ironically with the frustrations of 20th-century American life. His plays are BURY THE DEAD (1936), a sensational anti-war play, a rewritten version of Miracle at Verdun (1931), by Hans Chlumberg; Siege (1937); The Gentle People (1939); and Retreat to Pleasure (1940). Collections of his short stories are Sailor Off the Bremen (1939) and Welcome to the City (1942). Shaw, who was once a semi-professional football player, began his career as a script writer for a radio broadcasting company and later wrote motion-picture scenarios in Hollywood.

Shaw, Robert Gould (1837-1863). In the American Civil War, commander of the first regiment of colored troops from a free state (the 54th Massachusetts). Killed at the head of his troops in the assault on Fort Wagner, S.C. (July 18, 1863). On Boston Common stands a monument to his memory and that of his men by Augustus SAINT-GAUDENS, which is the subject of the famous Ode in Time of Hesitation by William Vaughn MOODY.

Shawe, Isabella. Wife of W. M. THACKERAY, to whom she was married in 1836. In 1840 she became insane.

Shay, Frank (1888-). American book dealer, proprietor of Frank Shay's Book Shop in New York and Provincetown on Cape Cod. He has compiled and edited many books on the theater and collections of popular songs, as Iron Men and Wooden Ships (1923); My Pious Friends and Drunken Companions (1927); etc.

Shays's Rebellion. In 1786-1787, Daniel Shays (1747-1825), who had been a captain in the Revolutionary Army, led an uprising of Western Massachusetts farmers against the foreclosure of mortgages on their property. He was seeking to prevent their imprisonment for indebtedness due to the very high land taxes levied after the Revolution. The Duke of Stockbridge (1900), a novel by Edward BEL-LAMY, sets forth this episode.

She. A romance by Rider HAGGARD (Eng., 1887). "She," or Ayesha, is an African sorceress whom death apparently cannot touch. The young English hero, Leo Vincey, sets out to avenge her murder of his ancestor, an ancient priest of Isis.

Shea, John Dawson Gilmary (1824-1892). American historian, specializing in the early history of the exploration of the Mississippi Valley. He also wrote a four-volume History of the Catholic Church in the United States (1886-1892).

Shearing, Joseph, see LONG, GABRIELLE.

Sheba, the Queen of. The queen who visited Solomon (1 Kings x) is known to the Arabs as Balkis, Queen of Saba (Koran, Ch. xxvii), ruler over the Sabaeans, or sometimes as Maqueda. According to the Biblical story, she came "to prove him with hard questions" but when she had seen all his wisdom and glory "there was no more spirit in her." In one version of the story she is so favorably impressed that she becomes his wife and gives birth to a son who is the founder of the Abyssinian dynasty.

Sheil, Richard Lalor (1791-1851). Irish dramatist and politician. Helped bring about Catholic emancipation in Ireland (granted, 1829) and fought for repeal of the union of Great Britain and Ireland. After the defeat of the repeal, he agreed to serve under the Melbourne Ministry, and was the first Roman Catholic to be privy counselor.

Shelburne Essays. A series of essays by Paul Elmer MORE, published in fourteen volumes (1904-1921) and reflecting the attitude of the New HUMANISTS.

Shelby, Mr. In Harriet Beecher Stowe's UNCLE TOM'S CABIN, Tom's first master. Being in commercial difficulties, he is obliged to sell his faithful slave. His son George afterwards tries to buy Uncle Tom back again, but finds that he has been whipped to death by the villain Legree.

Sheldon, Charles Monroe (1857-1946). American clergyman, author of In His Steps (1896), which is said to be the greatest all-time best-seller next to the Bible and Shakespeare. A flaw in the copyright was one reason for its enormous sale.

Sheldon, Edward Brewster (1886-1946). American playwright, author of plays on a variety of subjects, the best-known of which were melodramas related loosely to the social problems with which a large part of American literature in the early 20th century was preoccupied. His works include SALVATION NELL (1908); THE NIGGER (1909); THE BOSS (1911); Princess Zim-Zim (1911); Egypt (1912); The High Road (1912); ROMANCE (1913); The Song of Songs (1914), adapted from the novel of the same title by Herman SUDERMANN; Bewitched (1924), written with Sidney HOWARD; Lulu Belle (1926), written with Charles MACARTHUR; Dishonored Lady (1930), written with Margaret AYER BARNES. He was bedridden and blind for years, but kept up activities in the theater. He had an enormous circle of friends and correspondents, and is the original of a character in The Ides of March (1948), a novel of ancient Rome by Thornton WILDER.

shell shock. An acute neurasthenic condition, due to a shock to the system caused by the explosion of a shell or bomb at close quarters.

shellback. Nautical slang for an old and seasoned sailor, an "old salt."

to retire into one's shell. To become reticent and uncommunicative, to withdraw oneself from society in a forbidding way. The allusion is to the tortoise, which, once it has "gone into its shell," is quite inaccessible.

Shelley, Percy Bysshe (1792-1822). English poet of the period of ROMANTICISM, known for his extreme emotional and physical sensitivity, his vivid imagination, his rebellion against authority of all kinds, and the PAN-THEISM, idealistic and visionary aspiration, and musical quality of his poetry. His works include Queen Mab (see MAB; 1813); Alastor (1816); THE REVOLT OF ISLAM (1818); Prometheus Unbound (see PROMETHEUS; 1819); The Cenci (see CENCI, BEATRICE; 1819); The Witch of Atlas (1820); ADONAI (1821). His best-known single poems are Hymn to Intellectual Beauty, The Sensitive Plant, Mutability, The Indian Serenade, To Night, Ozymandias, THE CLOUD, ODE TO THE WEST WIND, To a Skylark, and Stanzas Written in Dejection. He had an important influence on BROWNING and SWINBURNE.

Shelley, who is in many ways considered a typical romantic poet, was childlike, naïvely self-centered and irresponsible, and amoral in character. As early as his schooldays he became known for his excessive sensibility and his rebellious spirit, being called "Mad Shelley" and "Shelley the Atheist." See NECESSITY OF ATHEISM, ON THE. He was married twice, on both occasions after an unconventional elopement, and had a number of attachments with other women of his acquaintance, seeking in them an ideal spiritual mate. In 1817 the English court removed from his custody his two children by his first marriage with Harriet Westbrook, and, heart-broken, the poet left England for Italy, where he did his best work. See also BYRON, a close friend of Shelley. He was drowned in a storm at sea in the Adriatic, and his body was cremated. The Orphan Angel, a novel by Elinor WYLIE, tells a fanciful story of Shelley's adventures in the America of his day, after he has been rescued from the sea by an American whaling vessel in the storm which in fact caused his death.

Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley, née Godwin (1797-1851) was Shelley's second wife and the daughter of William Godwin. She and the poet met through Shelley's admiration for her father's writings, fell in love at once, and in 1814 eloped to Europe, greatly arousing the wrath of Godwin. After the death of Harriet Westbrook in 1816, Mary legally became Mrs. Shelley. She was herself an author, writing in the convention of the GOTHIC NOVEL. FRANKENSTEIN, Or The Modern Prometheus (1818) is her best-known work. Other romances are Valperga (1823); The Last Man (1826); Lodore (1835).

Shem. (1) In the Old Testament, one of the three sons of NOAH. His supposed descendants are called SEMITIC from his name.

Shepard, Odell (1884-). American essayist and poet, winner of the Pulitzer prize for Pedlar's Progress: The Life of Bronson Alcott (1937).

shepherd.

the Shepherd Kings. See HYKSOS.

the Shepherd Lord. Henry, tenth Lord Clifford (d. 1523), sent by his mother to be brought up by a shepherd, in order to save him from the fury of the Yorkists. At the accession of Henry VII he was restored to all his rights and seigniories. There are many legends concerning him. His story is told by WORDSWORTH in The Song for the Feast of Brougham Castle.

Shepherd of the Ocean. Spenser's name for Sir Walter RALEIGH.

Shepherd's Calendar, The. Twelve eclogues in various meters by Edmund SPENSER (1579), one for each month. The theme of the poem is the lament of Colin Clout (Spenser himself) because Rosalind does not return his love. His friend Hobbinol (Gabriel HARVEY) is introduced to exhort him to greater cheerfulness. Rosalind is generally considered to have been meant for Rose Daniel, sister of the poet Samuel DANIEL.

Sheppard, Jack (1701-1724). A notorious highwayman, son of a carpenter in Smithfield, and noted for his two escapes from Newgate in 1724. He was hanged at Tyburn the same year. Daniel DEFOE made Jack Sheppard the hero of a romance in 1724, and W. H. AINSWORTH in 1839.

Sheraton. A light style of furniture perfected about 1800 by Thomas Sheraton (1751-1806), a designer of furniture who gave drawing lessons in London but never had a shop of his own.

Sheridan, Bibbs. The hero of Booth Tarkington's TURMOIL. His father and his brothers, Jim and Roscoe, are important characters.

Sheridan, Mrs. Clare Consuelo (1885-). English sculptor, journalist, and novelist, first cousin of Winston Churchill. Interviewed, for the New York World, Mussolini, Mustafa Kemal, Primo de Rivera, and others. Author of a number of lively travel books. She is supposedly portrayed in Biography (1933), a comedy by S. N. Behrman.

Sheridan, Philip Henry (1831-1888). Famous American general in the Civil War. When his army was endangered at Cedar Creek while he was in conference with General Grant at Winchester, he made a famous ride (October 19, 1864), to turn the tide of defeat into victory. The ride is celebrated in SHERIDAN'S RIDE by Thomas Buchanan Read. Cf. Personal Memoirs of P. H. Sheridan (2 vols.; 1888).

Sheridan, Richard Brinsley (1751-1816). Irish-born English playwright, known for his satirical comedies of manners in the general vein of the Restoration period, although critics point out in his works a moral tone lacking in the English drama of the 17th century. His plays include THE RIVALS (1775); St. Patrick's Day (1775); The Duenna (1775), an operetta; A Trip to Scarborough (1777), an adaptation of The Relapse, by Sir John VANBRUGH (1697); THE SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL (1777); THE CRITIC (1779). Sheridan was of an extravagant and high-spirited temperament, engaging in frequent duels in his youth and ostentatiously spending his money. After his success in the theater he fulfilled his ambition to enter politics and became successively Member of Parliament, Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and Secretary of the Treasury. He spoke against Warren Hastings during the latter's seven-year trial for impeachment and through this won the friendship of the soon-to-be King George IV.

Sheridan's Ride. A popular narrative poem by Thomas Buchanan READ (1865), written in honor of General Philip H. Sheridan's horse:

By the flash of his eye and the red nostrils' play
He seemed to the whole great army to say,
"I have brought you, Sheridan, all the way
From Winchester, down to save the day."

Sherlock Holmes, see HOLMES, SHERLOCK.

Sherman, Frank Dempster (1860-1916). American educator and author of much pleasing light verse.

Sherman, Stuart Pratt (1881-1926). American critic. Professor at the University of Illinois (1911-1924). Co-editor of Volumes I and II of the Cambridge History of American Literature. Editor of Books of the New York Herald Tribune (from 1924). He became one of the liveliest literary commentators in the country, though at first an austere critic.

Sherman, William Tecumseh (1820-1891). Great Union general in the American Civil War. After having captured Atlanta, Georgia (1864), he had the civilian population leave the city, burned it, and began the famous "March to the Sea," in order to cut the communications of the South. He so devastated the country in this and his subsequent march through North and South Carolina, as to make his name anathema in the South for a long time to come. He is supposed to have coined the famous phrase, "War is hell." His memoirs appeared in 1875.

Sheriff, Robert Cedric (1896-). English playwright and novelist. His Journey's End (1929), a play about World War I, originally written for the Kingston Rowing Club, achieved production through the London Stage Society and, to the author's surprise, became a great success in America.

Sherwood, Robert Emmet (1896-). American playwright, author of a number of comedies and dramas, several of the most successful embodying the varieties of idealism popular at the time of their composition. Among his plays are The Road to Rome (1927); The Love Nest (1927); The Queen's Husband (1928); Waterloo Bridge (1930); This Is New York (1930); Reunion in Vienna (1931), dealing with a group of Hapsburg exiles; The Petrified Forest (1935), concerned with individual frustration; Idiot's Delight (1936), an anti-war play, awarded the Pulitzer prize; Tovarich (1936), dealing with a group of Russian exiled nobility; ABE LINCOLN IN ILLINOIS (1938), awarded the Pulitzer prize; There Shall Be No Night (1940), a sympathetic portrayal of the Finnish war with Russia (1939-1940), awarded the Pulitzer prize of 1941.

Sherwood during his career was an editor, a dramatic critic, and a writer for the motion pictures, published a novel, The Virtuous Knight (1931), and in World War II held an official position with the U.S. government, on occasion assisting in the preparation of the public speeches of President Franklin D. ROOSEVELT. Biographer of Harry HOPKINS.

She Stoops to Conquer. A famous comedy by Oliver GOLDSMITH (1773). Miss Hardcastle, knowing how bashful young Marlow is before ladies, stoops to the manners and condition of a barmaid, with whom he feels quite at his ease, and by this artifice wins the man of her choice. This comedy owes its existence to an incident which actually occurred to its author. When he was sixteen years of age, a wag residing at Ardagh directed him, when passing through that village, to Squire Fetherstone's house as the village inn. The mistake was not discovered for some time, and then no one enjoyed it more heartily than Goldsmith himself. See HARDCASTLE; MARLOW, Sir CHARLES; LUMPKIN, TONY.

Sheva. Hero of Cumberland's comedy The Jew (1776), an idealized Jewish figure, "the widow's friend, the orphan's father, the poor man's protector and the universal dispenser of charity; but he ever shrank to let his left hand know what his right hand did."

She-Wolf of France. (1) Isabella (1295-1358) wife of Edward II and paramour of Mortimer. It is said that she murdered the King, her husband, by burning out his bowels with a red-hot poker.

(2) Margaret, queen of Henry VI, so called in Shakespeare's 3 Henry VI. i. 4.

shibboleth. The password of a secret society; the secret by which those of a party know each other; also, a worn-out or discredited doctrine. The Ephraimites could not pronounce sh, so when they were fleeing from Jephthah and the Gileadites (Judges xii. 1-16) they were caught at the ford on the Jordan because Jephthah caused all the fugitives to say the word shibboleth (which means "a stream in flood"), which all the Ephraimites pronounced as sibboleth.

Shiel, Matthew Phipps (1865-1947). Eccentric English novelist with a touch of genius. His best book is thought to be The Purple Cloud (1901); his The Lord of the Sea (1924) is also widely known. He has been called "gorgeously mad."

Shigalov. In Dostoyevsky's THE POSSESSED, a burlesque portrait of a revolutionary theoretician, who proposes the division of mankind into two unequal parts, so that "one-tenth enjoys absolute liberty and unbounded power over the other nine-tenths."

Shiites or Shi'ahs (Arab. shiah, "a sect"). Those Mohammedans who regard Ali as the first rightful Imam or Caliph (rejecting the three Sunni Caliphs), and do not consider the Sunna, or oral law, of any authority, but look upon it as apocryphal. There are numerous Shiite sects, all of them regarded as heretical by the orthodox SUNNITES. Because of the Shiite doctrine of the MAHDI, a twelfth imam who is supposedly living in concealment through the centuries, but is expected to appear to rule Islam, the Shiites have had a political as well as a religious influence on the development of Mohammedanism.

Shillaber, Benjamin Penhallow (1814-1890). American humorist, chiefly remembered as the author of The Life and Sayings of Mrs. Partington (1854).

Shiloh. A locality in Tennessee. Site of a famous battle of the United States Civil War (April 6-7, 1862), when the Southern forces surprised the Union army under Grant and Buell but were nevertheless forced to abandon the battle field.

Shimerda, Antonia. The strong, vital, patient, and persevering pioneer heroine of Willa Cather's MY ANTONIA.

Shingle, Solon. A shrewd old country teamster in J. S. Jones' comedy, The People's Lawyer (Am., 1839), one of the most popular comic characters of the early American stage. In an important court scene he causes great mirth by waking up from a nap under the impression that the prisoner is being tried for stealing his "apple sarse." See also SAGO, LOT SAP; JONATAN PLOUGHBOY; SWAP, SOLOMON.

Shinn, Everett (1873-). American artist and magazine illustrator, who has done murals for several New York theaters.

Shinto. The ethnic cult of the Japanese. Its basic tenet is reverence for the spirits of nature and the heroes of the race. It has a religious pattern but is not felt to be incompatible with adherence to either Buddhism or Christianity. The word Shinto means literally "the way of the gods."

ship.

Ship of State. The nation; an expression first used by MACHIAVELLI in his political treatise The Prince.

ship of the desert. The camel or dromedary employed in "voyages" through the sand-seas of the African deserts.

when my ship comes home. When my fortune is made. The allusion is to the argosies returning from foreign parts laden with rich freights and enriching the merchants who sent them forth.

Ships that Pass in the Night. People who come into one's horizon for a short time and then disappear. This phrase was the title of a novel by Beatrice HARRADEN (1893), but had been used previously by LONGFELLOW in Evangeline.

ship-money. A tax formerly levied in time of war on ports and seaboard counties for the maintenance of the English Navy.

Shipman, Samuel (1833-1937). American dramatist who wrote, with Aaron Hoffmann, Friendly Enemies.

Shipman's Tale, The. One of Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES, also called "The merchant's wife and the monk." The monk (Dan Johan) is on most intimate terms with the merchant, and when the merchant is about to leave his home in Florence on business, the wife borrows a hundred francs of the monk. As the monk has not the money at hand, he borrows the loan from the merchant. When the merchant comes home, the monk asserts that he has paid back the loan to the wife. The wife tells her husband that the monk has made her a present of the money, which she has spent. The merchant, plainly seeing there is no redress, says no more about the matter, and allows it to drop.

Ship of Fools. Sebastian BRANT's Das Narrenschiff (1494), an allegorical satire lashing the weaknesses and vices of his time and thus becoming an effective preparation for the Protestant Reformation, was imitated throughout Europe. In English letters there are Alexander BARCLAY's Ship of Fools (1509); Cocke Lorelles Bote (ca. 1515); and others.

Shipton, Mother. This so-called propheticess is first heard of in a tract of 1641, in which she is said to have lived in the reign of Henry VIII, and to have foretold the death of Wolsey, Cromwell, Lord Percy, etc. In 1677 the pamphleteering publisher, Richard Head, brought out a Life and Death of Mother Shipton, and in 1862 Charles Hindley brought out a new edition in which she was credited with having predicted steam-engines, the telegraph, and other modern inventions, as well as the end of the world in 1881. Of course she, like the immortal Mrs. Harris, is immortal only because "there is no such a person." Bret HARTE calls one of the characters in his Outcasts of Poker Flat Mother Shipton.

Shirburne Ballads, The. In the early years of the twentieth century these ballads were edited from a collection of English ballads in manuscript dating back to the early seventeenth century.

Shirer, William Lawrence (1904-). Well-known American journalist, war correspondent, and radio commentator. Representative of the Columbia Broadcasting System in Europe (1937-1940). Author of BERLIN DIARY (1941).

Shires, Helen. In James T. Farrell's STUDS LONIGAN, a playmate of the boy Studs, a tomboy who is acutely unhappy and wishes she were male.

Shirley. A novel by Charlotte BRONTË (1849). The heroine, Shirley Keeldar, was in the main drawn from Charlotte's sister, Emily Brontë, author of Wuthering Heights.

Shirley, James (1596-1666). English poet and playwright. His plays include Love's Cruelty (1631), The Maid's Revenge (1626), The Traitor (1631), and The Cardinal (1641), tragedies; Changes, Or Love in a Maze (1632), Hyde Park (1632), The Gamester (1633), The Coronation (1635), The Lady of Pleasure (1635), The Imposture (1640), and The Sisters (1642), all comedies. Narcissus (published as Echo in 1618) is a narrative poem, and The Contention of Ajax and Ulysses (1659) a dramatic entertainment.

In his early career Shirley was a schoolmaster and a converted Roman Catholic; after the Civil War he became a schoolmaster again. His death came as an aftermath of the Great Fire of London in 1666.

shirt-sleeve diplomacy. An informal kind of diplomatic interchange so called because the participants would sit in their shirt sleeves.

shoal. See under COVEY.

shoe.

we all know where the shoe pinches. We each of us know our own special troubles.

if the shoe fits you, put it on. If the matter applies to your case, take it to heart.

Shoemaker's Holiday, The. A play by Thomas DEKKER (1599), dealing farcically with the antics of the craftsmen and tradesmen of Elizabethan London. The shoemaker and hero of the comedy is Simon EYRE, and Dekker took the material for his work from the story of Eyre contained in The Gentle Craft, by Thomas DELONEY.

Shogun. The title of the actual ruler of Japan from the 12th century to the modernization of the country in 1868. The Shoguns were hereditary commanders-in-chief (the word means "army leader"), and took the place of the Mikados, whom they kept in a state of perpetual imprisonment with, however, some show of prestige. See also RULERS, TITLES OF.

Sholem Aleichem, see RABINOWITZ.

Sholokhov, Mikhail Aleksandrovich (1905-). Well-known popular Soviet novelist. Best known in America for his novels, And Quiet Flows the Don (1934) and The Don Flows Home to the Sea (1941).

Shooting of Dan McGrew, The. A famous poem by Robert W. SERVICE. It inspired an equally famous parody by Edward Paramore, Jr., The Hermit of Sharktooth Shoal.

shop.

closed shop. The system of employing only laborers belonging to a union in any given industry, and refusing employment to those who will not become union members.

open shop. The system of admitting non-union as well as union laborers to employment in an industry.

Nation of Shopkeepers. See NATION.

Shore Acres. A drama of rural American life by James A. HERNE (Am., 1892), first produced as The Hawthornes. The chief character, an old New England farmer known as Uncle Nat, insured the success of the play.

Shore, Jane, see JANE SHORE.

Shore, Philip. The hero of Margaret Deland's novel Philip and His Wife.

Shoreditch. A London district that got its name, according to the story, from the ditch in which JANE SHORE died of starvation.

Shore's Wife. A tragedy by Thomas CHURCHYARD, appearing in THE MIRROR FOR MAGISTRATES (1563). See JANE SHORE.

Shorey, Paul (1857-1934). American classical scholar and professor of Greek at the University of Chicago. Internationally recognized authority on Plato.

Shorter, Clement King (1857-1926). English editor and critic, especially remembered for his many book columns. He also edited the Brontës, George Borrow, Samuel Johnson, etc. His first wife was Dora Sigerson (1866-1913), the well-known Irish poet.

Shorthouse, Joseph Henry (1834-1903). English novelist, author of John Inglesant (1881), an historical High Church novel.

Short-Lived Administration, The. The English administration formed February 12, 1746, by William Pulteney. It lasted only two days.

Short Sixes: Stories to be Read while the Candle Burns. A book of short stories (1891) by Henry Cuyler BUNNER.

Shostakovich, Dimitri Dimitrievich (1906-). Celebrated Russian composer whose symphonies include the famous Fifth, which commemorates the 20th anniversary of the October Revolution (1937), and the Seventh, which deals with the Battle of Leningrad (1942). He has written operas, ballets, and compositions for the piano.

Shotwell, James Thomson (1874-). Canadian-American historian and editor of Quaker parentage. Professor at Columbia (since 1908). Assistant general editor of the Encyclopedia Britannica in London (1904-1905); member of the International Labor Legislation Commission to the Versailles Peace Conference and of the International Labor Conference (1919); etc. Editor of a huge Economic and Social History of the World War (150 vols.; since 1919). Author of What Germany Forgot (1940) and other contemporary studies.

Show Boat. A novel (1926) by Edna FERBER; later made into an operetta by Miss Ferber and Jerome KERN and produced by Florenz Ziegfeld (1927). In the 19th century, the showboats on the Mississippi River were floating theaters where troupes of players gave variety shows, melodramas, etc.

Shrapnel, Dr. A radical agitator in George Meredith's novel BEAUCHAMP'S CAREER.

Shriner. A member of the Ancient Arabic Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, a fraternal organization in the U.S., established (1872) by a comedy actor as a branch of a society supposedly founded in Arabia in 646 A. D. by a son-in-law of Mohammed.

Shropshire Lad, A. The title of a well-known volume of lyrics by A. E. HOUSMAN (1896).

Shrovetide. The three days just before the opening of Lent, when people went to confession and afterwards indulged in all sorts of sports and merry-making.

Shrove Tuesday. The day before Ash Wednesday; "Pancake Day." It used to be the great "Derby Day" of cockfighting in England.

Or martyr beat, like Shrovetide cocks, with bats.
Peter Pindar, Subjects for Painters.

Shunammite woman. In the Old Testament, a woman whose son was overcome by sunstroke and later brought back to life by the Prophet ELISHA. She is known by no other name.

Shuster, George Nauman (1894-). American educator and Roman Catholic writer. Author of The Catholic Spirit in Modern English Literature (1922); etc. Editorial writer and managing editor of The Commonweal. President of Hunter College (1940).

Shute, Henry A. (1856-1943). American humorist, author of The Real Diary of a Real Boy (1902), the hero of which is called Plupy Shute.

Shute, Nevil, see NORWAY, NEVIL SHUTE.

Shylock. A grasping, stony-hearted Jewish moneylender; in allusion to the Jew in Shakespeare's MERCHANT OF VENICE:

A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch
Uncapable of pity, void and empty
From any dram of mercy.

iv, 1.

The character of Shylock has been subject to varying interpretations on the stage and in critical analysis. The modern tendency has been to make him a great tragic figure, appealing deeply to the sympathies of the audience, but it seems more likely that Shakespeare's Sherlock was a conception half way between the previous type of monster Jew in drama and this modern conception.

Siamese twins. Yoke-fellows, inseparables; so called from the original pair, Eng and Chang, who were born of Chinese parents about 1814 and discovered at Mekong, Siam, in 1829, and were subsequently exhibited as freaks. Their bodies were united by a band of flesh, stretching from breast-bone to breast-bone. They married two sisters, had offspring, and died within three hours of each other on January 17, 1874.

Other so-called Siamese twins were: Barnum's "Orissa twins," born at Orissa, Bengal, and joined by a band of cartilage at the waist only; "Millie-Christine," two joined South Carolina Negresses who appeared all over the world as the "Two-headed Nightingale"; and Josepha and Roza Blazek, natives of Bohemia, who were joined by a cartilaginous ligament above the waist. They died practically simultaneously in Chicago (1922), Josepha leaving a son aged twelve.

Sibelius, Jean (1865-). Finnish composer of symphonies, choral works, etc. Best known for such tone poems as The Swan of Tuonela, Finlandia, etc.

Sibley, Hiram (1807-1888). American businessman who with Ezra Cornell organized the Western Union Telegraph Company, joined in the incorporation of Cornell University, to which he contributed benefactions. He also helped found the Sibley College of Mechanical Engineering at Cornell.

sibyl. A prophetess of classical legend, who was supposed to prophesy under the inspiration of a deity. The name is now applied to any prophetess or woman fortune-teller. There were a number of sibyls, and they had their seats in widely separate parts of the world—Greece, Italy, Babylonia, Egypt, etc.

Plato mentions only one, viz., the Erythraean—identified with Amalthea, the Cumaeon Sibyl, who was consulted by AENEAS before his descent into HADES and who sold the SIBYLLINE BOOKS to Tarquin; Martianus Capella speaks of two, the Erythraean and the Phrygian; Aelian of four, the Erythraean, Samian, Egyptian, and Sardian; Varro tells us there were ten viz., the Cumaeon, the Delphic, Egyptian, Erythraean, Hellespontine, Libyan, Persian, Phrygian, Samian and Tiburtine.

How know we but that she may be an eleventh Sibyl or a second Cassandra?—Rabelais, Gargantua and Pantagruel, iii. 16.

The medieval monks "adopted" the sibyls, as they did so much of pagan myth; they made them twelve, and gave to each a separate prophecy and distinct emblem:

(1) The Libyan: "The day shall come when men shall see the King of all living things." Emblem: a lighted taper.

(2) The Samian: "The Rich One shall be born of a pure virgin." Emblem: a rose.

(3) The Cuman: "Jesus Christ shall come from heaven, and live and reign in poverty on earth." Emblem: a crown.

(4) The Cumaeian: "God shall be born of a pure virgin, and hold converse with sinners." Emblem: a cradle.

(5) The Erythraean: "Jesus Christ, Son of God, the Savior." Emblem: a horn.

(6) The Persian: "Satan shall be overcome by a true prophet." Emblem: a dragon under the sibyl's feet, and a lantern.

(7) The Tiburtine: "The Highest shall descend from heaven, and a virgin be shown in the valleys of the deserts." Emblem: a dove.

(8) The Delphic: "The Prophet born of the virgin shall be crowned with thorns." Emblem: a crown of thorns.

(9) The Phrygian: "Our Lord shall rise again." Emblem: a banner and a cross.

(10) The European: "A virgin and her Son shall flee into Egypt." Emblem: a sword.

(11) The Agrippine: "Jesus Christ shall be outraged and scourged." Emblem: a whip.

(12) The Hellespontic: "Jesus Christ shall suffer shame upon the cross." Emblem: a cross.

Sibylline books, the. A collection of oracles of mysterious origin, preserved in ancient Rome, and consulted by the Senate in times of emergency or disaster. According to Livy there were originally nine; these were offered in sale by Amalthaea, the Sibyl of Cumae, in Aeolia, to TARQUIN, the offer was rejected, and she burned three of them. After twelve months, she offered the remaining six at the same price. Again being refused, she burned three more, and after a similar interval asked the same price for the three left. The sum demanded was then given, and Amalthaea never appeared again.

The three books were preserved in a stone chest underground in the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus, and committed to the charge of custodians chosen in the same manner as the high priests. The number of custodians was at first two, then ten, and ultimately fifteen. AUGUSTUS had some 2,000 of the verses destroyed as spurious, and placed the rest in two gilt cases, under the base of the statue of Apollo, in the temple on the Palatine Hill but the whole perished when the city was burnt in the reign of NERO.

A Greek collection in eight books of poetical utterances relating to Jesus Christ, compiled in the 2nd century, is entitled Oracula Sibyllina, or the Sibylline Books.

sic (Lat., "thus, so"). A word used by reviewers, quoters, etc., after a doubtful word or phrase, or a misspelling, to indicate that it is here printed exactly as in the original and to call attention to the fact that it is wrong in some way.

Sic et Non (Yes and No). A well-known work by Pierre ABÉLARD, in which he listed a series of questions fundamental to theology and opposite each question cited the varying and contradictory answers and opinions found in the writings of leading theologians and ecclesiastical authorities. This work, given its title because some of the answers supported and some denied each question, was important in the controversy between NOMINALISM and REALISM and is held to give evidence of Abélard's empirical and critical turn of mind.

Sicilian Vespers. The massacre of the French in Sicily, which began at the hour of vespers on Easter Monday in 1282. The term is used proverbially of any treacherous and bloody attack.

Sicilien, Le, ou L'Amour peintre. A comedy by MOLIÈRE (1667). For the plot, see ADRASTE.

Sickert, Walter Richard (1860-1942). German-born British painter and etcher. Among his best-known canvases are Noctes Ambrosianae; Baccarat at Dieppe, etc.

Sickles, Daniel Edgar (1825-1914). American army officer. Major general in the U.S. Civil War, he fought at Chancellorsville and Gettysburg and was U.S. minister to Spain (1869-1873). Through his efforts Central Park was obtained for New York City. He was acquitted of shooting and killing the son of Francis Scott KEY for his attentions to Mrs. Sickles. The authorities considered him of unsound mind at the time of the shooting.

Sick Man of the East, the. The Turkish empire. It was Nicholas of Russia who gave this name to the moribund empire.

We have on our hands a sick man, a very sick man. It would be a great misfortune if one of these days he should happen to die before the necessary arrangements are made. . . . The man is certainly dying, and we must not allow such an event to take us by surprise. —Nicholas of Russia, to Sir George Seymour, British chargé d'affaires (Jan. 11, 1844).

Siddall, Elizabeth Eleanor (d. 1862). Wife of D. G. ROSSETTI who both before and after her marriage posed for his paintings and served as an inspiration for his poetry, notably THE BLESSED DAMOSEL. Of the frail, lily-like beauty admired by the Pre-Raphaelites, she died in 1862, two years after her marriage, and Rossetti was beside himself with grief. He buried with her in her coffin the sole copy of a manuscript of poems dealing with their love and marriage, but in 1869 the manuscript was recovered and published. THE HOUSE OF LIFE was contained in the collection.

Siddhartha. The family name of the Buddha.

Siddons, Sarah, née Kemble (1755–1831). English tragic actress. Appeared first as Portia (1775) at Drury Lane. She became the leading actress of her time in Shakespearean parts. Her greatest rôle was Lady Macbeth. There is a famous portrait of her as the Tragic Muse by Sir Joshua REYNOLDS.

Sidgwick, Ethel (1877–). Distinguished English novelist, somewhat akin in her outlook on life to Henry James though a good deal less profound. She has never been a popular writer, and her work is rather light, but always entertaining.

Sidi Nouman, see NOUMAN.

Sidney, Algernon (1622–1683). English Republican leader who, fighting on the Parliamentary side in the Civil War, was wounded at Marston Moor (1644). After the Restoration he was pardoned by Charles II, but upon his return to England he supported the Duke of Monmouth. In connection with the Rye House Plot he was convicted of treason and executed.

Sidney, Sir Philip (1554–1586). English poet, scholar, soldier, and courtier, regarded as the perfect example of the Renaissance gentleman. Among his writings, which were not intended for publication but were circulated privately among his friends, are An Apology for Poetry (1580), one of the notable examples of literary criticism in the history of literature; Arcadia (1590), a famous pastoral romance in prose; and Astrophel and Stella (1591; see STELLA), one of the earliest and best of the Elizabethan sonnet sequences. Sidney came of a noble family, traveled extensively in France, Italy, and Germany, and was the most outstanding and most admired of Queen Elizabeth's courtiers. With his uncle, the Earl of Leicester, he took part in a military expedition to the Low Countries and was killed at Zutphen. According to a traditional story, as he was dying he refused a cup of water and passed it to another wounded man, whose need, said Sidney, was greater than his own.

Sidonia. A high-minded and generous Jew in Disraeli's CONINGSBY.

Sidonian tincture. Purple dye, Tyrian purple. The Tyrians and Sidonians were world-famed for their purple dye.

Siebel. Marguerite's rejected lover, in the opera of FAUST by Gounod (1859).

Siege of Corinth, The. A poetical version of the siege which took place in 1715, written by Lord BYRON in 1816.

Siege of Rhodes, The. The first English opera (1656), written by Sir William Davenant, with music in the prologue by Henry Lawes and "recitation music" by Dr. Charles Coleman and George Hudson.

Siege Perilous, the. The ROUND TABLE of Arthurian romance contains sieges for 150 knights, but three of them are "reserved." Of these, two are posts of honor, but the third is reserved for him who is destined to achieve the quest of the Holy GRAIL. This seat is called "perilous," because if anyone sits therein except he for whom it is reserved, it will be his death. Every seat of the table bears the name of its rightful occupant in letters of gold, and the name on the "Siege Perilous" found under the cloth at the appointed time is Sir GALAHAD, son of Sir LAUNCELOT and ELAINE.

Said Merlin, "There shall no man sit in the two void places but they that shall be of most worship. But in the Siege Perilous there shall no man sit but one, and if any other be so hardy as to do it, he shall be destroyed."—Pt. 1. 48.

Then the old man made Sir Galahad unarm; and he put on him a coat of red sandel, with a mantle upon his shoulder furred with fine ermines, . . . and he brought him unto the Siege Perilous, when he sat beside Sir Launcelot. And the good old man lifted up the cloth, and found there these words written: "THE SIEGE OF SIR GALAHAD."—Malory, Morte d'Arthur, iii. 32

Siegfried. Hero of the first part of the old German epic THE NIBELUNGENLIED and of Wagner's opera Siegfried, one of the four music-dramas of his RING DES NIBELUNGEN. In the old poem Siegfried is the youngest son of Siegmund and Sieglinde, king and queen of the Netherlands and is a young warrior of peerless strength and beauty, invulnerable except in one spot between his shoulders. He vanquishes the Nibelungs and carries away their immense hoard of gold and precious stones. He woos and wins KRIEMHILD, the sister of GUNTHER, king of Burgundy, but is treacherously killed by Hagen, while stooping for a draught of water after a hunting expedition. For his part in the wooing of Brunhild of Issland on behalf of Gunther, see BRUNHILD.

Siegfried has a cape or cloak which renders him invisible, the gift of the dwarf Alberich; and his sword, called Balmung, was forged by WIELAND, blacksmith of the Teutonic gods.

Horny or Horned Siegfried. Siegfried, so called because, when he slays the dragon, he bathes in its blood, and becomes covered with a horny hide which is invulnerable. A linden leaf happens to fall on his back between his shoulder-blades, and as the blood does not touch this spot, it remains vulnerable.

In Wagner's handling of the old legends, which he took from Icelandic rather than German sources, the story of Siegfried undergoes many changes and assumes new significance. In the Scandinavian VÖLSUNGA SAGA, Siegfried appears as Sigurd, and the narrative shows many interesting variations from the Teutonic legend.

Siegfried, André (1875-). French writer on political science, known for his studies of the nations of Europe and America in the period between World Wars I and II. His works include L'Angleterre d'Aujourd'hui (1924), translated as Post-War Britain; America Comes of Age (1927), translation of Les États-Unis d'Aujourd'hui, his best-known book in the U.S.; France: A Study in Nationality (1930); La Crise Britannique (England's Crisis); 1931; Amérique Latine (1934); La Crise de l'Europe (Europe's Crisis); 1935; Canada (1937); Suez and Panama (1940).

Siegfried Line. In World War II, the line of defense in Germany opposed to the Maginot Line in France. The first penetration of the Siegfried Line was made by the U.S. First Army on October 5, 1944. During the "phony" period of the war, the British had a song which began, "We'll hang our wash on the Siegfried Line . . ."

Sieglinde or Sieglinde. In Scandinavian and Teutonic legend, the wife of SIEGMUND and mother of the hero SIEGFRIED. She is the heroine of Wagner's opera Die Walküre, one of the four music dramas of the RING DES NIBELUNGEN.

Siegmund. In Scandinavian and Teutonic legend, husband of SIEGLINDE and father of the hero SIEGFRIED. In the Nibelungenlied, he is King of the Netherlands. He is the hero of Wagner's opera Die Walküre, one of the four music dramas of his RING DES NIBELUNGEN, in which his story assumes a different guise from that of the old epic.

Sienkiewicz, Henryk (1846-1916). The best-known Polish novelist. With Fire and Sword (1884); Quo Vadis (1896); The Crusaders (4 vols.; 1900). Nobel prize for literature (1905).

Sieveking, Lance (1896-). English playwright, known especially for his radio plays. He was the first to produce a television play (BBC).

Sif. Wife of the old Norse god, THOR, famous for the beauty of her hair. Loki cut it off while she was asleep, but she obtained from the dwarfs a new fell of golden hair equal to that which he had taken.

Sigismonda. The heroine of DRYDEN's Sigismonda and Guiscardo in his Tales from Boccaccio (1700). In the original tale in the DECAMERON IV. 1, the heroine is called Ghismonda. She is the daughter of Tancred, King of Salerno. She falls in love with Guiscardo, her father's squire, reveals to him her love, and marries him in a cavern attached to the palace. Tancred discovers them in each other's embrace and gives secret orders to waylay the bridegroom and strangle him. He then goes to Sigismonda, and reproves her for her degrading choice, which she boldly justifies. Next day she receives a human heart in a gold casket, knows instinctively that it is Guiscardo's, and poisons herself. She lives just long enough to request that she may be buried in the same grave as her young husband; and Tancred,

Too late repenting of his cruel deed,
One common sepulchre for both decreed;
Intombed the wretched pair in royal state,
And on their monument inscribed their fate.
Sigismonda and Guiscardo

Sigourney, Lydia Howard (1791-1865). American writer who was very popular and produced more than sixty moral volumes.

Sigsbee, Charles Dwight (1845-1923). American naval officer, who commanded the U.S. battleship Maine when it was blown up in the Harbor of Havana (February 15, 1898). He became rear admiral in 1903.

Siguna. Wife of LOKI in old Norse myth. She nurses him in his cavern, but sometimes, as she carries off the poison which the serpents gorge, a portion drops on the god, and his writhings cause earthquakes.

Sigurd. The name under which the SIEGFRIED of the Nibelungenlied appears in the Scandinavian version of the legend, the Völsunga Saga.

Sijil, Al. In Mohammedan tradition, the recording angel.

On that day we will roll up the heavens as the angel Al Sijil rolleth up the scroll wherein every man's actions are recorded.—Koran, xxi.

Sikes, Bill. The type of a ruffianly house-breaker of the lowest grade; from the brute of that name in Dickens' OLIVER TWIST. The only rudiment of a redeeming feature he possesses is a kind of affection for his dog. His murder of NANCY is a horrible but celebrated incident in the novel.

Sikh (Hindu sikh, "disciple"). The Sikhs were originally a religious (monotheistic) body like the Mohammedans, founded in the Punjab in the 16th century. They soon became a military community, and in 1764 formally assumed national independence. From 1849 to 1947 the Sikhs were ruled by the British. They are famed as police of the British empire.

Sikorsky, Igor I. (1889-). Russian-born American engineer who built and flew the first multimotored airplane (1913). He organized several corporations to build airplanes and eventually merged them into the United Aircraft Manufacturing Corporation.

Silas. In the New Testament, the companion of PAUL on his second missionary journey.

Silas Marner, or the Weaver of Raveloe. A short novel by George ELIOT (1861) which the author says "is intended to set in a strong light the remedial influences of pure, natural, human relations." Silas is a lonely, embittered hand-loom weaver who long ago was accused of a theft of which his best friend was guilty, and so robbed of the girl he loved. He has no friends in Raveloe, the village to which he has come, and cares only to add a little more gold to the pile in his humble cottage. In close succession two strange events occur: he is robbed of his gold, and finds by chance a little yellow-haired baby girl whom no one claims. Gradually he is brought back into a more wholesome, normal life through his love for little Eppie. In the meantime much of the story is concerned with the affairs of the two sons of Squire Cass, Dunstan and Godfrey. Dunstan, who is a wild reckless fellow, always in debt, disappears. Godfrey marries the girl of his choice, Nancy Lammeter. At last, after sixteen years, Silas' lost gold is found, together with the skeleton of Dunstan Cass. Godfrey now confesses that Eppie is his child by a secret marriage with a dissipated woman who had died the night Eppie was found, and asks to be allowed to take his daughter home. Eppie, however, refuses to leave her foster-father Silas, and marries a village boy whom she has always known.

Silence. In Shakespeare's 2 Henry IV, a country justice of asinine dullness when sober, but when in his cups of most uproarious mirth. He is in the commission of the peace with his cousin Robert SHALLOW.

Silenus. In classic myth, son of PAN, chief of the silenoi, or older satyrs. Silenus was the foster father of BACCHUS the wine-god, and is described as a jovial old toper, with bald head, pug nose, and pimply face.

Old Silenus, bloated, drunken,
Led by his inebriate satyrs.

Longfellow, Drinking Song.

Silhouette, Étienne de (1709-1767). French controller general of finances (1759). His rigid economies were ridiculed by certain members of the nobility who applied his name sarcastically to everything deemed by them ostentatiously cheap and eventually in more restricted use to portraits in outline in which the painter's expensive art is replaced by plain black. Hence, silhouette.

Sill, Edward Rowland (1841-1887). American poet and essayist. Professor of English at the University of California (1874-1882). One of his most famous poems is The Fool's Prayer.

Sillanpää, Frans Eemil (1888-). Finnish novelist. Winner of the Nobel prize for literature (1939) while his country was at war with the Soviet Union. His books are very popular in Sweden.

Silliman, Benjamin (1816-1885). The son of a Yale professor of chemistry (Benjamin Silliman, 1779-1864), he became his father's assistant and later on, with John P. Norton, helped establish a school of applied chemistry at Yale, which became the Sheffield Scientific School. Both he and his father were original members of the National Academy of Sciences (1863).

Silly Billy Thompson. The name by which David DODD, hero of Charles Reade's HARD CASH is known while he is out of his mind.

Silone, Ignazio (1900-). Italian novelist and short-story writer, known for his fiction dealing with the resistance of Italian peasants to the inroads made by the Fascist government of Italy (see FASCISM) into the pattern of their lives. His books include Fontamara (1934); Mr. Aristotle (1935), a collection of short stories; Bread and Wine (Pane e Vino, 1937); The School for Dictators (La Scuola dei Dictatori; 1938).

Silurist, the. Henry VAUGHAN, who was so called because he came from South Wales whose inhabitants were known by the ancients as the Silures.

Silva, Don Ruy Gomez de. In Hugo's HERNANI and Verdi's opera Ernani, an old Spanish grandee, to whom Elvira is betrothed; but she detests him, and loves the outlaw Hernani.

Silva, Duke. A Spanish commander, hero of George Eliot's narrative poem THE SPANISH GYPSY.

silver.

Silver Age. See under AGES.

Silver-Fork school. A name given to a class of English novelists who gave undue importance to etiquette and the externals of social intercourse. The most distinguished are Lady Blessington (1789-1849); Theodore Hook (1716-1796); Lord Lytton (1804-1873); Mrs. Trollope (1790-1863); and Lord Beaconsfield (1804-1881). (See under these names.)

born with a silver spoon in your mouth. Born to good luck. The allusion is to the silver spoons given as prizes and at christenings. The lucky man is born with the prize in his mouth, and does not need to wait for it or to earn it.

silver wedding. See WEDDING.

Silver, John. The famous one-legged pirate of Stevenson's TREASURE ISLAND.

Silverado Squatters, The. A book (1883) by Robert Louis STEVENSON, in which he describes a trip to California taken by him with his wife and stepson.

Silver Cord, The. A play (1926) by Sidney HOWARD. The plot concerns a widowed mother whose love for her sons almost destroys their lives owing to her interference in their marriages.

Silver Stallion, The. A romantic novel (1926) by James Branch Cabell.

(2) The forsaken wife in D'Annunzio's drama LA GIOCONDA.

Silvio. A character in Leoncavallo's opera I PAGLIACCI.

Simenon, Georges. Pen name of Georges Sim (1903-). Franco-Belgian mystery story writer. His Inspector Maigret is as well known in France and Belgium as SHERLOCK HOLMES is in England and America.

Simeon, St. See under SAINTS.

St. Simeon Stylites. See STYLITES.

simile. A figure of speech in which things of different categories are compared with a resulting stress on the element of resemblance. Often constructed with "like" or "as." For instance: "Her hair is like silk." But not: "Her hair is like mine."

Simla. Hill station in the Punjab, British India. Summer capital of the Government of India. The scene of some of the early stories of Rudyard Kipling, particularly those concerning Mrs. Hauksbee.

Simms, William Gilmore (1806-1870). American novelist, known for his romances dealing with Indians and frontier life and the Revolutionary War in South Carolina. These include GUY RIVERS (1834); THE YEMASSEE (1835), Richard Hurd (1838), Border Beagles (1840), Beauchampe (1842), Charlemont (1856), The Cassique of Kiawah (1859), and others, all constituting the series known as the Border Romances; The Partisan (1835), Mellichampe (1836), and KATHERINE WALTON (1851), a trilogy, the outstanding volumes in the series called the Revolutionary Romances, which also contains The Kinsmen (1841; later issued as The Scout, 1854), The Sword and the Distaff (1853; later appearing as Woodcraft, 1854), The Forayers (1855), and Eutaw (1856).

Simms' novels, which have been compared to those of James Fenimore Cooper, are characterized by melodrama, chiefly aristocratic heroes and heroines, and a consistent bias in favor of the society, culture, and politics of South Carolina, in keeping with the author's intense admiration for his native state.

Simnel, Lambert (1477?-1534). English impostor who pretended to be the Earl of Warwick and was crowned (1487) in Dublin, Ireland, as Edward VI. Entering England with an army, he was defeated by Henry VII and finally became a turnspit in the kitchens of the King.

Simon. In the New Testament: (1) the original name of the disciple PETER; (2) a Pharisee who entertained Jesus and criticized him for forgiving the sins of a woman of the streets who anointed his feet; (3) a sorcerer of Samaria, also called Simon Magus, rebuked by Peter because he attempted to buy the power of the Holy Spirit.

Simon, André Louis (1877-). French authority on wine. Author of a number of books on wine and cooking.

Simon, St. (Zelotes). See under SAINTS.

Simon Binet tests. A series of psychological tests to determine the "mental age" and I.Q. (intelligence quotient, or ratio with respect to the normal average) of individuals, particularly of retarded school children, devised by the French psychologists, Drs. Simon and Binet, after exhaustive experiments in the schools of Paris. Adaptations of the Simon Binet tests came to be widely used in educational work in the United States and formed the basis of examinations for admission to some universities, notably Columbia. Individual sets of mental tests (or psychological tests) are usually known by the name of their originator, as Terman tests. The whole subject of mental testing was popularized in connection with tests used for admission to the various branches of the United States armed forces during World War I.

Simonds, Frank Herbert (1878-1936). American newspaper editor with the New York Evening Sun (1913-1914) and the New York Tribune (1915-1918). His editorial on the anniversary of the sinking of the Lusitania won the Pulitzer prize for the year's ablest editorial in 1917. He wrote a five-volume history of World War I which constitutes a valuable record.

Simonides of Ceos. Greek poet of the late sixth century B.C. Remembered particularly for his odes, elegies, epigrams, etc. His work exists only in fragments.

Simon Lee. A poem by WORDSWORTH. The poet helps old Simon with the root of a tree and incidentally tells the simple story of his life.

Simon Legree, see LEGREE, SIMON.

Simonov, Konstantine (1915-). Soviet writer of short stories, plays, poetry, and a remarkable novel, Days and Nights (1945), concerning the defense of Stalingrad, which was also made into a motion picture. One of Russia's outstanding war correspondents. His play, Russian People, won the Stalin prize in 1942. His works have sold several million copies and are read in twenty-one languages.

Simon Pure. The real man, the authentic article, etc. In Mrs. Centlivre's Bold Stroke for a Wife (1718), a Colonel Feignwell passes himself off for Simon Pure, and wins the heart of Miss Lovely. No sooner does he get the assent of her guardian, than the Quaker shows himself, and proves, beyond a doubt, he is the "real Simon Pure."

Simonson, Lee (1888-). American scenic designer, one of the founders and directors of the Theater Guild, who made the sets for such Guild productions as Liliom, Goat Song, Back to Methuselah and Amphitryon. His Poems were published in 1946. He also wrote The Stage is Set (1932).

Simple Cobbler of Agawam, The. A tract by Nathaniel WARD, published in England in 1647, violently denouncing religious toleration, the denial of civil liberties, and the extreme fashions of women in London and New England in the author's day. The vitriolic style has been compared to that of the Elizabethan pamphlet writers such as GREENE and NASH, and the work is considered an example of Puritan satire. Agawam was an early name for Ipswich, Massachusetts.

Simple Life, the. A mode of living in which the object is to eliminate as far as possible all luxuries and extraneous aids to happiness, etc., returning to the simplicity of life as imagined by the pastoral poets. The phrase was taken as the title of a book by Charles Wagner (1901), a Lutheran preacher in Paris who was brought up in the pastoral surroundings of the Vosges, and was much popularized by President Theodore ROOSEVELT, who publicly announced that the book contained "such wholesome sound doctrine that I wish it could be used as a tract throughout our country." See also PRIMITIVISM.

Simple Simon. A simpleton, a gullible booby; from the character in the well-known anonymous nursery tale who "met a pie-man."

Simplicissimus. (1) Titular hero of a German novel (1669) by Hans Jakob Christoffel von Grimmelshausen (1621-1676). It is a picaresque story with the Thirty Years' War as its background but the nuclear theme is the arduous development of the simple soul of the hero toward resigned wisdom. As a panorama of contemporary events, also as a psychological study, the book has no peer in German seventeenth-century literature. It is the Parsifal (Wolfram von Eschenbach), Wilhelm Meister (Goethe), and Jean-Christophe (Romain Rolland) of its age.

(2) Hence, the name of a satirical weekly, a sort of PUNCH and NEW YORKER in one package, founded (1896) by Thomas T. Heine in Munich. Its last pre-Nazi editor was Franz Schoenberger whose Confessions of a Euro- pean Intellectual (1946) were well received in America.

Sims, William Sowden (1858-1936). American naval officer. Commanded American naval operations in European waters (1917-1919). In a long report (1920) he severely criticized the U.S. Navy Department for its management of naval operations. With Burton J. Hendrick he wrote Victory at Sea, which won the Pulitzer prize for history in 1920.

simurgh. In Eastern legend, a huge bird who has seen the destruction of the world three times and has all the knowledge of the ages. He is perhaps identical with the roc.

Sin. According to MILTON, she is twin-keeper with Death of the gates of Hell. She sprang full-grown from the head of Satan:

. . . Woman to the waist, and fair,
But ending foul in many a scaly fold
Voluminous and vast, a serpent armed With mortal sting.

Paradise Lost, ii, 650-653.

Original Sin. That corruption which is born with us, and is the inheritance of all the offspring of Adam. As Adam was the federal head of his race, when Adam fell, the taint and penalty of his disobedience passed to all his posterity.

the Man of Sin (2 Thess. ii. 3). Generally held to signify the ANTICHRIST, but applied by the old Puritans to the Pope of Rome, by the Fifth Monarchy men to Cromwell, and by many 19th-century theologians to that "wicked one" (identical with the "last horn" of Dan. vii) who is immediately to precede the second advent.

the seven deadly sins. Pride, Wrath, Envy, Lust, Gluttony, Avarice, and Sloth. They are dramatized in Dante's INFERNO.

to earn the wages of sin. To be hanged, or condemned to death.

The wages of sin is death.—Rom. vi. 23.
I believe some of you will be hanged unless you change a good deal. It's cold blood and bad blood that runs in your veins, and you'll come to earn the wages of sin.—Boldrewood, Robbery under Arms, ii to sin one's mercies. To be ungrateful for the gifts of Providence.

Sinbad or Sindbad, the Sailor. A famous story in the Arabian Nights. Sinbad is a merchant of Bagdad who acquires great wealth. He goes on seven voyages, which he describes to a poor discontented porter named Hindbad, to show him that wealth must be obtained by enterprise and personal exertion.

First Voyage. Being becalmed in the Indian Ocean, he and some others of the crew visit what they suppose to be an island, but which is in reality a huge whale asleep. They light a fire on the whale, and the heat wakes the creature, which instantly dives under water. Sinbad is picked up by some merchants, and in due time returns home.

Second Voyage. Sinbad is left, during sleep, on a desert island, and discovers a roc's egg, "fifty paces in circumference." He fastens himself to the claw of the bird and is deposited in the valley of diamonds. Next day, some merchants come to the top of the crags and throw into the valley huge joints of raw meat, to which the diamonds stick, and when the eagles pick up the meat, the merchants scare them from their nests and carry off the diamonds. Sinbad then fastens himself to a piece of meat, is carried by an eagle to its nest, and being rescued by the merchants, returns home laden with diamonds.

Third Voyage is the encounter with the Cyclops. See POLYPHEMUS.

Fourth Voyage. Sinbad marries a lady of rank in a strange island on which he is cast; when his wife dies, he is buried alive with the dead body, according to the custom of the land. He makes his way out of the catacomb and returns to Bagdad, greatly enriched by valuables rifled from the dead bodies.

Fifth Voyage. The ship in which he sails is dashed to pieces by huge stones let down from the talons of two angry rocs. Sinbad swims to a desert island, where he throws stones at the monkeys, and the monkeys throw back cocoanuts. On this island Sinbad encounters and kills the Old Man of the Sea.

Sixth Voyage. Sinbad visits the island of Serendip (or Ceylon) and climbs to the top of the mountain "where Adam was placed on his expulsion from Paradise."

Seventh Voyage. He is attacked by corsairs, sold to slavery, and employed in shooting from a tree at elephants. He discovers a tract of hill country completely covered with elephants' tusks, communicates his discovery to his master, obtains his liberty, and returns home.

Sinclair, May (1870?-1947). Distinguished and popular English novelist, a keen psychologist and experimenter in method. The Divine Fire (1904); Mary Olivier (1919); Anne Severn and the Fieldings (1922); etc. Also successful in the writing of uncanny stories. Her The Dark Night (1924) is a novel in verse.

Sinclair, Upton Beall (1878-). American novelist and miscellaneous author, known for his affiliation with Socialism and his numerous writings, both fiction and non-fiction, dealing with social problems, pacifism, political corruption, perversions of justice, economic inequality, and the like. His novels include King Midas (1901); The Journal of Arthur Stirling (1903); Manassas (1904); THE JUNGLE (1906); The Metropolis (1908); King Coal (1917); Jimmie Higgins (1919); 100%: The Story of a Patriot (1920); Oll! (1927); Boston

(1928), dealing with the SACCO-VANZETTI case; Mountain City (1930); World's End (1940), Between Two Worlds (1941) (hero, Lanny Budd) dealing with World War I, the peace conference, and the post-war period, etc. Among his other works are The Profits of Religion (1918); THE BRASS CHECK (1919); The Goose-Step (1923) and The Goslings (1924), dealing with American education; American Outpost (1932), an autobiography; Upton Sinclair Presents William Fox (1933); The Flivver King (1937); and numerous pamphlets, children's books, plays, short stories, and studies on a variety of subjects.

Sinclair, the descendant of a once-prominent Southern family, engaged in numerous sensational and experimental ventures during his career, including the founding of the co-operative Helicon Home Colony, the organization of a traveling theater for the performance of Socialist dramas, a period of residence at a single-tax (see PROGRESS AND POVERTY) colony, four unsuccessful campaigns for election to public office, and the launching of the EPIC plan during the depression era of the 1930's. His Lanny Budd novels, eight of them by 1947, were called by John Farrelly "a day-dream at a newsreel."

See also MUCKRAKERS.

Sindia or Scindia. The name of an Indian dynasty. One Sindia was a ruler who drove out the Sikhs in the eighteenth century and later ones were Maharajas who sometimes were on the side of the British and sometimes against them. They took part in the Mahratta War and the Sepoy Rebellion. Kipling's poem With Scindia to Delhi, one of his best (and least-known) ballads, tells how this chief, or such a chief, attempted a romantic rescue after a battle. The story is supposedly told by a Mahratta trooper.

sin eating. A kind of atonement in which the sins of the dead person are taken over by a hireling who eats food handed him over by the body of the deceased. This strange practice was once fairly usual through England and Scotland. William SHARP, under the pen name Fiona Macleod, wrote a book called The Sineater (1895).

sine die (Lat.). No time being fixed; indefinitely in regard to time. When a proposal is deferred sine die, it is deferred without fixing a day for its reconsideration, which is virtually "for ever."

sine qua non (Lat.). An indispensable condition. Lat. Sine qua non potest esse or fieri, "That without which [the thing] cannot be, or be done."

Singer, Israel Joshua (1893-1944). Yiddish novelist born in Poland whose best-known book is The Brothers Ashkenazi (1936), a novel which has been translated into English, Danish, Swedish, and Dutch. The Yiddish Art Theatre in New York produced it as a play.

Singing Tree. In one of the stories of the Arabian Nights, a tree whose leaves were so musical that every leaf sang in concert. See PARIZADE.

There is a Singing Apple in Countess d'Aulnoy's fairy story Prince Chery and Fair-Star. See CHERY.

Single Hound, The. The title of a book of poems by Emily DICKINSON, edited and published (1914) by her niece, Martha Dickinson Bianchi. It takes its title from the first poem which runs:

Adventure must unto itself
The Soul condemned to be;
Attended by a Single Hound—
Its own Identity.

single tax. A tax on land values only, to be substituted, according to its advocates, for all other forms of state tax, because increasing land values are due to other causes than individual enterprise and ought therefore to accrue not to individuals but to the public. The single tax theory is associated with the American economist, Henry GEORGE. See also PROGRESS AND POVERTY.

Singleton. The hero of W. G. SIMMS' trilogy of the American Revolution. See KATHERINE WALTON.

Singleton, Captain. The hero of a novel by D. DEFOE, called The Adventures of Captain Singleton (1720).

Singmaster, Elsie (1879-). American novelist, short story writer, and writer for young people, specializing in stories about the Pennsylvania Dutch.

Sing Sing. New York state prison at Ossining on the Hudson (founded in 1826). Also the former name of Ossining itself which was changed when the prison's fame began to make it unpleasant for anyone to be connected with Sing Sing.

Singular Doctor. See under DOCTOR.

Sinis. A Corinthian robber of Greek legend, known as the Pine-Bender, because he used to fasten his victims to two pine-trees bent towards the earth, and then leave them to be rent asunder by the rebound. He was eventually captured by THESEUS and put to death in this same way.

Sinister Street. The best known volume of a series of novels by Compton MACKENZIE. It relates the early life of Michael and Stella Fane, the illegitimate children of well-born, upper-class parents. Sinister Street, published in two volumes in England, appeared in America as Youth's Encounter (1913) and Sinister Street (1914) respectively. In Guy and Pauline (Am. title, Plashers Mead, 1915), an episode in Michael's life at Oxford is told. Sylvia Scarlett (1918) relates the early life of the titular heroine and Michael Fane's unsuccessful effort to persuade her to marry him, but in the succeeding volume, Sylvia and Michael (1919) the couple are married.

Sinjohn, John. Pseudonym under which John GALSWORTHY published his first two novels, Jocelyn and Villa Rubem.

sinking fund. The money set aside for the payment of a national debt.

Sinner, The (Piccolo Mondo Moderno). A novel by FOGAZZARO. See MAIRONI, PIERO.

Sinn Fein (Ourselves Alone). The name given to the extreme home rule party in Ireland in the 20th century. It grew out of previous nationalistic agitation and with the Easter rebellion of 1916 became more powerful.

Sinon. The Greek who induced the Trojans to receive the wooden horse. (Virgil: Aeneid, ii, 102, etc.) Anyone deceiving to betray is called "a Sinon." Dante, in his INFERNO, places Sinon, with Potiphar's wife, Nimrod, and the rebellious giants, in the tenth pit of MALEBOLEGE.

Sirat, Al (Arab., "the path"). An imaginary bridge between earth and the Mohammedan paradise, not so wide as a spider's thread. Sinners fall over into the abyss below.

Sir Charles Grandison. A novel by Samuel RICHARDSON (1753), the love story of Sir Charles and Harriet Byron. The hero is an ideal 18th-century gentleman with so many virtues and charms as to make his tale somewhat monotonous.

Sirdar. See under RULERS, TITLES OF.

siren (Gr. sirenes, "entanglers"). One of the mythical monsters, half woman and half bird, said by Greek poets (see ODYSSEY, xii) to entice seamen by the sweetness of their song to such a degree that the listeners forgot everything and died of hunger; hence applied to any dangerous, alluring woman. ULYSSES escaped their blandishments by filling his companions' ears with wax and lashing himself to the mast of his ship.

In Homeric mythology, there were but two sirens; later writers name three, viz., Parthenope, Ligea, and Leucosia, and the number was still further augmented by later writers.

Sir George Tressady. A sequel (1896) to Mrs. Humphry Ward's MARCELLA.

Siris. A treatise by George BERKELEY (1744), containing a recommendation and a list of the uses of tar-water in healing the body, as well as a somewhat mystical philosophy.

Sir Nigel. Historical romance (1906) by A. Conan DOYLE. The White Company is its sequel.

Sir Patrick Spens, see SPENS, SIR PATRICK.

Sismondi, Jean Charles Léonard Simonde de (1773-1842). Swiss historian, author of the famous History of the Italian Republics in the Middle Ages (16 vols.; 1803-1818).

Sister Anne, see ANNE, SISTER.

Sister Beatrice. A drama by Maurice MAETERLINCK (1901), a miracle play of the Virgin Mary.

Sister Carrie. A novel by Theodore DREISER (1900), a study of the demoralized life of an actress. The book was widely discussed because of its suppression.

Sister Helen. A poem (1870) by Dante Gabriel ROSSETTI, about the destruction of a false lover by melting a waxen image representing him.

Sistine Chapel. The papal private chapel in the Vatican, built in 1473 by Pope SIXTUS IV. Its walls are decorated with paintings by Perugino, Botticelli, Ghirlandajo, and others, and especially the world-famous frescoes by Michelangelo, the Creation, the Deluge, and the Last Judgment.

Sistine Madonna or Madonna di San Sisto. A famous representation of the Virgin and Child painted by RAPHAEL (1518) for the church of San Sisto at Piacenza, Italy. It shows the Virgin Mary holding the Child among clouds, surrounded by cherubs, with St. Barbara and Pope Sixtus II (whence the name) kneeling adoringly on either side. It was the pride of the Royal Gallery at Dresden. When Crabb ROBINSON saw it, he exclaimed: "After this, I find it hard to believe in the immaculate conception."

Sisyphus. A legendary king of Corinth, crafty and avaricious, said to be the son of Aeolus, or—according to later legend, which also makes him the father of ULYSSES—of Autolycus. His task in the world of shades is to roll a huge stone up a hill till it reaches the top; as the stone constantly rolls back, his work is incessant; hence "a labor of Sisyphus" or "Sisyphean toil" is an endless, heart-breaking job.

With useless endeavour,
Forever, forever,
Is Sisyphus rolling
His stone up the mountain!

Longfellow, Masque of Pandora (Chorus of the Eumenides).

Sita. In Hindu mythology, the wife of RAMA or Vishnu incarnate, carried off by the giant Ravana. She was not born, but arose from a furrow when her father Janaka, King of Mithila, was ploughing. The word means "furrow." She is the heroine of the Hindu epic, the RAMAYANA, which is largely concerned with her faithfulness under misfortune.

sit-down strike. A type of industrial strike whereby the workers, most often in factories, refuse to continue work or leave the premises until their demands are granted. The sit-down strike was a weapon of great effectiveness and wide use by labor, particularly in the U.S., in the latter 1930's. The Play Marching Song (1937), by John Howard LAWSON, deals with a sit-down strike.

Sitting Bull (1834?-1890). American Sioux Indian chief and leader in the Sioux war (1876-1877). Was present at the Little Big Horn when General Custer and his forces were wiped out (June 25, 1876). Again became active in an Indian uprising (1890) and was finally arrested and shot by Indian guards. He figures prominently in many legends of the American frontier.

Sitwell, Edith (1887-). English poet and prose writer, known for the irony, wit, and originality of rhythm and imagery of her poetry, much of which is satire and burlesque of an intellectual character. Her collections of verse include The Mother, And Other Poems (1915); Clowns' Houses (1918); Wooden Pegasus (1920); Façade (1922), later set to music in a suite by William Walton; Bucolic Comedies (1923); Sleeping Beauty (1924); Troy Park (1925); Rustic Elegies (1927); Gold Coast Customs, And Other Poems (1930); Five Variations on a Theme (1933); Poems New and Old (1940); Street Songs (1942). Among her prose works are Alexander Pope (1930), a critical study; Bath (1932), a social history; The English Eccentrics (1933), essays and "characters" (see CHARACTER WRITERS); Aspects of Modern Poetry (1934), criticism; Victoria of England (1936); I Live Under a Black Sun (1937), a novel on Jonathan SWIFT; and Fanfare for Elizabeth (1946), a sympathetic biography of Elizabeth of England.

Edith Sitwell's brother, Osbert Sitwell (1892-), also became known for his satirical poems, short stories, novels, and plays. Among his works are 20th-Century Harlequinade (1916); Argonaut and Juggernaut (1919); Who Killed Cock Robin? (1921); Triple Fugue, And Other Stories (1924); England Reclaimed (1927); The Man Who Lost Himself (1929); Dumb Animal, And Other Stories (1930); Dickens (1932); Brighton (1935), a social history, written with Margare Barton; Escape with Me! (1939), on travel in the Orient; Mrs. Kimber (1937), verse; A Place of One's Own (1941); and three remarkable volumes of autobiography, Left Hand, Right Hand (1945); The Scarlet Tree (1946); and Great Morning! (1947).

Another brother, Sacheverell Sitwell (1900-), came to be best known for his lyric poetry and art criticism, his works including Southern Baroque Art (1924); All Summer in a Day (1926), an "autobiographical fantasia"; German Baroque Art (1927); Doctor Donne and Gargantua (1930), a narrative poem; Canons of Giant Art: Twenty Torsos in Heroic Landscapes (1933); Conversation Pieces (1936), on English domestic portraits; Mauretania (1940), on travel in Morocco; Primitive Scenes and Festivals (1942), on religious ceremonies.

The Sitwells, of noble Norman and English ancestry, spent their childhood at Renishaw Park, a family estate built in 1625.

Siva or Shiva. The third person of the Hindu trinity, or Trimurti, representing the destructive principle in life and also, as in Hindu philosophy restoration is involved in destruction, the reproductive or renovating power. The other members of the trinity are BRAHMA and VISHNU. Siva is a great worker of miracles through meditation and penance, and hence is a favorite deity with the ascetics. He is a god of the fine arts, and of dancing. Siva, one only of his many names, means "the Blessed One." He is also known as Mahadeva, "the Great God." His consort is KALI.

Six Characters in Search of an Author (Sei Personaggi in Cerca d'Autore). A play by Luigi PIRANDELLO (1921), the best-known of the author's works. The action takes place on an unprepared stage, where a company of actors is being assembled for a rehearsal. Six persons appear, announce that they are the incomplete, unused creations of the author's imagination, and demand that they be permitted to perform the drama that was never written for them but is implied in their lives. The life stories of all six characters are then presented.

Sixes and Sevens. A volume of short stories by O. HENRY (1911). The phrase at sixes and sevens means "in disorder, all awry."

Six Hundred. See CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE.

Six Nations. A confederation of North American Indians formed by the union of the FIVE NATIONS with the Tuscaroras.

Sixteen-string Jack. The almost affectionate nickname of a famous highwayman whose real name was John Rann and who is referred to in Boswell's Johnson. He was renowned for his affectation of fine clothes. His nickname was an allusion to the many "strings" or ribbons he wore at his knees. He was hanged in 1774.

Sixteen to One. A political slogan associated with the name of the American politician William Jennings BRYAN, referring to the ratio of silver to gold advocated in his free-silver campaigns. His free coinage policy was first outlined in a speech of Aug. 16, 1893, and was kept prominently before the public for a number of years. See also POPULISTS.

sizar. An undergraduate of Cambridge, or of Trinity College, Dublin, who receives a grant from his college to assist in paying his expenses. Formerly sizars were expected to undertake certain menial duties now performed by college servants; the name is taken to show that one so assisted received his sizes or sizings free.

sizings. At Cambridge, the allowance of food provided by the college for undergraduates at a meal; a pound loaf, two inches of butter, and a pot of milk used to be the "sizings" for breakfast; meat was provided for dinner, but any extras had to be sized for. The word is a contraction of assize, a statute to regulate the size or weight of articles sold.

A size is a portion of bread or drink, it is a farthing which scholars in Cambridge have at the buttery. It is noted with the letter S.—Minshien, Doctor (1617).

S.J. The Society of Jesus; denoting that the priest after whose name they are placed is a Jesuit.

Skanda. Another name for the KARTTIKEYA of Hindu mythology.

Skeggs, Miss Carolina Wilhelmina Amelia. In Goldsmith's VICAR OF WAKEFIELD, the companion of "Lady Blarney." These are two flash women introduced by Squire THORNHILL to the PRIMROSE family, with the view of beguiling the two eldest daughters, who are both very beautiful. Sir William Thornhill thwarts their infamous purpose.

skeleton at the feast. PLUTARCH says that in Egyptian banquets toward the close a servant brought in a skeleton, and cried aloud to the guests, "Look on this! Eat, drink, and be merry; for tomorrow you die!" Herodotus says the skeleton was a wooden one, about eighteen inches in length.

The stranger feasted at his board;
But, like the skeleton at the feast,
That warning timepiece never ceased;
"For ever—Never! Never—For ever!"
Longfellow, The Old Clock on the Stairs.

Skeleton in Armor, The. A narrative poem by LONGFELLOW (1842). It was suggested by the discovery of a skeleton near Fall River, Mass., supposed to be the remains of a Scandinavian warrior and sea-rover who had come to America in the 10th century or thereabouts.

Skelton, John (ca. 1460-1529). English poet, known for his satire, his humorous and realistic verse, and his use of short, "breathless" lines and irregular rhyme-scheme, called "Skeltonic meter." His surviving works include A Garland of Laurel, an allegorical poem, dealing with the crowning of Skelton himself as a great poet; Philip Sparrow, a lyric mourning the death of a sparrow, the pet of a young girl; COLIN CLOUT, a satire on the abuses of the Church; The Bowge of Court, a satire in allegory on life at the English court; Magnificence, a MORALITY PLAY; The Tunning of Elinor Rummung, a coarse and humorous work, giving a realistic picture of contemporary "low life"; Why Come Ye Not to Court? and Speak, Parrot, satires on Cardinal Wolsey. Skelton received the title of Poet Laureate from both Oxford and Cambridge Universities and held an unofficial position as Laureate under Henry VIII, to whom he had served as tutor. He was ordained a priest but spent most of his time at court, making enemies by his outspokenness. As a result of the hostility between him and Cardinal Wolsey, he was forced to seek refuge with the Abbot of Westminster, with whom he stayed virtually as a prisoner until his death.

Skelton is considered a poet of the transition between England of the Middle Ages and the Elizabethan period, writing in the tradition of CHAUCER, GOWER, and LYDGATE and the medieval Latin poets. Interest in his work was revived in the 20th century by Robert GRAVES, and Skeltonic meter is parodied in the early verse of W. H. AUDEN.

Sketch Book, The. A volume of tales and sketches by Washington IRVING (1819), dealing with old traditions of the Hudson valley and with life in England as seen by an American observer. The book contains the famous LEGEND OF SLEEPY HOLLOW, RIP VAN WINKLE and THE SPECTER BRIDEGROOM.

Sketches by Boz. The title of a collection of stories by Charles DICKENS (1835-1836).

Skewton, The Hon. Mrs. In Dickens' DOMBEY AND SON, mother of Edith, Mr. Dombey's second wife.

Skidbladnir. The miraculous ship which the elves gave to Frey and which had room for all the gods although it could be folded together and put into a side pocket.

Skimpole, Harold. In Dickens' BLEAK HOUSE, an amateur artist, always sponging on his friends. Under a plausible light-hearted manner, he is intensely selfish, but Mr. JARNVOCE looks on him as a mere child, and believes in him implicitly. It was said that the character was drawn from Leigh HUNT, who was much offended.

Skin of Our Teeth, The. A play (1942) by Thornton WILDER. Unconventional in structure, it gives a panoramic picture of George Antrobus (Man), his family, and their maid Sabina (the Eternal Temptress), who manage to survive the world upheavals from pre-historic times until the present. The rôle of Sabina was created by the actress Tallulah BANKHEAD.

Skinner, Constance Lindsay (1882-1939). American novelist and historian, born in British Columbia. She contributed Adventures in Oregon and Pioneers of the Old Southwest to the Chronicles of America series.

Skinner, Otis (1858-1942). Famous American actor. His daughter, Cornelia Otis Skinner (1901-), is a well-known monologist and actress, and also the author, with Emily Kimbrough, of Our Hearts Were Young and Gay (1942), which was made into a successful moving picture. She has written several other books.

Skipper Ireson's Ride. A ballad (1828) by John Greenleaf WHITTIER, founded upon an actual episode in the history of the fishing village of Marblehead, Massachusetts. The historical Ireson, however, did not desert his wrecked ship.

Skirnir. Frey's messenger, who won the god's magic sword by getting him Gerda for his wife.

Skrymir. A great giant of Scandinavian mythology. The god Thor, traveling through the country of the giants, once spent the night in a shelter which turned out to be the thumb of Skrymir's glove. Skrymir joined him on his journey and carried the wallet of provisions, but at the end of the day fell asleep at the foot of an oak tree. Irritated because he could not open the knots with which the giant had tied up the wallet, Thor hit him a terrible blow on the forehead with his famous hammer, but the giant merely asked if an oak leaf had fallen on him. After sundry other incidents of like nature, Skrymir, who was also known as Utgard-Loki, confessed that he had made use of magic illusions to maintain his superiority over Thor.

Skuld. In Norse mythology, one of the three Norns or Fates. She represents the future, her name being related to the word shall.

Skylark, To a. A famous lyric (1820) by Percy Bysshe SHELLEY.

skyscraper. Popular term for the type of exceptionally tall building, erected on a relatively small area of ground, which was notable in the U.S., and especially in New York City, in the 1920's and early 1930's, each new building surpassing its predecessors in height.

Among the best-known skyscrapers of the time were the Woolworth Building, the Chrysler Building, and the Empire State Building, the last-named being the tallest. A ballet by the American composer John Alden CARPENTER is entitled Skyscrapers (1924).

Slabs of the Sunburnt West. A book of poems (1922) by Carl SANDBURG.

Sladen, Douglas Brooke Wheelton (1856-1947). English writer; first professor of history in the University of Sydney, Australia (1879); editor of Who's Who (1897-1899); etc.

Slawkenbergius, Hafen. An imaginary author, distinguished for the great length of his nose. In the Life and Opinions of Tristram Shandy (see TRISTRAM SHANDY), Slawkenbergius is referred to as a great authority on all lore connected with noses, and a curious tale is introduced from his hypothetical works about a man with an enormously long nose.

Slaygood, Giant. In Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, master of a gang of thieves which infests the King's highway. Mr. Greatheart slays him, and rescues Feeblemind from his grasp in a duel.

Sleary. In Dickens' HARD TIMES, the kind-hearted proprietor of the circus at Coketown; a stout man, with one eye fixed and one loose, a voice like the efforts of a broken pair of bellows, a flabby skin, and muddled head. He is never sober and never drunk.

Josephine Sleary. Daughter of the circus proprietor, a pretty girl of eighteen, who was tied on a horse at the age of two years and made a will at twelve. This will she carries about with her, and in it she indicates her desire to be drawn to the grave by two piebald ponies.

Sleeper, the. Epimenides, the Greek poet, is said to have fallen asleep in a cave when a boy, and not to have waked for fifty-seven years, when he found himself possessed of all wisdom.

In medieval legend stories of those who have gone to sleep and have been—or are to be—awakened after many years are very numerous. Such legends cluster around the names of King Arthur, Charlemagne, and Barbarossa. Cf. also the stories of Endymion, the Seven Sleepers of Ephesus, Tannhäuser, Ogier the Dane, Rip Van Winkle, Peter Klaus, Sebastian, Roderick, Thomas of Ercehdoune, and the Mohammedan Mahdi.

sleeping partner. A partner in a business who takes no active share in running it beyond supplying capital.

sleeping sickness. A West African disease caused by a parasite, Trypanosoma Gambiense, characterized by fever and great sleepiness, and almost invariably terminating fatally. The disease known in the U.S., which shows similar symptoms and the cause of which is unknown, is also called sleeping illness or sleepy sickness as a means of distinction; its scientific name is Encephalitis lethargica.

Sleeping Beauty, The. This charming nursery tale comes originally from the French La Belle au Bois Dormante, by Charles PERRAULT. The Princess is shut up by enchantment in a castle where she sleeps a hundred years, during which an impenetrable wood springs up around the castle. Ultimately she is disenchanted by a young Prince, who marries her. See also BRUNHILD.

Sleepy Hollow, The Legend of. One of the best known tales in Washington Irving's SKETCH BOOK. It relates how Ichabod Crane, the gawky, superstitious country schoolmaster of Sleepy Hollow, is frightened out of his wits by a mysterious headless horseman, the "Galloping Hessian of the Hollow." Ichabod is never seen in the neighborhood again, and the fair and wealthy Katrina Van Tassel marries his rival Brom Van Brunt, a "burly, roaring, roystering blade," known far and wide as Brom Bones. A musical comedy based on the story was produced in New York in 1948.

Sleipnir. In Scandinavian mythology, ODIN's grey horse, which had eight legs, and could carry his master over the sea as well as land.

Slender. In Shakespeare's MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR, one of the suitors of "sweet Anne Page." His servant's name is Simple. Slender is a country lout, cousin of Justice SHALLOW.

Slender is a perfect satire . . . on the brilliant youth of the provinces . . . before the introduction of newspapers and turnpike roads; awkward and boobyish among civil people, but at home in rude spots, and proud of exploits at which the town would laugh.—Hallam.

Slick, Sam. A Yankee of the Yankees, hero of Thomas Chandler Haliburton's volume, The Clockmaker or the Sayings and Doings of Samuel Slick of Slickville, first published as a series of letters in the Nova Scotian (1835). Sam is a shrewd, ingenious New England clock peddler; he knows a bargain when he sees one and does not scruple to take advantage of the slower-witted Nova Scotians among whom he peddles his wares. So popular were the adventures of Sam Slick that he reappeared in a number of volumes and was finally sent abroad in The Attaché, or Sam Slick in England (1843-1844).

Slim Princess, The. A parody by George ADE (1907) burlesquing the romantic novel of the day.

Sloan, John (1871-). American painter; member of a group of American artists called "The Eight," including, besides Sloan, William Glackens, George Luks, Arthur Davies, Everett Shinn, Maurice Prendergast and Ernest Lawson. His book Gist of Art (1939) is based upon his lectures.

Sloane, Sir Hans (1660-1753). British physician and naturalist. He followed Sir Isaac Newton as President of the Royal Society (1727-1741) and bequeathed to England a very valuable library of 50,000 volumes, having received by bequest the collection of the naturalist William Courten. The library was the foundation of the collection of the British Museum.

Sloane, William Milligan (1850-1928). American historian, best-known for his Life of Napoleon Bonaparte (1894-1896).

Slogger Williams. In Thomas Hughes' TOM BROWN'S SCHOOL DAYS, a bully whom Tom finally vanquishes.

Slop, Dr. In Sterne's TRISTRAM SHANDY, a choleric, enthusiastic, and bigoted physician. He breaks down Tristram's nose, and crushes Uncle Toby's fingers to a jelly in attempting to demonstrate the use and virtues of a newly invented pair of obstetrical forceps. The nickname was later given by Wm. Hone to Sir John Stoddart (d. 1856), a choleric physician who assailed Napoleon most virulently in The Times (1812-1816).

Slope, Obadiah. In Trollope's Barchester Towers (see BARSETSHIRE), a crafty schemer who pits his strength against Mrs. PROUDIE in the effort to control the policies of Bishop Proudie.

Slosson, Edwin Emery (1865-1929). American chemist and science popularizer. Creative Chemistry (1919); Easy Lessons in Einstein (1920); etc.

Slote, Hon. Bardwell. In B. E. Woolf's comedy The Mighty Dollar (Am., 1875), an American politician, Congressman from the Cohosh district. He is a farcical character typifying all the crudities and evils of politics at its worst.

Slough of Despond, the. A period or fit of great depression from the deep bog in Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS which CHRISTIAN must pass on his way to the Wicket Gate. Neighbor Pliable will not attempt to pass it, and turns back. While Christian is floundering in the slough, Help comes to his aid:

The name of the slough was Despond. Here they wallowed for a time, and Christian, because of the burden that was on his back, began to sink into the mire. This miry slough is such a place as cannot be mended. It is the descent whither the scum and filth that attends conviction of sin doth continually run, and therefore is it called the Slough of Despond; for still, as the sinner is awakened about his lost condition there arise in his soul many fears and doubts and discouraging apprehensions, which all of them get together, and settle in this place, and this is the reason of the badness of this ground

Slowboy, Tilly. In Dickens' CRICKET ON THE HEARTH, nurse and general help of Mr. and Mrs. PEERYBINGLE. She "was of a spare and straight shape, insomuch that her garments appeared to be in constant danger of sliding off her shoulders. Her costume was remarkable for its very partial development, and always afforded glimpses at the back of a pair of dead-green stays." Tilly is very fond of the baby, but has a surprising talent for getting it into difficulties, bringing its head in perpetual contact with doors, dressers, stair-rails, bedposts, and so on.

Sludge, Gammer. In Scott's KENILWORTH, the landlady of Erasmus Holiday, the schoolmaster in White Horse Vale.

Dickie Sludge or "Flibbertigibbet." Her dwarf grandson, "a queer, shambling ill-made urchin."

Sludge, Mr. Hero of Browning's dramatic monologue Mr. Sludge the Medium in his Dramatis Personae (1864), a Yankee spiritualist, who speaks in justification of his impostor trade. The poem arose out of Browning's strong aversion to the American spiritualist Daniel D. Home.

Slumkey, Samuel. In Dickens' PICKWICK PAPERS, the "blue" candidate for the representation of the borough of Eatanswill in Parliament. His opponent is Horatio Fizkin, who represents the "buff" interest.

Sly, Christopher. A keeper of bears and a tinker, son of a peddler, and a sad, drunken sot in the Induction of Shakespeare's TAMING OF THE SHREW. Shakespeare mentions him as a well-known character of Wincot, a hamlet near Stratford-on-Avon, and it is more than probable that in him we have an actual portrait of a contemporary.

Sly is found dead drunk by a lord, who commands his servants to put him to bed, and on his waking to attend upon him like a lord and bamboozle him into the belief that he is a great man. The play is performed for his delectation. The same trick was played by the Caliph Haroun al Raschid on Abou Hassan, the rich merchant, in The Sleeper Awakened (Arabian Nights), and by Philippe the Good, Duke of Burgundy, on his marriage with Eleanor, as given in Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy (Pt. II, sec. 2, num. 4).

small beer. Properly, beer of only slight alcoholic strength; hence, trivialities; persons or things of small consequence.

Small Boy and Others, A (1913) by Henry James. An autobiographical work which tells of the life of Henry and William James in their early years. A continuation of it is Notes of a Son and Brother (1914).

Small Endians. See LITTLE ENDIANS.

smalls. The undergraduates' name at Cambridge for the first of the examinations for the B.A. degree, also called Little-Go; about corresponding to the Responsens at Oxford.

Small Souls. The first of a series of novels by the Dutch author, Louis Couperus (1863–1923), dealing with the Van Lowe family, a large and diverse group, many of them united by little except the custom of pleasing old Granny Lowe by spending Sunday evenings together at her home. The other novels of the series are The Later Life, The Twilight of the Souls, and Dr. Adrian. Constance Van Lowe causes a great scandal by her love affair, which ruins the career of the brilliant young diplomat Van Welcke, and the first books deal with the married life of this unhappy couple, who are held together only by their intense love for their small son Adrian. The Twilight of the Souls is the story of Gerritt Van Lowe, an apparently healthy, normal member of the family, with a pleasant, domestic wife and large brood of children, who, however, gradually goes to pieces under the influence of a morbid, neurotic fear. Among the other characters who appear throughout the novels are Ernest Van Lowe, a sensitive dilettante, who is as obviously morbid as his brother Gerritt was secretly so; Paul, the foppish idler (whom some critics consider a spokesman for the author's ideas) and the devoted old-maid sister and aunt, who gives herself unstintingly, yet nourishes a bitter resentment at being so made use of. Dr. Adrian tells of the career of Adrian Van Welcke, who becomes a physician with a strange power of healing.

Smart, Christopher (1722–1771). English poet. His best-known poem is the sonorous Song to David (1763), which was written while he was confined in an asylum.

Smart Set, The. American magazine of wit, satire, and literature, founded in 1890 as a periodical for the amusement of members of New York society, but best known for its issues between 1914 and 1924 under the editorship of H. L. MENCKEN and George Jean NATHAN. During this period it served as a vehicle for the views of Mencken and Nathan, becoming particularly celebrated for its satirical attacks on the average American middle-class standards of the day. It published the works of such leading 20th-century authors as D. H. LAWRENCE, James JOYCE, George MOORE, and Ford MADOX FORD, all of whom it introduced to the American magazine public, Eugene O'NEILL, Waldo FRANK, F. Scott FITZGERALD, and Lewis MUMFORD. In 1924 The Smart Set was acquired by W. R. HEARST, and its policies were changed. It ceased publication in 1930.

Smattering of Ignorance, A. A book (1940) by Oscar LEVANT, dealing with music.

Smectymnuus. The title of a celebrated pamphlet containing an attack upon Episcopacy (1641). The title is composed of the initial letters of the five writers, SM (Stephen Marshall), EC (Edmund Calamy), TY (Thomas Young), MN (Matthew Newcomen), UUS (William Spurstow). Sometimes one U is omitted. MILTON published An Apology for Smectymnuus the following year.

Smedley, Agnes (1890–). American journalist. As a correspondent for German and Italian left-wing newspapers, she went to China and has tried to interpret Chinese Communism to the world. Her books, written from the Communist position, have been Red Flood over China (1934); China Fights Back (1938); Battle Hymn of China (1943); etc.

Smedley, William Thomas (1858–1920). Well-known American magazine and book illustrator of the '90s. Illustrated books by Thomas Nelson Page, John Kendrick Bangs, William Dean Howells, etc.

Smerdyakov. In THE BROTHERS KARAMAZOV, the weak-witted, illegitimate fourth son, who is held as a servant to his father. The cynical, Nihilistic ideas of Ivan have an unfortunate influence on Smerdyakov, leading him eventually to commit patricide.

Smetana, Bedřich (1824–1884). Bohemian composer and conductor. His opera, The Bartered Bride (1866), won international acclaim as virtually the national opera of Czechoslovakia. His symphonic poem The Moldau, from the cycle My Fatherland, is a very popular concert piece.

Smike. In Dickens' NICHOLAS NICKLEBY, a poor half-starved, half-witted boy, the son of Ralph Nickleby. Nicholas Nickleby takes pity on him at DOTHEBOYS HALL and when he leaves, Smike runs away to join his friend. Nicholas thereafter takes care of the poor half-witted creature till he dies.

Smiles, Samuel (1812–1904). Popular Scottish writer. His Self-Help (1859) was a considerable success. Also author of a series of biographies of industrial leaders.

Smiley, Jim. The principal character in Mark Twain's Jim Smiley and His Jumping Frog. See JUMPING FROG.

Smith, Adam (1723–1790). Scottish economist. His major work, Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations (1776), has always been considered to have laid the foundation of the science of political economy. He was also a member of the London literary club which included Dr. Johnson, Garrick, Reynolds, etc.

Smith, Alexander (1830-1867). Scottish poet and author of a book of essays, Dreamthorp (1863).

Smith, Alfred Emanuel (1873-1944). Famous American political leader. Governor of New York (1919-1920; 1923-1928); Democratic candidate for President (1928). He was president of Empire State Inc., and manager of the Empire State Building in New York. Cf. his autobiography, Up to Now (1929).

Smith, Arthur Cosslett (1852-1926). American author of exquisitely written short stories, collected in two books, The Monk and The Dancer (1900) and The Turquoise Cup and the Desert (1903). He was a Rochester lawyer who wrote only by avocation and all too little.

Smith, Benjamin Eli (1857-1913). American lexicographer. Managing editor (1882-1894) and editor-in-chief (from 1894) of The Century Dictionary and Cyclopaedia, The Century Cyclopaedia of Names, and The Century Atlas.

Smith, Chard Powers (1894-). American poet and novelist. Most successful in his novels Artillery of Time (1939) and Ladies Day (1941).

Smith, Charles Henry (1826-1903). American humorist of the South who took the pen name of Bill Arp. His dialect stories in the lingo of the Georgia "cracker" are said to have influenced Joel Chandler Harris.

Smith, David Stanley (1877-). American music educator and composer. Dean of the Yale school of music (1920-1940). Conductor of the New Haven Symphony Orchestra (from 1919).

Smith, Dodie. English playwright. Author of Autumn Crocus (1930) and Dear Octopus (1938), two plays which were produced in New York with some success. Up to 1935 she used the pen name C. L. Anthony.

Smith, Lady Eleanor Furneaux (1902-1945). English novelist, daughter of the first Earl of Birkenhead. Best known for Red Wagon (1930); Flamenco (1931); and her autobiography Life's a Circus (1939). She had gypsy blood and wrote about gypsies, as in Tzigane, or Romany (1935), and belonged to several societies concerned with gypsy history and customs.

Smith, Ellison DuRant (1864-1944). Commonly known as "Cotton Ed Smith." U.S. Senator (1909-1944).

Smith, Ernest Bramah. Pen name Ernest Bramah (1869-1942). English detective-story writer. Widely known for the suave and witty Kai Lung books: The Wallet of Kai Lung (1900); Kai Lung's Golden Hours (1922); etc. He invented the blind detective Max Carrados.

Smith, Francis Hopkinson (1838-1915). American artist, engineer, and writer of charming stories, novelettes, and novels, notably Colonel Carter of Carterville (1891).

Smith, George (1789-1846). Scotch founder of the English publishing house of Smith, Elder & Co. His son, George Smith (1824-1901), published the early works of John Ruskin; Jane Eyre by Charlotte Brontë; Henry Esmond by Thackeray; the works of Robert Browning and Matthew Arnold; the Dictionary of National Biography; etc. and founded the Cornhill Magazine of which Thackeray was an editor.

Smith, Goldwin (1823-1910). British historian active in politics as an anti-imperialist and opponent of the Boer War. Regius professor of history at Oxford (1858-1866). Disraeli made him a character in his novel Lothair (1870).

Smith, Harry Bache (1860-1936). Popular American librettist. Author of the books for comic operas by Reginald DE KOVEN, Victor HERBERT, Irving BERLIN, and Jerome KERN.

Smith, James (1737?-1814). Author of Life and Travels (1799), one of the best source books on pioneer life in the Ohio Valley.

Smith, James (1775-1839) and his brother Horatio or Horace Smith (1779-1849). English humorists. Joint authors of Rejected Addresses (1812), which is a classic of parody. Its victims include Wordsworth, Southey, Coleridge, Scott, Byron, etc.

Smith, Jedediah Strong (1798-1831). A fur-trader and Western explorer whose explorations to South California are embodied in The Ashley and Smith Explorations by H. C. Dale (1918). In his novel, The Splendid Wayfaring (1920), John G. Neihardt has made him the chief figure. Cf. also The Song of Jed Smith (1941), the last book in Neihardt's epic cycle of the West.

Smith, Jessie Willcox (died 1935). American painter of children and illustrator of books for children.

Smith, John (1580-1631). One of the most widely known early English colonists in America. He came to Jamestown, Virginia, in 1607 and was on the governing council of the colony. The legend of his being rescued from death by Pocahontas, the daughter of Powhatan, is based on his own story and has become a favorite in American history. He explored the coast of New England and was finally captured by the French in 1615.

Smith, Johnston. Pseudonym under which Stephen CRANE published his novel Maggie: A Girl of the Streets.

Smith, Joseph (1805-1844). Founder of the Mormon Church (1830). He asserted that he had received the Book of Mormon mystically from an angel in 1827 and governed the Mormon Colony in Nauvoo, Illinois, despotically. Having authorized polygamy, he was arrested and put into jail by non-Mormons (1844) and became the victim of mob violence. His son, Joseph Smith (1832-1914), opposed polygamy, moved to Iowa, increased the membership of the church to over 70,000 and made the headquarters of his own sect in Independence, Missouri. His nephew, Joseph Fielding Smith (1838-1918), went with the Mormons under Brigham Young to Utah (1848) and became president of the Mormon Church there.

Smith, Justin Harvey (1857-1930). American historian who won the Pulitzer prize in 1920 for The War With Mexico (2 vols.; 1919).

Smith, Logan Pearsall (1865-1946). Anglo-American essayist. Born in New Jersey, he lived in London most of his mature life and became, like Henry James, an expatriate. His brief, incisive, witty essays, Trivia (1902) and More Trivia (1921), have been collected with other essays into one volume as All Trivia (1934).

Smith, Preserved (1880-1941). American professor of history at Cornell (1922-1941). A History of Modern Culture (2 vols.; 1930-1934) is his largest work. He is especially known for his studies of Luther (1911) and ERASMUS (1923). Max EASTMAN, in Enjoyment of Living (1948), calls him "a thin dark mild shy edge of a man."

Smith, Roswell (1829-1892). American publisher. Originally associated with Charles Scribner, he founded the Century Company (1881) and continued the old Scribner's Monthly under the new name of Century Magazine. He published The Century Dictionary and Cyclopaedia (1891).

Smith, Samuel Francis (1808-1895). American clergyman born in Boston, who wrote America (My Country, 'tis of Thee), first published in 1832.

Smith, Seba (1792-1868). American satirist. Author of a series of letters by "Major Jack Downing," a supposed Yankee peddler. A first series appeared in the Portland Courier (1829), another in the Washington Daily National Intelligence (1847). The homespun humor of the letters is of the general type that was later made famous by Mr. DOOLEY and Will ROGERS.

Smith, Sidney (1877-1935). Well-known American cartoonist who worked for the Chicago Tribune (1911-1935) and created the characters of "The Gumps."

Smith, Stephen. A character in Hardy's PAIR OF BLUE EYES.

Smith, Sydney (1771-1845). Famous London clergyman and wit. Daniel Webster struck him like "a steam engine in trousers." His query, "Who reads an American book?" attracted unfavorable attention.

Smith, Thorne (1892-1934). Fantastic American novelist, whose ribald books, The Night Life of the Gods (1931); Turnabout (1931); Topper Takes a Trip (1932); etc., have had great popularity. Several of them have been made into successful moving pictures featuring Roland Young and others.

Smith, Sir William (1813-1893). English classical and Biblical lexicographer, compiler of dictionaries of antiquities, biography, and geography. Editor of Quarterly Review (1867-1893).

Smith, Winchell (1871-1933). American playwright whose dramatization of George Barr McCutcheon's Brewster's Millions (1906) was an enormous success. His play, Lightnin' (1918), written with Frank Bacon, had a run of 1291 performances.

Smithfield. A famous market and district in London. In the time of Queen Mary it was the place for burning heretics at the stake.

Smith of Nottingham. Applied to conceited persons who imagine that no one is able to compete with themselves. Ray, in his Collection of Proverbs, has the following couplet:

The little Smith of Nottingham
Who doth the work that no man can.

Smithson, James (1765-1829). British scientist who bequeathed over £100,000 to the United States, by means of which was founded in Washington, D.C., the Smithsonian Institution (established by Act of Congress in 1846).

Smoke. A novel by TURGENEV (1867). The unscrupulous heroine, Irene, cannot resist the temptation of reviving the smoldering fires in the heart of Litvinov, a former lover, whom she has refused and now sees betrothed to another. She succeeds in ruining his life, but willfully draws back at the last minute from the very plan she has urged.

Smoke and Steel. A well-known book of poems (1920) by Carl SANDBURG.

Smoke Bellew. A tale of adventures in the Klondike by Jack LONDON (1912).

Smoky City. Pittsburgh. See under CITY.

Smollett, Tobias George (1721-1771). Scotch-born English novelist and surgeon, known for his satirical picaresque novels. His works include RODERICK RANDOM (1748); PEREGRINE PICKLE (1751); Ferdinand, Count Fathom (see FATHOM; 1753); Sir Launcelot Greaves (see LAUNCELOT; 1760); The Expedition of Humphry Clinker (see HUMPHRY; 1771); The Tears of Scotland (1746), a poem; a translation of DON QUIXOTE (1753); History of England (1757); The Reprisal (1757), a farce; Travels in France and Italy (1766), essays; The Adventures of an Atom (1769), a satire on English public affairs. Early in his career Smollett served as surgeon's mate with the British West Indian naval squadron and lived for a number of years on the island of Jamaica. During his last years he resided in Italy, where he died.

Smoot, Reed (1862-1941). American politician and Mormon leader. See HAWLEY-SMOOT TARIFF.

Smuts, Jan Christian (1870-). Famous Boer leader in the Boer War, who, during World War I, organized the South African forces. Prime minister of the Union of South Africa (1919-1924; 1939-1948). He was most influential in World War II, and was made field marshal in 1941.

Snagsby, Mr. In Dickens' BLEAK HOUSE, the law-stationer in Cook's Court, Cursitor Street. He is a very mild specimen of humanity in terrible awe of his termagant wife, whom he calls euphemistically his "little woman." He precedes most of his remarks by the words, "Not to put too fine a point upon it."

Snaith, John Collis (1876-1936). English novelist of light fiction who first received notice for his Broke of Covenden (1904).

Snake, Mr. In Sheridan's SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL, a traitorous ally of Lady SNEERWELL, who has the effrontery to say to her, "You paid me extremely liberally for propagating the lie, but unfortunately I have been offered double to speak the truth." He says, Ah, sir, consider, I live by the baseness of my character; and if it were once known that I have been betrayed into an honest action, I shall lose every friend I have in the world v. 3.

snark. The imaginary animal invented by Lewis CARROLL as the subject of his mock heroic poem, The Hunting of the Snark (1876). It is most elusive and gives endless trouble, and when eventually the hunters think they have tracked it down their quarry proves to be but a Boojum. The name (a PORTMANTEAU WORD of snake and shark) has hence sometimes been given to the quests of dreamers and visionaries.

It was one of D. G. ROSSETTI's beliefs that in The Hunting of the Snark Lewis Carroll was caricaturing him and "pulling his leg."

Jack LONDON wrote a travel book called The Cruise of the Snark (1911).

Sneak, Jerry. In Foote's comedy The Mayor of Garratt (1763), a hen-pecked pin-maker; a paltry, pitiful, prying sneak. If ever he summons up a little manliness, his wife begins to cry, and Jerry is instantly softened.

He has become a type of the hen-pecked husband.

Mrs. Sneak. Wife of Jerry, a domineering tartar of a woman, who keeps her lord and master well under her thumb. She is the daughter of Sir Jacob Jollup.

Jerry Sneak Russell. So Samuel Russell the actor (1766-1845) was called, because of his inimitable representation of "Jerry Sneak."

Sneerwell, Lady. In Sheridan's SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL, a scandalmonger, the widow of a City knight. Mr. Snake says, "Every one allows that Lady Sneerwell can do more with a word or a look than many can with the most labored detail, even when they happen to have a little truth on their side to support it." She herself admits:

Wounded myself, in the early part of my life, by the envenomed tongue of slander, I confess I have since known no pleasure equal to the reducing of others to the level of my own reputation. i. 1.

snickersnee. From "snick and snee." A knife; originally, "a combat with knives." Cf. Thackeray's ballad, Little Billee:

While Jack pulled out his snickersnee. . . .

Snobs, Book of. See under BOOK.

Snodgrass, Augustus. In Dickens' PICKWICK PAPERS, an M.P.C., i.e., Member of the Pickwick Club, a poetical young man, who travels about with Mr. Pickwick, "to inquire into the source of the Hampstead ponds." He marries Miss Wardle.

Snorri Sturluson (1178-1241). Icelandic historian and head of the highest court of Iceland. He is the author of the famous poetic chronicle of Norse mythology known as the Heimskýngla and also of the Prose Edda. See EDDA.

Snout, Tom. In Shakespeare's MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, the tinker, who takes part in the "tragedy" of PYRAMUS AND THISBE, played before the Duke and Duchess of Athens "on their wedding day at night." Next to Peter QUINCE and Nick BOTTOM the weaver, Snout is by far the most self-important man of the troupe. He plays the part of the Wall that separates the two lovers.

Snow, Edgar Parks (1905-). American writer on China. Correspondent for several New York and London newspapers and contributor to the Saturday Evening Post. He traveled with the Chinese Red Army for five months in 1936. Author of Red Star Over China (1937); The Political Battle of Asia (1941); etc.

Snowe, Lucy. The heroine of Charlotte BRONTE's novel Villette (1853).

Snow-Image, The, and Other Twice Told Tales. A book of short stories (1851) by Nathaniel HAWTHORNE. It contains The Great Stone Face and other well-known stories.

Snow King. See under KING.

Snubbin, Sergeant. In Dickens' PICKWICK PAPERS, a lawyer retained by Mr. Perker for the defense in the famous case of "Bardell v. Pickwick." His clerk is named Mallard, and his junior Phunky, "an infant barrister," very much looked down upon by his senior.

Snug. In Shakespeare's MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, the joiner, who takes part in the "lamentable comedy" of PYRAMUS AND THISBE, played before the Duke and Duchess of Athens "on their wedding day at night." His role is the "lion's part." He asks the manager Peter QUINCE if he has the "lion's part written out, for," says he, "I am slow of memory." Being told he can do it extempore, for it consists of nothing but roaring, he consents to undertake it.

soap or soft soap. Flattery, especially of an oily, unctuous kind.

soap opera. Trade and journalistic term for a type of American daytime radio dramatic serial, at the height of its popularity in the latter years of the 1930's; so called because most of the serials were broadcast to advertise laundry soap of various brands. The typical soap opera, appealing to an audience made up almost exclusively of housewives listening as they did their household tasks, consisted of a succession of complex melodramatic and sentimental adventures within a single family, the action being centered about a young, beautiful, and resourceful woman who at the same time was usually also a wife and mother. Among the best-known serials of recent years were The Goldbergs; John's Other Wife; Just Plain Bill; The Man I Married; The Road of Life; The O'Neills; Life Can Be Beautiful; Joyce Jordan, Girl Interne; Young Dr. Malone; Portia Faces Life; Stella Dallas; Young Widder Brown; Amanda of Honey-moon Hill; Big Sister; Ma Perkins; etc. In 1948 the NEW YORKER ran some acid articles on them by James THURBER.

Soapy Sam. A nickname applied to Samuel Wilberforce (1805-1873), bishop of Oxford and Winchester, who had unctuous manners.

So Big. A novel (1924) by Edna FERBER.

Sobersides. A grave, steady-going, serious-minded person.

Sobrino. In Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO, one of the most valiant of the Saracen army, called "The Sage." He counsels Agramant to entrust the fate of the war to a single combat, stipulating that the nation whose champion is worsted should be tributary to the other. ROGERO is chosen for the pagan champion, and RINALDO for the Christian army. When Rogero is overthrown, Agramant breaks the compact. Sobrino is greatly displeased, and soon afterwards receives the rite of Christian baptism.

sob stuff. A U.S. slang expression describing newspaper, film, or other stories of a highly sentimental kind. Sob Sisters are "human interest" reporters.

Social Contract, The (Le Contrat social). Chief work of J. J. ROUSSEAU (1762), a treatise on the origins and organization of government and the rights of citizens. In keeping with many works on political science of the time, it bases its arguments on the theory that the origin of government first lay in a mutual contract between the citizens and the rulers for the general good of the community. The main principles set forth by the treatise are the equality of all citizens before the law; the merging of the interests of the individual with those of the state; the popular state as the "infallible" expression of the general will, although the despotic state is not; and hence the necessity of the individual's surrendering certain of his private rights for the good of the popular state, or the community, although if a tyrannical monarch requires the surrender of individual rights, the "contract" is considered void. Some critics assert that the injustices of collectivism and "democratic despotism" during the French Revolution and later in the 19th and 20th centuries were in part derived from this work of Rousseau's.

socialism. Basically the philosophy of socialism involves the creation of a cooperative society and a more equitable distribution of wealth. There have always been attempts to outline the perfect society. This was the subject of PLATO's Republic and of Sir Thomas MORE's UTOPIA. Many names and many experiments are connected with the name of socialism. Some have been utopian and some more scientifically managed, as for instance, the experiments of Robert OWEN in England. In 1847 MARX and ENGELS issued the Communist Manifesto which laid down certain very definite principles concerning socialism. There are today various kinds of socialists. One of the best-known groups has been the Fabian Society in England to which belonged George Bernard Shaw, Sidney Webb and others.

Social Justice. See COUGHLIN, FATHER.

Society for Pure English (S.P.E.). Founded (1913) by a committee of which Robert Bridges, Sir Walter Raleigh and Logan Pearsall Smith were members with the object to direct popular taste and education in the development of the English language.

Society of Friends, see QUAKERS.

Socinus, Faustus (1539-1604). Italian theologian who developed the doctrine of his uncle Laelius Socinus (1525-1562) into the anti-Trinitarian (unitarian) system known as Socinianism. Condemned by the Inquisition (1559). Organized his followers into a church at the Synod of Brześć (1587) in Poland.

Socrates (ca. 469-399 B.C.). The great Greek philosopher, who was born and died at Athens. He used to call himself "the midwife of men's thoughts," and out of his intellectual school sprang those of Plato and the Dialectic system, Euclid and the Megaric, Aristippus and the Cyrenaic, Antisthenes and the Cynic. Cicero said of him that "he brought down philosophy from the heavens to earth." He was condemned to death for the corruption of youth by introducing new gods (thus being guilty of impiety) and drank hemlock in prison, surrounded by his disciples. Socrates is caricatured in Aristophanes' comedy THE CLOUDS.

Socratic irony. Leading on your opponent in an argument by simulating ignorance, so that he "ties himself in knots" and eventually falls an easy prey—a form of procedure used with great effect by Socrates.

the Socratic method. The method of conducting an argument, imparting information, etc., by means of question and answer.

the English Socrates. Dr. Samuel JOHNSON, so called by Boswell.

the Jewish Socrates. Moses Mendelssohn (1729-1786).

Soddy, Frederick (1877-). English chemist who developed with Rutherford the theory of the atomic disintegration of radioactive elements. He was awarded the Nobel prize for chemistry in 1921.

Sodom and Gomorrah. In the Old Testament, two cities of the plains that were destroyed with fire and brimstone from heaven because of their wickedness. Abraham persuaded Jehovah to spare Sodom if ten righteous men could be found there, but this condition was not fulfilled. Lot and his wife and daughters were the only inhabitants who escaped from the doomed city, and Lot's wife, looking back, became a pillar of salt. See also CITIES OF THE PLAIN.

Sodome et Gomorrhé. See CITIES OF THE PLAIN.

Sofronia. A young Christian of Jerusalem, the heroine of an episode in Tasso's JERUSALEM DELIVERED. Aladine, King of Jerusalem, steals from a Christian church an image of the Virgin, being told by a magician that it is a palladium, and if it is set up in a mosque, the Virgin will forsake the Christian army and favor the Mohammedan. The image is accordingly set up in a mosque, but during the night is carried off by someone. Aladine, greatly enraged, orders the instant execution of all his Christian subjects, but to prevent this massacre, Sofronia accuses herself of the offense. Her lover Olindo, hearing that Sofronia is sentenced to death, presents himself before the King and says that he and not Sofronia is the real offender; whereupon the King orders both to instant execution. But CLORINDA, the Amazon, obtains their pardon, and Sofronia leaves the stake to join Olindo at the altar of matrimony.

Soglow, Otto (1900-). American humorous artist. Famous for his series, The Little King (1933), which first appeared in the NEW YORKER. He has illustrated books of verse by Ogden NASH, and others, including several of his own.

Sohrab and Rustum. A narrative poem in blank verse by Matthew ARNOLD (1853), dealing with the legendary Persian hero RUSTUM and his son Sohrab. The two meet in single combat, in ignorance of their relationship, and Sohrab is slain. See also CARTHON.

soi-disant (Fr.). Self-styled, would-be; generally used of pretenders, as "a soi-disant gentleman," i.e., a snob.

Sokolnikov, Grigori (1888-). Russian Communist politician. Escaped from exile in Siberia and lived abroad (1907-1917); member of the Russian delegation negotiating with Germany the treaty of Brest-Litovsk (1918); ambassador to Britain (1929-1932). Arrested and imprisoned because of his affiliation with Trotsky (1937).

Sokoloff, Nikolai (1886-). Well-known Russian-born violinist and orchestra leader. He conducted the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra (1918-1933).

solano.

ask no favor during the solano. A popular Spanish proverb, meaning, "ask no favor during a time of trouble or adversity." The solano (from Lat. solanus, "sun") of Spain is a southeast wind, extremely hot, and loaded with fine dust; it produces giddiness and irritation.

Soldan or Sowdan. A corruption of sultan, meaning in medieval romance the Saracen king; but, with the usual inaccuracy of these medieval sources, we have the Soldan of Egypt, the Soudan of Persia, the Sowdan of Babylon, etc., all represented as accompanied by grim Saracens to torment Christians.

In Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE (V. viii), the Soldan typifies Philip II of Spain who used all his power to bribe and seduce the subjects of Elizabeth, here figuring as Queen Mercilla.

Sir Artegal demands of the Soldan the release of the damsel "held as wrongful prisoner," and the Soldan "swearing and banning most blasphemously," mounts his "high chariot," and prepares to maintain his cause. Prince Arthur encounters him "on the green," and after a severe combat uncovers his shield, at sight of which the Soldan and all his followers take to flight. The "swearing and banning" typify the excommunications thundered out against Elizabeth; the "high chariot" is the Spanish Armada; the "green" is the sea; the "uncovering of the shield" indicates that the Armada was put to flight, not by man's might, but by the power of God.

soldier of fortune. A man who lives by his wits; chevalier d'industrie. Referring to those men in medieval times who let themselves for hire into any army. Soldiers of Fortune is the title of a novel of adventure by Richard Harding Davis (1897), dealing with a revolution in a South American republic. The hero is Robert Clay, a young engineer, general manager of the Valencia Mining Company in Olancho. The novel was dramatized in 1902.

Soldiers Three, and Other Stories. A volume of short stories of life in India by Rudyard Kipling (1888). The "soldiers three" are the famous trio, Ortheris, Learoyd, and Mulvaney. See also THE THREE MUSKETEERS.

solecism. A deviation from correct idiom or grammar; from the Greek soloikos, "speaking incorrectly," so named from Soloi, a town in Cilicia, the Attic colonists of which spoke a debased form of Greek.

The word is also applied to any barbarism, impropriety, unmannerly act, or breach of etiquette or decorum.

the Solemn League and Covenant. A league entered into by the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, the Westminster Assembly of English Divines, and the English Parliament in 1643, for the establishment of Presbyterianism and suppression of Roman Catholicism in both countries. Charles II swore to the Scots that he would abide by it, and therefore they crowned him in 1651 at Dunbar; but at the Restoration he not only rejected the Covenant, but had it burnt by the common hangman.

Solid South. An expression denoting the political unity of the American states south of Mason and Dixon's line, which in any general election, can be counted upon in advance to go Democratic.

Solinus. In Shakespeare's COMEDY OF ERRORS, the Duke of Ephesus. He is obliged to pass the sentence of the law on Aegeon, a Syracusan merchant who has dared to set foot in Ephesus. When, however, the Duke discovers that the man who has saved his life, and whom he best loves, is the son of Aegeon, he releases his prisoner, who thereupon settles in Ephesus.

solipsism. A philosophical doctrine, a development of the theories of IDEALISM, which maintains that, since we have knowledge only of our own ideas, or mental states, only our ideas, or mental states, can be held to exist. David HUME was the leading solipsist in the history of philosophy, and John LOCKE and George BERKELEY were forerunners of the doctrine.

Solness, Halvard. Titular hero of Ibsen's MASTER BUILDER.

Sologub, Fëdor (1863-1927). Russian symbolist novelist and dramatist. His tales have been called "a curious blend of Chekhov and Poe."

Solomine. In Turgenev's VIRGIN SOIL, a manufacturer whose practical reforms are in sharp contrast to the schemes of the idealistic young nihilists. See NIHILISM.

Solomon. The wisest and most magnificent of the kings of Israel, son of DAVID and BATH-SHEBA. Aside from his wise choice of "an understanding heart," he is perhaps most celebrated for his building of the famous temple that bore his name and his entertainment of the Queen of SHEBA. The Biblical narrative (1 Kings ii-xi) relates that "he had seven hundred wives, princesses, and three hundred concubines; and his wives turned away his heart." Nevertheless "King Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth in riches and in wisdom." The glory of his reign gave rise to innumerable legends, many of which are related in the Talmud and the Koran.

the English Solomon. James I (reigned 1603-1625), whom Sully called "the wisest fool in Christendom."

the Solon of Parnassus. So Voltaire called BOILEAU, in allusion to his Art of Poetry.

Solon Shingle, see SHINGLE, SOLON.

solstice (from Lat. sol, "sun," and sistit, "stands"). The summer solstice is June 21; the winter solstice is December 22; so called because on or about these dates the sun reaches its extreme northern and southern points in the ecliptic and appears to stand still before it turns back on its apparent course.

Solvay, Ernest (1838-1922). Belgian industrial chemist who invented the Solvay process for manufacturing soda from common salt.

Solveig. In Ibsen's PEER GYNT, the young girl who leaves her family for love of Peer. She remains faithful to him, and welcomes him home long years afterwards.

Solyman. In Tasso's JERUSALEM DELIVERED, King of the Turks, whose capital is Nice. Being driven from his kingdom, he flees to Egypt and is there appointed leader of the Arabs (Bk. ix). He and Argantes are by far the most doughty of the pagan knights. Solyman is slain by RINALDO (Bk. xx), and Argantes by TANCRED.

Soma. An intoxicating drink anciently made, with mystic rites and incantations, from the juice of some Indian plant by the priests, and drunk by the Brahmins as well as offered as libations to their gods. It was fabled to have been brought from heaven by a falcon, or by the daughters of the Sun, and it was itself personified as a god. Soma is one of the most important of the old Vedic deities, a sort of Hindu Bacchus. All of the 114 hymns in the ninth book of the Rig Veda are invocations in his honor. In later mythology, Soma represented the moon, which was supposed to be gradually drunk up by the gods and then filled up again. to drink the Soma. To become immortal, or as a god.

Somehow Good. A novel (1908) by William DE MORGAN.

She goes to Chicago to study, has an unhappy love affair with Fred Ottenburg, a wealthy young man who cannot obtain a divorce to marry her, spends ten years in further study in Europe and in performance, and eventually becomes a soprano at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York City, famous for her Wagnerian rôles. Thea is to some extent drawn from the famous Wagnerian singer, Olive Fremstad.

Song of the Shirt. A famous poem by T. Hood (1843). It begins,

With fingers weary and worn,
With eyelids heavy and red,
A woman sat in unwomanly rags,
Plying her needle and thread.
Stitch, stitch, stitch!
In poverty, hunger, and dirt,
And still with a voice of dolorous pitch
She sang "The song of the shirt."

Song to David. See under CHRISTOPHER SMART.

Sonia. The heroine of Dostoyevsky's CRIME AND PUNISHMENT.

Sonnambula, La (The Sleepwalker). An opera by BELINI (1831), book by ROMANI. The "sleepwalker" is Amina, the miller's daughter. She is betrothed to Elvino, a rich young farmer, but the night before the wedding is discovered in the bed of Count Rodolpho. This very ugly circumstance makes the farmer break off the match and promise marriage to Lisa, the innkeeper's daughter. The Count now interferes, and assures Elvino that the miller's daughter is a sleepwalker. While they are still talking she is seen walking on the edge of the mill-roof while the huge mill-wheel is turning rapidly. She then crosses a crazy old bridge and comes into the midst of the assembly, wakes up and runs into the arms of her lover. Elvino, convinced of her innocence, marries her, and Lisa is resigned to Alessio, whose paramour she has been.

Sonnenschein, Edward Adolf (1851-1929). Well-known English grammarian whose brother William Swan (1855-1931) was an established publisher in London.

sonnet. A poetic form of fourteen heroic lines, that is, fourteen lines of five-foot iambic verse. There are two main types of sonnet—(1) the Shakespearean sonnet in which the lines are grouped in three quatrains (with six alternating rhymes) followed by a detached rhymed couplet, which is apt to be epigrammatic; (2) the Italian form illustrated by Milton, Wordsworth, Keats, etc., in which the fourteen lines are divided into an octave of two rhyme-sounds arranged abba abba and a sestet of two additional rhyme-sounds that may be variously arranged. The latter form tends to divide the thought into two opposing or complementary phases of the same idea.

The two types of sonnet are illustrated below—

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
Thou art more lovely and more temperate:
Rough winds do shake the darling buds of May,
And summer's lease hath all too short a date:

Sometime too hot the eye of heaven shines,
And often is his gold complexion dimm'd;
And every fair from fair sometime declines,
By chance, or nature's changing course, untrimm'd

But thy eternal summer shall not fade
Nor lose possession of that fair thou owest;
Nor shall Death brag thou wanderest in his shade,
When in eternal lines to time thou growest:

So long as men can breathe, or eyes can see,
So long lives this, and this gives life to thee.
Shakespeare, To His Love.

Much have I travell'd in the realms of gold
And many goodly states and kingdoms seen;
Round many western islands have I been
Which bards in fealty to Apollo hold.
Oft of one wide expanse had I been told
That deep-brow'd Homer ruled as his demesne:
Yet did I never breathe its pure serene Till I heard Chapman speak out loud and bold:

—Then felt I like some watcher of the skies
When a new planet swims into his ken;
Or like stout Cortez, when with eagle eyes
He stared at the Pacific—and all his men
Look'd at each other with a wild surmise—
Silent, upon a peak in Darien.
Keats, On First Looking into Chapman's Homer.

The first celebrated user of the sonnet form was PETRARCH. It was introduced into French by Clément MAROT and into English by WYATT and SURREY. During the latter half of the 16th century in England sonnet sequences, singing usually of an unkind or unapproachable lady and disappointed passion in the Petrarchan tradition, were a widespread literary fad. Leading authors of sonnet sequences at this time were Thomas WATSON, Sir Philip SIDNEY, Samuel DANIEL, Michael DRAYTON, Edmund SPENSER, Henry CONSTABLE, Barnabe BARNES, Thomas LODGE, Giles FLETCHER, and William SHAKESPEARE. The CONCEIT was a marked feature of these sonnets, many of which showed wide irregularity of form. After the Elizabethan period the sonnet was used infrequently until the age of ROMANTICISM, when it again became popular. Outstanding 20th-century poets making use of the sonnet form include J. M. HOPKINS, E. A. ROBINSON, Edna St. Vincent MILLAY, Elinor WYLIE, and Merrill MOORE. E. E. CUMMINGS, W. H. AUDEN, and Stephen SPENDER used an irregular form of the sonnet for satirical and special effects. Cf. The Book of Sonnet Sequences (1929), by Houston PETERSON.

Sonnets from the Portuguese. A collection of sonnets by Elizabeth Barrett Browning (1850), expressing the poet's love for her husband, Robert Browning, and presented to him as a gift. The title refers to a pet name, "little Portuguese," frequently applied by Browning to his wife because of her dark complexion.

Sonnets of a Portrait Painter. A book of poems (1914) by Arthur Davison Ficke.

Son of Royal Langbrith, The. A novel (1904) by William Dean Howells.

Son of the Middle Border, A. An autobiographical book (1917) by Hamlin Garland. It first appeared serially and had the sequels A Daughter of the Middle Border (1921) and Trail Makers of the Middle Border (1926). The second volume was awarded a Pulitzer prize.

Son of the Wolf, The. A book of short stories (1900) by Jack London concerning white men in the Klondike.

Sons and Lovers. A novel, autobiographical in character, by D. H. Lawrence (1913), dealing with the family background, childhood, adolescence, and young manhood of Paul Morel, sensitive and talented son of an English coal miner in Nottinghamshire. Gertrude Coppard Morel, his mother, the daughter of a proud and Puritanical family, herself an educated, intelligent, and highly moral woman, first married Walter Morel, a handsome, sensual, ignorant, brutal, and self-willed miner, in the heat of physical attraction. Later, when she realizes the essential distance between them, she hates and then feels indifferent toward her husband, turning for love and affection to her children—William, Annie, Paul, and Arthur; because of his extreme sensitivity, she is particularly drawn to Paul. The novel is concerned chiefly with Paul's painful introduction to the commercial world, his discovery of books and art, his growing discontent with his background of poverty and gloom, and his love affairs with Miriam and later with Clara Dawes. Because of the strong bond of love between him and his mother, he is never able to give his affection wholly to either of the women, although both love him passionately, and there is a constant conflict between them and Mrs. Morel. With the death of the older woman from cancer, Paul decides to set out on an independent life of his own and rejects both Miriam and Clara.

Sons and Lovers, attacked on its first publication because of its frankness in dealing with sexual matters, is considered to be Lawrence's best novel and has been highly praised for its portrayal of English mining life and its vivid and moving characterizations.

Sophia Western. The name of the heroine of Tom Jones (1749) by Henry Fielding.

sophist, sophistry, sophism, sophisticator, etc. Before the time of Pythagoras the sages of Greece were called sophists (wise men). Pythagoras out of modesty called himself a philosopher (a wisdom-lover). A century later Protagoras of Abdera resumed the title, and a set of quibblers appeared in Athens who professed to answer any question on any subject, and took up the title discarded by the Wise Samian. From this moment sophos and all its family of words were applied to "wisdom falsely so called," and philosophos to the "modest search after truth."

Sophocles (495-406 B.C.). Greek dramatist, known for the human appeal of his tragedies in contrast to the predominantly heroic qualities of those of Euripides. His best known works are Oedipus Tyrannus; Oedipus at Colonus; Antigone; Electra; Trachiniae; Ajax; and Philoctetes.

Sophonisba. In Roman legendary history, daughter of the Carthaginian general Hasdrubal and, like her brother Hannibal, reared to detest Rome. She was affianced to Masinissa, king of the Numidians, but was given by her father in marriage to Syphax. Scipio insisted that this marriage should be annulled, but the Numidian sent her a bowl of poison, which she drank without hesitation. This subject and that of Cleopatra have furnished more dramas than any other whatsoever. For example, we have in French dramas by J. Mairat, Sophonisbe (1630); Pierre Corneille (1663); and Voltaire. In Italian: Trissino (1514); Alfieri (1749-1803). In English: John Marston, The Wonder of Women, or the Tragedy of Sophonisba (1605); Nathaniel Lee, Sophonisba or Hannibal's Overthrow (1676) and Thomson, Sophonisba (1729). In Thomson's tragedy occurs the line, "Oh Sophonisba! Sophonisba oh!" which was parodied by "Oh Jemmy Thomson! Jemmy Thomson oh!"

Sophonisba. The heroine of Boccaccio's tale Titus and Gisippus, in the Decameron, x. 8.

Sophy. See RULERS, TITLES OF.

Sopwith, Thomas (1888-). British aviator who founded the Sopwith Aviation Company and built certain types of planes that were used in World War I.

Sorbonne. The institution of theology, science, and literature in Paris founded by Robert de Sorbon, canon of Cambrai, in 1252. In 1808 the buildings, erected by Richelieu in the 17th century, were given to the University, and since 1821 it has been called the Académie universitaire de Paris.

Sordello (d. ca. 1255). A Provençal troubador, mentioned a number of times by Dante in the Purgatorio, now remembered because of Browning's poem of this name (1840). It details, in a setting which shows the restless condition of northern Italy in the early 13th century, the conflict of a poet about the best way of making his influence felt, whether personally or by the power of song. Browning said:

The historical decoration was purposely of no more importance than a background requires; and my stress lay on the incidents in the development of a soul; little else is worth study. I, at least, always thought so.

Tennyson's reference to Sordello is well known. He said he had done his best with it, but there were only two lines he understood—the first and the last—and they were both untrue. These are:

Who will, may hear Sordello's story told.
Who would has heard Sordello's story told.

Sorel, Agnes (ca. 1422–1450). Mistress of Charles VII of France (1444–1450); a power behind the throne, supposed to have been poisoned by the dauphin (Louis XI).

Sorel, Albert (1842–1906). French historian, author of books on Europe and the French Revolution, etc.

Sorel, Cecile (1873–). French actress, a star of the COMÉDIE FRANÇAISE.

Sorel, Julien. The leading character in Stendhal's realistic novel Le Rouge et le Noir (THE RED AND THE BLACK). He is actuated by the most ruthless sort of selfish ambition, adopts the "black" of the church instead of military "red" (the two opposing parties of the state religion) purely for its material advantages, and badly abuses the women who love him. The novel has had a great influence on the modern realistic and psychological school of fiction.

Sorley, Charles Hamilton (1895–1915). Scottish poet killed in the first World War. Marlborough and Other Poems (1916). His letters were published in 1919.

Sorokin, Pitirim Alexandrovich (1889–). American sociologist born in Russia. Professor of sociology, St. Petersburg (1912–1922), University of Minnesota (1924–1930), and Harvard (from 1930). Has written books.

Sorolla y Bastida, Joaquín (1863–1923). Spanish painter, popular in America. His canvases are flooded with sunlight. He won the Grand Prix at the Paris Exposition in 1900. Some of his portraits, including one of the South American novelist, Blasco Ibáñez, are in the New York Hispanic Society.

Sorrel, Hetty. One of the principal characters in George Eliot's ADAM BEDE.

Sorrows of Werther. See WERTHER.

Sorti, Caterina. The Italian heroine of George Eliot's MR. GILFIL'S LOVE STORY.

Sortini. In Franz Kafka's THE CASTLE, an official of the Castle who sends Amalia an insolent command to present herself to him for his pleasure at the inn. When she defiantly refuses, he punishes her whole family in revenge.

S. O. S. The arbitrary code signal used by Marconi wireless operators on board ship to summon the assistance of any vessels within call; hence, an urgent appeal for help.

The letters have been held to stand for save our souls or save our ship, but they were adopted merely for convenience, being 3 dots, 3 dashes, and 3 dots, . . . - - - . . .

During World War I, the school attached to headquarters for the training of snipers was known as the S O S section.

Sosia. The living double of another, as the brothers Antipholus and brothers Dromio in the COMEDY OF ERRORS, and the Corsican brothers in the drama so called. Sosia is a servant of AMPHITRYON, in Plautus' comedy so called. It is Mercury who assumes the double of Sosia, till Sosia doubts his own identity. Both DRYDEN and MOLIÈRE have adapted this play to the modern stage.

Sotadics or Sotadic verse. One that reads backwards and forwards the same, as "llewd did I live, evil I did dwell." So called from Sotades, the inventor. These verses are also called palindromic.

Sotheby's. The center of the sale of rare books in London. It is located in New Bond Street.

Sothorn, Edward Hugh (1859–1933). American actor. Originally leading man in the company of Daniel Frohman which presented Shakespearean drama (1904–1907 and 1909–1916) with Julia MARLOWE, whom he married.

Soule, George (1887–). American writer on economic subjects. On the staff (editor from 1923) of the New Republic. Author of A Planned Society (1932); The Future of Liberty (1936); The Strength of Nations (1942); etc.

Soulsby, Sister. See THE DAMNATION OF THERON WARE.

Soul's Tragedy, A. A drama (1846), half verse and half prose, by Robert Browning, dealing with a sixteenth-century Italian story.

Soult, Nicolas Jean de Dieu. Duke of Dalmatia (1769–1851). Marshal of France under Napoleon (1804). Fought in many Napoleonic campaigns and aided Napoleon upon his return from Elba. He was recalled to France after living in exile and again made a marshal in 1820. Minister of war (1830–1834; 1840–1844).

Sound and the Fury, The. A novel by William FAULKNER (1929), dealing with the degenerate Compson family, once distinguished Southern aristocrats in Jefferson, Mississippi. The characters are Benjy, the 33-year-old son, an idiot, unable to speak; Candace, the daughter, a nymphomaniac; Jason, another son, selfish and mean-spirited; Quentin, the youngest son, sensitive and intelligent, a student at Harvard University; the drunken father and neurotic mother; and Dilsey and Luster, mother and son, the Negro servants. During the course of the novel, Candace is seduced and leaves an illegitimate child, Quentin commits suicide through grief at his sister's disgrace, Benjy is castrated by Jason when he attempts to attack a child, and Candace's daughter, grown up, elopes with a performer in a traveling carnival.

The story is told through three separate types of STREAM OF CONSCIOUSNESS, representing Benjy, Jason, and Quentin, respectively, each appropriate in style to the character whose point of view is presented. The final part of the story is told objectively.

Soupault, Philippe (1897-). French poet and writer of fiction and biography. He has written the lives of Henri Rousseau, Baudelaire and Blake.

sour grapes. Things despised because they are beyond our reach. Many men of low degree call titles and dignities sour grapes and men of no parts turn up their noses at literary honors. The phrase is from Aesop's fable called The Fox and the Grapes.

sour grapeism. An assumed contempt or indifference to the unattainable.

Sousa, John Philip (1854-1932). American bandmaster and composer of famous marches, among the best known of which are Stars and Stripes Forever (1897) and El Capitan from his comic opera of that name (1896). Known as the "March King."

South, Marty. In Thomas Hardy's WOODLANDERS (1887) the daughter of John South, secretly in love with Giles Winterborne but to no avail. Though she has little to do with the plot, she is considered one of the best of Hardy's women characters.

Southampton, Henry Wriothesley. 3rd Earl of Southampton (1573-1624). Patron of Shakespeare and other Elizabethan poets. Shakespeare's Venus and Adonis and Rape of Lucrece are dedicated to him. He took part in Essex's rebellion and was released from prison by James I. He helped to equip an expedition to Virginia in 1605.

Southcott, Joanna (1750-1814). An English farmer's daughter in Devonshire who became a religious fanatic and prophesied that she would give birth to Shiloh, the second Messiah. This name was, incidentally, Hogg's nickname for Shelley. The Southcott prophecy was made in 1802 when Shelley, in a different part of England, was ten years old.

Southern and Western Monthly Magazine and Review, The. A combination literary review and popular magazine published (1845) in Charleston, South Carolina, and edited by William Gilmore SIMMS, who was also its principal contributor. It was absorbed by the SOUTHERN LITERARY MESSENGER.

Southern Literary Journal and Monthly Magazine (1835-1838). A Southern periodical published in Charleston, S.C., and contributed to by William Gilmore Simms. Its object was to deal with the advance of Southern culture. It was a champion of the cause of slavery.

Southern Literary Messenger (1834-1864). Founded at Richmond, Virginia, this magazine is famous because of the contributions made to it by Edgar Allan Poe as one of its editors (to 1837). He published in it many reviews and some of his poems, essays, and stories.

Southern Review, The. An American literary quarterly, founded in 1935 at Louisiana State University, the third magazine in the South to bear such a title. Under the editorship of Cleanth Brooks and Robert Penn Warren it came to be one of the most distinguished of the LITTLE MAGAZINES of the 1930's, printing articles on literary criticism, philosophy, and politics of a more scholarly nature than those in similar journals of the time, as well as stories and poems by outstanding 20th-century authors. Kenneth BURKE, Katherine Anne PORTER, J. C. RANSOM, and Allen TATE were among its regular contributors. The Southern Review ceased publication in 1942 through lack of funds, a condition brought about by World War II.

Southey, Robert (1774-1843). English poet of the romantic movement (see ROMANTICISM), an important leader in his day but considered by 20th-century critics to have been of mediocre talent. He wrote a great deal of verse and prose, including a number of epic poems the most outstanding of which are THALABA THE DESTROYER (1800); The Curse of Kehama (see KEHAMA; 1810); and RODERICK, THE LAST OF THE GOths (1814). He also wrote ballads, such as The Battle of Blenheim; didactic poems, such as THE OLD MAN'S COMFORTS; and history and biography, such as his Life of Nelson (1813). In his youth, Southey joined with S. T. COLERIDGE in the scheme of PANTISOCRACY and married Sarah FRICKER, whose sister married Coleridge. He soon became a conservative and was attacked in satire by Lord BYRON. Southey was Poet Laureate (1813-1843). In the last years of his life his mind gave way as a result of overwork.

south sea scheme or bubble. A stock-jobbing scheme devised by Sir John Blunt, a lawyer, in 1710, and floated by the Earl of Oxford in the following year. The object of the company was to buy up the national debt, and to be allowed the sole privilege of trading in the South Seas. Spain refused to give trading facilities, so the money was used in other speculative ventures and, by careful "rigging" of the market, £100 shares were run up to over ten times that sum. The bubble burst in 1720 and ruined thousands. The term is applied to any hollow scheme which has a splendid promise, but whose collapse will be sudden and ruinous. See also MISSISSIPPI BUBBLE.

Southwark. A borough in London. The name comes from "south work" applied to the southern end of London Bridge. Southwark was noted in Shakespeare's time as the center of theatrical life. There were located the Globe Theatre, The Hope and The Rose.

Southwell, Robert (ca. 1561-1595). English Roman Catholic poet and Jesuit, author of mystical and religious verse, published as Maconiae (1595) and St. Peter's Complaint (1595). His best-known lyric is The Burning Babe. Southwell was ordained a priest in Rome in 1584 and insisted on going to England, although it was legally treason for an English priest ordained after 1557 to remain in England for more than forty days. In 1592 he was arrested and imprisoned; after repeated questioning and torture he was hanged.

South Wind. A satirical novel by Norman DOUGLAS (1917), the action of which takes place on a volcanic island in the Mediterranean Sea called Nepenthe. The leading character is an English bishop of the Anglican Church who visits the island and is brought in contact with a strange group of blackmailers, drunkards, wantons, hedonists, and others who would under other circumstances be beyond the pale of the churchman's society. Under the influence of the insidious south wind of the region, the native wine, the relics of the island's pagan past, and the subtle attacks on conventional English moral and intellectual standards that are made in conversation by the various skeptics with whom he talks, the bishop begins to find his own former beliefs and convictions undermined. Eventually he reaches the point of silently condoning a murder, committed when his sister-in-law pushes a blackmailer off a cliff. The novel is marked by many passages of brilliant and witty conversation on a variety of topics, covering ethics, politics, asceticism, the condition of the 20th-century world, art, and the geology, mythology, and antiquities of the island.

Southwold, Stephen (1887-). English novelist and writer of juveniles, best-known under his pen name of Neil Bell, although he has written many books under his own name.

Southworth, Emma Dorothy Eliza, née Nevitte (1819-1899). American novelist known as Mrs. E. D. E. N. Southworth.

Author of many melodramatic novels of large sales, notably The Hidden Hand (1859).

Sowdan, see SOLDAN.

Sowerby, James (1757-1822). English artist who illustrated botanical and conchological works.

Sowerby, Katherine Githa. English playwright, author of Rutherford & Son (1912); etc.

Sowerby, Leo (1895-). American composer. Won the first fellowship awarded by the American Academy of Rome, and has twice won the award of the Society for the Publication of American Music. He is a member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters. His The Canticle of the Sun won the Pulitzer prize for music (1946).

Soyer, Raphael (1899-). Russian-born American painter, best-known for his paintings of slum people of New York.

Spaeth, Sigmund (1885-). American musicologist and "tune detective." His works on music are of a popular kind. He has collected many old popular songs in Read 'Em and Weep—the Songs You Forgot to Remember (1926); Weep Some More, My Lady (1927); etc. Chairman of the National Committee for American Music (1939).

Spalding, Albert Goodwill (1850-1915). American professional baseball player and businessman who founded a famous sporting goods establishment which issues various athletic guides. His son, Albert Spalding (1888-), is a well-known American violinist and composer.

Spandrell. In Aldous Huxley's POINT COUNTER POINT, a sensualist, lazy, debauched, devoid of moral scruples, believing in nothing, seeking to spite his mother for her second marriage. His only interest he finds in corrupting, outraging, and humiliating the women who fall in love with him, leading them skillfully into the most depraved of practices and then gradually making them aware of their shame. Thoroughly bored and disgusted by living, he is eventually killed by the British Freemen, a Fascist group, for the murder of their leader, Everard WEBLEY.

Spanish. For the Spanish Molière, the Spanish Shakespeare, etc., see under MOLIÈRE, SHAKESPEARE.

Spanish Bayonet. A novel (1926) by Stephen Vincent BENÉT.

Spanish Fryar, The. A drama by John DRYDEN (1681). It contains two plots, wholly independent of each other. The serious element is this: Leonora, the usurping Queen of Aragon, is promised in marriage to Duke Bertran, a prince of the blood, but is in love with Torrismond, general of the army, who turns out to be the son and heir of King Sancho, supposed to be dead. Sancho is restored to his throne, and Leonora marries Torrismond. The comic element is the illicit love of Colonel Lorenzo for Elvira, the wife of Gomez, a rich old banker. Dominick (the Spanish Friar) helps on this scandalous amour, but it turns out that Lorenzo and Elvira are brother and sister.

Spanish Fury, the. The historical name for the attack upon Antwerp by the Spaniards, November 4, 1576, which resulted in the pillage and burning of the place and a terrible massacre of the inhabitants.

Spanish Gipsy, The. A poem by George ELIOT (1868), relating the tragic love story of Fedalma, a gypsy brought up as a noble Spanish girl, and Duke Silva, the commander of the Spanish fort. The couple are engaged, but when Fedalma's father Zarca recognizes her and reveals her parentage, she believes it her duty to give up her lover and join her people. Silva, on the other hand, deserts his post and resolves to become a gypsy. During his absence the post falls, and Silva in desperation stabs Zarca. The lovers then part forever, Fedalma to lead the gypsies to Africa, Silva to seek pardon at Rome.

Spanish Lady, The. A ballad contained in Percy's Reliques, ii. 23. A Spanish lady falls in love with Captain Popham, whose prisoner she is, but as he is already married, her love is of no avail.

Spanish Main, the. Properly the northern coast of South America, going westward from the mouth of the Orinoco to the Isthmus of Panama, or a bit farther; the main-land bordering the Caribbean Sea, called by the Spanish conquerors Tierra Firme. The term is often applied, however, to the curving chain of islands forming the northern and eastern boundaries of the Caribbean Sea, beginning from Mosquito, near the isthmus, and including Jamaica, Santo Domingo, the Leeward Islands, and the Windward Islands, to the coast of Venezuela in South America.

Spanish Student, The. A dramatic poem by LONGFELLOW (1845). The heroine is Preciosa, a gypsy girl who is threatened with the vengeance of the Inquisition.

Spanish Tragedy, The. A tragedy by Thomas KYP (1594), one of the best known of the old plays that piled up bloody horrors. Horatio, son of Hieronimo, is murdered while he is sitting in an arbor with Belimperia. Balthazar, the rival of Horatio, commits the murder, assisted by Belimperia's brother Lorenzo. The murderers hang the dead body on a tree in the garden, where Hieronimo, roused by the cries of Belimperia, discovers it, and goes raving mad.

Spanker, Lady Gay. A gay horsewoman and huntress in the comedy London Assurance, by D. BOUCICAULT (1841).

Dazzle and Lady Gay Spanker "act themselves," and will never be dropped out of the list of acting plays — Percy Fitzgerald.

Sparabella. In John GAY's Pastoral III (1714), a shepherdess in love with D'Urfey, but D'Urfey loves Clumsilis, "the fairest shepherd wooed the foulest lass." Sparabella resolves to kill herself; but how? Shall she cut her windpipe with a penknife? "No," she says, "squeaking pigs die so." Shall she suspend herself to a tree? "No," she says, "dogs die in that fashion." Shall she drown herself in the pool? "No," she says, "scolding queans die so." And while in doubt how to kill herself, the sun goes down, and

The prudent maiden deemed it then too late,
And till tomorrow came deferred her fate.

Spargo, John (1876–). British-born American socialist leader and writer. He resigned from the Socialist party in 1917 because of its attitude concerning World War I. He founded, with Samuel GOMPERS, the American Alliance for Labor and Democracy and the Nationalist party (both 1917). Author of many sociological books.

Sparkish. In Garrick's Country Gnl (1766) and WYCHERLY's Country Wife (1675) of which the former is an adaptation, "the prince of coxcombs," a fashionable fool, and "a cuckold before marriage." Sparkish is engaged to Alitha Moody, but introduces to her his friend Harcourt, allows him to make love to her before his face, and, of course, is jilted.

Spark Plug. See BARNEY GOOGLE.

Sparks, Jared (1789–1866). American historian, pioneer in the study of American history. Editor of the North American Review (1817–1818; 1824–1830). He became the first professor of history in any American university (Harvard, 1839–1849). President of Harvard (1849–1853). He contributed to the Library of American Biography, which he edited (1834–1838).

Sparrowgrass Papers. A series of humorous sketches by Frederick S. Cozzens (Am., 1856). The supposititious author is Samson Sparrowgrass, a young married man from the city who, with his wife, sets up housekeeping in the then suburban village of Yonkers, N.Y.

Spartacist. A member of an extreme group of German socialists (dissolved 1919) under the leadership of Karl LIEBKNECHT, who had used as his pseudonym the name of the famous Roman slave and gladiator SPARTACUS.

Spartacus (died 71 B.C.). Roman slave and gladiator; leader of an insurrection of slaves (73–71 B. C.), he routed several armies but was defeated and killed by Crassus.

Spartan. The inhabitants of ancient Sparta, one of the leading city-states of Greece, were noted for their frugality, courage and stern discipline; hence, one who can bear pain unflinchingly is termed a Spartan, a very frugal diet is Spartan fare, etc. It was a Spartan mother who, on handing her son the shield he was to carry into battle, said that he must come back either with it or on it.

Spartan dog. A blood-hound; a blood-thirsty man.

Spasmodic School, the. A name applied by Professor Aytoun to certain authors of the 19th century, whose writings were distinguished by forced conceits and unnatural style. The most noted are BAILEY (author of Festus), Gerald MASSEY, Alexander SMITH and Sydney DOBELL.

speakeasy. Popular term for a restaurant or cabaret where liquor was illegally sold during the PROHIBITION era of the 1920's in the U.S. It was so called because admittance was surrounded by an air of secrecy and adventure, although police surveillance of speakeasies became quite lax.

Speaker. The title of the presiding officer and official spokesman of the British House of Commons, the United States House of Representatives, and of some other legislative assemblies.

to catch the Speaker's eye. The rule is that the member whose rising to address the House is first observed by the Speaker is allowed precedence.

Speaker, Tristram E. Known as Tris (1888–). American professional baseball player.

Spearman, Frank Hamilton (1859–1937). Popular American writer whose story of an outlaw, Whispering Smith, was a best seller in 1906, and was three times made into motion pictures. He spent his latter years writing for the moving pictures, and was well known as a writer of "horse operas." He has been compared to Owen WISTER and Eugene Manlove RHODES.

Specimen Days and Collect. A partial autobiography (1882) by Walt Whitman. Contains his recollections of his early life and notes on his hospital work during the Civil War.

Spectator, The. A famous series of essays by Joseph ADDISON and Richard STEELE (March, 1711–December, 1712). In these essays the Spectator, a shy, observing gentleman who has settled in London, gives a picture of the social life of the times. The concerns of the mythical Spectator Club, which had as its members Sir Roger de COVERLEY, Will HONEYCOMB, Sir Andrew FREEPORT and Captain SENTRY, add a narrative interest to the essays.

Specter Bridegroom, The. A well known tale in Irving's SKETCH BOOK. It relates how Sir Herman von Starkenfaust, arriving at the castle of the Katzenellenbogen with the sad tidings of the death of his friend, the expected bridegroom, is prevented from telling his news, falls in love, and plays the role of a specter, until he has gained possession of the bride.

Speculum Humanae Salvationis (The Mirror of Human Salvation). A kind of extended Biblia Pauperum telling pictorially the Bible story from the fall of Lucifer to the Redemption of Man, with explanations of each picture in Latin rhymes. MS copies of the 12th century are known, but its chief interest is that it was one of the earliest of printed books, the earliest edition known being that of 1467.

Speculum Meditantis, see MIROIR DE L'HOMME.

Spedding, James (1808–1881). English editor of Works, Life, and Letters of Francis Bacon (14 vols.; 1857–1874) and author of Life and Times of Bacon (1878). Refuted Macaulay's essay on Bacon.

Spee, Count Maximilian von (1861–1914). German admiral and strategist. Defeated the British in 1914 off the coast of Chile but his fleet was destroyed off the Falkland Islands about a month later by another British fleet. He went down on his flagship Scharnhorst. His name was given to a German warship which was defeated by the English and scuttled by her own men in the harbor of Montevideo in 1939.

Speed. In Shakespeare's TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA, an inveterate punster and the clownish servant of Valentine, one of the two "gentlemen of Verona."

Speer, Robert Elliott (1867–). American religious leader and writer.

Speicher, Eugene Edward (1883–). Well-known American portrait painter, member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters. His portrait of Katharine Cornell as Candida is in the Whitney Museum of Modern Art in New York City.

Spellman, Francis Joseph (1889–). American Roman Catholic archbishop of New York (1939). Created cardinal (1946).

Spelvin, George. A mythical actor; a name used by an actor who plays two or more parts in one play.

Spencer, Claire (1899–). Scottish-American novelist. Her first novel, Gallows' Orchard (1930), is still her best-known.

Spencer, Herbert (1820–1903). English philosopher and social scientist, known for his application of the scientific doctrines of evolution (see DARWIN, CHARLES) to philosophy and ethics, with a central principle called Force the agent of all change, form, and organization in the universe. His ethics was derived also from UTILITARIANISM and emphasized the individual. In education, he scorned study of the liberal arts and advocated that science be the chief subject of instruction. Spencer's works include Social Statics (1851); Principles of Psychology (1855); Program of a System of Synthetic Philosophy (1860); Education: Intellectual, Moral, and Physical (1861); First Principles (1862); Principles of Biology (1864–1867); Principles of Sociology (1876–1896); The Classification of the Sciences (1864); The Study of Sociology (1873); Principles of Ethics (1879–1893); The Man versus the State (1884); Factors of Organic Evolution (1887); Autobiography (1904).

Spender, Stephen Harold (1909–). English poet, with C. DAY LEWIS and W. H. AUDEN a member of the leading group of British Marxist poets (see MARXISM IN LITERATURE) in the early 1930's. His poetry, regarded by critics as more personal, lyrical, and romantic in tone than that of his associates, deals chiefly with his own emotional reactions as he contemplates unemployment, poverty, suffering, or injustice, or visualizes amelioration in a Socialist state; much of it is characterized by imagery appropriate to an industrial and mechanical civilization. Among his works are Poems (1933); Vienna (1934), a long poem; The Destructive Element (1935), a book of criticism; The Burning Cactus (1936), stories; Trial of a Judge (1938), a poetic drama; Forward from Liberalism (1937), on politics and poetry; The New Realism (1939), criticism; The Still Center (1939), poems; The Backward Sun (1940), a novel; Ruins and Visions (1942), poetry.

Spengler, Oswald (1880–1936). German philosopher whose major work, The Decline of the West (1918–1922), was translated into many languages and caused great controversy in the U.S. It constitutes a deterministic morphology of history and predicts a phase of "Caesarism" in the further development of Western civilization. Spengler's attitude became very popular with the Nazi government, but he refused to enter into their persecution of the Jews. Being independently wealthy, he managed to exist in Germany, somewhat under a cloud, till the end of his life.

Spenlow, Dora. In Dickens' DAVID COPPERFIELD, a pretty, warm-hearted little doll of a woman, with no practical views of the duties of life or the value of money. She is the "child-wife" of David Copperfield, and loves to sit by him and hold his pens while he writes. She dies, and David then marries Agnes WICKFIELD. Dora's great pet is a dog called "Jip," which dies at the same time as its mistress.

Mr. Spenlow. The father of Dora. He is a proctor, to whom David Copperfield is articulated. Mr. Spenlow is killed in a carriage accident.

Misses Lavina and Clarissa Spenlow. Two spinster aunts of Dora Spenlow, with whom she lives after the death of her father:

They were not unlike birds altogether, having a sharp, brisk, sudden manner, and a little, short, spruce way of adjusting themselves, like canaries.—David Copperfield, xli, (1849).

Spens, Sir Patrick. A Scotch hero, sent in the winter-time on a mission to Norway. His ship, in its home passage, was wrecked against the Papa Strongsay, and everyone on board was lost. The incident has furnished the subject of a famous old Scotch ballad.

Spenser, Edmund (1552–1599). English poet of the Elizabethan age, known for the misty, languid quality of his poetry, its imaginative appeal, use of allegory, individual diction involving the use of archaic and coined words, and subtlety of sound effects through the combination of alliteration, assonance, onomatopoeia, etc., with controlled rhythm and meter. His works include THE SHEPHERD'S CALENDAR (1579), a pastoral and allegorical poem; THE FAËRIE QUEENE (1590, 1596), his most famous work, left incomplete at the time of his death; Complaints (1591), containing The Ruins of Time, The Tears of the Muses, Virgil's Gnat, Prosopopoeia, or Mother Hubbard's Tale (see HUBBERD, MOTHER), Muiopotmos, or The Tale of the Butterfly, and other shorter poems; Daphnauda (1591), an elegy on the death of the daughter of Henry, Lord Howard; COLIN CLOUT'S COME HOME AGAIN (1595), an allegorical attack on artistic taste at Elizabeth's court; Astrophel (1595), an elegy on the death of Sir Philip Sidney; AMORETTI, a sonnet sequence; Epithalamion (1595), a poem celebrating his own marriage to Elizabeth Boyle, considered his best lyric work; FOUR HYMNS TO LOVE AND BEAUTY (1596); Prothalamion (1596), a poem celebrating the double wedding of the two daughters of the Earl of Worcester; A View of the Present State of Ireland, a prose defense of the repressive policy of Lord Grey de Wilton in Ireland, not published until 1633.

Spenser was in the service of the Earl of Leicester at Elizabeth's court and became a close friend of Sir Philip Sidney, to whom he dedicated The Shepherd's Calendar, and of Gabriel HARVEY. In 1580 he went to Ireland as secretary to Lord Grey de Wilton, Lord Deputy of Ireland, and was later granted an estate, Kilcolman Castle, in Munster, where he wrote The Faerie Queene. In 1598 he was appointed Sheriff of Cork, but in an Irish rebellion soon afterwards Kilcolman Castle was burned, and Spenser and his family were forced to flee to England.

Spenser admired CHAUCER greatly, and the Chaucerian influence is evident in much of his work. Because of a certain austerity and "coldness" which some critics find in his own poetry, and because of its predominant formal perfection, Spenser is sometimes called a "poet's poet." John KEATS was an especially enthusiastic admirer of The Faerie Queene in his early career.

See also ROSALIND.

Spenserian meter. The meter devised by SPENSER, founded on the Italian ottava rima, for his FAERIE QUEENE. It is a stanza of nine iambic lines, all of ten syllables except the last, which is an Alexandrine. Only three different rhymes are admitted into a stanza, and these are disposed: a b a b b c b c c.

The stanza was used by THOMSON (Castle of Indolence), SHENSTONE (Schoolmistress), BYRON (Childe Harold), etc.

The first stanza of Spenser's Faerie Queene follows. Lines 1 and 3 rhyme; lines 2, 4, 5, 7 rhyme; lines 6, 8, 9 rhyme; thus:

A gentle Knight was pricking on the plaine,
Ycladd in mightie armes and silver shielde,
Wherein old dints of deepe woundes did remaine,
The cruell markes of many a bloody fiele;
Yet armes till that time did he never wield,
His angry steede did chide his foming bit,
As much disdainyng to the curbe to yield;
Full jolly knight he seemed and faire did sitt,
As one for knightly guists and fierce encounters fit.

Sperry, Elmer Ambrose (1860-1930). American electrical engineer whose most famous inventions were gyroscopic compasses and stabilizers for ships and airplanes. Founder of the Sperry Gyroscope Company (1910).

Spewack, Mrs. Bella, née Cohen (1899-) and her husband, Samuel Spewack (1899-). American playwrights, journalists, and short-story writers. They excel in comedy, as Clear All Wires! (1932); Spring Song (1934); Boy Meets Girl (1935); etc.

Speyer, James (1861-1941). Well-known American banker. Senior partner of Speyer & Company (from 1899). His brother, Edgar Speyer (1862-1932), married the American poet Leonora SPEYER.

Speyer, Leonora, née Von Stosch (1872-). American poet and violinist. Married the banker Edgar SPEYER (1902). Awarded Pulitzer prize for poetry (1927) for Fiddler's Farewell. Honorary Vice President of the Poetry Society of America. Teacher of poetry at Columbia University, and winner of numerous other poetry prizes.

spheres. In the Ptolemaic system of astronomy, the earth, as the center of the universe, was supposed to be surrounded by nine spheres of invisible space, the first seven carrying the "planets" as then known, viz., (1) Diana or the Moon, (2) Mercury, (3) Venus, (4) Apollo or the Sun, (5) Mars, (6) Jupiter, and (7) Saturn. The eighth, the Starry Sphere, carried the fixed stars, and the ninth, the Crystalline Sphere, was added by Hipparchus in the 2nd century B.C. to account for the precession of the equinoxes. Finally, in the Middle Ages, was added a tenth sphere, the Primum Mobile, a solid barrier which enclosed the universe and shut it off from Nothingness and the Empyrean. These last two spheres carried neither star nor planet.

They pass the planets seven, and pass the fixed [starry sphere],
And that crystal'line sphere . . . and that First-Moved. Milton, Paradise Lost, iii 482.

the music or harmony, of the spheres. PYTHAGORAS, having ascertained that the pitch of notes depends on the rapidity of vibrations, and also that the planets move at different rates of motion, concluded that the planets must make sounds in their motion according to their different rates; and that, as all things in nature are harmoniously made, the different sounds must harmonize. In this originated the old theory of the "harmony of the spheres." KEPLER has a treatise on the subject.

sphinx. A monster of ancient mythology. In Greece it is represented as having the head of a woman, the body of a lion, and winged; in Egypt, as a wingless lion with the head and breast of a man.

The Grecian Sphinx was generally said to be a daughter of TYPHON and CHIMAERA. She infested Thebes, setting the inhabitants a riddle and devouring all those who could not solve it. The riddle was—

What goes on four feet, on two feet, and three,
But the more feet it goes on the weaker it be?

It was at length solved by OEDIPUS with the answer that it was a man, who as an infant crawls upon all-fours, in manhood goes erect on his two feet, and in old age supports his tottering legs with a staff. On hearing this correct answer the Sphinx slew herself, and Thebes was delivered.

The Egyptian sphinx is a typification of Ra, the sun god. The colossal statue of the reclining monster was old in the days of Cheops, when the Great Pyramid, near which it lies, was built. It is hewn out of the solid rock; its length is 140 feet, and its head 30 feet from crown to chin.

EMERSON has a poem entitled The Sphinx (1841), and Oscar WILDE also wrote one.

spider.

Bruce and the spider. In 1306 Robert

BRUCE was crowned at Scone king of Scotland, but, being attacked by the English, retreated to Ireland, and all supposed him to be dead. While lying perdu in the little island of Rathlin he one day noticed a spider try six times to fix its web on a beam in the ceiling. "Now shall this spider," said Bruce, "teach me what I am to do, for I also have failed six times." The spider made a seventh effort and succeeded, whereupon Bruce left the island (1307), collected 300 followers, landed at Carrick, and at midnight surprised the English garrison in Turnberry Castle. He next overthrew the Earl of Gloucester, and in two years made himself master of well-nigh all Scotland, which Edward III declared in 1328 to be an independent kingdom. Sir Walter Scott tells us (Tales of a Grandfather) that in remembrance of this incident it has always been deemed a foul crime in Scotland for any of the name of Bruce to injure a spider.

Frederick the Great and the spider. While Frederick II was at Sans Souci, he one day went into his anteroom, as usual, to drink a cup of chocolate, but set his cup down to fetch his handkerchief from his bedroom. On his return he found a great spider had fallen from the ceiling into his cup. He called for fresh chocolate, and next moment heard the report of a pistol. The cook had been suborned to poison the chocolate, and, supposing his treachery had been found out, shot himself. On the ceiling of the room in Sans Souci a spider has been painted (according to tradition) in remembrance of this story.

Mahomet and the spider. When Mahomet fled from Mecca he hid in a certain cave, with the Koreishites close upon him. Suddenly an acacia in full leaf sprang up at the mouth of the cave, a wood-pigeon had its nest in the branches, and a spider had woven its net between the tree and the cave. When the Koreishites saw this, they felt persuaded that no one could have entered recently, and went on.

Spingarn, Joel Elias (1875-1939). American educator and critic. His History of Literary Criticism in the Renaissance (1899) was translated into Italian and led to his acquaintance with Benedetto Croce. One of the founders of Harcourt, Brace & Co. (1919) and its literary adviser (till 1932). Edited its European Library. Creative Criticism (1917); Poems (1924). The Spingarn Medal (due to his activity in the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, of which he became president) is awarded for the highest accomplishment by an American Negro during the previous year or years.

Spinoza, Baruch (1632-1677). Famous Dutch philosopher of Portuguese-Jewish parents. He is regarded today as the most eminent expounder of the doctrine of pantheism. He kept aloof from academic obligations by making a living as a grinder of lenses.

Spire, André (1868-). French writer active in Zionism and in the movement for a Jewish Home in Palestine.

spirituals. The generic name for the religious folk songs of the Negro, sung at camp-meetings, in churches, etc. These natural and unhampered expressions of deep religious faith and imaginative ecstasy constitute the finest examples of native American music. Some familiar titles are Swing Low, Sweet Chariot, Golden Slippers, Play on Your Harp, Little David, Joshua Fit de Battle ob Jericho, Sometimes I feel like a Motherless Child; etc. Marian Anderson, Dorothy Maynor, Paul Robeson, and Roland Hayes are some of the outstanding interpreters of Negro Spirituals on the concert stage.

Spitalfields. A district in London. The name, literally "hospital fields," is explained by the fact that the district was formerly owned by the Hospital of St. Mary. The silk industry of England was established here after the Huguenots had been driven from France in the reign of Louis XIV.

Spitteler, Carl (1845-1924). Swiss poet and novelist. Awarded the Nobel prize (1919) for his epic Olympischer Frühling (Olympian Spring) and other works. Romain Rolland has called him "the greatest German poet since Goethe."

Spode, Josiah (1754-1827). English Staffordshire potter who made a type of porcelain which is still known as spode or spode ware.

Spofford, Harriet Elizabeth, née Prescott (1835-1921). American novelist and poet, well-known at the end of the 19th century.

Spoils of Poynton, The. One of the best novels (1897) of Henry James, in which a great art and furniture collection in private hands is used to upset the lives of people connected with it.

spoils system. The system of distributing political offices as rewards for service rendered to a particular political party. It was introduced into American politics by Andrew Jackson (1767-1845) during his presidential term and is said to have received its designation from the statement made by W. L. Marcy in the Senate, January, 1832, "To the victors belong the spoils of the enemy." Civil Service reforms gradually mitigated the evils of the system.

spondee. In prosody, a poetic foot of two equally accented syllables, used to vary regular meters. Compound, context, footfall, amen, are spondaic words. The use of the spondee in iambic verse is illustrated in the following line from Ben Jonson:

Slow, slow, | fresh fount, | keep time | with my | salt tears sponge.

throw up the sponge. Give up; confess oneself beaten. The metaphor is from boxing matches, for when a second tossed a sponge into the ring it was a sign that his man was beaten.

to sponge on a man. To live on him like a parasite, sucking up all he has as a dry sponge will suck up water.

a sponger. A mean parasite who is always accepting the hospitality of those who will give it and never makes any adequate return.

Sponge, Mr. The hero of a hunting novel, Mr. Sponge's Sporting Tour (1853), by R. SURTEES, illustrated by John Leech.

Spooner, William Archibald (1844-1930). Dean and later warden of New College, Oxford. Acquired a (probably exaggerated) reputation for his "spoonerisms," witty or unwitting transpositions of sounds, technically known as metathesis. "I'll sew you to a sheet."—"There is a roaring pain."—"The tons of soil."—Spoonerisms form part of Joyce's technique in FINNEGANS WAKE and have been used by the American humorist, "Colonel Stoopnagle" in My Tale is Twisted (1946) ("Little Slack Bambo," etc.).

Spoon River. The middle western American town whose life is laid bare in Edgar Lee MASTERS' Spoon River Anthology, a volume of free verse which created a great sensation on its appearance in 1916. The men and women of Spoon River make their own epitaphs in a series of short monologues uttered from the cemetery where they lie buried. The spirit of the book is relentlessly realistic. The New Spoon River appeared in 1924.

Sporus. A favorite of Emperor Nero. The name was applied by Pope to Lord Hervey, and implied effeminacy.

S.P.Q.R. (Senatus Populusque Romanus, "the Roman Senate and People"). Letters inscribed on the standards of ancient Rome.

Sprat, Jack. See JACK.

Sprat, Thomas, Bishop of Rochester (1635-1713). English clergyman and author, best known for his history of the ROYAL SOCIETY (1667).

Spratling, William P. (1900-). American illustrator, chiefly known for his drawings of New Orleans and Louisiana. He also did Little Mexico with a foreword by Diego Rivera.

spread eagle. The "eagle displayed" of heraldry, i.e., an eagle with legs and wings extended, the wings being elevated. It is the device of the United States, and was hence humorously adopted as emblematic of bombast, hyperbole, and extravagant boasting. Spread-Eagleism in a United States citizen is very much the counterpart of the more aggressive and bombastic forms of JINGOISM in the Britisher.

spread-eagle oratory. "A compound of exaggeration, effrontery, bombast, and extravagance, mixed with metaphors, platitudes, threats, and irreverent appeals flung at the Almighty" (North American Review, November, 1858).

In the navy a man was said to be spread-eagled when he was lashed to the rigging with outstretched arms and legs for flogging.

Spreckels, Claus (1828-1908). German-born American sugar manufacturer. Known in San Francisco as the "Sugar King." In the sugar business (from 1863) he secured a virtual monopoly. His oldest son, John Diedrich Spreckels (1853-1926), founded J. D. Spreckels & Brothers Company, shipping and commission merchants.

Sprigg, Christopher St. John. Pseudonym Christopher Caudwell (1907-1937). English writer of excellent detective stories. Also a writer on aviation and on poetry. He was killed in action in Spain, having joined the British Battalion of the International Brigade.

Spring, Howard (1889-). British novelist. Author of My Son, My Son! (1938); Heaven Lies About Us (1939); Fame is the Spur (1940), a ROMAN À CLEF about Ramsay MacDonald; In the Meantime (1942); etc.

Springfield Republican, The. A famous Massachusetts newspaper, founded (1824) as a weekly by Samuel Bowles. It supported Abraham Lincoln during the Civil War and subsequently attacked the administration of Grant. The paper has always remained in the hands of the Bowles family.

Spring-Rice, Sir Cecil Arthur (1859-1918). British diplomat. Ambassador to the U.S. (1913-1918).

sprung rhythm. A type of poetic rhythm associated in modern times chiefly with the work of Gerard Manley Hopkins. Its basic unit is a metrical foot usually of from one to four syllables, with any number of weak, or slack, syllables being used for special effects. It has one stress per foot, falling on the only syllable, if there is but one, or on the first syllable, so that each line may contain a variety of the kinds of metrical feet. Sprung rhythm may have rests, as in music, and may add as many as three slack syllables to each foot without their being taken into account in scansion. It is a characteristic of sprung rhythm for scansion to continue through a whole stanza without a break, as though it were all written in one line. Robert BRIDGES in his notes to the 1918 edition of Hopkins' Poems points out that sprung rhythm is the natural rhythm of English speech and written prose, and that it was used in Latin and Greek verse and in English verse up to the Elizabethan period.

Spy, The. A novel by J. F. COOPER (1821), laid in Revolutionary times. It relates the adventures of "the spy" Harvey Birch, a peddler who endures unjust suspicions of being in league with the British. He makes constant use of these suspicions to advance his real purpose of securing enemy information for the ears of Washington, who is represented in the novel as a rather solemn and formal character called Harper.

to square the circle. To attempt an impossibility. The allusion is to the impossibility of exactly determining the precise ratio between the diameter and the circumference of a circle, and thus constructing a circle of the same area as a given square. The ratio is 3.14159 . . . The next decimals would be 26537, but the numbers would go on ad infinitum.

Square, Mr. A "philosopher," in Fielding's novel called The History of Tom Jones, a Foundling. See TOM JONES.

squatter sovereignty. In U.S. history, the principle that squatters in regions not set up as territories or states had the right to make their own laws.

Squeers, Mr. Wackford. In Dickens' NICHOLAS NICKLEBY, a vulgar, conceited, ignorant schoolmaster of DOTHEBOYS HALL, Yorkshire. He steals the boys' pocket money, clothes his son in their best suits, half starves them, and teaches them next to nothing. Ultimately, he is transported for purloining a deed.

Mrs. Squeers. Wife of Mr. Wackford, a raw-boned, harsh, heartless virago, without one spark of womanly feeling for the boys put under her charge. Played by Dame Sybil THORNDIKE in the British-made film (1947).

Miss Fanny Squeers. Daughter of the schoolmaster, "not tall like her mother, but short like her father. From the former she inherited a voice of hoarse quality, and from the latter a remarkable expression of the right eye." Miss Fanny falls in love with Nicholas Nickleby, but hates him and spites him because he is insensible of the soft impeachment.

Master Wackford Squeers. Son of the schoolmaster, a spoiled boy, who is dressed in the best clothes of the scholars. He is overbearing, self-willed, and passionate.

The person who suggested the character of Squeers was a Mr. Shaw of Bowes. He married a Miss Laidman. The satire ruined the school, and was the death both of Mr. and Mrs. Shaw.—Notes and Queries, October 25, 1873.

Squibob. See PHOENIX, JOHN.

Squire, Sir John Collings (1884–). English poet and editor. Founder (1919) and editor (to 1934) of the London Mercury. Author of many books of poetry and a number of books of parodies. He collaborated in the writing of the play Berkeley Square (1929) with J. L. BALDERSTON.

Squire of Dames, the. In Spenser's FAERIE QUEENE, a young knight, in love with Columbell, who assigns him a year's service before she will consent to become his bride. The "Squire" is to travel for twelve months, to rescue distressed ladies, and bring pledges of his exploits to Columbell. At the end of the year he places three hundred pledges in her hands, but instead of rewarding him by becoming his bride, she sets him another task, viz., to travel about the world on foot and not present himself again till he can bring her pledges from three hundred damsels that they will live in chastity all their lives. The Squire tells Columbell that in three years he has found only three persons who would take the pledge, and only one of these, he says a rustic cottager, took it from a "principle of virtue"; the other two (a nun and a courtesan) promised to do so, but did not voluntarily join the "virgin martyrs." The "Squire of Dames" turns out to be BRITOMART. This story is imitated from The Host's Tale, in Orlando Furioso, xxviii.

Squire's or Squyer's Tale. One of Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES. See CAMBUSCAN. The Squire is perhaps best described in the following well-known lines:

With him [the Knight] ther was his sone a yong Squyer,
A lovyere and a lusty bachelere
With lokkes crulle, as they were leyd in press,
Of twenty yeer of age he was, I gesse . . .
Singing he was, or floyting al the day
He was as fresh as is the month of May.
Prologue to the Canterbury Tales.

Squirt. The apothecary's boy, in Garth's Dispensary; hence, any apprentice lad or errand-boy.

Stabat Mater (Lat., "The Mother was standing"). The celebrated Latin hymn reciting the Seven Sorrows of the Virgin at the Cross, so called from its opening words, forming part of the service during Passion week, in the Roman Catholic Church. It was composed by Jacobus de Benedictis, a Franciscan of the 13th century, and has been set to music by Pergolesi, Rossini, Haydn, etc.

Stackpole, Henrietta. In THE PORTRAIT OF A LADY by Henry James, an American newspaper correspondent in Europe, the sincere and likable friend of the heroine, Isabel Archer.

Stacpoole, Henry de Vere Stacpoole (1863–). British physician and author of a number of popular novels, including The Blue Lagoon.

Staël, Mme de. Née Germaine Necker (1766–1817). French author of Swiss parentage, daughter of the French Minister of Finance and wife of Baron de Staël-Holstein, ambassador to France from Sweden. She is known for her celebrated salons, which were attended by the leading literary and political figures of the day, for her sensibility and kindness in personal relations, her talent for conversation, her vigorous mind, and her influence on the movement of ROMANTICISM in France. Among her works are Lettres sur les Écris et le Caractère de Jean Jacques Rousseau (1788); De l'Influence des Passions (1796); Essai sur les Fictions, Delphine (1802) and CORINNE (1807), called by some critics the first "modern" novels in their view of French society, anticipating the works of George SAND; De la Littérature (1800), criticism, in which she was among the first to break away from neo-Classical principles and which caused a sensation on its publication; De l'Allemagne (1813), a study of German literature, which introduced German romanticism into France and was at first suppressed on orders by Napoleon; and Considérations sur la Révolution Française (1818).

Mme de Staël had an eventful career, being exiled from France after the Revolution of 1789, allowed to return in 1795, and banished again later by Napoleon, of whom she was an outspoken critic. She had several disappointing love affairs, the chief of which involved the Don Juan-like Swiss novelist Benjamin CONSTANT; CHATEAUBRIAND and she were rivals in the literary world. Her influence has been found in LAMARTINE, Victor HUGO, and Charles NODIER in poetry and criticism; Cousin, Ticknor, and Prescott in the study of the German language; and Guizot, Villemain, and Cousin in the study of English and German literature.

staff of life, the. Bread, which is the support of life. Shakespeare says, "The boy was the very staff of my age." The allusion is to a staff which supports the feeble in walking.

Stafford, Wendell Philips (1861–). American associate justice of the supreme court of the district of Columbia. Also poet laureate of Vermont.

Stagirite or Stagyrite. Aristotle, who was born at Stagira, in Macedon (4th century B.C.).

Stagirius. A young monk to whom St. Chrysostom addressed three books, and of whom those books give an account. Matthew ARNOLD has a prayer in verse supposed to be uttered by Stagirius.

Stahl, Georg Ernst (1660–1734). German chemist who, with Johann Joachim BECHER, originated the PHLOGISTON theory.

Stahl, Jacob. An architect, hero of a trilogy of novels by J. D. BERESFORD, entitled The Early History of Jacob Stahl (1911), A Candidate for Truth (1912), and The Invisible Event (1915).

Stalin, Josef. Real name Iosif Vissarionovich Dzhugashvili (1879–). Russian dictator. Son of a shoemaker. Expelled from theological seminary for Marxist propaganda. Active in revolutionary politics (from 1896). Imprisoned during World War I. After Lenin's death (1924), eliminated real and potential opponents and initiated three "Five-Year plans" (1928, 1934, 1937). Concluded a non-aggression pact with Germany (1939), annexed parts of German-defeated Poland, and took Russia into a war against Finland (1939–1940). Created marshal of the Soviet Union (1943) after his country's victorious participation in World War II. As a politician and great statesman, Stalin has demonstrated again the truism that a straight line is often the longest way from one point to another.

Stalky and Co. A boys' story by Rudyard KIPLING (1899), narrating the adventures of three schoolboys, Arthur Corkran, otherwise known as "Your Uncle Stalky," the Irish McTurk, and Beetle. Beetle is usually taken to be Kipling himself. McTurk is George Charles BERESFORD (d. 1938) and Stalky is Major General Lionel Charles DUNSTERVILLE (1866–1946).

Stallings, Laurence (1894–). American journalist, playwright, and author, best known for WHAT PRICE GLORY? (1924), a play on which he collaborated with Maxwell ANDERSON, and for The First World War (1933), a book of photographs and text presenting the horrors of World War I which was sensationally successful, the first representative of a type of journalism which had a wide vogue in the 1930's. Other works of Stallings are Plumes (1924), a novel; First Flight (1925) and The Buccaneer (1925), further plays written with Maxwell Anderson; Deep River (1926) and Rainbow (1928), operettas, for which he wrote book and lyrics; A Farewell to Arms (1930), a dramatic version of the novel of the same title by Ernest HEMINGWAY; and a number of motion-picture scenarios.

Stamp, Josiah Charles. 1st Baron Stamp (1880–1941). British economist who helped draft the DAWES Plan (1924) and the Young Plan (1929). Director of the Bank of England.

Stamp Act. A revenue act which requires that all legal documents, newspapers, almanacs, and commercial papers of all kinds carry stamps showing the tax paid on them. The American colonies rebelled against such an act, known as Grenville's Stamp Act, passed by the British Parliament in 1765. Samuel Adams, James Otis, and others were spokesmen against it. In the fall of 1765, a congress was convened in New York, known as the Stamp Act Congress, which petitioned the king to repeal the act. The request was granted the next year.

Standing Fishes Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Standish, Miles. See THE COURTSHIP OF MILES STANDISH.

Stanford, Leland (1824-1893). Governor of California (1861-1863). Helped to promote and finance the Central Pacific Railroad. President and director, Central Pacific (1863-1893) and Southern Pacific (1885-1890). U.S. Senator. Founder (1891) of Leland Stanford Junior University, now Stanford University, at Palo Alto, California.

Stanhope, Lady Hester Lucy (1776-1839). A famous Englishwoman who lived in the Orient and became during her lifetime almost a legend. She is described in Kinglake's Eothen (1844).

Stanley, Sir Henry Morton (1841-1904). Famous explorer, chiefly remembered for his expedition into Central Africa to find David Livingstone. The expedition was commissioned by James Gordon Bennett of the New York Herald. Stanley reached Livingstone in November 1871, greeting him with the now famous words, "Dr. Livingstone, I presume?" He published a number of books including Through the Dark Continent (2 vols.; 1878); The Congo and the Founding of its Free State (2 vols.; 1885); In Darkest Africa (2 vols.; 1890); etc.

Stannard, Henrietta Eliza Vaughan, née Palmer. Pen names Violet Whyte and John Strange Winter (1856-1911). English author of short stories and novels.

Stanton, Elizabeth Cady (1815-1902). American leader of woman suffrage. First president of the National Woman Suffrage Association (1869-1890). History of Woman Suffrage (3 vols.; 1881-1886), with Susan B. ANTHONY and Matilda J. Gage.

Stanton, Frank Lebby (1857-1927). Southern poet. As staff member of the Atlanta Constitution, he ran one of the first daily columns, Just From Georgia. Published several volumes of poems and has sometimes been called the "Poet Laureate of Georgia."

stanza. In prosody, an arrangement or group of rhymed lines in a certain order, repeated throughout a poetical composition. Among the best-known stanza forms are the following:

- (a) Four-line stanzas:
 - (1) BALLAD METER.
 - (2) ELEGIAC METER.

(3) iambic tetrameter rhyming abba, as in Tennyson's In Memoriam:

Fair ship that from the Italian shore
Sallest the placid ocean-plains
With my lost Arthur's loved remains,
Spread thy full wings and waft him o'er.

(4) The quatrain of FitzGerald's Omar Kháyám, five-foot iambic verse rhyming aaba:

Ah Love! could thou and I with Fate conspire
To grasp this sorry Scheme of things entire,
Would we not shatter it to bits—and then Re-mould it nearer to the Heart's Desire!

- (b) RHYME ROYAL.
- (c) OTTAVA RIMA.
- (d) the SPENSERIAN STANZA.
- (e) TERZA RIMA.

Stapledon, William Olaf (1886-). English philosopher and novelist whose Last and First Men (1931) is an extraordinary imaginative leap into the future of our world. He considers his Star Maker (1937) the best of his novels.

star. Figuratively applied to a specially prominent person on the stage, concert platform, etc.; hence star part, the part taken by a leading actor, star turn, etc.

The stars were said by the old astrologers to have almost omnipotent influence on the lives and destinies of man. (Cf. Judges v. 20—"The stars in their courses fought against Sisera"). To this old belief is due a number of phrases still common, as Bless my stars! You may thank your lucky stars; star-crossed (not favored by the stars, unfortunate); to be born under an evil star, etc.

his star is in the ascendant. He is in luck's way; said of a person to whom some good fortune has fallen and who is very prosperous. According to astrology, those leading stars which are above the horizon at a person's birth influence his life and fortune. When those stars are in the ascendant, he is strong, healthy, and lucky, but when they are in the descendant below the horizon, his stars do not shine on him; he is in the shade and subject to ill-fortune. See also HOUSES, ASTROLOGICAL.

the star of the North. Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden (1594-1632).

Stars and Bars. The flag of the Confederacy formed by the Southern states during the American Civil War. It has a horizontal bar of white between two red bars and a blue field with seven white stars.

Stars and Stripes or the Star-Spangled Banner. The flag of the United States. The stripes are emblematic of the original thirteen States, and the stars—of which there are now forty-eight—of the States including those that have since been admitted into the Union.

The first flag of the U.S., raised by Washington June 2, 1776, consisted of thirteen stripes, alternately red and white, with a blue canton emblazoned with the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew. On June 14, 1777, Congress ordered that the canton should have thirteen white stars in a blue field. In 1794, after the admission of Vermont and Kentucky, the stripes and stars were increased to fifteen.

starboard and larboard. Star (Anglo-Saxon steor) is "rudder," bord is "side," meaning the right side of ship (looking forwards). Larboard, for the left-hand side is now obsolete, and "port" is used instead. The word was earlier leereboord (Anglo-Saxon loere, "empty"), that side being clear as the steersman stood on the star (steer) board.

Starbuck. In Herman Melville's MOBY DICK, chief mate to Captain Ahab. He is an honest and prudent man who tries to dissuade the Captain from his mad chase of the whale.

Star Chamber. A room in the Palace of Westminster whose ceiling had upon it gilt stars. Sitings of a very arbitrary and tyrannical court were held here under the early Stuarts. "Court of star chamber" or "star-chamber proceedings" are phrases still applied to any tyrannical tribunal.

Stareleigh, Justice. In Dickens' PICKWICK PAPERS, a stout, pudgy little judge, very deaf, and very irascible, who, in the absence of the chief justice, sits in judgment on the trial of "Bardell v. Pickwick." See BARDELL, MRS.

Star in a Stone-boat, A. A poem by Robert Frost, the first in the volume New Hampshire. In New England, a stone-boat is a kind of sledge used to drag stones for building walls, etc.

Starkenfaust, Herman von. Titular hero of Irving's SPECTER BRIDEGROOM.

Starkey, James Sullivan. Pseudonym Seumas O'Sullivan (1879-). Irish poet. Founded the Theater of Ireland (1905) and the Dublin Magazine (1923). Author of a number of volumes of poetry and essays. One of the first members of the Irish Academy of Letters.

Starr, David. Hero of Bayard TAYLOR's tragedy The Prophet (1874), a study of a man who gradually comes to believe that he has a divine mission. The character is said to have been suggested by Joseph SMITH, the founder of Mormonism.

Starrett, Vincent (1886-). Canadian-born American writer on books. He has also written entertaining verse and some mystery fiction and is an authority on the private life of Sherlock Holmes. Bookman's Holiday (1942); Autolycus in Limbo (poems; 1943); Murder in Peking (1946); etc.

Star-Spangled Banner, The. The national anthem of the United States, written by Francis Scott Key in 1814 during the War of 1812.

During the British bombardment of Fort McHenry, the gateway to the Baltimore defenses, Key was aboard a British man-of-war, detained on a mission to obtain the exchange of an American prisoner. The bombardment lasted throughout the night from September 13 to 14. The poem was scribbled on the back of an envelope, when, after a long night of anxious waiting, "by the dawn's early light," Key could see that the stars and stripes were still flying over the fort. It was sung to the tune of To Anacreon in Heaven.

Starvation Dundas. Henry Dundas, 1st Lord Melville. According to Horace Walpole, he was so called because he introduced the word starvation into the language in a speech on American affairs (1775).

Starveling, Robin. In Shakespeare's MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, the tailor cast for the part of "Thisbe's mother," in the drama played before Duke Theseus on "his wedding day at night." See PYRAMUS. Starveling has nothing to say in the drama.

State Fair. The first novel (1932) by Phil STONG. It has been filmed twice.

states. The following are some of the best known designations of American states:

Antelope State. Nebraska.

Badger State. Wisconsin. This name is said to have been given the state because the mining pioneers lived in the ground like badgers. There is a badger on the state coat of arms.

Battle-born State. Nevada, so called because it was admitted into the Union during the Civil War.

Bay State. Massachusetts, so called from the name of the original colony, Massachusetts Bay.

Bayou State. Mississippi. A bayou is a creek, or sluggish and marshy overflow of a river or lake. The word may be of native American origin, but is probably a corruption of Fr. boyau, gut.

Bear State. Arkansas, so called from the number of bears formerly within its bounds.

Big Bend State. Tennessee, from the Indian name Tennessee, meaning "River of the Big Bend."

Blue Grass State. Kentucky.

Blue Law State. Connecticut. See BLUE LAWS.

Border States. The five "slave" states (Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, and Missouri) which lay next to the "free states" were so called in the American Civil War.

Border Eagle State. Mississippi, from the border eagle in its coat of arms.

Buckeye State. Ohio, so called from its numerous buckeye or horse-chestnut trees. An inhabitant of the state is known as a Buckeye.

Bullion State. Missouri, so called from its Congressman, Thomas Hart Benton, who was known as "Old Bullion."

Centennial State. Colorado, from the date of its admission into the Union in 1876, one hundred years after the Declaration of Independence.

Cockade State. Maryland, from the cockades worn by Maryland Revolutionary troops.

Confederate States. The eleven States which seceded from the Union in the Civil War (1861-1865): Georgia, North and South Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee, Alabama, Louisiana, Arkansas, Mississippi, Florida, Texas. They were all readmitted into the Union between 1866 and 1870.

Corn-Cracker State. Kentucky. According to one derivation, the name comes from its corn-cracker birds. Crackers or Corn Crackers are Southern "poor whites."

Cotton Plantation State. Alabama.

Cracker State. Georgia. Crackers are "poor whites."

Creole State. Louisiana, from its large percentage of Creoles, or persons of French (or sometimes Spanish) descent.

Equality State. Wyoming, because it was the first to grant woman suffrage.

Empire State. New York. The name Empire was given to the state and city by George Washington, 1784, in reply to an address by the New York Common Council.

Empire State of the South. Georgia.

Everglade State. Florida, so called from its everglades or tracts of marshy flat land.

Excelsior State. New York is so called from its motto Excelsior.

Federal States. The name given to those northern states which combined to resist the eleven southern or Confederate states.

Freestone State. Connecticut, from the freestone in its limits.

Garden State. Kansas and New Jersey have been so called from their agricultural interests.

Golden State. California; so called from its gold "diggings."

Gopher State. Minnesota.

Granite State. New Hampshire.

Green Mountain State. Vermont.

Grizzly Bear State. California.

Gulf States. Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas, on the Gulf of Mexico.

Hawk Eye State. Iowa, from the name of the Indian chief who opposed the early settlers.

Hoosier State. Indiana, said to be named from Husher, a bully who hushed those opposed to him.

Jay Hawk State. Kansas. See JAY HAWK.

Keystone State. Pennsylvania, so called from its position and importance.

Lake State. Michigan, which touches Lake Michigan, Lake Huron, Lake Erie, Lake Superior, and Lake St. Clair.

Live Oak State. Florida, from its numbers of live oaks.

Lone Star State. Texas, from its coat of arms which displays a single star.

Lumber State. Maine.

North Star State. Minnesota, from its motto L'Etoile du Nord (The North Star).

Nutmeg State. Connecticut, from the shrewdness of its inhabitants, who are supposed to produce wooden nutmegs and other frauds.

Old Line State. Maryland, which is separated from Pennsylvania by the Mason and Dixon line.

Old North State. North Carolina.

Palmetto State. South Carolina. The palmetto tree is a prominent feature of the state coat of arms.

Panhandle State. West Virginia. See PANHANDLE.

Pelican State. Louisiana, from the pelican in its coat of arms.

Peninsular State. Florida, so called because of its shape.

Pine Tree State. Maine, which has forests of these trees and bears a pine-tree on its coat of arms.

Prairie State. Illinois, from its vast prairies.

Sage-Brush State. Nevada. The inhabitants are called Sage Hens.

Thirteen States. The original thirteen colonies that united to form the United States of America. They are Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina and Virginia.

Sucker State. Illinois was so called from the "suckers" who worked in the lead diggings of Wisconsin but returned to Illinois for the winter.

Turpentine State. North Carolina, because of the turpentine it produces.

Wolverine State. Michigan, from the wolverines of its pioneer days.

Land of Steady Habits. Connecticut, which is also called the Blue Law State.

Sunset Land. Arizona.

The following are the dates of admission of the various states into the Union:

Alabama (December 14, 1819), Arizona (February 14, 1912); Arkansas (June 15, 1836); California (September 9, 1850); Colorado (August 1, 1861); Connecticut (January 9, 1788); Delaware (December 7, 1787); Florida (March 3, 1845); Georgia (January 2, 1788); Idaho (July 3, 1890); Illinois (December 3, 1818); Indiana (December 11, 1816); Iowa (December 28, 1846); Kansas (January 29, 1861); Kentucky (June 1, 1792); Louisiana (April 8, 1812); Maine (March 15, 1820); Maryland (April 28, 1788); Massachusetts (February 6, 1788); Michigan (January 26, 1837); Minnesota (May 11, 1858); Mississippi

Stationers' Hall. In London, the hall of the guild of stationers, i.e., booksellers and publishers. For nearly three hundred years the guild regulated the publication of books in England. From 1842 to 1911 proceedings against copyright infringement were possible only in the case of books registered at Stationers' Hall.

the fourteen stations of the Catholic Church. These are generally called "Stations of the Cross," and the whole series is known as the via Calvaria or via Crucis. Each station represents, by fresco, picture, or otherwise, some incident in the passage of Christ from the judgment hall to CALVARY, and at each prayers are offered up in memory of the event represented. They are as follows:

- (1) The condemnation to death.
- (2) Christ is made to bear His cross.
- (3) His first fall under the cross.
- (4) The meeting with the Virgin.
- (5) Simon the Cyrenean helps to carry the cross.
- (6) Veronica wipes the sacred face.
- (7) The second fall.
- (8) Christ speaks to the daughters of Jerusalem.
- (9) The third fall.
- (10) Christ is stripped of His garments.
- (11) The nailing to the cross.
- (12) The giving up of the Spirit.
- (13) Christ is taken down from the cross.
- (14) The deposition in the sepulcher.

Statira. A historical character, daughter of Darius and first wife of ALEXANDER. She and Roxana, the Bactrian, his second wife, are the joint heroines of Lee's drama, Alexander the Great, Or The Rival Queens (1678). Statira is finally murdered by her rival.

Miss Boutwell was the original "Statira" of Lee's Alexander, and once, when playing with Mrs. Barry [1678] she was in danger of receiving on the stage her death-blow. It happened thus: Before the curtain drew up, the two queens, "Statira" and "Roxana" had a real rivalry about a lace veil, allotted to Miss Boutwell by the manager. This so enraged Mrs. Barry that, in "stabbing Statira," she actually thrust her dagger through her rival's stays, a quarter of an inch or more into the flesh.—Campbell, Life of Mrs. Siddons.

Statue and the Bust, The. A poem (1855) by Robert BROWNING.

Staunton, the Rev. In Scott's HEART OF MIDLOTHIAN, rector of Willingham, and father of George Staunton.

George Staunton. Son of the Rev. Staunton. He appears first as "Geordie Robertson," a felon; in the Porteous mob he assumes the guise of "Madge Wildfire." George Staunton is the seducer of Effie DEANS. Ultimately he comes to the title of baronet, marries Effie, and is shot by a gypsy boy called "The Whistler," who proves to be his own natural son.

Lady Staunton. Effie Deans after her marriage with Sir George. On the death of her husband, she retires to a convent on the Continent.

Stavisky, Serge Alexandre (1886?–1934). A remarkable Russian-born French swindler who managed to sell 40,000,000 francs' worth of worthless bonds to the French working people. The discovery of his huge fraud (December, 1933) resulted in the downfall of two ministries. A trial which ended in January 1936 led to the conviction of nine people. Stavisky's sudden death was probably suicide. Cf. An American in Paris (1940), by Janet Flanner.

Stavrogin, Nikolay Vsyevolodovich. In Dostoyevsky's THE POSSESSED, a young Russian of the upper classes, mysterious, magnetic, and erratic in personality, an atheist and adherent of nihilism in thought. He has lived abroad for a number of years in debauchery and crime in which Marya Timofeyevna LEBYADKIN and the wife of Ivan SHATOV have been involved. During this time he has become associated with Pyotr Stepanovich VERHOVENSKY in the leadership of a band of revolutionary terrorists whom he brings to his native village, but he is unable to believe in their aims. He tries to turn to religion, but he is unable to believe in that, either, and he cannot love, although Lizaveta Nikolaevna TUSHIN gives herself to him. Simultaneously admired and hated by virtually all the other characters, Nikolay is unhappy and plans to start anew elsewhere in the company of Shatov's sister, the devoted Darya, but instead commits suicide.

Varvara Petrovna Stavrogin, Nikolay's mother, is also a leading character in the novel. She is a vigorous and direct woman, temperamental and domineering, who maintains a devoted but stormy friendship with Stepan Trofimovich VERHOVENSKY, who lives on her estate, and for a time is the patroness of a proposed magazine to be issued by the revolutionary band. This character is said to have been based on a real person, A. O. Smirnova-Rosset, a Russian woman of wealth who was a friend of PUSHKIN and GOGOL in the early part of the 19th century.

Stead, Christina Ellen (1902–). Australian-born American novelist. According to Rebecca West, "one of the few people really original we have produced since the [First World] War." The Salzburg Tales (1934); Seven Poor Men of Sydney (1935); House of All Nations (1938); The Man Who Loved Children (1940); etc.

Stead, William Thomas (1849-1912). English journalist. Founded the English Review of Reviews (1890) and introduced American methods of journalism into England. Advocated international peace and friendship with Russia and was interested in psychic research. He perished with the Titanic.

Steady Habits, the Land of. Connecticut is so called, from the supposedly puritanical character of its people.

Stealthy School of Criticism. A term coined by Dante Gabriel Rossetti in allusion to criticism published under a pseudonym. It was first used in a letter to the Athenaeum, December 16, 1871, with reference to a pseudonymous attack on THE FLESHLY SCHOOL OF POETRY published in the Contemporary Review of that year.

Stedman, Edmund Clarence (1833-1908). American critic and poet of the GENTEEL TRADITION, best known for his studies and anthologies of American and English literature, his verse not being regarded highly by 20th-century critics. His works include Poems, Lyrical and Idyllic (1860); Alice of Monmouth: An Idyll of the Great War (1863); The Blameless Prince (1869); Poetical Works (1873); Victorian Poets (1875); Commemorative Ode on Hawthorne (1877); Poets of America (1885); The Nature and Elements of Poetry (1892); and A Library of American Literature (1887-1890), A Victorian Anthology (1895), and An American Anthology (1900), all of which he edited. His best-known poem is Pan in Wall Street. Stedman was a journalist in his early career but spent most of his life as a successful New York stock broker.

Steed, Henry Wickham (1871-). Well-known English journalist. Foreign correspondent for the London Times in Berlin, Rome, Vienna; foreign editor (1914-1919) and editor of the Times (1919-1922).

Steel, Mrs. Flora Annie (1847-1929). English novelist, best known for On the Face of the Waters (1896), which deals with the Sepoy Mutiny in India.

Steel, Kurt, see KAGEY, RUDOLF.

Steele, Richard (1672-1729). Irish-born English playwright and essayist, known for his writings in the periodicals THE TATLER and THE SPECTATOR in association with Joseph Addison. Steele took the initiative in the founding of these two journalistic enterprises, serving as the first editor of The Tatler under the name of Isaac BICKERSTAFF, originally conceiving the character of Sir Roger de COVERLEY, and contributing most of the essays published in The Tatler. Other works by Steele are THE CHRISTIAN HERO (1701), a pamphlet; The Funeral (1701), The Lying Lover (1703), The Tender Husband (1705), and The Conscious Lovers (1772), all plays. Steele was the more journalistic of the two essayists.

Steele, Wilbur Daniel (1886-). American novelist, playwright, and, especially, short-story writer. Has won several awards. A number of his stories are concerned with the Portuguese of Cape Cod.

Steen, Marguerite. English novelist. Began as an actress and was launched on her writing career by Ellen TERRY. Her two most successful novels are Matador (1934) and The Sun Is My Undoing (1941), a long historical novel concerned with the slave trade.

steenkirk cravats. After the battle of Steenkerke (1692), when the French defeated the English, these neck scarves became fashionable in England and were supposed to imitate the hasty dress of the French officers who were surprised in the battle.

Steer, P. Wilson (1860-1942). English painter, known for his landscapes. Member of the Order of Merit (1931).

Steerforth. In Dickens' DAVID COPPERFIELD, David's hero at school, who later leads little Em'ly astray. When tired of his toy, he proposes that she marry his valet. Steerforth is shipwrecked off the coast of Yarmouth, and Ham PEGOTTY, who tries to rescue him, is drowned with him.

Steevens, George (1736-1800). Shakespearean scholar who prepared several editions of Shakespeare (1766; 1773; 1785; 1793). His work was criticized harshly by Joseph Ritson (1752-1803) in the Quip Modest (1788). Detected CHATTERTON's and IRELAND's forgeries.

Stefánsson, Vilhjálmur (1879-). Canadian-born American arctic explorer and writer. One of his most interesting books is The Standardization of Error (1927), in which he explodes many myths and superstitions concerning the arctic. He has also written My Life With the Eskimo (1913); Hunters of the Great North (1922); Unsolved Mysteries of the Arctic (1938); etc.

Steffens, Joseph Lincoln (1866-1936). American journalist and author, the best-known of the MUCKRAKERS, associated with the leading liberal and radical movements of his day. His works include The Shame of the Cities (1904); The Struggle for Self-Government (1906); Upbuilders (1909); The Least of These (1910); Moses in Red (1926); Autobiography (1931), perhaps the most popular of his works, describing the personalities and movements with which he came in contact and giving an account of the development of his own ideas; Lincoln Steffens Speaking (1936), a posthumous collection of miscellaneous articles and essays; and a collection of his Letters (1938). Steffens was on the editorial staffs of McClure's, the American Magazine, and Every- body's, the leading periodicals of the muck-raking movement, and later traveled in Europe.

Stegner, Wallace Earle (1909-). Iowa novelist whose first book, Remembering Laughter (1937), won the Little, Brown novelle contest. One of the most promising novelists of the Middle West.

Steichen, Edward (1879-). Noted American photographer, who commanded the photographic division of the air service during World War I. He is well known as a pioneer in experimental photography. Also a painter.

Stein, Gertrude (1874-1946). American poet, novelist, and author of miscellaneous prose, for a number of years one of the leading expatriate American residents of Paris and the subject of wide literary controversy during the 1920's. Her unique and celebrated style, in the development of which she is considered to have been influenced by the psychological theories of William James and 20th-century French painting, is characterized by a use of words for their associations and their sound rather than solely for their literal meaning, an intricate system of repetition and variation on a single verbal theme, an avoidance of conventional punctuation and syntax, an emphasis on the presentation of impressions and a particular state of mind rather than the telling of a story, and concreteness and extreme simplicity in diction, with preference for the commonplace and the monosyllabic. All these elements combine to produce an appealing pattern of sound, occasional flashes of beauty, and frequent vivid, striking images, in a total effect of wit, humor, gaiety, and sensuous immediacy. Sherwood Anderson and Ernest Hemingway are considered to have been influenced by the Stein style. John Chamberlain once remarked that "Stein's style is like 'the Chinese water torture; it never stops and it is always the same.'"

Gertrude Stein's works include Three Lives (1909), a novel; Tender Buttons (1914), poetry; Geography and Plays (1922); The Making of Americans (1925), a novel; Composition as Explanation (1926), lectures; Useful Knowledge (1928); Acquaintance with Description (1929); Ten Portraits (1930); Lucy Church Amiably (1930), a novel; Before the Flowers of Friendship Faded (1931); How to Write (1931); Operas and Plays (1932); A Long Gay Book (1932); Matisse, Picasso, and Gertrude Stein (1932); *The Autobiography of Alice B. Stone Age. The era in which human culture seems to have begun. It is characterized by the use of stone weapons and implements, and is followed by the Bronze Age.

Stonehenge. The great prehistoric (Neolithic or early Bronze Age) monument on Salisbury Plain, originally consisting of two concentric circles of upright stones, enclosing two rows of smaller stones, and a central block of blue marble, 18 feet by 4 feet, known as the Altar Stone. Many theories as to its original purpose and original builders have been propounded. It was probably used, if not built by the Druids, and from its plotting, which, it is certain, had an astronomical basis, it is thought to have been the temple of a sun god and to have been built about 1680 B. C.

The -henge of the name seems to refer to something hanging (A.S. hengen) in, or supported in, the air, viz., the huge transverse stones; but GEOFFREY OF MONMOUTH connects it with HENGIST, and says that Stonehenge was erected by MERLIN to perpetuate the treachery of Hengist in falling upon Vortigern and putting him and his 400 attendants to the sword. Aurelius Ambrosius asked Merlin to devise a memento of this event, whereupon the magician transplanted from Killaraus, in Ireland, the "Giant's Dance," stones which had been brought thither from Africa by a race of giants and all of which possessed magic properties.

Stone Mountain. A village in De Kalb County, Georgia, noted for an isolated granite dome with a precipitous northern face which is ornamented with relief figures of leaders of the Confederacy, including Robert E. Lee on his famous horse Traveller.

stornello verses. Verses in which certain words are harped on and turned about and about. They are common among the Tuscan peasants. The word is from Italian tornare, "to return."

I'll tell him the white, and the green, and the red,
Mean our country has flung the vile yoke from her head;
I'll tell him the green, and the red, and the white,
Would look well by his side as a sword-knot so bright;
I'll tell him the red, and the white, and the green,
Is the prize that we play for, a prize we will win.

Notes and Queries.

Story. American monthly magazine, founded in 1931 in Vienna, Austria, by Martha Foley and Whit Burnett, one of the best-known of the LITTLE MAGAZINES of the time. Its original aim was to provide a vehicle for short stories by unknown authors for which there was no market in popular and conservative magazines. For awhile it was published on the island of Mallorca, and in 1933 began to be issued from New York. With commercial success, its standards altered.

stream of consciousness. Term applied to the uninterrupted flow of sensations, thoughts, memories, associations, etc., in the consciousness of an individual at a given time, according to early 20th-century theories of psychology; the phrase itself is said to be one used by William JAMES. It is best known as a literary technique by which character and events are presented through the mental images, thoughts, and emotional reactions of a person or persons in the story or novel. The first notable use of the stream-of-consciousness technique is considered to be in We'll to the Woods No More (Les Lauriers sont coupés), by Edouard DUJARDIN, although Dujardin's method is closer to that of the INTERIOR MONOLOGUE as exemplified in the novels of Virginia WOOLF, especially in THE WAVES. The interior monologue differs from stream of consciousness proper in that the recital of the thoughts, sensations, feelings, and the like of the character involved is edited in accordance with a desired mood, pattern of sound or rhythm, or exactitude of narration. The steady flow of the thought-processes of Stephen DEDALUS and Leopold and Molly BLOOM in James JOYCE's ULYSSES is the most famous and most representative of the true stream-of-consciousness style. Edgar Allan POE, Herman MELVILLE, and Henry JAMES are considered to have been early forerunners of this technique, as are even some portions of Laurence STERNE's TRISTRAM SHANDY. Followers of Joyce whose writings make use of stream of consciousness with more or less modification according to their particular material and aims include: Virginia WOOLF, Sherwood ANDERSON, Ernest HEMINGWAY, Conrad AIKEN, Gertrude STEIN, John DOS PASSOS, William FAULKNER (see THE SOUND AND THE FURY), James T. FARRELL, W. C. WILLIAMS, and Thomas WOLFE. STRANGE INTERLUDE, by Eugene O'NEILL, is an attempt to apply stream-of-consciousness technique to the stage, and the method was also used, with more success, in radio plays.

Struther, Jan, see MAXTONE GRAHAM, Mrs. JOYCE.

Strutt, Joseph (1749-1802). English antiquary and engraver. Author of A Complete View of the Dress and Habits of the People of England (2 vols.; 1796-1799) and The Sports and Pastimes of the People of England (1801). Sir Walter Scott finished a novel partly written by Strutt.

Strutt, Lord. In Arbuthnot's History of John Bull (1712), a caricature of the King of Spain, originally Charles II (who died without issue), but also applied to his successor Philippe Duc d'Anson, called "Philip Lord Strutt."

I need not tell you of the great quarrels that happened in our neighbourhood since the death of the late lord Strutt; how the parson [cardinal Portocarero] . . . got him to settle his estate upon his cousin Philip Baboon [Bourbon], to the great disappointment of his cousin squire South [Charles of Austria].—History of John Bull, i.

Stryver, Bully. In Dickens' TALE OF TWO CITIES, counsel for the defense in Darnay's trial. He is more formally known as C. J. Stryver.

He was stout, loud, red, bluff, and free from any drawback of delicacy; had a pushing way of shouldering himself (morally and physically) into companies and conversations, that argued well for his shouldering his way on in life.—ii. 24.

Stuart, Mary, see MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS. Prince Charles Edward Stuart. See under PRETENDER.

Stuart, Francis (1902-). Irish novelist and poet, member of the Irish Academy of Letters. Pigeon Irish (1932); The Coloured Dome (1932); The Great Squire (1939); etc.

Stuart, Gilbert Charles (1755–1828). American painter; studied in London and had a studio there (1776–1787). He gained fame as a portrait painter and was considered the peer of Romney, Gainsborough and Reynolds.

Stuart, Henry Longan (1875–1928). Anglo-American Roman Catholic journalist; writer for The Freeman and associated with Michael Williams on The Commonwealth. His novel Weeping Cross: an Unworldly Story (1908) has been highly praised.

Stuart, James Ewell Brown, known as Jeb (1833–1864). Confederate commander and general of cavalry. His absence from the Battle of Gettysburg is said to have contributed to the defeat of the South.

Stuart, Jesse Hilton (1907–). American poet, novelist, and short-story writer, known for his books dealing with the mountain region of Kentucky and its people, his poetry having been compared by some critics to that of Robert Burns. Among his works are Man with a Bull-Tongue Plow (1934), a collection of sonnets; Head o' W-Hollow (1936) and Men of the Mountains (1941), short stories; Beyond Dark Hills (1938), autobiographical; Trees of Heaven (1940), a novel.

Stuart, Ruth, née McEnery (1849–1917). American writer on Southern life.

Stuart Little. Title of a children's book by E. B. White (1945) concerning a mouse born into a New York family.

Stubbs or Stubbes, Philip (fl. ca. 1583–1591). English Puritan who violently denounced the evils of his time in The Anatomie of Abuses (1583). Thomas Nash answered with The Anatomie of Absurdities (1589).

Stubbs, William (1825–1901). English historian; regius professor of modern history at Oxford (1866–1884). Chief work, The Constitutional History of England (3 vols.; 1874–1878).

Stuck, Franz von (1863–1928). German painter and sculptor. His illustrations for the comic paper Fliegende Blätter became widely known. His paintings and sculptures have religious or allegorical subjects.

Studs Lonigan. A trilogy by James T. Farrell, consisting of Young Lonigan (1932), The Young Manhood of Studs Lonigan (1934), and Judgment Day (1935). In relentless naturalistic style (see Naturalism) it presents the boyhood, adolescence, early manhood, and finally death of William (Studs) Lonigan, the son of lower-middle-class Irish Catholic parents in Chicago. Although Studs as a boy displays sparks of vigor, spirit, and ambition, the combined influences of his social and economic environment, his swaggering and vicious associates, the general moral laxness and extravagance of the Jazz Age, and his narrow family, educational, and religious background, serve to aggravate his weaknesses and guide him into a life of futile dissipation and vice, which he recognizes as unsatisfactory but from which he is unable to escape. The language of the streets, the monotony and crudity of the thought processes of Studs and his associates, and their numerous sordid sexual adventures are all frankly and faithfully reproduced, and there is extensive documentation in the depiction of the social background in the U.S. during the period between Woodrow Wilson's renomination to the presidency and the first years of the depression era of the 1930's. A Stream-of-Consciousness portrayal of Studs' thoughts and feelings, by which a complete characterization of him is given, is a notable feature of this work. See also the following names of subordinate characters: JACKSON, MRS. GEORGE; MOYLAN, FATHER; REILLEY, WEARY; SCANLAN, LUCY; SHIRES, HELEN.

Studs Lonigan, which the author describes as a study of "spiritual poverty," rather than one of squalid tenement living or of the criminal underworld, as some readers erroneously considered it, aroused much controversy on its publication, one group of detractors denouncing it on the grounds of obscenity and immorality, and another group dismissing it as mere sociological reporting, devoid of literary merit. Some critics, however, have ranked it with John Dos Passos' U.S.A. as one of the greatest of American novels and one of the best portrayals of life in the U.S. in the 20th century.

Stuka. A German dive bomber used in World War II.

Stukely, Will, see STUTLY, WILL.

Sturgis, Russell (1836–1909). American architect and writer on art; editor in chief of A Dictionary of Architecture and Building (3 vols.; 1901–1902); author of the first two volumes of A. Sturgis and A. L. Frothingham, A History of Architecture (4 vols.; 1906–1915).

Sturluson, Snorri, see SNORRI STURLUSON.

Sturm und Drang (Ger., "storm and stress"). The name given to the intellectual awakening of Germany toward the close of the 18th century, closely allied with the general movement of ROMANTICISM. It was so called from a drama of that name by Friedrich Maximilian von Klinger (1752–1831). Goethe's Goetz von Berlichingen and Sorrows of Werther, Schiller's Robbers, Klinger's tragedies, Lessing's criticisms, and the mania for SHAKESPEARE and OSSIAN, were characteristic of the trend of the times. It was a typical "youth movement," not essentially different from other extravagant rebellions of "the younger generation," and important only because several of its representatives grew up to assume world-wide importance as Germany's greatest poets and dramatists.

Study, Will. In the Robin Hood legends, a companion of Little John, sometimes called Will Stukely. In the morris-dance on May-day, Little John occupied the right hand side of Robin Hood, and Will Study the left. His rescue from the sheriff of Nottingham by Robin Hood, forms the subject of one of the Robin Hood ballads.

When Robin Hood in the greenwood lived,
Under the greenwood tree,
Tidings there came to him with speed,
Tidings for certaintie,
That Will Study surprized was,
And eke in prison lay,
Three varlets that the sheriff hired,
Did likely him betray.

Robin Hood's Rescuing Will Study, iv. 15.

Stuyvesant, Peter (1592-1672). Dutch director-general of New Netherland (1647-1664) until he had to surrender the colony to Great Britain. He appears in the History of New York by Washington Irving as "Peter, the Headstrong." Legend has it that his false leg was made of silver. His farm, Bouwerij (literally, "farm"), included the region of the Bowery in New York City.

stylites or pillar saints. A class of early and medieval ascetics, chiefly of Syria, who took up their abode on the top of a pillar, from which they never descended. The most celebrated are Simeon Stylites, of Syria, and Daniel the Stylite of Constantinople. Simeon (d. 596) spent sixty-eight years on different pillars, each loftier and narrower than the preceding, the last being 66 feet high. Daniel (d. 494) lived thirty-three years on a pillar, and was not unfrequently nearly blown from it by the storms from Thrace. This form of asceticism was still in vogue as late as the 12th century. TENNYSON has a poem St. Simeon Stylites:

I, Simeon of the Pillar by surname,
Stylites among men—I, Simeon,
The watcher on the column till the end.

Styx. The river of Hate (Gr. stugein, "to hate"), that, according to classical mythology, flowed nine times round the infernal regions.

The fables about the Styx are of Egyptian origin. Thus Isis collected the various parts of OSIRIS (murdered by Typhon) and buried them in secrecy on the banks of the Styx. CHERON the ferryman of the Styx, as Diodorus informs us, is an Egyptian word for a "ferryman."

The five rivers of Hell are the Styx, Acheron, Cocytus, Phlegethon and Lethe.

Abhorred Styx, the flood of deadly hate;
Sad Acheron, of sorrow, black and deep;

Cocytus, named of lamentation loud,
Heard on the rueful stream; fierce Phlegethon,
Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage.
Far off from these, a slow and silent stream,
Lethe, the river of oblivion, rolls
Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 577, etc. (1665).

Dante, in his DIVINE COMEDY, places the rivers in different circles of the Inferno. Thus, he makes the Acheron divide the border-land from Limbo. The former realm is for the "praiseless and the blameless dead"; Limbo is for the unbaptized. He places the Stygian Lake of "inky hue" in the fifth circle, the realm of those who put no restraint on their anger. The fire-stream of Phlegethon he fixes to the eighth steep, the "Hell of burning, where it snows flakes of fire," and where blasphemers are confined. He places "the frozen river" of Cocytus in the tenth pit of Malebolge, a region of thick-ribbed ice, the lowest depth of Hell, where JUDAS and LUCIFER are imprisoned. Lethe, he says, is no river of Hell at all, but it is the one wish of all the infernals to get to it, that they may drink its water and forget their torments. It being, however, in "Purgatory," they can never get near it.

John Kendrick Bangs has a humorous narrative entitled A Houseboat on the Styx (Am., 1895).

Suárez, Francisco (1548-1617). Spanish scholastic philosopher, considered the chief theologian of the Jesuits. He was a distinguished commentator upon St. Thomas Aquinas.

subject and object. In metaphysics, the subject is the ego, the mind, the conscious self, the substance or substratum to which attributes must be referred; the object is external as distinct from the ego, a thing or idea brought before the consciousness. Hence subjective criticism, art, etc., is that which proceeds from the individual mind and is consequently individualistic, fanciful, imaginative, while objective criticism is that which is based on knowledge of the externals.

subject-object. The immediate object of thought as distinguished from the material thing of which one is thinking.

subjectivism. Generalized term for those schools of philosophy holding that only the thinking mind, the conscious self, is real. See IDEALISM; SOLIPSISM.

Sublette, William Lewis (1799?-1845). American soldier who led fur-trading expeditions into the Rocky Mountains (1828, 1832) and to Santa Fé (1831). A part of the Oregon Trail was known as "Sublette's trace."

Sublime Porte. The central office of the former Ottoman Government in Constantinople; hence, the Government or the Empire itself. The term is French in origin, sublime signifying "lofty" or "high and mighty." Constantinople has twelve gates, and near one of these is a building with a lofty gateway called "Bab-i-humajun," in which was the official residence of the vizier, and the offices of all the chief ministers of state, whence all the imperial edicts were issued.

submerged or submerged tenth, the. The PROLETARIAT, sunken or submerged in poverty; the gutter-class; the waifs and strays of society.

subscription book. A book manufactured after the requisite number of customers have promised by their "subscription" to purchase it. Benjamin Franklin organized the first subscription library in the U.S. It contained Keill, Astronomy; Defoe, Complete English Tradesman; L'Hospital, Conic Sections; Bayle, Critical Dictionary; Montaigne, Essays; Hayes, Fluxions; Sidney, Government; Defoe, Gulliver's Travels; Homer, Iliad and Odyssey; Pufendorf, Jurisprudence; Xenophon, Memorabilia; Gravesand, Natural Philosophy; Newton, Principia; Dryden, Virgil.

The numerous book clubs of today are financed by a similar plan: subscribers agree to take a certain number of selections during the year. The Book-of-the-Month Club and The Literary Guild, both founded in 1926, each have over a million subscribers. Other clubs include The Book League, The Non-Fiction Book Club, The Religious Book Club, The Dollar Book Club, The Book Find Club, etc. The literary value of the selections of the two largest clubs has often been questioned.

Subtle. In Ben Jonson's comedy THE ALCHEMIST, the "alchemist," an artful quack who pretends to be on the eve of discovering the PHILOSOPHER'S STONE. Sir Epicure Mammon, a rich knight, is his principal dupe, but by no means his only one.

Subtle Doctor. See under DOCTOR.

Succoth (Heb. sukkoth, "booths"). The Jewish name for the Feast of TABERNACLES.

succubus. A lascivious demon in female form. From Latin sub, "under" and cubare, "to lie down." The succubus lies under, the incubus over.

Such, Theophrastus, see THEOPHRASTUS SUCH.

Sucker State. Illinois. See under STATES.

Suckfist, Lord. In Rabelais' GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL, II. 11-13, the defendant in the great Pantagruelian lawsuit, known as "Lord Busqueue v. Lord Suckfist," in which the plaintiff and defendant plead in person. After hearing the case, the bench declares, "We have not understood one single circumstance of the matter on either side." But PANTAGRUEL gives judgment, and as plaintiff and defendant leave the court each fully persuaded that the verdict is in his own favor, they are both highly satisfied, "a thing without parallel in the annals of the law."

Suckling, Sir John (1609-1642). English poet, courtier, and soldier, a member of the Cavalier school, or the "sons of Ben" (see JONSON, BEN), although he was influenced to some extent in superficial effects by John DONNE. Suckling was known in his day for his wit, his gaiety, his love of gaming, and his boisterous exhibitionism. His writings include Aglaura (1637), a play; an Account of Religion by Reason, a prose tract; Fragmenta Aurea (1646) and The Last Remains (1659), collections of verse. The best known of his numerous lyrics and songs is that beginning "Why so pale and wan, fond lover?"

Suckling took part in several military campaigns and was implicated in the plot to rescue STRAFFORD from the Tower of London in 1641, fleeing to France to escape apprehension. Some accounts say that he committed suicide; others, that he was killed in revenge by a servant.

Suckow, Ruth (1892-). American novelist and short-story writer, known for her studies, generally realistic, of life in Iowa. Her works include Country People (1924); The Odyssey of a Nice Girl (1925); Iowa Interiors (1926), short stories; The Bonney Family (1928); Cora (1929); The Kramer Girls (1930); Children and Other People (1931), short stories; The Folks (1934); Carry-Over (1936), a partial collection of her previous work; New Hope (1942).

Sudermann, Hermann (1857-1928). German dramatist and novelist. His novels include DAME CARE (Frau Sorge; 1888); THE SONG OF SONGS (Das Hohe Lied; 1908); Regina, Or the Sins of the Fathers, a translation of Der Katzensteg (1898); The Wish (Der Wunsch; 1895); The Mad Professor (Der Tolle Professor; 1926). Among his plays are Heimat (1893), translated as MAGDA; Fritzchen (1896); The Vale of Content (Das Glück im Winkel; 1896); The Fires of St. John (Johannisfeuer; 1897; see SALOMÉ); The Joy of Living (1902), a translation of Es lebe das Leben; The Undying Past (1906), a translation of Es war; Honor (1915). Other works include Geschwister (1899), The Indian Lily (1895-1896), and The Excursion to Tilsit (1930), collections of short stories; The Book of My Youth (1923).

Sudra. One of the four great CASTES of Hinduism.

Sue, Eugène (1804-1859). French novelist, known for his sensational and popular romances in the manner of DUMAS père. Les Mystères de Paris (1843) and THE WANDERING JEW (Le Juif errant; 1849) are his best-known works. Sue was an army doctor in his early years and began his literary career by writing sea-tales based on his own experiences.

Suetonius. In full Gaius Suetonius Tranquillus. Roman biographer and historian. Private secretary to Emperor Hadrian (ca. 119-121). The work by which he is remembered is Lives of the Caesars.

Sufi. Member of a Mohammedan sect of mystics, mentioned, for instance, in Omar Khāyām. The literal meaning of the word is "clad in wool."

Sugimoto, Mme Etsu Inagaki (1874-). Japanese autobiographer and novelist. Best known for A Daughter of the Samurai (1925).

Suggs, Captain Simon. A rapsallion character created by the Alabama humorist J. J. Hooper in his Adventures of Captain Simon Suggs (Am., 1846). The character was admired by THACKERAY. In his Flush Times of Alabama and Mississippi (Am., 1853) another Southern humorist, J. G. Baldwin, introduced Simon Suggs, Jr., Esquire, "a good trader and the mean boy of the school."

sui generis (Lat., "of its own kind"). Having a distinct character of its own; unlike anything else.

sui juris (Lat.). Of one's own right; the state of being able to exercise one's legal rights, i.e., freedom from legal disability.

Suleiman I. Known as the Magnificent (1496?-1566). Famous Turkish ruler who encouraged the arts and sciences.

Sulgrave Manor. An estate in Northamptonshire, England, where the ancestors of George Washington lived. In 1914 it was made a monument by the Sulgrave Institution.

Sulla, Lucius Cornelius. Surnamed Felix (138-78 B.C.). Roman general, dictator, and reformer. Took part in various campaigns and was elected consul (88). During the civil war between him and Marius (88-82), he led for the first time an army of Romans against Rome (88 B.C.). Appointed dictator (81). Reorganized the senate and the judiciary of Rome and was the first in Roman history to use the weapon of proscription.

Sullen, Squire. In Farquhar's comedy THE BEAUX' STRATAGEM, the son of Lady Bountiful by her first husband. He marries the sister of Sir Charles Freeman, but after fourteen months they mutually agree to a divorce, for in no one single point is there any compatibility between them. The Squire is sullen, the lady sprightly; he cannot drink tea with her, and she cannot drink ale with him; he hates ombre and picquet, she hates cock-fighting and racing; he will not dance, and she will not hunt. When Squire Sullen separates from his wife, he is obliged to return the £20,000 which he received with her as a dowry.

Sullivan, Sir Arthur Seymour (1842-1900). English composer, well-known for his collaboration with W. S. GILBERT in the Gilbert and Sullivan operas. Also an organist and composer of sacred music and serious opera. Outside of comic opera his best-known compositions are songs, as The Lost Chord and the hymn Onward, Christian Soldiers.

Sullivan, Frank (1892-). Widely popular American humorist. Has conducted columns in the New York World and PM, contributing also to the NEW YORKER. His books include The Life and Times of Martha Hepplethwaite (1926); Innocent Bystanding (1928); Sullivan at Bay (1939); etc.

Sullivan, John Lawrence (1858-1918). American heavyweight prizefighter.

Sullivan, John William (1886-1937). English scientific popularizer. Aspects of Science (1923) is his most successful book. Three Men Discuss Relativity (1926) is an endeavor to popularize Einstein's theory for the ordinary reader. The three men are Einstein, Aldous Huxley, and the author himself.

Sullivan, Mark (1874-). American editor and journalist. Best known for his contemporary history, Our Times—The United States (6 vols.; 1900-1925); The Education of an American (1938) (autobiography); etc.

Sully, Duc de. Maximilien de Béthune. Baron de Rosny (1560-1641). French statesman; minister of finance and holder of other high offices under Henry IV. Forced to resign at Henry's death (1610). His Mémoires (1638) are a valuable historical source.

Sully, Thomas (1783-1872). English-born American painter. Painting of Lafayette hangs in Independence Hall, Philadelphia. Total production, 2,600 works.

Sully Prudhomme, René François Armand (1839-1907). French poet of the group known as PARNASSIANS, one of the most representative poets of his age. His work is characterized by sensibility, melancholy, a conflict between scientific doubt and religious faith, and delicacy of treatment. His works include Stances et Poèmes (1865); Les Solitudes (1869); Les Vaines Tendresses (1875); La Justice (1878) and Le Bonheur (1888), moral allegories; Les Epaves (1908). He wrote a number of sonnets. La Vase Brisé (The Broken Vase) is his best-known poem. Sully Prudhomme was honored during his lifetime, being elected to the French Academy in 1881. First Nobel prize for literature (1901).

Sulzberger, Cyrus Lindauer (1858-1932). American merchant and philanthropist. His son, Arthur Hays Sulzberger (1891-), became president and director of the New York Times Co., and publisher of the New York Times.

Summer. A novel by Edith WHARTON (1917), the story of Charity Royall, the child of a degenerate backwoods community, brought up in a small town by Lawyer Royall, a middle-aged relative. After a brief "summer" of love with an attractive young stranger, she is deserted and returns in despair to her birthplace in the hills. But when Lawyer Royall follows and offers to marry her, although she has both feared and despised him, she consents.

Summer, Will. Jester of Henry VIII, said to have been a model for the fools in Shakespeare.

I think it was Will Summers
Who once was Shakespeare's fool.
Alfred Noyes, The Lord of Misrule

Summerall, Charles Pelot (1867–). Chief of staff of the U.S. army (1926–1930).

Summers, Montague. In full Alphonsus Joseph-Mary Augustus Montague Summers (1880–1948). English priest who has written brilliantly on the Restoration, particularly in the realm of the theater and drama. His The History of Witchcraft and Demonology (1927) and The Geography of Witchcraft (1928) are two of the most important reference books on this weird subject.

Summerson, Esther. The heroine of Dickens' BLEAK HOUSE, a gentle, lovable girl called by those who know and love her "Dame Durdens" or "Dame Trot." She turns out to be the illegitimate child of Lady Dedlock and Captain Hawdon. Eventually she marries Allan Woodcourt, a surgeon.

Summoner's, Sumpnor's or Somnour's Tale, The. One of Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES, told by the summoner, a packman or peddler. After some introductory raillery regarding the begging habits of friars, the tale is told of a certain king who commands his officer to take to execution a man charged with murder. On the way they encounter the man supposed to be murdered, and the officer leads back the accused. The king, instead of discharging the innocent man, commands all three to be put to death—the officer, for disobeying orders; the accused, because the king commanded him to be executed; and the man supposed to have been murdered, because he is the cause of death to the other two.

summun bonum (Lat., "the highest good"). The chief excellence; the highest attainable good.

Sumner, Charles (1811–1874). The first American statesman of distinction to urge Negro emancipation (1861). He was prominent in impeaching President Johnson and opposed the re-election of President Grant in 1872. The Works of Charles Sumner (15 vols.; 1870–1883). In a poem in his memory Longfellow wrote:

Like Winkelried he took Into his manly breast
The sheaf of hostile spears, and broke
A path for the oppressed.

Sumner, William Graham (1840–1910). American teacher of sociology. He was a strong opponent of government interference in business and advocated an imperialistic policy on the part of the U.S. He wrote many books on finance and some biographies. Folkways (1907) is his best-known book. His Science of Society was completed by A. G. Keller (4 vols.; 1927).

sumptuary laws. Laws to limit the expenses of food and dress, or any luxury. The Romans had their leges sumptuarii, and they have been enacted in many states at various times.

Sumter, Fort. A fort in Charleston Harbor in South Carolina where the first engagement of the United States Civil War took place.

sun. The source of light and heat, and consequently of life, to the whole world; hence, regarded as a deity and worshiped as such by all primitive peoples and having a leading place in all mythologies. Shamash was the principal sun god of the Assyrians, Merodach of the Chaldees, Ormuzd of the Persians, Ra of the Egyptians, Tezcatlipoca of the Mexicans, and Helios (known to the Romans as Sol) of the Greeks. Helios drove his chariot daily across the heavens, rising from the sea at dawn and sinking into it in the west at sunset. The Scandinavian sun god Sunna, who was in constant dread of being devoured by the wolf Fenris (a symbol of eclipses), was similarly borne through the sky. Apollo was also a sun god of the Greeks, but he was the personification not of the sun itself but of its all-pervading light and life-giving qualities.

a place in the sun. A favorable position that allows room for development; a share in what one has a natural right to. The phrase was popularized by William II of Germany during the crisis of 1911. In his speech at Hamburg (August 27) he spoke of the German nation taking steps that would make them—sure that no one can dispute with us the place in the sun that is our due.

The phrase had been used by PASCAL some two hundred years before.

out of God's blessing into the warm sun. One of Ray's proverbs, meaning from good to less good. When the king says to HAMLET, "How is it that the clouds still hang on you?" the prince answers, "No, my lord, I am too much i' the sun," meaning, "I have lost God's blessing for too much of the sun"—i.e., this far inferior state.

the City of the Sun. See CITY.

the sun of Austerlitz. When Napoleon fought the Russians and Austrians at Austerlitz (December 2, 1805), a brilliant sun suddenly burst through and scattered the mists, thus enabling him to gain an overwhelming victory. Napoleon ever after looked upon this as a special omen from Heaven.

the Sun of Righteousness. Jesus Christ. (Mal. iv. 2.)

Sun. A New York newspaper, founded as a penny paper (the former price of papers having been six cents) under the name of the Daily Sun (No. 1, September 23, 1833). It was written, edited, and set up by Benjamin Henry Day, a journeyman printer, whose son invented the BEN DAY process and whose grandson was Clarence DAY, Jr., the author of Life With Father. During the Civil War, the price of the Sun became two cents. It was sold (1838) to Moses Y. Beach and later (1868) to Charles Anderson DANA. William Mackay Lafan (1848-1909) became its publisher in 1884. He made of it the Evening Sun (1887), with Charles Anderson Dana and his son Paul (1852-1930) as editors (till 1903). Edward P. Mitchell (editor, 1903-1920) continued the Dana policy of personal journalism and the development of individually written stories. Under him Frank Ward O'Malley (with the paper from 1906 to 1920), established his reputation as a brilliant reporter. When Munsey bought the Sun and failed in his attempt to merge it with the Tribune, the Evening Sun absorbed the New York Globe and continued, while the morning Sun ceased publication. Some remarkable names in journalism, associated with the old Sun, have been Julian Ralph (1875-1895); Arthur Brisbane (1883); Samuel Hopkins Adams (1891-1900); Will Irwin (1904-1906); Don Marquis (1912-1922); etc. (See under these names.)

Sun Also Rises, The. A novel by Ernest HEMINGWAY (1926), dealing with Lady Brett Ashley, an Englishwoman divorcing her husband, and a group of typical representatives of the LOST GENERATION who travel with her through Spain. These include Michael Campbell, whom Brett plans to marry; Jake Barnes, an American journalist; Bill Gorton, friend of Jake; a Greek nobleman; and Robert Cohn, a novelist and an American Jew. Cohn is in love with Brett but is scorned; Brett and Jake love each other but are frustrated because of a wound Jake received during World War I; Brett falls in love with Pedro Romero, a Spanish bullfighter, but decides to go back to Michael.

Sunday, William Ashley. Normally called Billy Sunday (1863-1935). Famous American evangelist who had been a professional baseball player. He carried on very vocal evangelistic work for some years at the end of the nineteenth century and the early part of the twentieth. He became a Presbyterian Minister in 1903. Cf. Carl Sandburg's poem, To a Contemporary Bunk-Shooter.

Sunken Bell, The (Die versunkene Glocke). A drama by Gerhart HAUPTMANN (1896). As Heinrich the artist is taking it home, the wonderful bell which he has made crashes down the mountain into a lake. Stunned by his loss, Heinrich is found by Rautendelein, a lovely nymph, and stays with her in the mountains. His deserted wife, Magda, finally throws herself into the lake and rings the sunken bell. Heinrich goes home but finds Magda gone, and by the time he returns to the mountain, Rautendelein has married the Frog King, so Heinrich drinks the goblet of death. RESPIGHI wrote an opera entitled La Campana Sommersa, based on the play.

Sunna (Arab., "custom, divine law"). Properly, the sayings and example of MAHOMET and his immediate followers in so far as they conform to the KORAN; hence, applied to the collections of legal and moral traditions attributed to the Prophet, supplementary to the Koran as the Hebrew MISHNA is to the Pentateuch.

Sunnites. The orthodox and conservative body of Moslems, who consider the SUNNA as authentic as the Koran itself and acknowledge the first four caliphs to be the rightful successors of Mahomet. They form by far the largest section of Mohammedans, and are divided into four sects, viz., Hanbalites, Hanafites, Malikites, and Shafites. See also SHIITES.

Sunset Land. Arizona. See under STATES.

Sunthin' in the Pastoral Line. A famous dialect poem in THE BIGLOW PAPERS (1848) by James Russell LOWELL.

Sun-Up. A play by Lula VOLLMER which was produced, 1923; published, 1925. Also the title of a long autobiographical poem by Lola RIDGE (1920).

Sun Yat-sen (1866-1925). Chinese statesman, called in China the "father of the Revolution." He brought about the revolution against the Manchus (1911), founded the Kuomintang and was elected provisional president of the Chinese Republic. He retired in favor of Yuan Shih-k'ai who became president of all China. He disagreed with Yüan and was elected president of Southern China (1921). Under the influence of the Communist doctrines of Mikhail Borodin, he fought against General Ts'ao K'un (1923) and gained more influence in the north. He died of cancer. A large mausoleum was built in his honor at Nanking.

super. In theatrical parlance, "supers" are supernumeraries, or persons employed to make up crowds, processions, dancing or singing choirs, messengers, etc., where little or no speaking is needed.

Superbas. In American baseball parlance, former name for the Brooklyn Nationals. See under BASEBALL TEAMS.

superman. A hypothetical superior human being of high intellectual and moral attainments, fancied as evolved from the normally existing type. The term (Übermensch) was invented by the German philosopher NITZSCHE, and popularized in England by G. B. Shaw's play Man and Superman (1903).

The wide popularity of the term gave rise to many compounds, such as super-woman, super-critic, super-tramp, super-dreadnought, and super-tax.

In the U.S. during the 1930's, Superman became known as the name of the hero of a popular comic-strip series, a man of fabulous strength, skill, and ingenuity, constantly outwitting criminals, spies, and villains of all sorts. One of his common feats was flying through the air unaided.

Supplehouse. An ambitious politician in Trollope's novel FRAMLEY PARSONAGE. He has been shelved in a minor position and, remembering the praise bestowed upon him years before, torments himself with the question, "How can a man born to save a nation and to lead a people be content to fill the chair of an under-secretary?"

Suppliants, The. The earliest of the surviving plays of AESCHYLUS (462 B. C.). It is a tragedy concerning the daughters of Danaüs.

the law of supply and demand. The economic statement that the competition of buyers and sellers tends to make such changes in price that the demand for any article in a given market will become equal to the supply. In other words, if the demand exceeds the supply, the price rises, operating so as to reduce the demand and so enable the supply to meet it, and vice versa.

suppressed desires. A term much in use in PSYCHOANALYSIS to indicate inhibitions. According to the Freudians (see Sigmund FREUD), suppressed desires, usually sexual, are at the root of most neurotic conditions, and if these desires can be brought from the realm of the subconscious into consciousness and given some normal outlet, the difficulty will tend to be dissolved. Susan GLASPELL used the phrase as the title of an amusing one-act play in which the silly heroine fancies she has a terrible suppressed desire and gets herself involved in all sorts of absurdities when she tries to give it outlet.

Sura. Any one ethical revelation; thus each chapter of the KORAN is a Sura.

Hypocrites are apprehensive lest a Sura should be revealed respecting them, to declare unto them that which is in their hearts — Koran, ix.

Surface, Sir Oliver. In R. B. Sheridan's SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL, the rich uncle of Joseph and Charles Surface. He appears under the assumed name of Premium Stanley.

Charles Surface. A reformed scapegrace, and the accepted lover of Maria, the rich ward of Sir Peter TEAZLE.

Joseph Surface. Elder brother of Charles, an artful, malicious, but sentimental knave so plausible in speech and manner as to pass for a "youthful miracle of prudence, good sense, and benevolence." His attentions to Maria and Lady Teazle furnish the chief interest of the plot.

Surgeon's Daughter, The. A novel by Sir Walter SCOTT, laid in the time of George II and III, and published in 1827. The heroine is Menie Gray, daughter of Dr. Gideon Gray of Middlemas. Adam Hartley, the doctor's apprentice, loves her, but Menie herself has given her heart to Richard Middlemas. It so falls out that Richard Middlemas goes to India. Adam Hartley also goes to India, and, as Dr. Hartley, rises high in his profession. One day, being sent for to visit a sick fakir, he sees Menie Gray under the wing of Mme Montreville. Her father has died, and she has come to India, under Madame's escort, to marry Richard, but Richard entraps the girl for a concubine in the harem of Tippoo Saib. When Dr. Hartley hears of this scandalous treachery, he tells Hyder Ali, the father of Tippoo Saib. He and his son are so disgusted at the villainy that they condemn Richard Middlemas to be trampled to death by a trained elephant, and liberate Menie, who returns to her native country under the escort of Dr. Hartley.

Surgery, the Father of French. See under FATHER.

Surgis, Mme de. In Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST, the mistress of the Duc de GUERMANTES.

Surratt, Mary E. (1820-1865). Keeper of the boardinghouse in Washington, D.C., where John Wilkes Booth and his gang met to plot against Lincoln. Hanged for complicity in Lincoln's assassination. Cf. The Story of Mary Surratt (1947), a play by John Patrick.

surrealism. A movement in literature and painting, succeeding DADAISM and founded in Paris in 1924, with the aim of achieving effects of "super"-realism through the juxtaposition and combination of verbal images and physical objects ordinarily considered incongruous. The Freudian concept of the unconscious (see FREUD, SIGMUND) plays an important role in the theoretical surrealism, it being claimed as the origin of the arrangements of incongruities which produce these effects. André BRETON, leader and most representative poet of the movement, in his Manifeste du surréalisme (Surrealist Manifesto; 1924), defines surrealism as "pure psychological automatism . . . thought's dictation, in the absence of all control exercised by the reason and outside all aesthetic or moral preoccupations." Later, however, some surrealists claimed to be able to control the operations of the unconscious in the production of particular effects and the selection and combination of particular elements in their work.

Unique among 20th-century revolutionary movements in art and literature, surrealism centered its particular revolution in its subject-matter, making use of extremely conventional style and technique. In poetry, it is a descendant of SYMBOLISM with its emphasis on isolated images and individual associations. Literary forerunners claimed by the surrealists themselves include the writers of the GOTHIC NOVEL; the Marquis de Sade (see SADISM); S. T. COLERIDGE (in his poem Kubla Khan and in his theories of IMAGINATION); LEWIS CARROLL; LAUTREAMONT; RIMBAUD; Alfred Jarry; Guillaume Apollinaire; and Franz KAFKA. Early literary leaders of surrealism and spokesmen for the entire movement were Breton, Louis ARAGON (who later abandoned surrealism for conventional fiction in the tradition of BALZAC), Tristan Tzara, Philippe Soupault, Georges Hugnet, Jean COCTEAU, and Salvador DALI. Later the following, some of whom show in their work rather an affinity with, than an exact conformity to, the principles of surrealism, were also included among outstanding representatives of the movement: David Gascoyne, Hugh Sykes Davies, and Dylan Thomas (Eng.); Henry MILLER and Charles Henri Ford (Am.); Federico Garcia Lorca and Anais Nin (Span.); St.-J. PERSE and Paul Eluard (Fr.); Ivan Goll (Swiss).

In painting, surrealism had as its forerunners various examples of fantastic, double-image, and trompe-l'oeil (Fr., "deceive-the-eye") art throughout the ages. Giorgio di CHIRICO was the first important painter of surrealism proper, but Salvador DALI became the most famous, supplanting Chirico as leader. Other surrealist painters include René Magritte, Yves Tanguy, Max Ernst, and Frida Kahlo. In addition, the surrealists claimed affinities with their work in the painting or sculpture of the following, although the artists named were known chiefly for their experiments in new forms: Pablo PICASSO, Marcel DUCHAMP, Constantin Brancusi, Francis Picabia, Hans Arp, Paul KLEE, Joan Miro, André Masson, and Pavel Tchelitchew. It was customary for surrealist poets to paint pictures and for surrealist painters to write poems, the difference in content being so slight that an effective interchange was possible.

Surrealism in the first years after its founding claimed that it was a representative of COMMUNISM in art, but it was vigorously disavowed by the Communist leaders. The movement gained relatively few disciples in the U.S., but the publicized exploits of DALI in New York brought surrealism to the attention of a portion of the American general public, which came to find amusement in the superficially comic incongruities of surrealist work. The methods of surrealism came to be used with modification in American advertising, especially fashion advertising and window display in retail shops.

The Blood of a Poet (Le Sang d'un poète), written and produced by Jean COCTEAU, was a surrealist motion picture of the early 1930's. For a discussion of surrealism and its aims and techniques, consult Surrealism, edited by Herbert Read.

Surrey, Henry Howard, Earl of (1517?-1547). English poet and courtier, charged with claiming descent from Edward the Confessor, attached to the retinue of Henry VIII. With Sir Thomas WYATT, his friend, he was an early leader in bringing the influences and forms of Italian and French lyric verse to England, and inaugurated the poetic movement of the Elizabethan and Jacobean periods. He is considered to have introduced blank verse into English, in his translations of Virgil's Aeneid, although iambic pentameter had been used by CHAUCER. The translation of Virgil and a number of other poems by Surrey were published in TOTTEL'S MISCELLANY, and the poet was the only contributor mentioned by name on the title-page of that work.

Surrey was proud and headstrong and was imprisoned several times for quarreling with other courtiers. He was eventually arrested and beheaded on a charge of treason by Henry VIII.

Surtees, Robert Smith (1805-1864). English novelist and sports writer. Author of the humorous sketches Jorrocks' Jaunts and Jollities (1838), which suggested the original plan of the PICKWICK PAPERS; the novel Handley Cross (1843); etc. He was a grandfather of Lord Gort.

Surtur. In Scandinavian mythology, a formidable giant, who is to set fire to the universe at RAGNAROK, with flames collected from Muspelheim.

Survey Graphic. Originally, The Survey (1897-). A liberal illustrated magazine, designed to interpret social conditions, founded by the New York Charity Organization Society.

survival of the fittest. A concept of the Darwinian theory of evolution (see DARWIN, CHARLES) in which it is held that the biological species best adapted to its environment will be the one to survive and perpetuate itself in its offspring. A popular misconception of this idea was that the species surviving was the one able to overcome its rivals in a literal, tooth-and-nail struggle. The phrase itself is said to have been coined by Herbert SPENCER in a study on Darwinian natural selection.

Surya. In Hindu mythology, god of the sun. In the older legends he presides over the gods of the sky, sharing the government of nature with Agni, lord of the gods of the earth, and Indra, lord of the gods of the air.

Susan. In Virginia Woolf's THE WAVES, the dependable, domestic member of the group of characters with whose lives the novel is concerned. When she grows up she marries a farmer and lives in the country with her children and her garden. She is in love with Bernard.

Susan Lenox: Her Fall and Rise. A posthumous novel (2 vols.; 1908) by David Graham Phillips. Its extremely realistic picture of an unfortunate woman who finally achieves a certain amount of security created a sensation. It may be considered one of the best realistic novels of the early twentieth century.

Susanna and the Elders. A favorite subject among Renaissance and later artists. The Story of Susanna, one of the books of the Old Testament Apocrypha, tells how Susanna was accused of adultery by certain Jewish elders who had unsuccessfully attempted her chastity, how her innocence was proved by DANIEL, and the Elders put to death.

Suskind. In Cabell's FIGURES OF EARTH, a fairy mistress who is sometimes friendly to the young swineherd Manuel in the twilight and reappears years afterwards to great Manuel, the ruler of Poictesme. "It was she alone who knew the secret of preserving that dissatisfaction which is divine." Manuel does away with her when she lays a charm on his young daughter MELICENT.

Sutras. Ancient Hindu aphoristic manuals giving the rules of systems of philosophy, grammar, etc., and directions concerning religious ritual and ceremonial customs. They form a link between the Vedic and later Sanskrit literature, and are so called from Sanskrit sutra, "a thread," the aphorisms being, as it were, threaded together.

Sutro, Alfred (1863-1933). British playwright and translator of MAETERLINCK. His best play was The Walls of Jericho (1904).

suttee (from Sans. sati, "a virtuous wife"). The Hindu custom of burning the widow on the funeral pyre of her deceased husband; also, the widow so put to death. In theory the practice, which lasted for some 2000 years, was optional, but public opinion and the very severe form of ostracism the defaulting widow had to endure gave her practically no choice. The practice was declared illegal in British India in 1829.

Sutter, John Augustus (1803-1880). Swiss pioneer in California who established the colony of New Helvetia where Sacramento now stands. When his partner, James W. Marshall, discovered gold on their property, the '49 gold rush ensued and Sutter lost his workmen, sheep, and cattle, and his land was overrun by squatters. He became bankrupt but was pensioned by the state of California. Cf. Sutter's Gold by Blaise Cendrars, translated by John Dos Passos.

Suydam, Edward Howard (1885-). American illustrator, successful with pictures of American cities. Illustrated several books by Lyle SAXON.

Suzuki. The servant of MADAME BUTTERFLY, in Puccini's opera of that title.

Svärd, Lotta. A Finnish woman of the latter part of the eighteenth century who became the subject of many legends. Having lost her husband in the wars, she is said to have served the army as a sutler. In modern Finland a woman's organization is called The Lotta Svärd Organization. Lotta Svärd is also the title of a poem by Runeberg.

Svengali. In Du Maurier's TRILBY, an Austrian Jew who controls Trilby's stage singing through his hypnotic power.

swan.

swan song. The song fabled to be sung by swans at the point of death; hence, the last work of a poet, composer, etc. The fable that the swan sings beautifully just before it dies is very ancient, though baseless. Swans do not "sing" at all, in the ordinary sense of the term.

a black swan. A curiosity, a RARA AVIS.

all your swans are geese. All your fine promises or expectations have proved fallacious. "Hope told a flattering tale." The converse, All your geese are swans, means all your children are paragons, and whatever you do is in your own eyes superlative work.

Leda and the swan. See LEDA.

the Knight of the Swan. LOHENGRIN.

the Swan of Avon. Shakespeare; so called by Ben JONSON in allusion to his birthplace, Stratford-on-Avon. Swan, as applied to poets (because Apollo was fabled to have been changed into a swan), is of very old standing; thus, VIRGIL was known as the Mantuan Swan, HOMER the Swan of Meander, etc., and Anna SEWARD (1747-1809) was rather absurdly named the Swan of Lichfield.

Swan, The. A poem by Stéphane MALARMÉ, considered his most representative. In it, the swan serves as the symbol of the cold and sterile poet, set apart from the life of ordinary men, and there are images of whiteness, snow, ice, etc., throughout the poem. See HÉRODIADÉ; also SYMBOLISM.

Swancourt, Elfride. Heroine of Hardy's PAIR OF BLUE EYES.

Swanhild. An old Norse legendary heroine, daughter of SIGURD and GUDRUN. She is falsely accused of adultery with the son of the king who is wooing her, and the king has his son hanged and Swanhild trampled to death by horses.

Swann, Charles. A leading character in Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST, a bourgeois of Jewish parentage, cultured, intelligent, and sensitive, who is a friend of the parents of the narrator Marcel. For a time he is one of the few characters of personal and intellectual integrity in the novel, proudly ignoring the social ostracism that he is subjected to because he is a DREYFUSARD. Eventually, however, in his later years, he is reduced to petty snobbery like many of the other characters.

Swann's wife Odette is a beautiful woman with social aspirations who finds her entry into the world of society difficult because she was once a courtesan. Their daughter Gilberte also plays an important role in the action of the novel.

Swann's Way. English translation of Du Côté de chez Swann (1918), published in 1923, Book I of Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST and best-known volume of the series. It introduces the author's theories of time of the childhood of the narrator Marcel of the childhood of the narrator MARCEL in the village of COMBRAY. The title refers to one of the two paths by which Marcel and his parents could reach their home after having been out for a stroll—the path leading past the house of Charles SWANN. See also THE GUERMANTES WAY.

Swap, Solomon. A famous Yankee character of the early American stage. He had a much-fêted but checkered career. James H. Hackett, the actor, whose reputation was made in such native American rôles as JONATHAN PLOUGHBOY, adapted Colman's play Who Wants a Guinea, making the French Cockney, Solomon Gundy, over into the Yankee Solomon Swap by translating freely into New England vernacular. The play was so successful that he took it to England, but there Solomon became Jonathan. Later George Handell Hill appeared as Solomon Swap and when he was restrained by injunction, revived the old name and played as Solomon Gundy. See also SAGO, LOT S&P; SHINGLE, SOLON.

Swaraj. The extreme home rule party in India. The Sanskrit word swaraj signifies "political independence."

swarm. See under COVEY.

swastika. A symbol shaped like a Greek cross with the ends of the arms turned at right angles. It is very ancient and has been found as far back as the Age of Bronze. The Sanskrit word swastika signifies "well-being." The same symbol is found in various civilizations under a variety of names. As the Hakenkreuz it became the symbol of the Nazi party in Germany.

Swedenborg, Emanuel (1688-1772). Famous Swedish scientist and philosopher. He had a seat in the House of Peers. He published philosophical books that influenced Blake and Coleridge, had visions, and engaged in spiritualistic research. He wrote interpretations of Holy Writ and theological works. His followers organized a society known as the New Jerusalem Church.

Swedenborgians. Followers of Emanuel SWEDENBORG, called by themselves "the New Jerusalem Church" (Rev. xxi. 2). Their views of salvation, inspiration of Scripture, and a future state, differ widely from those of other Christians, and they believe the Trinity to be centered in the person of Jesus Christ (Col. ii. 9).

Swedish Nightingale, the. See NIGHTINGALE.

Sweeney.

tell that to Sweeney! An exclamation of skepticism or disbelief.

Sweeney. In a number of poems by T. S. ELIOT, a satirical figure, symbolic of the sensual, brutal, and materialistic man of the 20th century. Eliot wrote a play entitled Sweeney Agonistes.

Sweet, Henry (1845-1912). English phonologist, regarded as the founder of modern phonetics.

Sweet Adeline. A well-known sentimental song (1903) by Richard Gerard and Harry Armstrong. It has been sung in all American colleges and in quartet arrangements all over the country, especially by men in their cups.

Sweet Cheat Gone, The. English translation (1930) of Albertine Disparue (1926), Book VI of Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST. It deals mainly with the intricate analyses of his grief made by the narrator

Marcel after he learns of the death by accident of his mistress ALBERTINE. The reader is not shown the death itself, and the details and announcement of it are very briefly given.

sweetness and light. A favorite phrase with Matthew ARNOLD. "Culture," he says, "is the passion for sweetness and light, and (what is more) the passion for making them prevail" (Preface to Literature and Dogma). The phrase was used by SWIFT (Battle of the Books, 1697) in an imaginary fable by Aesop as to the merits of the bee (the Ancients) and the spider (the Moderns). It concludes with these words:

The difference is that instead of dirt and poison, we have rather chose to fill our hives with honey and wax, thus furnishing mankind with the two noblest of things, which are sweetness and light

Sweet Singer of Israel. King DAVID, who wrote some of the Psalms.

Sweet Singer of Michigan, The. A collection of poems (1876) by Julia A. Moore, née Davis (1878-1920), who was known as "the sweet singer of Michigan." The unconscious humor of her output is superb. Her Sketch of Lord Byron's Life opens with the deathless lines:

"Lord Byron" was an Englishman
A poet I believe,
His first works in old England
Was poorly received.
Perhaps it was Lord Byron's fault
And perhaps it was not,
His life was full of misfortunes,
Ah, strange was his lot.

Swift, Jonathan (1667-1745). English poet and satirist, born in Dublin, Ireland, of an English father, known for his proud and sensitive temperament, which made him furiously intolerant of the stupidities and vices of mankind, and for his brilliant and biting satire written on the controversial issues of his time. His works include THE BATTLE OF THE BOOKS (1697), written in connection with the literary controversy between the Ancients and Moderns; THE TALE OF A TUB (1704); DRAPIER'S LETTERS (1724), an attack on a currency scandal in Ireland; Gulliver's Travels (see GULLIVER, LEMUEL; 1726), his most celebrated work; A MODEST PROPOSAL (1729). His JOURNAL TO STELLA (see STELLA) was partly in a cryptic language for his private interest but was deciphered and published after a number of years, becoming one of the best-known of his works.

Swift spent an unhappy and humiliating childhood in Ireland among his Irish relatives, and was similarly unhappy and disillusioned during most of his life. He became a member of the clergy of the Church of England, associated with the English Tory leaders and made the acquaintance of POPE, ADDISON, and STEELE, and for a while, during the reign of Queen Anne, held a position of power in England through his pamphlets and essays. In 1713 he was appointed Dean of St. Patrick's Cathedral in Dublin but lost his power on the death of the Queen the following year. His relations with both Stella and VANESSA ended tragically, and during the final years of his life he was insane. Swift, who is regarded as one of the most brilliant minds in English literature, is frequently mentioned throughout James Joyce's FINNEGANS WAKE.

in the swim. In a favorable position in society of any kind; a racing-man who is "in the swim" is one who mixes with the class from which he can get the best "tips," and similarly with a diplomat, stockbroker, or a society lady. It is an angler's phrase. A lot of fish gathered together is called a swim, and when an angler can pitch his hook in such a place he is said to be "in a good swim."

Cottontree, who knows nearly everybody in the swim of European society . . . informs him that Lucy Annerley is the daughter of Sir Jonas Stevens.—Gunter, Mr. Potter of Texas, III, xiv.

to do something—"sink or swim." To do it no matter what happens. In the good old times convicted witches were thrown into the water to "sink or swim." If they sank they were drowned; if they swam it was clear proof they were in league with the Evil One, so it did not much matter, one way or the other.

to swim with the stream. To allow one's actions and principles to be guided solely by the force of public opinion.

Swinburne, Algernon Charles (1837-1909). English poet, associated with the PRE-RAPHAELITE BROTHERHOOD, known for his rebellion against Victorian social conventions and religion, his active sympathies with the movements and leaders of political revolution of his time, and the pagan spirit and amazing musical effects of his poetry. He was an intense admirer of P. B. SHELLEY and Victor Hugo, and was influenced in his own poetry by Greek legend and Roman classic literature, medieval romance, and Elizabethan drama. Among his poetic works are ATALANTA IN CALYDON (1865), a drama in classical Greek form; The Queen Mother, Rosamund—Two Plays (1860); Poems and Ballads: First Series (1866), lyrics dealing chiefly with sensual love, which caused a sensation on its first publication; A Song of Italy (1867) and Songs before Sunrise (1876), on the cause of Italian union and independence; Poems and Ballads: Second Series (1878); Songs of the Springtides (1880) and Studies in Song (1880), concerned mostly with the sea; Tristram of Lyonesse (1882), a narrative poem on the legend of TRISTAN AND ISEULT; Poems and Ballads: Third Series (1889); CHASTELARD (1865), Bothwell: A Tragedy (1874), and Mary Stuart (1881), a trilogy of verse dramas on MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS; MARINO FALIERO (1885), a tragedy on the same theme used by BYRON; Astrophel (1894); A Tale of Balin (1896); A Channel Passage (1904); The Duke of Gandia (1908). Essays and Studies (1875), Miscellanies (1886), and several sketches in the Encyclopaedia Britannica are works of criticism.

In his early career, Swinburne's behavior was eccentric, violent, and dissipated, intended to shock the respectable people of his age. After an illness resulting from his excesses, he was taken into the home of Theodore Watts-Dunton, a literary critic, and stayed there the rest of his life. Some critics believe that Watts-Dunton stifled Swinburne's talent by "reforming" him, curbing his rebellion and forcing him to be docile and conventional. The poet's later work is not considered to be of as high a quality as his earlier. Cf. MAX BEERBOHM's classic essay "No. 2, The Pines," describing a visit to the couple.

Among Swinburne's best-known single lyrics are Hymn to Artemis, Hymn to Prosperpine, The Garden of Proserpine, and Hertha (see NERTHUS). See also NEPHELIDIA.

A study of Swinburne's life and poetry is contained in Poor Splendid Wings, by Frances WINWAR, and a biography was written by Edmund GOSSE.

swing.

I don't care if I swing for him! A remark of one very revengefully inclined; implying that the speaker will even go to the length of murdering the enemy, and getting hanged (swung) in consequence.

Swing, Captain. The name assumed by certain persons who, about 1830, sent threatening letters to farmers who employed mechanical means, such as threshing machines, to save labor. "Captain Swing" was an entirely imaginary person—like the famous Mrs. Harris—but three so-called Lives of him appeared in 1830 and 1831.

Swing, Raymond Gram (1887–). American journalist and radio news commentator.

swing music, see JAZZ.

Swinerton, Frank Arthur (1884–). English novelist and critic, whose works, known for their good-humored satire, include The Merry Heart (1909); The Young Idea (1910); The Casement (1911); George Gissing (1912), R. L. Stevenson (1914), and The Georgian Scene (1935), critical studies; The Chaste Wife (1916); NOCTURNE (1917), his best-known novel; September (1919); Cocquette (1921); Young Felix (1923); Summer Storm (1926); A Brood of Ducklings (1928); Sketch of a Sinner (1929); The Georgian House (1932); Elizabeth (1934); Swinerton: An Autobiography (1936); Harvest Comedy (1937); The Two Wives (1939); The Fortunate Lady (1941); Thankless Child (1942).

Swiss admiral, a. A poseur, because there is no Swiss navy.

Swiss Family Robinson, or Adventures in a Desert Island. A story for young people by J. R. Wyss (Swiss, 1813) relating the adventures of a Swiss clergyman, his wife and four sons, who are wrecked on a desert island.

Swithin, St. See under SAINTS.

Swiveller, Mr. Dick. In Dickens's OLD CURIOUSITY SHOP, a dirty, smart young man, living in apartments near Drury Lane. His language is extremely flowery, and interlarded with quotations. "What's the odds," says Mr. Swiveller à propos of nothing, "so long as the fire of the soul is kindled at the taper of conviviality and the wing of friendship never moults a feather?" He is forever humming some dismal air. He says min for "man," forgot, jine; calls wine or spirits "the rosy," sleep "the balmy," and generally shouts in conversation, as if making a speech from the chair of the "Glorious Apollers" of which he is perpetual "grand." Mr. Swiveller looks amiably upon Miss Sophy WACKLES, of Chelsea. QUILP introduces him as clerk to Mr. Samson Brass, solicitor, Bevis Marks. By Quilp's request, he is afterwards turned away and falls sick of a fever, through which he is nursed by the MARCHIONESS, a poor house-drab whom he marries. By his Aunt Rebecca he is left an annuity of £125.

Swope, Herbert Bayard (1882–). American journalist who was awarded the Pulitzer prize for his work as a war-correspondent with the German armies for the New York World (1914–1916). He was a correspondent at the Paris Peace Conference, and executive director of the New York World through its most brilliant period (1920–1929).

sword and cloak plays. See under CLOAK.

the sword of Damocles. See DAMOCLES.

the Sword of God. Khaled ibn al Waleed (d. 642), the Mohammedan conqueror of Syria, was so called for his prowess at the battle of Muta.

the Sword of Rome. Marcellus Fabius, also called "The Shield of Rome" (time of Hannibal's invasion).

Famous swords. In the days of chivalry, a knight's horse and sword were his most treasured and carefully kept possessions, and his sword as well as his horse had its own name. The old romances, especially those of the Charlemagne and Arthurian cycles, are full of these names. Below we give a list of the more noteworthy.

Angurvaal (Stream of Anguish), Frithiof's sword.
Ar'ondight, the sword of Launcelot of the Lake.
Azoth, the sword of Paracelsus (Browning's Paracelsus, Bk. v).
Balsarda, Rogero's sword, made by a sorceress.
Balmung, one of the swords of Siegfried, made by Wieland.
Calburn, another name of Excalibur.

Nagelring (Nail-Ring), Dietrich's sword.
Phuſſpan. The sword of Antony, one of the triumvirs.
Queen-biter (a Foot-Breadth); both Iſaco I, and Thoralf Skolunson had a sword so called.
Sanglamore (the Big Bloody Glave), Braggadochio's sword (Spenser's Faerie Queene).
Sauvagine (the Relentless): see Coutain above.
Schrit or Schmitt (? the Lopper), Biterolf's sword.
Tizona (the Poker), King Bucar's sword. See Cid.
Tranchera (the Trenchant), Agricane's sword.
Waske, Iring's sword.
Welsung, both Dietlieb and Sintram had a sword so called.
Zuffagar, Ali's sword.

Sword of Castruccio Castracani, The. A poem by Elizabeth Barrett Browning. The hero is Victor Emmanuel II, who, as the liberator of Italy, claims the famous sword referred to in the title.

Sybarite. A self-indulgent person; a waton. The inhabitants of Sybaris, in South Italy, were proverbial for their luxurious living and self-indulgence. A tale is told by Seneca of a Sybarite who complained that he could not rest comfortably at night, and, being asked why, replied that he found a rose-leaf doubled under him, and it hurt him.

Fable has it that the Sybarites taught their horses to dance to the pipe. When the Crotonians marched against Sybaris, they played on their pipes, whereupon all the Sybarite horses began to dance, disorder soon prevailed in the ranks, and the victory was quick and easy.

Sycorax. In Shakespeare's Tempest, a foul witch, the mistress of ARIEL the fairy spirit, by whom for some offense he is imprisoned in the rift of a cloven pine tree. After he has been kept there for twelve years, he is liberated by Prospero, the rightful Duke of Milan and father of MIRANDA. Sycorax was the mother of CALIBAN.

syllepsis. A construction or figure of speech in which a word governs two or more others in the same sentence, while it agrees with only one of them; as, "my lady laughs for joy and I for woe." The sense of "laughs" goes with "my lady" and with "I." The form goes only with "my lady."

sylogism. In deductive reasoning, a scheme of logic consisting of a major premise, a minor premise, and a conclusion, as: gold is valuable; this coin is of gold; therefore this coin is valuable.

sylphs. Elemental spirits of air; so named in the Middle Ages by the Rosicrucians and Cabalists, from the Greek silphe, some kind of beetle, or a grub that turns into a butterfly. See also SALAMANDER.

Any mortal who has preserved inviolate chastity may enjoy intimate familiarity with these gentle spirits, and deceased virgins were said to become sylphs, "and sport and flutter in the fields of air."

Whoever, fair and chaste,
 Rejects mankind, is by some sylph embraced.
 Pope, Rape of the Lock, i.

Sylvander. In Robert Burns' correspondence with Mrs. Maclehoſe, the name taken by Burns, while Mrs. Maclehoſe was called Clarinda. The correspondence was published in 1802, later withdrawn, and republished in 1845.

Sylvester, Joshua (1563-1618). English poet, best known for his translations of the pastorals of AENEAS SILVIUS and of LA SEMAINE of Guillaume du Bartas, which appeared in English as Divine Weeks and Works (1605-1607).

Sylvestre. The hero of Pierre Loti's Island Fisherman (Pêcheur d'Islande).

Sylvette. The heroine of Rostand's ROMANCERS.

Sylvia: or, the May Queen. A long poem (1827) by George Darley.

Sylvia Scarlett. A novel by Compton Mackenzie. See SINISTER STREET.

symbolism. A movement in French literature, at the height of its importance between the years 1870 and 1886. Revolting against realism and influenced by the English Pre-Raphaelites (see PRE-RAPHAELITE BROTHERHOOD) and by the music of WAGNER, it sought to achieve in poetry the effects of music, making use of clustered images and metaphors suggesting or symbolizing the basic idea or emotion of each poem. Forerunners of symbolism were BAUDELAIRE, RIMBAUD, and VERLAINE, all of whom had an important influence on the movement; its leader and theorist was Stéphane MALLARMÉ. Other members of the symbolist school were Gustave KAHN, Henri de REGNIER, Jules LAFORGUE, E. J. CORBIÈRE, Francis JAMMES, Stuart MERRILL, Francis VIELÉ-GRIFFIN, René Ghil, Jean Moreas, Albert Samain, Georges Rodenbach, Maurice MAETERLINCK, Marcel Schwob. Comte Robert de MONTESQUIOU was also associated with the movement, and LAUTRÉAMONT and VILLIERS DE L'ISLE ADAM are sometimes classed as symbolists. George MOORE, Arthur SYMONS, and W. B. YEATS were strongly influenced by symbolism in their early careers, and T. S. ELIOT and James JOYCE are considered to have made adaptations of the symbolist technique in the development of their own individual styles. The movement also had an important influence on the development of IMAGISM, OBJECTIVISM, and SURREALISM. See also IMPRESSIONISM.

Symonds, John Addington (1840–1893). English historian, scholar, and translator, best known for his History of the Renaissance in Italy (1875–1886), a study, often consisting of a series of impressionistic essays on separate subjects under the main heading, of the politics, culture, art, and literature of Italy in the 15th and 16th centuries. He also translated the Autobiography of Benvenuto CELLINI (1888) and did other translations, notably of the Greek poets and the Italian Renaissance poets. In addition, he wrote verse and literary criticism.

Symons, Arthur (1865–1945). English poet, critic, editor, and miscellaneous author, strongly influenced in his early career by BAUDELAIRE, VERLAINE, and the French symbolists (see SYMBOLISM), a leader of the symbolist movement in England in the latter 19th century. His works include Days and Nights (1889), Silhouettes (1892), London Nights (1895), and Poems (1901), books of poetry; The Symbolist Movement in Literature (1899); Studies in Prose and Verse (1904); Studies in Seven Arts (1906); The Romantic Movement in English Poetry (1909); Color Studies in Paris (1918); Charles Baudelaire (1921); Dramatis Personae (1926); A Study of Thomas Hardy (1927); Studies in Strange Souls (1929); Confessions (1930), autobiographical; A Study of Walter Pater (1932).

Symons displayed in himself all the neurasthenic characteristics of the French DECADENTS whom he admired. He suffered from a number of spells of amnesia in his early life, and in 1908, while in Italy, he had an attack of temporary madness, described in his Confessions.

sympathetic powder. In alchemy it was believed that if this powder were merely applied to blood taken from a wound, it would cure the wound. The title Powder of Sympathy has been used for a book by Christopher MORLEY.

Symphonic Fantastique. A musical composition by Hector BERLIOZ (1853), one of the first examples of PROGRAM MUSIC. It purports to tell in music the story of a typical romantic hero (see ROMANTICISM) who has a tragic love affair with an actress, commits murder, and is executed.

Symphony, The. A poem (1875) by Sidney LANIER in which the sounds of the instruments of an orchestra are illustrated in words. Lanier was a musician of considerable talent.

Symphony, the Father of. See under FATHER.

Symplegades. Literally, "striking together." In the story of the Argonauts, two movable rocks at the entrance of the Bosphorus into the Black Sea. Phineus advised the Argonauts on how to pass the Symplegades.

Symposium (Gr. syn, "together," and posis, "drink"). Properly, a drinking together: hence, a convivial meeting for social and intellectual entertainment, and also a discussion upon a subject, and the collected opinions of different authorities printed and published in a review, etc. The Symposium is the title given to a dialogue by PLATO, and another by Xenophon, in which the conversation of Socrates and others is recorded.

synaesthesia (Gr. syn, "with or together," aisthesis, "perception"). Medical term for a tendency to confuse the senses, as, for example, interpreting taste in terms of color or sound in terms of visual shapes. In certain types of poetry of the 19th and 20th centuries, especially of the symbolists and their forerunners and disciples, this is an extremely effective device for the presentation of vivid imagery and the expression of intense and unusual experiences. POE, RIMBAUD, and Hart CRANE were outstanding users of synaesthesia in their poetry, and Rimbaud's Sonnet of the Vowels, expressing the sounds of the common vowels in terms of color, is an excellent example of the device.

syndicalism. The doctrine in economics that all the workers in any industry should have a share in the control and in the profits arising from it, and that to compass this end the workers in the different trades should federate and enforce their demands by sympathetic strikes. The word was first used about 1907, and was coined from the French chambre syndicale (syndic, "a delegate"), "a trade union."

synecdoche. The figure of speech which consists of putting a part for the whole, the whole for the part, a more comprehensive for a less comprehensive term, or vice versa. Thus, a hundred bayonets (for a hundred soldiers); the town was starving (for the people in the town).

Synge, John Millington (1871–1909). Irish dramatist, associated with the literary movement of the IRISH RENAISSANCE, known for his realistic and poetic comedies and dramas of Irish peasant life, considered among the most distinguished plays of the 20th century. His works include The Shadow of the Glen (1903); Riders to the Sea (1904); The Well of the Saints (1905); THE PLAYBOY OF THE WESTERN WORLD (1907); The Tinker's Wedding (1907); Deirdre of the Sorrows (1910). The Aran Islands (1907) is a description of life in that desolate group of islands.

Synia. In Scandinavian mythology, the portress of VALHALLA.

Synoptic Gospels, the. Those of Matthew, Mark, and Luke; so called because, taken together and apart from that of John, they form a synopsis (Gn., "a seeing together"), i.e., a general view, or conspectus, of the life and sayings of Christ; hence, the Synoptic Problem, the questions as to the origin and relationship of these three.

Syntax, Doctor. The pious, henpecked clergyman, very simple-minded but of excellent taste and scholarship, created by William Combe (1741-1823) to accompany a series of colored comic illustrations by Rowlandson. His adventures are told in eight-syllabled verse in the Three Tours of Dr. Syntax (1812, 1820, and 1821).

syren. See SIREN.

Syrinx. An Arcadian nymph of Greek legend. On being pursued by PAN she took refuge in the river Ladon, and prayed to be changed into a reed. The prayer was granted, and of the reed Pan made his pipes. Hence the name is given to the Pan-pipe, or reed mouth-organ, and also to the vocal organ of birds.

T

it fits to a T. Exactly. The allusion is to work that mechanics square with a T-square, a ruler with a cross-piece at one end, especially useful in making right angles, and in obtaining perpendiculars and parallel lines.

marked with a T. Identified as a felon. Persons convicted of felony, and admitted to the benefit of clergy, were formerly branded on the thumb with the letter T (thief).

Tabard, the. The inn in Southwark from which Chaucer in his CANTERBURY TALES supposes his Pilgrims to start for Canterbury.

Tabarin. He's a Tabarin—a merry Andrew. Tabarin was the fellow of Mondor, a famous vendor of quack medicines in the reign of Charles IX.

Tabernacles, Feast of. A Jewish festival lasting eight days and beginning on the 15th Tishri (toward the end of September), kept in remembrance of the sojourn in the wilderness; also, the Feast of Ingathering originally a harvest festival with no fixed date. It was formerly a time of great rejoicing.

taboo (Maori tapu). A custom among the South Sea Islanders of prohibiting the use of certain persons, places, animals, things, etc., or the utterance of certain names and words; it signifies that which is banned, interdicted, or "devoted" in a religious sense. Thus, a temple is taboo and so is he who violates a temple. Not only so, but everyone and everything connected with what is taboo becomes taboo also; Captain Cook was taboo because some of his sailors took rails from a Hawaiian temple to supply themselves with fuel, and, being "devoted," he was slain.

With us, a person who is ostracized, or an action, custom, etc., that is altogether forbidden by society, is said to be taboo, or tabooed.

Tabouis, Geneviève (1892-). One of the most brilliant of French journalists. A niece of the well-known politician Jules Cambon, she has been a free-lance correspondent, especially in the field of international politics. Author of They Called Me Cassandra (1941).

tabula rasa (Lat., "a scraped tablet"). A clean slate—literally and figuratively—on which anything can be written. Thus we say that the mind of a person who has been badly taught must become a tabula rasa before he can learn anything properly.

Tacitus, Cornelius (55?-117 A.D.). Roman politician and historian, whose most ambitious work is a history of the reigns of emperors Galba, Otho, Vitellius, Vespasian, Titus, and Domitian. His Germania is a celebrated ethnographical work on the early Germans.

Tad, see DORGAN, THOMAS ALOYSIUS.

Tadpole and Taper, see TAPER AND TADPOLE.

Tadzio. See under DEATH IN VENICE.

Taffy. A Welshman. So called from David, a very common name in Wales. Familiarly Davy, it becomes in Welsh Taffid, Taffy.

Taft, Lorado (1860-1936). Prominent American sculptor who influenced Middle-Western sculpture. His heroic statue of Black Hawk is in Oregon, Illinois. His bust of Frances E. WILLARD is in the American Hall of Fame. He did several memorable fountains in Washington, D.C., and Chicago, notably the Great Lakes group, and the Fountain of Time.

Taft, William Howard (1857-1930). Twenty-seventh president of the United States (1909-1913). His upholding of the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act in 1909 and his dismissal of Gifford Pinchot did not add to his popularity. He lost the support of Theodore Roosevelt who had backed him for the presidency and did not receive a second term election. Chief justice of the U.S. Supreme Court (1921-1930). Cf. The Life and Times of William Howard Taft by Henry F. Pringle (1939). His son Robert Alphonso Taft (1889-) is a U.S. senator from Ohio (from 1939).

tag. A well-known children's game.

tag day. A day on which contributions to some particular charity are solicited and tags given to all who contribute.

tag, rag, and bobtail. The vulgus ignobile; all sorts and conditions of riffraff. Shakespeare uses tag of the rabble—

Will you hence
Before the tag return? whose rage doth rend
Like interrupted waters.

Coriolanus, iii, 1.

Rag and bobtail were extensions.

Midsummer's day moreover was the first of Bedford

Fair;
With Bedford Town's tag-rag and bobtail a-browsing there.

Browning, Ned Brats.

Tag, der (Ger., "the day"). An expression said to have been common in German military circles before World War I as referring to the day when Germany would strike at her enemies. Der Tag was frequently proposed as a toast, to be drunk. In 1914 J. M. BARRIE gave the name to a play.

Tagalog. A member of one of the most numerous races of the Philippines, mainly of central Luzon. Also, the language of the Tagalogs.

Tages. In Etruscan mythology, a mysterious boy with the wisdom of an old man who was ploughed up, or who sprang from, the ground at Tarquinii. He is said to have been the grandson of JUPITER and to have instructed the Etruscans in the arts of augury. The latter wrote down his teaching in twelve books, which were known as "the books of Tages," or "the Acherontian books."

Taggard, Genevieve (1894-1948). American poet, critic, and editor, resident in Hawaii during much of her childhood and youth. Her books of poetry include For Eager Lovers (1922); Hawaiian Hilltop (1924); Words for the Chisel (1926); Traveling Standing Still (1928); Not Mine to Finish (1934); Poems, 1928-1938 (1938), Long View (1942). She also wrote The Life and Mind of Emily Dickinson (1930), a critical study, and edited the following: May Days (1925), an anthology of verse from THE MASSES and The Liberator; Cumference: Varieties of Metaphysical Verse (1930); and Ten Introductions (1934), a collection of modern verse.

Taggart, Thomas (1856-1929). Well-known American politician who helped to get Woodrow Wilson nominated for the presidency in 1912. He was Senator from Indiana in 1916.

Taglioni. A gifted Italian family of ballet dancers of which the father, Filippo Taglioni (1777-1871), was a ballet master and composer, notably of Les Sylphides. His daughter, son and granddaughter also performed and composed for the ballet.

Tagore, Sir Rabindranath. Written also Ravindranatha Thakura (1861-1941). Hindu poet, painter, and author, known for his lyrics and songs on nature, childhood, and Oriental subjects and for his religious mysticism. English translations of his work include Gitanjali (1913); The Crescent Moon (1913); One Hundred Poems of Kabir (1914); Chitra (1916), a play; The Gardener (1917); Lectures on Personality (1917); Red Oleanders (1925); Fireflies (1928); The Religion of Man (1931), on his ideas of God; Broken Ties, And Other Stories (1925); The Child (1931); The Golden Boat (1932); Collected Poems and Plays (1936).

Tagore, awarded the Nobel prize for literature in 1913, was active in instituting social and educational reforms in India. In 1915 he was knighted, but in 1919 he resigned the honor in protest against British repressive measures in his native country.

Taillefer (d. 1066). Norman troubador who is said to have ridden ahead of the invading Norman army in 1066 singing of Charlemagne and Roland. He was killed at the Battle of Hastings.

tailor.

nine tailors make a man. An old expression of contempt at the expense of tailors signifying that a tailor is so much more feeble than anyone else that it would take nine of them to make a man of average stature and strength. As a fact, the occupation of a tailor, and the cramped position in which he works, are not conducive to good physique; but tailor is probably a facetious transformation of teller, a teller being a stroke on the bell at a funeral, three being given for a child, six for a woman, and nine for a man. Cf. The Nine Tailors, by Dorothy SAYERS.

the three tailors of Tooley Street. Canning says that three tailors of Tooley Street, Southwark, addressed a petition of grievances to the House of Commons, beginning—"We, the people of England." Hence the phrase is used of any pettifogging coterie that fancies it represents the vox populi.

Taine, Hippolyte (1828-1893). French philosopher and literary critic, influenced in part by HEGEL, COMTE, and the English Utilitarians. See UTILITARIANISM. He is known for his emphasis on the rôle of scientific determinism in literature and history, especially as exemplified in hereditary and environmental influences, among the latter of which even climate and atmosphere were included. His methods are considered to be associated with those of NATURALISM. His works include the following: La Philosophie de l'Art (1865-1869); Histoire de la Littérature Anglaise (1864 and later); Nouveaux Essais (1865); Origines de la France contemporaine (1875-1894). Taine's two most famous doctrines are the doctrine of the faculté maîtresse, or dominant trait, from which the critic hoped to be able to deduce an author's career "geometrically"; and the theory of race, milieu, et moment, the three forces respectively signifying biological inheritance, environment, and the configuration of tradition, precedent, and dominant literary trend at the time of an author's appearance.

Taiping. Religious Chinese revolt (1850's).

Taj Mahal. The famous mausoleum in Agra, India, built by Shah Jahan in memory of his favorite sultana, Mumtaz Mahal. It is of white marble, and is so beautiful that it is called "A Poem in Marble," and "The Marble Queen of Sorrow."

Takeda Izumo (1688-1756). Japanese dramatist. Author of The Story of the Forty-Seven Ronins and manager of a famous theater in Osaka.

Talbot, John. "The English Achilles," first Earl of Shrewsbury (1373-1453). He is a character in Shakespeare's I Henry VI:

Is this the Talbot, so much feared abroad,
That with his name the mothers still their babes?
Act ii. Sc. 3.

Talbot, Lord Arthur. The hero of Bellini's opera I PURITANI, a Cavalier who wins the love of Elvira, daughter of Lord Walton.

talbotype. See under DAGUERREOTYPE.

talent (from Gr. talanton, "a balance"). Ability, aptitude, a "gift" for something or other. The word is borrowed from the parable in Matt. xxv, and was originally the name of a weight and piece of money in Assyria, Greece, Rome, etc.

the Ministry of All the Talents. The name ironically given to Grenville's coalition of 1806. It included Fox, Erskine, Fitzwilliam, Ellenborough and Sidmouth. The term has also been applied—ironically—to later coalitions.

Tale of a Tub. A religious satire by Dean SWIFT (1704). Its object is to ridicule the Roman Catholics under the name of Peter, and the Presbyterians under the name of Jack (Calvin). The Church of England is represented by Martin (Luther). Ben Jonson wrote a comedy of this title (produced 1633), and the expression is sometimes used as synonymous with a cock-and-bull story.

Tale of Two Cities. A. A novel of the French Revolution by Charles DICKENS (1859). The two cities are London and Paris. The plot hinges on the physical likeness of Charles Darnay and Sidney Carton, both of whom are in love with Lucie MANETTE. Lucie loves Darnay, and Sydney Carton, who is a dissipated ne'er-do-well, never pleads his devotion, but it leads him to go to the guillotine in place of Darnay for the sake of Lucie's happiness.

Tales from Shakespeare. Prose stories (1807) made from Shakespeare's plays by Charles and Mary LAMB and addressed to children.

Tales of a Grandfather. A set of stories in three series, by Sir Walter SCOTT, told to his small grandson, "Hugh Littlejohn." These tales are supposed to be taken from Scotch chronicles, and embrace the most prominent and graphic incidents of Scotch history: Series I, to the amalgamation of the two crowns in James I; series II, to the union of the two Parliaments in the reign of Queen Anne; series III, to the death of Charles Edward, the Young Pretender.

Tales of a Wayside Inn. Stories in verse by Henry W. LONGFELLOW (1863), supposed to be told at the Red Horse Inn, Sudbury, Massachusetts.

Tales of Hoffman. A light opera by OFFENBACH (1881), based on three tales by the German author, E. T. A. HOFFMAN. The successive acts deal with the love affairs and other adventures of the poet Hoffman which he recalls over the wine in a Nuremberg tavern.

Tales of My Landlord. The general title for certain of Sir Walter SCOTT's novels, tales supposed to be told by the landlord of the Wallace Inn, in the parish of Gandercleuch, "edited and arranged by Jedediah Cleishbotham, schoolmaster and parish clerk" of the same parish, but in reality corrected and arranged by his usher, Peter or Patrick Pattison, who lived to complete five of the novels, but died before the last two were issued. These novels are arranged thus: Series I, The Black Dwarf and Old Mortality; Series II, Heart of Midlothian; Series III, Bride of Lammermoor and Legend of Montrose; Posthumous, Count Robert of Paris and Castle Dangerous. Cf. Black Dwarf, introduction.

Tales of Soldiers and Civilians. In later editions, In the Midst of Life. A book of stories (1891) by Ambrose BIERCE. It contains several of his best stories, as A Horseman in the Sky and An Occurrence at Owl Creek Bridge.

Tales of the Genii. These tales, by James Ridley (1765), are said to be from the Persian, and are ascribed to Horam, son of Asmar.

Talfourd, Sir Thomas (1795-1854). A friend of Charles Lamb, who published Lamb's Letters (1837) and Memorials (1848). He also wrote the tragedy Ion (1835).

Taliesin (fl. 550). The earliest and greatest but perhaps legendary Welsh bard. More poetry has been ascribed to him than he can possibly have written. He is mentioned in the Idylls of the King by Tennyson and is prominent in The Misfortunes of Elphin by Thomas Love Peacock. The architect Frank Lloyd WRIGHT has given the name Taliesin to his residence in Wisconsin.

Talifer. A poem in blank verse (1933) by Edwin Arlington Robinson. It is a story of jealousy and potential murder.

talisman (Ar. tilasman, from late Gr. telesma, "mystery"). A charm or magical figure or word, such as the ABRAXAS, which is cut on metal or stone, under the influence of certain planets; it is supposed to be sympathetic, and to receive an influence from the planets which it communicates to the wearer.

In Arabia, a talisman consisting of a piece of paper, on which are written the names of the Seven Sleepers (see under SEVEN) and their dog, to protect a house from ghosts and demons, is still used. In order to free any place of vermin, a talisman consisting of the figure of the obnoxious animal is made in wax or consecrated metal, in a planetary hour.

He swore that you had robbed his house,
And stole his talismanic louse.

Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii, 1.

Talisman, The. A novel by Sir Walter SCOTT (1825), relating the adventures of Sir Kenneth, Prince Royal of Scotland, as a knight in disguise in the Holy Land under RICHARD COEUR DE LION. Richard and his noble enemy, SALADIN, are leading characters. Hearing of Richard's illness, Saladin assumes the disguise of the physician Adonbec al Hakim and gives his patient a healing drink of spring water into which he has dipped his "talisman." At the end of the novel, Sir Kenneth marries his kinswoman, Lady Edith Plantagenet.

Talking Bird. A marvelous bird in one of the stories of the Arabian Nights. See PARI-ZADE.

There is a Green Bird of similar nature in Countess d'Aulnoy's fairy tale, Prince Chery and Fair-Star. See CHERY.

Talleyrand-Périgord, Charles Maurice de (1754-1838). French statesman, commonly known as Talleyrand. Minister of foreign affairs (1797-1807), created grand chamberlain (1804) by Napoleon. He opposed Napoleon's Russian and Spanish policies, and after Napoleon's fall he helped restore the Bourbons. Louis XVIII made him minister of foreign affairs (1814) and prime minister (1815). He represented France at the Congress of Vienna (1815) where his diplomatic tact succeeded in maintaining his country's territorial integrity. He was forced to resign after Napoleon's defeat at Waterloo. In 1830 he became ambassador to Great Britain and helped form the Quadruple Alliance (1834). Cf. his Mémoires (1891).

Talma, François Joseph (1763-1826). Famous French actor who scored his first great success in the anti-royalist drama Charles IX (1789). Established the Théâtre de la République under the patronage of Desmoulins and Danton. Napoleon and later on Louis XVIII were among his admirers.

Talmage, Thomas de Witt (1832-1902). Brilliant American preacher in the Dutch Reformed Church. Editor of The Christian Herald (1892-1902).

Talmud, the (Heb., "instruction"). The body of Jewish civil and religious law not contained in, but largely derived from, the PENTATEUCH. The name was originally applied only to the GEMARA, but it now usually includes also the MISHNA.

When the Talmud is spoken of without any qualification, the reference is to the Babylonian Talmud, one of the two recensions of the Gemara, the other being the Palestinian Talmud, which is of only about a fourth the volume of the Babylonian, and is considered by Jews of less authority. The Babylonian codification dates from the 5th or 6th century, the Palestinian (or Jerusalem) from about a century earlier.

Talus. In Greek mythology, a man of brass, made by Hephaestus (Vulcan), the guardian of Crete. Whenever he caught a stranger on the island he made himself red-hot and embraced him to death.

He is introduced by Spenser into the FAÉRIE

QUEENE (Bk. v) as the "yron man" attendant upon Sir Artega, and representing executive power—"swift as a swallow, and as lion strong."

His name was Talus made of yron mould
Immoveable, resistless, without end.
Who in his hand an yron flae did hould
With which he thresht out falshood, and did truths unfould.
V. i, 12.

Tamar. In the Old Testament, the daughter-in-law of Judah. In Landor's poem GEBIR, the brother of Gebir. Also, the heroine of the poem Tamar by Robinson JEFFERS.

Tamerlane or Tamburlaine (1336?-1405). Names under which the Tartar conqueror Timur, or Timur Lenk, i.e., "Timur the Lame" is immortalized in Elizabethan drama. He had his capital at Samarkand, was ruler of vast territories in central Asia and a great part of India, and died while preparing to invade China. Tamburlaine the Great (acted in 1587), a blank verse tragedy, was MARLOWE's first play. In it Tamburlaine is a terrible, blood-thirsty, inhuman villain and the action consists of one atrocity after another. In Rowe's play, Tamerlane (1702), the warrior appears as a calm, philosophic prince, out of compliment to William III. There is a poem called Tamerlane by Edgar Allan POE.

Taming of the Shrew, The. Shakespeare's play (first printed in the 1623 Folio) was a rewriting of an anonymous comedy printed in 1594 with the title A pleasaunt conceited Historie called The Taming of a Shrew. As it hath beene sundry times acted by the right honourable the Earle of Pembroke his servants. The "Shrew" is Katharina, a maiden of such violent whims and tempers that it seems unlikely she will find a husband. Her father, Baptista, refuses to allow her lovable younger sister Bianca to marry any of her numerous suitors until Katharina is off his hands. Finally Petruchio appears, marries Katharina in short order, and by his own abrupt highhandedness "tames" her to such good effect that he wins a bet with two other men on a test of their wives' obedience. Meantime Lucentio, through the ruse of becoming Bianca's tutor while his servant Tranio assumes his name and clothes and presses his suit with her father, has succeeded in winning her hand. This entire play is enacted for the benefit of Christopher Sly, a drunken tinker who, in the induction, is shown in a nobleman's castle where he is fooled into thinking he is a nobleman himself.

Tam Lin. A figure in a famous old ballad in which he is taken prisoner by the queen of the fairies.

Tammany Hall. The headquarters (formerly on Union Square) of the controlling organization of the Democratic Party in New York City and State; hence, the party itself, and, as this has been the political target for so-called party abuses, the term "Tammany" is figuratively employed for municipal malpractice.

Tammany was the name of a 17th century Delaware chief, and the patriotic, anti-British leagues of pre-Revolutionary days adopted the name "St. Tammany" to ridicule the titles of loyalist organizations—Societies of St. George, St. Andrew, and so on. After the Revolution these leagues became anti-aristocratic clubs, but all soon died a natural death except "Tammany Society, No. 1," which was that of New York. This flourished, and was converted into a political machine by Aaron Burr in his conflict with Alexander Hamilton (ca. 1798), and in 1800 played a prominent part in the election of Jefferson to the presidency.

Tamora. Queen of the Goths, in love with Aaron the Moor in the play TITUS ANDRONICUS, attributed to Shakespeare.

Tam O'Shanter. A narrative poem by Robert Burns (1791). It was founded on a legend that no sort of bogie could pass the middle of a running stream. Tam sees a hellish legion dancing in Alloway Kirk (near Ayr), and being excited cries out, "Weel done, Cutty Sark!" Immediately the lights are extinguished, and Tam rides for his life to reach the river Doon. He has himself passed the mid-stream, but his horse's tail has not reached that magic line, so Cutty Sark catches hold of it and pulls it off.

Think, ye may buy the joys owre dear—
Remember Tam-o'-Shanter's mare.

Tampico. A Mexican seaport on the Gulf. On April 10, 1914 some sailors from an American warship were arrested here. The incident resulted, shortly after that, in the Americans taking Vera Cruz.

Tancred (d. 1112). One of the chief heroes of the First Crusade, and a leading character in Tasso's JERUSALEM DELIVERED. He was the son of Eudes (Otho) and Emma (sister of Robert Guiscard); Boemond or Bohemond was his cousin. In the epic he is the greatest of all the Christian warriors except Rinaldo, and shows a generous contempt of danger. His one fault is "woman's love," and that woman Clorinda, a pagan (Bk. i), whom he unwittingly slays in a night attack, and whose death he laments with great lamentation (Bk. xii). Being wounded, he is nursed by Erminia, who is in love with him (Bk. xix).

There is an opera Tancred by Rossini (1813).

Tancred, or the New Crusade. A novel by Disraeli (1847). Tancred is a young and high-born visionary who leaves the social circles of 19th century London to travel in the East. In the Holy Land he experiences the "great Asian mystery" which is to work regeneration for the West.

Taney, Roger Brooke (1777-1864). U.S. secretary of the treasury (1833-1834). Became chief justice of the Supreme Court following John Marshall. He is remembered for his association with the DRED SCOTT DECISION (1857).

T'ang. The name of an eminent Chinese dynasty whose rule (618 A.D.-907 A.D.) coincides with the Age of the Arts in China.

Tanglewood Tales. A book of tales retold for children from classic mythology by Nathaniel Hawthorne (1853). It forms a companion volume to his Wonder-Book.

tank. The heavily armored military motor fort, running on "caterpillar" wheels, enclosed, and with room in the interior for quick-firing guns and several men, was so called by the U.S. War Office before it made its first appearance to prevent information as to its real nature leaking out to the enemy. Telegrams, etc., with inquiries about tanks would cause no suspicion if they fell into enemy hands. Tanks were invented during World War I, and were first used in the British attack on the German lines at Flers, September 15, 1916.

tanka. The classic form of Japanese poetry, fixed centuries ago in the standard arrangement of five lines (with 5, 7, 5, 7, 7 syllables). It reduces, through the strict limits of its form, all poetic raw material to the concentrated essence of one static event, image, mood, etc. An example by Saigo Hoshi reads:

Ima zo shiui omoi-ide-yo to chigirishi wa wasuremu tote no nasake narikeri.

Now indeed I know
That when we said, "remember,"
And we swore it so,
It was in "we will forget"
That our thoughts most truly met.

Tanner, Henry Ossawa (1859-1937). American Negro painter. One of his paintings is in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City.

Tanner, Jack or John. The hero of Shaw's comedy MAN AND SUPERMAN, played by Robert Loraine and Maurice Evans in the United States.

Tanner of Tamworth, The. Hero of a ballad in Percy's Reliques, the man who mistakes Edward IV for a highwayman. After some little altercation, they change horses, the King giving his hunter for the tanner's cob, worth about four shillings. As soon as the tanner mounts the King's horse, it throws him, and the tanner gladly pays down a sum of money to get his old cob back again. King Edward now blows his hunting-horn, and the courtiers gather round him. "I hope [i.e., expect] I shall be hanged for this," cries the tanner, but the King gives him the manor of Plumpton Park, with 300 marks a year.

Tannhäuser. A lyrical poet, or MINNESINGER, of Germany, who flourished in the second half of the 13th century. He led a wandering life, and is said even to have visited the Far East; this fact, together with his Buszlied (Song of Repentance), and the general character of his poems, probably gave rise to a legend about him which first appeared in a 16th century German ballad. This relates how he spends a voluptuous year with Venus, in the Venusberg, a magic land reached through a subterranean cave. At last he obtains leave to visit the upper world, and goes to Pope Urban for absolution. "No," says His Holiness, "you can no more hope for mercy than this dry staff can be expected to bud again." Tannhäuser departs in despair, but on the third day the papal staff bursts into blossom. The Pope sends in every direction for Tannhäuser, but the knight is nowhere to be found, for, mercy having been refused, he has returned to end his days in the arms of Venus.

In Wagner's opera Tannhäuser (1845), the hero returns from the Venusberg to the court of the Landgrave of Thuringia, where the pure and beautiful Elizabeth, the Landgrave's niece, has remained true to him. At a great singing tourney his friend WOLFRAM VON ESCHENBACH sings of spiritual love, but Tannhäuser, who has promised Venus to sing her praises, bursts out in a wild, unholy song which brings upon him the condemnation of the entire court. Elizabeth awaits the result of his repentant pilgrimage, but when he is not among the returning pilgrims, she dies. His arrival and the news of the budding staff come too late.

Tanqueray, Paula, Aubrey and Ellean. The leading characters in Pinero's SECOND MRS. TANQUERAY.

Tantalus. In Greek mythology, the son of ZEUS and Pluto (daughter of Himantes). He was a Lydian king, highly honored and prosperous, but, because he divulged to mortals the secrets of the gods, he was plunged up to the chin in a river of HADES, a tree hung with clusters of fruit being just above his head. As every time he tried to drink the waters receded from him, and as the fruit was just out of reach, he suffered agony from thirst, hunger, and unfulfilled anticipation.

Hence our verb, to tantalize, to excite a hope and disappoint it; and hence the name tantalus applied to a lock-up spirit chest in which the bottles are quite visible but quite un-get-at-able without the key.

Tantamount, Lord Edward. In Aldous Huxley's POINT COUNTER POINT, a celebrated biologist, innocent and child-like in character, interested only in the experiments carried on in his laboratory and oblivious to all else that is happening in his family and in the world outside.

Hilda Tantamount, Lord Edward's wife, is a beautiful woman, fond of entertaining celebrities at her home, bored by her husband's preoccupation with science. She is the mistress of John Bidlake.

Lucy Tantamount, the daughter of Hilda and Lord Edward, is the typical heroine of society novels of the 1920's—beautiful, independent, faithless, promiscuous in morals, and fatally attractive to the men she meets. Walter Bidlake falls in love with her, neglecting his mistress Marjorie Carling to seek her favor.

Tante. A novel by Anne Douglas SEDGWICK (1911). Tante is the great pianist, Madame Okraska. The novel is the story of the love affair and marriage of Tante's ward Karen Woodruff and Gregory Jardin, a wealthy young lawyer. Tante's jealousy and thirst for admiration finally bring disillusionment to her hitherto adoring young charge.

Tantivy Towers. A book of light verse by A. P. HERBERT. The word tantivy means "rapid gallop."

tantony pig. The smallest pig of a litter, which, according to the old proverb, will follow its owner anywhere; so called in honor of St. Anthony, who was the patron saint of swineherds and is frequently represented with a little pig at his side.

Tantony is also applied to a small church bell—or to any hand-bell—for there is usually a bell round the neck of St. Anthony's pig or attached to the Tau-cross he carries. See Sz. Antony under SAINTS.

Tantras, The. Sanskrit religious writings, forming the Bible of the Shaktas, a Hindu sect, the adherents of which worship the divine power in its female aspect. The Tantras consist of magical formulas for the most part in the form of dialogues between Siva and his wife, and treat of the creation and ultimate destruction of the world, divine worship, the attainment of superhuman power, and final union with the Supreme Spirit. They are of comparatively recent date (6th or 7th century A. D.). Tantra is Sanskrit for thread, or warp, and hence is used of groundwork, order, or doctrine of religion.

Taoism. One of the three great religious systems of China, Confucianism and Buddhism being the others, founded by the philosopher LAO-TSZE (ca. 604-523 B.C.), and based on the Tao Tê Ching (Book of Reason and Virtue), reputed to be by him.

Taou Yen. In Hergesheimer's JAVA HEAD, Gerrit Ammidon's Chinese wife.

Taper and Tadpole. Political tools used by powerful interests to carry out petty, underhanded schemes; so called from two characters introduced by Disraeli in his political novels CONINGSBY and Sybil.

tapis, on the. On the carpet, under consideration, now being ventilated; an English-French phrase, referring to the tapis or cloth with which the table of the council chamber is covered, and on which are laid the motions before the House.

Tapley, Mark. Martin's servant and companion in Dickens' MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT, often taken as the type of one who is invariably cheerful. His ambition is "to come out jolly" under the most unfavorable circumstances. Greatly attached to Martin Chuzzlewit, he leaves his comfortable situation at the Blue Dragon to accompany him to America, and in "Eden" has ample opportunities of "being jolly" so far as wretchedness can make him so. On his return to England he marries Mrs. Lupin, and thus becomes landlord of the Blue Dragon.

Tappertit, Sim or Simon. In Dickens' BARNABY RUDGE, the apprentice of Gabriel VARDEN, locksmith. An old-fashioned, thin-faced, sleek-haired, sharp-nosed, small-eyed little fellow is Mr. Sim Tappertit, about five feet high, but thoroughly convinced in his own mind that he is both good-looking and above the middle size—in fact, rather tall than otherwise. Mr. Tappertit has an ambitious soul and admires his master's daughter, Dolly, but is forced to see his rival, Joe Willet, successful. He finally marries the widow of a rag-and-bone collector.

Taprobane. An old name for the island of Ceylon. In the Adventures of Sir John Maundeville it is referred to as containing golden hills.

tar or Jack Tar. A sailor; probably an abbreviation of tarpaulin, of which sailors' caps and overalls were made. Tarpaulins are tarred cloths, and are commonly used on board ship to keep articles from the sea-spray, etc.

Tara, the Hill of. In Meath, Ireland. Here the kings, the clergy, the princes, and the bards used to assemble in a large hall, to consult on matters of public importance.

The harp that once thro' Tara's halls
The soul of music shed,
Now hangs as mute on Tara's walls
As if that soul were fled.

Moore, Irish Melodies.

Tara's Psalter or Psalter of Tara. The great national register or chronicles of Ireland, read to the assembled princes when they met in Tara's Hall in public conference.

Tarakee. A hero of Brahminical legend and miracle of ascetic devotion. He is fabled to have lived 1100 years, and spent each century in some astounding mortification.

tarantula. A large and hairy venomous spider (so called from Taranto, Lat. Tarenzum, a town in Apulia, Italy, where they abound), whose bite was formerly supposed to be the cause of the dancing mania hence known as tarantism. This was an hysterical disease, common, epidemically, in southern Europe from the 15th to the 17th centuries. From the same insect the tarantella gets its name. This is a very quick Neapolitan dance (or its music) for one couple, and is said to have been based on the gyrations practiced by those whom the tarantula had poisoned.

Taras Bulba. A historical novel by GOGOL (1839), dealing with the career of Taras Bulba, a violent 15th century Cossack. He kills one of his sons, Andrii, who has turned traitor for the sake of a sweetheart; another, Ostap, is captured and tortured to death before his eyes. He now launches forth on a terrible career of revenge with the cry "A mass for Ostap" accompanying his mad depredations and slaughters. At last he is captured and dies.

Tar Baby. In one of the best-known stories in UNCLE REMUS by Joel Chandler HARRIS, a tar doll set up by the roadside whose unresponsiveness irritates Brer Rabbit to such a pitch that he strikes him, first with one paw, then with another, until he himself is stuck tight.

Tarbell, Edmund C. (1862-1938). American impressionistic painter.

Tarbell, Ida M. (1857-1944). American journalist, chiefly known for her exposés in McClure's Magazine (1894-1906). Her History of the Standard Oil Company is one of the best accounts of a monopoly. She was associate editor of the American Magazine (1906-1915). She wrote a life of Napoleon, a life of Abraham Lincoln and several other books on Lincoln; her autobiography, All in the Day's Work, was published in 1939.

Tarde, Gabriel (1843-1904). French philosopher and criminologist. The Laws of Imitation (1903); Underground Man (1905); etc.

Tardieu, André (1876-1945). French high commissioner in the U.S. (1917-1918). At the Paris Peace Conference (1918-1919) he supported the attitude of CLEMENCEAU. He is credited with having written a large part of the Peace Treaty. Premier of France (1929-1930; 1932).

Tarheels. Inhabitants of North Carolina, so called from the tar produced there. See also under STATES.

Tarkington, Newton Booth (1869-1946). American novelist and short-story writer, known for his popular books dealing with middle-class American life, chiefly in the Middle West, in a semi-realistic vein. Among his works are MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE (1900), an historical romance; THE GENTLEMAN FROM INDIANA (1899); THE CONQUEST OF CANAAN (1905); The Man from Home (1908), a play; The Flirt (1913); PENROD (1914), Penrod and Sam (1916), Penrod Jashber (1929), and Little Orvie (1934), humorous books about small boys; SEVENTEEN (1916) and Ramsey Milholland (1919), humorous books about adolescents; THE TURMOIL (1915), THE MAGNIFICENT AMBERSONS (1918), and The Midlander (1923), published as a trilogy entitled Growth (1927); CLARENCE (1919), a comedy; ALICE ADAMS (1921); The Plutocrat (1927); The World Does Move (1928), an autobiography; Claire Ambler (1928); Mirthful Haven (1931); Mary's Neck (1932); Wanton Mally (1932); Presenting Lily Mars (1933); The Lorenzo Bunch (1936); The Fighting Littles (1941); The Heritage of Hatcher Ide (1941). Both The Magnificent Ambersons and Alice Adams were winners of the Pulitzer prize.

In 1943 he received, as the first man, the Howells Medal of the American Academy of Arts and Letters for "general distinction in the field of literature."

Tarleton, Richard (?-1588). Popular Elizabethan comedian, a favorite of Queen Elizabeth, and praised by contemporary authors.

Tarpa, Spurius Metius. A famous critic of the Augustan age. He sat in the temple of Apollo with four colleagues to judge the merit of theatrical pieces before they were produced in public.

Tarpaulin Muster, A. A collection of short stories of the sea (1907) by John MASEFIELD. The title comes from a phrase used of the pooling of funds by sailors, which was originally done by throwing money into a tarpaulin.

Tarpeian Rock. An ancient rock or peak (now no longer in existence) of the Capitoline Hill, Rome; so called from Tarpeia, a vestal virgin, the daughter of Spurius Tarpeius, governor of the citadel, who, according to the legend, agreed to open the gates to the Sabines if they would give her "what they wore on their arms" (meaning their bracelets). The Sabines, "keeping their promise to the ear," crushed her to death with their shields, and her body was hurled from the "Tarpeian Rock." Subsequently, traitors were cast down this rock and so killed.

Tarquin. (1) The family name of a legendary line of early Roman kings. Tarquinius Priscus, the fifth king of Rome, is dated 617-578 B. C. His son, Tarquinius Superbus, was the seventh (and last) king of Rome, and it was his son, Tarquinius Sextus, who committed the rape on Lucretia, in revenge for which the Tarquins were expelled from Rome and a Republic established. For the use of this legend in drama see LUCRETIA.

(2) The name of a "recreant knight" figuring in the Arthurian cycle. A ballad given in Percy's Reliques tells how Sir LAUNCELOT meets a lady who asks him to deliver certain Knights of the Round Table from Tarquin's power. Coming to a river, he sees a copper basin suspended from a tree, and strikes it so hard that it breaks. This brings out Tarquin, and a furious encounter takes place in which the latter is slain. Sir Launcelot liberates "threescore knights and four, all of the Table Round." See also YVAIN.

Tarsus. A town in Turkey, the birthplace of St. Paul who was called Saul of Tarsus before his conversion. It is believed to have been founded by Sardanapalus. Alexander the Great conquered it and under Pompey it was part of a Roman province.

Tartar, to catch a. See under CATCH.

Tartarin. A famous comic character created by Alphonse DAUDET, the hero of his Aventures prodigeuses de Tartarin de Tarascon (1872) and Tartarin sur les Alpes (1885). This typical French southerner, a prodigious braggart, bubbling over with good spirits and with exaggerated tales of his prowess as a sportsman, is the hero of his native Tarascon. Finally, however, even Tarascon is eager for proof; so he sets out on adventure bent and at Algiers shoots an old, tame, blind lion that becomes so fierce and dreadful in the telling of the tale as to insure Tartarin's reputation forever more.

Tartarus. The infernal regions of classical mythology, used as equivalent to HADES by later writers, but by HOMER placed as far beneath Hades as Hades is beneath the earth. It was here that ZEUS confined the TITANS. See also Hell.

Tartini, Giuseppe (1692-1770). Italian violinist and composer of many concertos and sonatas. His Devil's Trill is a favorite show-piece.

Tartuffe. The chief character and title of a comedy by MOLIÈRE (1664). Tartuffe is a religious hypocrite and impostor, who uses "religion" as the means of gaining money, covering deceit, and promoting self-indulgence. He is taken up by one ORGON, a man of property, who promises him his daughter in marriage, but when his character is exposed, he is not only turned out of the house but is lodged in jail for felony. It is thought that Tartuffe is a caricature of Père la Chaise, the confessor of Louis XIV, who was very fond of truffles (Fr. tartuffes), and that this suggested the name to the dramatist. Isaac BICKERSTAFF adapted Molière's comedy to the English stage, under the title of The Hypocrite (1768). Tartuffe he calls "Dr. Cantwell," and Orgon "Sir John Lambert."

Tarzan. Hero of an extremely popular series of adventure stories by Edgar Rice BURROUGHS in the early 20th century, later dramatized in American motion pictures and featured in a syndicated comic-strip serial. Tarzan is a white boy who has been raised among the animals in the African jungle and is able to understand and control them as though he were one of them. He possesses great physical strength and skill, and is able to outwit countless enemies in his innumerable adventures. He is usually played in motion pictures by Johnny Weissmuller.

Task, The. Chief poem by William COWPER (1785), its purpose being, according to a statement by the author himself, "to discountenance the modern enthusiasm after a London life, and to recommend rural ease and leisure as friendly to the cause of piety and virtue." In its six books (The Sofa, The Time-Piece, The Garden, etc.) it deals with a number of subjects in which the author was interested, especially nature, rural life, animals, simple, hard-working people, and social reform. In its recollections of the inspiring and healing qualities of nature, it is considered a forerunner of some of the poetry of William WORDSWORTH. The title refers to the origin of the poem in the suggestion of Lady Austen that Cowper write a poem concerning her parlor sofa. The author complied and, as he himself says, "having much leisure, connected another subject with it; and, pursuing the train of thought to which my situation and turn of mind led me, brought forth at length, instead of the trifle which I at first intended, a serious affair—a volume!"

Tasker Jevons. The English title of May Sinclair's novel The Belfry and the name of its hero.

Tasman, Abel J. (1602–1659). Dutch navigator who went to the South Seas and discovered what he called Van Diemen's Land after the governor of the Dutch East Indies. It is the modern Tasmania.

Tasso, Torquato (1544–1595). Italian poet, author of JERUSALEM DELIVERED. After the publication of his great epic, Tasso lived in the court of Ferrara and, according to legend, conceived a violent passion for Leonora, one of the Duke's sisters, but fled in 1577 to Naples. After an absence of two years, he returned to his patron, the Duke of Ferrara. For seven years (1579–1586), he was imprisoned as a lunatic. He is the hero of Goethe's drama Tasso (1789) and of Byron's poem The Lament of Tasso (1817).

Tate, Allen John Orley (1899–). American poet, novelist, and critic, associated with the AGRARIANS and the FUGITIVES, known for the satire and complexity of his poetry, influenced by the English METAPHYSICAL POETS, and for the emphasis placed in his criticism on rationalism, tradition, and the scientific approach to the interpretation of poetry and poetic imagery. Much of his subject-matter in general is concerned with the South and the sectional interests of the South. His works include biographies of Stonewall Jackson (1928) and Jefferson Davis (1929); Mr. Pope, And Other Poems (1928); Three Poems (1930); Poems: 1928–1931 (1932); The Mediterranean, And Other Poems (1936); Selected Poems (1937); contributions to I'll Take My Stand (1930), The Critique of Humanism (1930), and Who Owns America? (1936), all symposia; Reactionary Essays on Poetry and Ideas (1936) and Reason in Madness (1941), criticism; The Fathers (1938), a novel. Ode to the Confederate Dead is his best-known poem.

Tate, Sir Henry (1819–1899). English philanthropist. He built the Tate Gallery in London as a gallery for modern paintings (opened in 1897). Today it is the National Gallery of British Art.

Tate, Nahum (1652–1715). British playwright and poet who was commissioned by Dryden to write a second part of Absalom and Achitophel (1682). He was poet laureate (1692) and helped Nicholas Brady write the New Version of the Psalms of David in metrical form (1696). His hymn, While Shepherds Watched Their Flocks by Night, is well known. Pope satirized him in the Dunciad.

Tatler, The. A famous series of essays started by Richard STEELE in 1709, and continued to 1711. ADDISON was also a contributor. The Tatler was succeeded by THE SPECTATOR.

Tatlock, John Strong Perry (1876–1948). Well-known Chaucer scholar who compiled with Arthur G. Kennedy a Concordance to Chaucer (1927). He taught at the University of California.

Tattersall, Richard (1724–1795). Famous English horseman. Tattersall's horse-auction headquarters in London (1766) are known all over the world. The word tattersall is used in various languages as a synonym of "horse market."

Tattle. In Congreve's comedy Love for Love, a man who ruins characters by innuendo, and so denies a scandal as to confirm it. He is a mixture of "lying, foppery, vanity, cowardice, brag, licentiousness, and ugliness, but a professed beau" (Act i.). Tattle is entrapped into marriage with Mrs. Frail.

Tattycoram. The name of a foundling in Little Dorrit by Charles Dickens.

Tauchnitz, Christian Bernhard (1816-1895). German publisher, member of a family of printers and publishers. Especially known for the "Tauchnitz Edition" (started 1841) of a Collection of British and American Authors. The Tauchnitz volumes were English-language editions for sale on the Continent, not legally to be taken into American or British territory.

Taurus (Lat., "the bull"). The second zodiacal constellation, and the second sign of the Zodiac, which the sun enters about April 21.

Taussig, Frank William (1859-1940). American economist and educator at Harvard (1882-1935). Author of a number of books on tariff, trade, etc. Chairman of the U.S. Tariff Commission (1917-1919).

Tawney, Richard Henry (1880-). English Labourite economist. Author of The Acquisitive Society (1920); The British Labour Movement (1925); Religion and the Rise of Capitalism (1926); etc.

Taylor, Bayard (1825-1878). American poet, prose-writer, and journalist, known for his popular essays, lectures, and sentimental poems of romance and adventure; an exponent of the GENTEEL TRADITION. Among his accounts of travel and adventure are Views Afoot (1846); El Dorado (1850); A Journey to Central Africa (1854); The Lands of the Saracen (1855); A Visit to India, China, and Japan, in the Year 1853 (1855); Northern Travel (1858); Travels in Greece and Russia (1859); At Home and Abroad (1860). His verse includes Ximena (1844); Rhymes of Travel, Ballads and Poems (1849); A Book of Romances, Lyrics, and Songs (1852); Poems of the Orient (1855); Lars: A Pastoral of Norway (1863); Home Pastorals, Ballads, and Lyrics (1875); The Echo Club, And Other Literary Diversions (1876); Poetical Works (1880). He also wrote such fiction as: Hannah Thurston (1863); John Godfrey's Fortunes (1864); The Story of Kennett (1866); Joseph and His Friend (1870).

During his early career Taylor traveled widely in Europe, Asia, and Africa, writing of his journeys for American newspapers and making lecture tours. His best work is considered to be his translation of Goethe's FAUST (1870-1871), as a result of which in 1878 he was appointed minister to Germany, where he died soon after his arrival.

Taylor, Bert Leston (1866-1921). Known as B.L.T. American columnist, associated for years with the Chicago Tribune.

telamones. Large, sculptured male figures (see ATLANTES; CARYATIDS) serving as architectural columns or pilasters; so called from the Greek legendary hero Telamon (father of AJAX), who took part in the Calydonian hunt and the expedition of the Argonauts.

Tel-el-Amarna. Ruins of an Egyptian city built in the fourteenth century B. C. by the great liberal Egyptian ruler Akhenaton. About three hundred clay tablets, representing the diplomatic correspondence between the king of Egypt and the kings of Babylon and Assyria, written in cuneiform characters, were discovered in Tel-el-Amarna (1887). The ruins were further examined by Sir Flinders PETRIE (1891-1892).

Telemachus. In classic legend, the only son of ULYSSES and PENELOPE. As a babe he was thrown in front of his father's plow as a test of that hero's pretended madness. When Ulysses had been absent from home nearly twenty years, Telemachus went to Pylos and Sparta to gain information about him. NESTOR received him hospitably at Pylos, and sent him to Sparta, where MENELAUS told him the prophecy of Proteus concerning Ulysses. Telemachus then returned home, where he found his father and assisted him in slaying the suitors. Telemachus was accompanied in his voyage by Athene, the goddess of wisdom, under the form of Mentor, one of his father's friends. He is the hero of Les Aventures de Télémaque (1699), a French prose epic by FÉNELON. This once widely read poem is based on the old legends but adds many incidents, notably Telemachus' love affair with the nymph CALYPSO, who had been so violently enamored of his father. See also Stephen DEDALUS.

Telephus. In Greek legend, King of Mysia. He was wounded in single combat with ACHILLES and was told by an oracle that only that which had inflicted the wound could heal it. Disguised as a beggar he made his way to the hall of AGAMEMNON and succeeded in persuading ULYSSES to scrape some rust from Achilles' famous PELIAN SPEAR and with it cure him of his wound. AESCHYLUS and EURIPIDES both wrote dramas on Telephus.

Telford, Thomas (1757-1834). Scottish civil engineer who built, among many works, the Caledonian Canal, many miles of roads and twenty bridges in the north of Scotland, improved Scottish harbors, and constructed the Gotha canal between the Baltic Sea and North Sea. He was a friend of Thomas Campbell and Robert Southey.

Telling the Bees. A poem by WHITTIER (1858) based on the old custom of "telling the bees" of a death in the family.

Tellus. An ancient goddess of Rome, the symbol of fertility.

Temora. One of the principal poems of OSSIAN, in eight books, so called from the royal residence of the kings of Connaught. Cairbar has usurped the throne, having killed Cormac, a distant relative of FINGAL, and Fingal raises an army to dethrone the usurper. The poem begins from this point with an invitation from Cairbar to Oscar, son of Ossian, to a banquet. Oscar accepts the invitation, but during the feast a quarrel is hatched in which Cairbar and Oscar fall by each other's spears. When Fingal arrives a battle ensues in which Fillan, son of Fingal, the Achilles of the Caledonian army, and Cathmor, brother of Cairbar, the bravest of the Irish army, are both slain. Victory crowns the army of Fingal, and Ferad-Artho, the rightful heir, is restored to the throne of Connaught.

Tempe. A valley in Greece, between Mount Olympus and Mount Ossa. The word was employed by the Greek and Roman poets as a synonym for any valley noted for its cool shades, singing birds, and romantic scenery.

Tempest, The. A drama by SHAKESPEARE (ca. 1611). Prospero and his daughter Miranda live on a desert island, enchanted by SYCORAX, who is dead. The only other inhabitants are CALIBAN, the son of Sycorax, a strange misshapen thing like a gorilla, and ARIEL, a sprite who has been imprisoned by Sycorax for twelve years in the rift of a pine tree, from which Prospero sets him free. One day Prospero sees a ship off the island and raises a tempest to wreck it. By this means, his brother Antonio, Prince Ferdinand, and the King of Naples are brought to the island. Now, it must be known that Prospero was once Duke of Milan, but his brother Antonio, aided by the King of Naples, usurped the throne and set Prospero and Miranda adrift in a small boat, which was wind-driven to the desert island. The outcome of the affair is that Ferdinand (son of the King of Naples) and Miranda fall in love with each other, Antonio asks forgiveness of his brother, Prospero is restored to his dukedom, and the whole party is conducted by Ariel with prosperous breezes back to Italy.

Tempest, Lady Betty. In Goldsmith's CITIZEN OF THE WORLD, a lady with beauty, fortune, and family, whose head is turned by plays and romances. Having rejected many offers because the suitors do not come up to her ideal, she is gradually left in the cold until she becomes company only for aunts and cousins, a wallflower in ballrooms, and in society generally "a piece of fashionable lumber."

Tempest, Marie (1866-1942). English actress known in her early years for her musical comedy rôles. She became a theater manager (1911), having visited the United States and starred under Charles Frohman, and produced plays by Arnold Bennett, Henry Arthur Jones, and others.

Templars or Knights Templars. A famous order of knighthood founded at the beginning of the 12th century for service in the Holy Land. They used to call themselves the "Poor Soldiers of the Holy City." Their habit was a long white mantle, to which subsequently was added a red cross on the left shoulder. Their war-cry was Bauseant (an old French name for a black and white horse), from their banner, which was striped black and white, and charged with a red cross. Their seal showed two knights riding on one horse, the story being that the first Master was so poor that he had to share a horse with one of his followers. The Order afterwards became very wealthy and so powerful that its suppression (effected in 1312) was necessary for the peace of Europe.

the Temple. The site, in London, between Fleet Street and the Thames, formerly occupied by the buildings of the Knights Templars (see TEMPLARS), of which the Temple Church, dating from 1185, was the last to remain standing. Since 1346 the Temple has been in the possession of doctors and students of the law, who, since 1609, have formed the two Inns of Court known as the Inner and Middle Temples. They were thoroughly wrecked by Nazi bombs in World War II.

Temple Bar. The old Fleet Street gateway into the City of London, formerly situated close to the entrance into the Temple, on the spot now marked by the monument known as the "Griffin." It was built by Wren in 1670, and was removed and re-erected in private grounds at Theobalds Park, Cheshunt, Herts, in 1878. It was long used for the exhibition of the heads of traitors and conspirators, and was hence sometimes called "the City Golgotha."

Temple of Solomon. The central place of Jewish worship, erected by Solomon and his Tyrian workmen (probably on Phoenician models) on Mount Moriah, Jerusalem, about 1006 B.C. It was destroyed at the siege of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar (588 B.C.), and some 70 years later the Temple of Zerubabel was completed on its site. In 20 B.C. Herod the Great began the building of the last Temple—that of the New Testament—which was utterly destroyed during the siege of Jerusalem by Vespasian and Titus in 70 A.D. For many centuries the site has been covered by the splendid Mohammedan mosque, Haram esh Sherif.

Temple, Charlotte. Heroine of Susannah Rowson's novel CHARLOTTE TEMPLE.

Temple, Sir William (1628–1699). English diplomat and statesman. At his estate at Moor Park in Surrey, Jonathan SWIFT worked as his secretary (1689) helping him with his Memoirs. His best-known essay, Of Ancient and Modern Learning, started a controversy between Richard Bentley (1662–1742) and Charles Boyle, the editor of a series of epistles which he and Sir William were satisfied had been written by the Sicilian tyrant Phalaris. Bentley showed them to be spurious. This wrangle brought forth Swift's famous The Battle of the Books (1704).

Templeton, Fay (1865–1939). American actress who appeared as a child in East Lynne (1868). She joined Weber and Fields (1905), played with George M. Cohan, and was also a star in vaudeville.

Templeton, Laurence. The pseudonym under which Sir Walter Scott published his IVANHOE. The preface is initialed L. T., and the dedication is to the Rev. Dr. Dryasdust.

Tennessee Shad, The. A boys' story by Owen JOHNSON named from a boon companion of Dink Stover's. See VARMINT.

Tennessee's Partner. A mining camp story by Bret HARTE (1869). Tennessee is a villain caught at wife-stealing and highway robbery, but his loyal partner, though his own wife is involved, does everything in his power to bribe the self-appointed court in Tennessee's favor with "$1700 in coarse gold and a watch." His efforts are in vain, and Tennessee is hanged.

Tenniel, Sir John (1820–1914). Cartoonist on the staff of Punch (1850–1901). He is best known as the illustrator of Alice's Adventures in Wonderland (1865) and Through the Looking-Glass (1872) by Lewis CARROLL.

Ten Nights in a Bar Room. A once widely read temperance narrative by T. S. Arthur (Am., 1855).

Tennyson, Alfred, Lord (1809–1892). English poet, considered the most representative of the Victorian age in England, appointed poet laureate in 1850. Tennyson, in his early career influenced by the English romantic poets (see ROMANTICISM), especially John KEATS, is known for his faithful reflection in his poetry of the artistic and cultural tastes and the intellectual and moral values of his time and of the dominant Victorian social class, as well as for the characteristic response of his time and class to the encroachments of science in the domain of religious faith. He was the favorite target for the attacks of English and American poets of the late 19th and early 20th centuries who rebelled against Victorian standards, denouncing him for sentimentality, insipidity, over-ornateness, and narrow patriotism. Later in the 20th century critics began to praise Tennyson for the metrical skill and distinguished imagery of some of his brief lyrics, regarded as unimportant in his own day.

Tennyson's works include the following: Poems by Two Brothers (1827), early verse by his brothers and himself; Poems, Chiefly Lyrical (1830); Poems (1832); Poems (1842); Locksley Hall (1842); The Princess (1847); In Memoriam (1850); Ode on the Death of the Duke of Wellington (1852); Maud (1855); Idylls of the King (1859-1872); Enoch Arden (1864), a sentimental verse narrative; Queen Mary (1875); Harold (1876), and Becket (1884), historical tragedies in verse; Tiresias, And Other Poems (1885); Locksley Hall Sixty Years After (1886); Demeter, And Other Poems (1889); The Death of Oenone (1892). Among his best-known single poems are The Lady of Shalott; The Lotus-Eaters; Ulysses; Break, Break, Break; Sweet and Low; Tears, Idle Tears; The Charge of the Light Brigade; The Brook; Come into the Garden, Maud; Northern Farmer, a dialect poem; The Higher Pantheism; and Crossing the Bar. Cf. Tennyson (1923), by Harold Nicolson.

Tennyson was immensely popular and successful throughout his entire later career. The one shadow in his life was the early death of his friend Arthur Henry HALLAM, which plunged him into a conflict between faith and doubt.

Tenochtitlan. The capital of the Aztec empire. It occupied the site of the modern Mexico City.

tenson. A contention in verse between rival TROUBADORS; a metrical dialogue consisting of smart repartees, usually on women and love. A subdivision of the troubadors' love lyrics also had the same name.

Termagant. The name given by the Crusaders, and by the authors of medieval romances, to an idol or deity that the Saracens were popularly supposed to worship. He was introduced into the MORALITY PLAYS as a most violent and turbulent person in long, flowing Eastern robes, a dress that led to his acceptance as a woman, whence the name came to be applied to a shrewish, violently abusive virago.

outdoing Termagant (Hamlet, iii. 2). In old drama the degree of rant was the measure of villainy. Termagant and HEROD, being considered the beau-ideal of all that is bad, were represented as settling everything by club law, and bawling so as to "split the ears of the groundlings."

that beats Termagant. Your ranting, raging pomposity, or exaggeration, surpasses that of Termagant of the old moralities.

Terminus. The Roman god of bounds. A boundary stone with a bust of the god is called a terminus.

Terpander. Greek musician of the seventh century B.C. who established at Sparta the first Greek school of music.

Terpsichore. One of the nine Muses of ancient Greece, the Muse of dancing and the dramatic chorus, and later of lyric poetry. She is usually represented seated, holding a lyre. Hence the adjective Terpsichorean, "pertaining to dancing."

terra firma. (Lat., "firm earth"). Dry land, in opposition to water; the continents as distinguished from islands. The Venetians so called the mainland of Italy under their sway, and the continental parts of America belonging to Spain were also called by the same term.

Terre, La (The Soil). A novel by Emile ZOLA, one of the ROUGON-MACQUART series, dealing with the French peasantry.

terror.

the Terror or the Reign of Terror. The period in the French Revolution between the fall of the Girondists and the overthrow of ROBESPIERRE. It lasted 420 days, from May 31, 1793, to July 27, 1794. The name is also applied to similar cataclysms in the history of other nations, such as the Russian Revolution (the Red Terror, March–September, 1917).

Terror of France. JOHN TALBOT, first Earl of Shrewsbury (1373–1453).

Is this the Talbot, so much feared abroad,
That with his name the mothers still their babes?

Terror of the World. Attila, King of the Huns (5th century).

Terry, Ellen (1847–1928). Distinguished English actress. Mother of Edward Gordon CRAIG. She was the leading lady of Sir Henry IRVING in plays of Shakespeare. In the United States, England, and Australia, she lectured on Shakespearean subjects (1910–1915). Dame Grand Cross, Order of British Empire (1925).

Terry, Phyllis Neilson (1892–). English actress, daughter of Ellen TERRY's brother Fred. Played many Shakespearean parts in England, the U.S., and Canada.

tertium quid (Lat.). A third party which shall be nameless; a third thing resulting from the combination of two things, but different from both. Fable has it that the expression originated with PYTHAGORAS, who, defining bipeds, said—

Sunt bipes homo, et avis, et tertium quid.
A man is a biped, so is a bird, and a third thing (which shall be nameless).

Iamblichus says this third thing was Pythagoras himself.

In chemistry, when two substances chemically unite, the new substance is called a tertium quid, as a neutral salt produced by the mixture of an acid and alkali.

terza rima. An Italian verse-form in TERCETS, the second line rhyming with the first and third of the succeeding triplet. In the first triplet lines 1 and 3 rhyme, and in the last there is an extra line, rhyming with its second. Dante's DIVINE COMEDY is in this meter. It was introduced into England by Sir Thomas WYATT in the 16th century, and was largely employed by SHELLEY, as also by BYRON in The Prophecy of Dante.

Tesla, Nikola (1856–1943). American inventor in the field of electricity. Robert Underwood Johnson, the American poet and editor, Tesla's best friend, wrote a poem, In Tesla's Laboratory, that contains the line:

Thoughts to unlock the fettering chains of things.

Tess of the D'Urbervilles. A novel by Thomas HARDY (1891). Tess Durbeyfield, urged by her dissipated father Jack and the necessities of a poverty-stricken household, takes service with the wealthy Mrs. D'Urberville, a supposed connection. Here Alec, the son of the house, makes love to Tess and takes advantage of her against her will. After the death of her child, Tess hires herself out on a farm where she meets and falls in love with Angel Clare, a rector's son who wishes to be a farmer. The couple, after their marriage, relate the story of their past lives, and Angel, although he expects forgiveness for his own past, is horrified at his wife's story and goes abroad, refusing to live with her. After a time Alec D'Urberville, who has become converted, persuades Tess to return to him in the belief that Angel will not come back and that she will be able to help her needy family. When Angel does return, but learning the situation, leaves again, she turns upon Alec and stabs him. She and Angel try to escape justice, but she is arrested and sentenced to death.

Tetrazzini, Luisa (1874–1940). Coloratura soprano born in Italy, who appeared in London (1907) and New York (1908) and toured the U.S. (1910–1913).

Teucer. In the ILIAD, the son of Telamon, and step-brother of Telamon Ajax. He went with the allied Greeks to the siege of Troy, and on his return was banished by his father for not avenging on ULYSSES the death of his brother. He was the best archer among the Greeks.

Teufelsdröckh, Herr Diogenes. The imaginary author of Carlyle's SARTOR RESARTUS, an eccentric German professor and philosopher.

Tezcatlipoca. The chief god of Aztec myth, the life-giver. His name, meaning "Fiery Mirror," comes from his great mirror-shield which reflects all the deeds of mankind.

Thackeray, William Makepeace (1811-1863). English novelist and journalist, known for his satirical and moralistic studies of upper- and middle-class English life, especially in the Victorian age. His works include The Yellowplush Correspondence (see YELLOWPLUSH, Mr. C. J.; 1837); The Tremendous Adventures of Major Gahagan (1838-1839); CATHERINE (1839-1840); A SHABBY GENTEEL STORY (1840); The Paris Sketch-Book (1841); The Great Hoggarty Diamond (1841); THE FITZ-BOODLE PAPERS (1842-1843); Men's Wives (1843); Jeames's Diary (1845); Mr. Punch's Prize Novelists (1847); The Snobs of England (1847), later THE BOOK OF SNOBS; VANITY FAIR (1847-1848), his best-known work; PENDENNIS (1848-1850); REBECCA AND ROWENA (1850); HENRY ESMOND (1852); THE NEWCOMES (1853-1855); The English Humorists of the 18th Century (1851) and The Four Georges (1855-1856), lectures delivered on a tour of America; Christmas Books (1857), containing Mrs. Perkins' Ball and THE ROSE AND THE RING, among other tales; THE VIRGINIANS (1857-1859), a sequel to HENRY ESMOND; Lovel the Widower (1860); The Adventures of Philip (see PHILIP; 1862); and Denis Duval (1864), left unfinished at the author's death. Thackeray also wrote a number of ballads, satirical and otherwise. See also TITMARSH, MICHAEL ANGELO.

Thackeray was born in India and early in his career studied law and then drawing. He worked on newspapers in Paris and London, and virtually all of his works were published serially in Fraser's Magazine or in Punch; in 1859 he became editor of The Cornhill Magazine. The insanity of his wife, Isabella Shawe, in 1840 is considered to have influenced the character of his work in some part.

Thaddeus. The hero of Balfe's opera THE BOHEMIAN GIRL.

Thaddeus of Warsaw. The hero and title of a novel by Jane PORTER (1803), dealing with the period of the partition of Poland.

Thais. A novel by Anatole FRANCE (1890). The action takes place in the Egypt of the early Christian era. Thais is a beautiful courtesan of Alexandria whom the ardent young monk Paphnutius longs to convert. Stirred by his strange appeal, she follows him through the desert and enters a nunnery, but Paphnutius, now torn by earthly love, is wretched without her. He goes at last to her deathbed and finds her lost in spiritual visions, which he cannot share. In MASSENET's opera Thais (1894) based on this romance, the monk is called Athanael.

Thais is also the name of the Athenian courtesan who, it is said, induced Alexander the Great, when excited with wine, to set fire to the palace of the Persian kings at Persepolis.

The king seized a flambeau with zeal to destroy;
Thais led the way to light him to his prey,
And, like another Helen, fired another Troy Dryden, Alexander's Feast.

Thaïsa. The wife of Pericles in the drama PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE, attributed in part to Shakespeare.

Thakura, Ravindranatha, see TAGORE, Sir RABINDRANATH.

Thalaba. A famous character of Eastern myth, the hero of SOUTHEY's long narrative poem Thalaba the Destroyer (1801). Thalaba, the orphaned son of Hodeirah and Zeinab (Zenobia), is the unceasing enemy of the evil spirits of DOMDANIEL, who have slain his eight brothers and sisters because it is decreed by fate that one of the race will be their destruction. Three great magicians, Abdaldar, Lobaba, and Mohareb, in turn, work their evil designs upon him, each in peculiarly insidious fashion, but he thwarts them all and escapes, bearing with him the magic ring of Abdaldar, which gives him power over all spirits. His next adventure is in the "paradise of pleasure" where he successfully resists temptation, rescues the lovely Bedouin maid Oneiza from the clutches of Aloadin, and marries her, only to see her die on the bridal night. Distracted at this calamity, he falls into the clutches of Maimuna, an old woman who lures him to wind her fine spinning thread round his wrists and so put himself in her power. When he is at last set free, he is threatened anew, this time by the sorcerer Okba, but is saved by Okba's daughter Laila, who dies in his defense. Her spirit becomes his protecting angel in the guise of a green bird, and he achieves at last the destruction of Domdaniel and is received into Heaven.

Thales (ca. 624-546 B.C.). Early Greek philosopher of the school of MILESIANS, regarded by some as the founder of Greek philosophy. He was also a political leader, a civil engineer, a mathematician (as such introducing to the Greeks certain propositions in geometry learned from the Egyptians), and an astronomer, accurately predicting an eclipse of the sun that occurred in 585 B.C. His important philosophic theory was that water is the primary substance in the universe, entering into all change and transformation.

Thalestris. A queen of the AMAZONS, who went with 300 women to meet Alexander the Great, under the hope of raising a race of Alexanders; hence, any bold heroic woman.

Thalia. (1) One of the MUSES, generally regarded as the patroness of comedy. She was supposed by some, also, to preside over husbandry and planting, and is represented holding a comic mask and a shepherd's crook.

(2) One of the GRACES.

Thälmann, Ernst (1886-1944). German Communist leader of the Red Front group. He was arrested and imprisoned by the Nazis in 1933.

Thames.

he'll never set the Thames on fire. He'll never make any figure in the world; never plant his footsteps on the sands of time. The popular explanation is that the word Thames is a pun on the word temse, a corn-sieve, and that the parallel French locution He will never set the Seine on fire is a pun on seine, a dragnet. These solutions, however, are very questionable owing to the existence of similar, but older phrases, such as To set the Rhine on fire.

Tammuz or Tammuz. The Syrian and Phoenician name of ADONIS. His death occurs on the banks of the river Adonis, and in summer-time the waters always become reddened with the hunter's blood. In Ezek. viii. 14, reference is made to the heathen "women weeping for Tammuz."

Thammuz came next behind,
Whose annual wound on Lebanon allured
The Syrian damsels to lament his fate
In amorous ditties all a summer's day,
While smooth Adonis from his native rock
Ran purple to the sea, supposed with blood
Of Thammuz yearly wounded

Milton, Paradise Lost, iii 446.

Thamyris. A Thracian bard mentioned by HOMER (Iliad, ii. 595). He challenged the Muses to a trial of skill, and, being overcome in the contest, was deprived of them of his sight and power of song. He is represented with a broken lyre in his hand.

Blind Thamyris and blind Mæonides [Homer]
And Tiresias and Phineus, prophets old

Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 35.

Thanatopsis. The best known poem of William Cullen BRYANT, written in 1817 when he was only eighteen. Its theme is death.

Thanatos. In Greek mythology, Death represented as a person. Sleep (Hypnos) was his twin brother.

Thane, Elswyth. American novelist, author of the historical novels, The Tudor Wench (1933) and Young Mr. Disraeli (1935), which were both made into plays. In 1927 she married the well-known naturalist, William Beebe.

Thanet, Octave. Pseudonym of Alice French (1850-1934). American novelist and short-story writer of the LOCAL-COLOR school, known for her treatment of labor and social problems in her fiction, the scene of much of which is laid in the industrial Middle West. Her books include Knitters in the Sun (1887); Expiation (1890); Otto the Knight (1891); Stories of a Western Town (1892); The Missionary Sheriff (1897); The Heart of Toil

(1898); A Slave to Duty, And Other Women (1898); The Captured Dream (1899); The Man of the Hour (1905); The Lion's Share (1907); By Inheritance (1910); Stories That End Well (1911); A Step on the Stair (1913); And the Captain Answered (1917).

Thanksgiving Day. An American holiday, first observed by the PILGRIM FATHERS in gratitude for the harvest after the severe trials of their first year in America. Tradition requires that roast turkey be served at Thanksgiving dinner. It is appointed or recommended annually by the Federal and State executives, normally as the last Thursday in November.

Thatcher, Becky. The little girl in The Adventures of Tom Sawyer by Mark Twain, who is lost with Tom in the cave.

Thaukt. The old hag who alone refused to weep for Baldr and thus prevented his return from Hel which could be accomplished only by the unanimous demand of all beings and things. She was suspected of being Loki in disguise.

Thaumast. In Rabelais' GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL, an English pundit who goes to Paris, attracted by the rumor of the great wisdom of Pantagruel. He arranges a disputation with that prince to be carried on solely in pantomime, without the utterance of a single word. PANURGE undertakes the disputation for the prince, and Pantagruel is appointed arbiter. Many a knotty point in magic, alchemy, the Cabbala, geomancy, astrology, and philosophy are argued out by signs alone, and the Englishman freely confesses himself fully satisfied, for "Panurge had told him even more than he had asked."

Thaumaturgus (Gr., a conjurer or wonder-worker). A miracle-worker; applied to saints and others who are reputed to have performed miracles, especially:

Apollonius of Tyana, Cappadocia (3-98 A. D.).

St. Bernard of Clairvaux, "the Thaumaturgus of the West" (1091-1153).

St. Filumena.

St. Francis of Assisi, founder of the Franciscan order (1182-1226).

Gregory (d. ca. 270), Bishop of Neo-Caesarea, in Cappadocia, called emphatically "Thaumaturgus," from the numerous miracles he is reported to have performed.

Plotinus (d. ca. 270), and several other neo-Platonists.

Thayer, William Roscoe (1859-1923). American author, chiefly known for his books on Italian history. He also wrote a life of John Hay (1915) and Theodore Roosevelt: An Intimate Biography (1919).

Theagenes and Charicleia, The Loves of. A love story, in Greek, by Heliodorus, a pagan Sophist (fl. 2nd half of 3rd century), from his Aethiopia, in ten books, largely borrowed from by subsequent novelists, and especially by Mlle de Scudéry, Tasso, Guarini, and D'Urfé.

Theale, Milly. In Henry James' WINGS OF THE DOVE, the American heiress whom Merton Densher marries because he knows she cannot live long.

Theater Guild, The. An organization developed as a little theater group from the Washington Square Players (1918). It finally built its own theater (1925) which cost a million dollars. It has specialized in giving the plays of George Bernard Shaw and Eugene O'Neill as well as reviving old plays and giving plays by newer American authors.

Theatre Arts Magazine. A quarterly (founded 1916) superseded (1924) by Theatre Arts Monthly. Under new management (1947-). Now edited by Charles MacArthur.

Theban Bard, Eagle or Lyre. See under BARD.

Thebes, called The Hundred-Gated, was not Thebes of Boeotia, but the chief town of the Thebaid, on the Nile in Upper Egypt, said to have extended over twenty-three miles of land. HOMER says out of each gate the Thebans could send forth 200 war-chariots.

The world's great empress on the Egyptian plain,
That spreads her conquests o'er a thousand states,
And pours her heroes through a hundred gates,
Two hundred horsemen and two hundred cars
From each wide portal issuing to the wars.

Pope, Iliad, i.

It is here that the vocal statue of MEMNON stood, and here too are the tombs of the kings, the temple of Karnak, and large numbers of sculptures, sphinxes, etc. The village of Luxor now marks the spot.

the Seven against Thebes. An expedition in Greek legend fabled to have taken place against Thebes, Boeotia, before the Trojan War. The Seven were the Argive chiefs Adrastus, Polynices, Tydeus, Amphiaraus, Hippomedon, Capaneus, and Parthenopaeus.

When OEDIPUS abdicated, his two sons agreed to reign alternate years, but at the expiration of the first year, the elder, Eteocles, refused to give up the throne, whereupon Polynices, the younger brother, induced the six chiefs to espouse his cause. The allied army laid siege to Thebes, but without success, and all the heroes perished except Adrastus. Subsequently, seven sons of the chiefs resolved to avenge their fathers' deaths, marched against the city, took it, and placed Terpander, one of their number, on the throne. These are known as the Epigoni (Gr., "descendants"). The Greek tragic poets AESCHYLUS and EURIPIDES dramatized the legend.

Theebaw's Queen. In Kipling's Mandalay, the Queen of Burma, wife of Theebaw, the last king of Burma (1878-1885).

Thecla, St. See under SAINTS.

Their Wedding Journey. A novel by W. D. HOWELLS (1871), dealing with the adventures of Basil and Isabel MARCH on their honeymoon trip to Niagara, the St. Lawrence, Montreal and Quebec. The plot interest is secondary to description. A later edition contains the additional Niagara Revisited Twelve Years After, and the sequel Their Silver Wedding Journey (1899) takes the couple on a prolonged trip through Europe.

Thekla. Daughter of Wallenstein in Schiller's historic drama WALLENSTEIN.

Thélèma, Abbey of. In Rabelais' GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL, the abbey given by Grangousier to Friar John for the aid he rendered in the battle against Picrochole, King of Lerne. The abbey is stored with everything that contributes to sensual indulgence and enjoyment. It is the very reverse of a convent or monastery. No religious hypocrites, no pettifoggish attorneys, no usurers are admitted within it; it is filled with gallant ladies and gentlemen, faithful expounders of the Scriptures, everyone able to contribute to its recreations and general festivity. Their only law: "Fay ce que Vouldras" ("Do what you wish").

Walter BESANT and James Rice wrote a novel called The Monks of Thelema (Eng., 1878), in which the hero, Alan Dunlop, tries to establish a 19th century Abbey of Thelema in England.

Themis. In Greek mythology, the goddess of justice and law.

Themistocles (527?-?460 B. C.). Greek general who commanded the fleet of Athens at Salamis (480 B. C.) when it defeated the Persians. Accused of treason and exiled, he spent the last years of his life in Persia where he received a royal pension.

Theodore, St. See under SAINTS.

Theodore and Honoria. A poem by DRYDEN retold from Boccaccio's DECAMERON (Day v. 8). "The more he loved, the more she disdained," until finally one day she sees in a vision the ghost of Guido CAVALCANTI hunting with two mastiffs a damsel who has scorned his love and is doomed to be torn to pieces by the dogs and restored to life again every Friday.

Theodoric. A king of the East Goths known as Theodoric the Great (d. 526), who became celebrated in German legend as Dietrich of Bern and also has a place in the Norse romances and the NIBELUNGENLIED. He invaded Italy about 490, and three years later slew Odoacer and became sole ruler.

Theodorus, Master. In Rabelais' GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL, a learned physician, employed by Ponocrates to cure Gargantua of his vicious habits. The doctor accordingly "purged him canonically with Anticyrian helibore, cleansed from his brain all perverse habits, and made him forget everything he had learned of his other preceptors."

Theognis. Greek gnomic poet of the sixth century B. C.

Theon. A satirical poet of ancient Rome, noted for his mordant writings. Hence, Theon's tooth, the bite of an ill-natured or carping critic. Dente Theonino circumrodi (Horace: Ep. i, 18, 82), to be nastily aspersed.

Theophilus, St. See under SAINTS.

Theophrastus (390-287 B. C.). Greek philosopher and scientist. Disciple of Aristotle and his successor as head of the Peripatetic school. Among his works are a History of Plants and a Theoretical Botany. His real name was Tyrtamus. "Theophrastus" means "divine speaker" and was applied by Aristotle. Known for his studies of personality types.

Theophrastus Such, Impressions of. A volume of character sketches and satires by George ELIOT (1879) written in the character of a whimsical, elderly bachelor.

Theory of the Leisure Class, The. A provocative and influential book (1899) by Thorstein VEBLEN.

Theosophy (Gr., "the wisdom of God"). The name adopted by the Theosophical Society (founded in 1875 by Mme BLAVATSKY, Mrs. BESANT, Col. Olcott, and others) to define their religious or philosophical system, which aims at the knowledge of God by means of intuition and contemplative illumination, or by direct communion. Esoteric Buddhism is another name for it; its adherents claim that the doctrines of the great world religions are merely the exoteric expression of their own esoteric traditions.

The name was formerly applied to the philosophical system of BOEHME.

The Theosophist is a man who, whatever be his race, creed, or condition, aspires to reach this height of wisdom and beatitude by self-development.—Olcott, Theosophy, p. 144 (1885).

Theotocopuli, Domenico, see GRECO, EL.

Theresa, St. See under SAINTS; also EVELYN INNES

There's a Long, Long Trail. A song, extremely popular with the American troops in World War I, which was written as a Yale college song (1913) by Stoddard King and Zo Elliott.

Thérèse de Lisieux (1873-1897). French Carmelite nun, known as "the Little Flower of Jesus," who was canonized (1925) as Saint Thérèse, the Little Flower.

Thermidor (from Gr. thermê, "heat," and doron, "gift"). The eleventh month of the French Republican calendar, containing thirty days beginning July 19.

Thermidorians. The milder French Revolutionists, who took part in the coup d'état which effected the fall of Robespierre, on Thermidor 9 of the second Republican year (July 27, 1794), thus bringing the REIGN OF TERROR to a close.

Thermopylae. When Xerxes invaded Greece (480 B. C.), Leonidas was sent with three hundred Spartans, as a forlorn hope, to defend the pass leading from Thessaly into Locris. They resisted for three successive days the repeated attacks of the most brave and courageous of Xerxes' army. The Persians, however, discovered a path over the mountains and fell on Leonidas in the rear, and the defenders were cut to pieces.

Thersites. In Greek legend, a deformed, scurrilous officer in the Greek army at the siege of Troy. He was always railing at the chiefs; hence, the name is applied to any dastardly, malevolent, impudent railer against the powers that be. ACHILLES felled him to the earth with his fist and killed him.

He squinted, halted, gibbous was behind,
And pinched before, and on his tapering head Grew patches only of the flimsiest down.

. . . Him Greece had sent to Troy.

The miscreant, who shamed his country most.

Homer's Iliad (Cowper), Bk. ii.

In Shakespeare's TROILUS AND CRESSIDA he is "a slave whose gall coins slanders like a mint."

Thesaurus. See ROGET, PETER MARK.

Theseus. The chief hero of Attica in ancient Greek legend; son of AEGEUS, and the center of innumerable exploits. He was brought up by his mother Aethra, but when he became strong enough to lift the stone under which his father's sword was hidden, he was sent to the court of Athens, where, in spite of the efforts of his father's wife MEDEA, he was recognized as heir to the throne. Among his deeds were the slaying of PROCRUSTES, the capture of the Marathonian bull, the slaying of the MINOTAUR with the aid of ARIADNE whom he subsequently deserted in Naxos, his war against the Amazons, his part in the Argonautic expedition, and the Calydonian hunt.

There are numerous versions of his war against the Amazons. He married the Amazonian queen who opposed him, known as either Antiope or Hippolyta (according to some accounts there were two sisters of these names) and took her home with him. After the death of this queen, he married PHAEDRA whose ill-fated infatuation with her stepson Hippolytus has formed the subject of many tragedies in which Theseus plays a part. In his old age he became unpopular with his people and was foully murdered by Lycomedes in Scyros where he had taken refuge.

According to medieval legend, Theseus' title was Duke of Athens and his Duchess was Hippolyta. Under this title he plays a part in Chaucer's Knight's Tale and Shakespeare's MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM. In the Knight's Tale, he marries Hippolyta, and as he returns home with his bride and Emily, her sister, he is accosted by a crowd of female suppliants who complain of Creon, King of Thebes. The Duke forthwith sets out for Thebes, slays Creon, and takes the city by assault. Many captives fall into his hands, among them the two knights PALAMON and ARCITE.

Thespian.

Thespian Maids. The nine MUSES. They are so called from Thespia in Boeotia, near Mount Helicon, often called Thespia Rupes.

Thespians. Actors; so called from Thespis, an Attic poet of the 6th century B. C., reputed to be the father of Greek tragedy.

Thespio. A Muse.

Thespis. See THESPIAN.

Thestyli. A stock poetic name for a rustic maiden; from a young female slave of that name in the Idyls of THEOCRITUS.

Thetis. The chief of the NEREIDS of Greek legend. By PELEUS she was the mother of ACHILLES.

Thetis' hair-stone. A fancy-name given to pieces of rock-crystal enclosing hair-like filaments.

Thibaults, Les. A long novel by Roger Martin DU GARD (1922-1936), published in ten volumes. It presents the history of a French family named Thibault up to the beginning of World War I. It is marked by meticulous documentation in the manner of NATURALISM and gives a full picture of the social and historical background of the period portrayed. The World of the Thibaults (1941) completes the story. See also ROMAN-FLEUVE.

Thibault, Jacques Anatole François, see ANATOLE FRANCE.

Thief, the Penitent. For the name usually given to the penitent thief on the Cross and his unrepentant fellow, see DISMAS.

Thiers, Louis Adolphe (1797-1877). French statesman and historical writer. He was a leader of the Liberals (1863-1870) against Napoleon III. He negotiated the peace treaty with Germany (1871), disposed of the Paris Commune, and was elected first president (1871-1873) of the Third Republic.

Thiess, Frank (1890-). German novelist and dramatist some of whose work has been translated into English. His Farewell to Paradise (1929) has been the most successful.

thing-in-itself, see DING AN SICH.

third estate. The third of the social classes, or "estates," according to political theory of medieval and feudal times. It comprised peasants, serfs, yeomen, and the early BOURGEOISIE, the nobles and clergy constituting the first two estates. In France the third estate was known as tiers état and was not emancipated until the Revolution of 1789. See ESTATES OF THE REALM.

third floor back, the. A room in a lodging or boarding house. Jerome K. JEROME has a play called The Passing of the Third Floor Back (1910), "an idle fancy" presenting the effect of Christ's coming into such a room as a stranger.

Third Reich. The official name of Germany during the dictatorship of Adolf HITLER. It implies that the medieval empire which broke up in 1806 was the first and the empire of Bismarck (1870-1918) the second Reich. The term has absorbed a good deal of medieval mysticism in which a "third realm" was understood to be the millennium.

Thirkell, Mrs. Angela (1890-). English novelist, daughter of the noted Latin scholar J. W. MACKAIL and niece of the painter Edward BURN-JONES. Rudyard KIPLING was a cousin of hers. A light touch and gentle irony are her chief characteristics.

thirteen. It is said that the origin of the superstition that sitting down thirteen at dinner is unlucky is that, at a banquet in Valhalla, Loki once intruded, making thirteen guests, and Balder was slain. In Christian countries the superstition was confirmed by the Last Supper of Christ and His twelve apostles, but it antedates Christianity.

The Italians never use the number in their lotteries; in Paris no house bears it, and persons, called quatorzièmes, are available to make a fourteenth at dinner parties. Sailors strongly object to leaving port on the 13th of any month, especially if it happens to be a Friday, and they always start on their thirteenth voyage with apprehension.

Thomas, Dylan (1914-). English poet, born in Wales, known for the distinctive character of his verse and prose, in which typical qualities of SURREALISM are combined with elements of traditional Celtic fantasy in conjuring up strange and haunting experiences. It has been pointed out that Thomas' work lacks the more obvious and sensational incongruities of French surrealism, concentrating on lyric mood. His books include Twenty-Five Poems (1936); The Map of Love (1939), verse and prose; The World I Breathe (1939), prose and poetry; Portrait of the Artist as a Young Dog (1940), autobiographical sketches.

Thomas, Edith Matilda (1854-1925). American poet, well known at the turn of the century. Her last book was The Flower from the Ashes (1915).

Thomas, Edward (1878-1917). English poet who did hack work for the Manchester Guardian. He met Robert Frost in England and was much influenced by him. He is the subject of two books by his widow Helen Thomas which are very moving accounts of their relationship. He was killed at Arras in World War I.

Thomas, Lowell (1892-). Well-known American radio commentator and author of a number of books of travel and contemporary comment.

Thomas, Norman (1884-). Head of the Socialist Party in the U.S. Socialist candidate for president (1928, 1932, 1936, 1940, 1944, 1948). Author of several books on contemporary affairs.

Thomas, St. (called Doubting Thomas). See under SAINTS.

Thomas, Theodore (1835-1905). German-born American orchestra conductor. He organized an orchestra which bore his name and gave symphony concerts famous in their day. At one time he was leader of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra.

Thomashefsky, Boris (1864-1939). Yiddish actor and producer, born in Russia, who started the Yiddish theater in the United States. He established the National Theater in New York and translated the plays of Shakespeare into Yiddish.

Thomas the Rhymor or Thomas of Ercildoune. A poet of the 13th century who has been made the subject of popular legend. Sir Walter Scott calls him "the Merlin of Scotland" and makes use of old predictions attributed to him in both Castle Dangerous and THE BRIDE OF LAMMERMOOR. He was said to have spent three years in Fairyland with the Fairy Queen, whom he met under the Eildon Tree, after which he became prophet and magician as well as poet. Legend has it that he did not die, but went to Fairyland and will some day return. The so-called Prophecies of Thomas the Rhymor were published by the Early English Text Society in 1875.

Thomism. See under AQUINAS, St. THOMAS.

Thompson, Benjamin. Count Rumford (1753-1814). American-born adventurer, created count of the Holy Roman Empire by the elector of Bavaria. He was made Bavarian minister to Great Britain, and helped organize the Royal Academy. He lived chiefly in Paris. His biography, Count Rumford of Massachusetts (1935), has been written by his descendant James Alden Thompson.

Thompson, Denman (1833-1911). American actor who wrote the famous play, The Old Homestead, which was first presented in Boston (1886).

Thompson, Dorothy (1894-). American journalist, at one time the wife of Sinclair Lewis, known for her syndicated newspaper column On the Record, dealing with politics and foreign affairs and expressing semi-liberal views. During the 1920's she was a foreign correspondent in Europe. The New Russia (1928); I Saw Hitler (1932); Dorothy Thompson's Political Guide (1938); and Let the Record Speak (1939).

Thompson, Edward John (1886-). English poet and novelist, author of some thirty books on East Indian and British subjects, often on the unpopular side. Storm Jameson has praised his writing.

Thompson, Francis (1859-1907). English Roman Catholic poet, known for his mystical religious poetry frequently presenting ecstatic visions of Heaven. In color and imagery his work shows the influence of KEATS and SHELLEY, and in spirit and tone it is akin to the poetry of the METAPHYSICAL POETS. Thompson's books include Poems (1893); Sister Songs (1895); New Poems (1897), considered to have been written under the influence of Coventry PATMORE; and Health and Holiness (1905), a prose treatise. His most famous poem is THE HOUND OF HEAVEN.

Thompson studied medicine at one time in his early youth, but never received a degree. He was extremely impractical and was unable to make a living for himself. When he was lonely, ill, and in poverty in London he was taken into the home of Wilfrid and Alice MEXNELL, who befriended him and encouraged him in his writing. He was always in poor health and died of tuberculosis.

Thompson, Maurice (1844-1901). American poet and novelist, best known for the popular romance Alice of Old Vincennes (1900).

Thompson, Will Henry (1848-1918). American Confederate soldier and writer, best known for his long poem about the Civil War, High Tide at Gettysburg (1888).

Thomson, Hugh (1860-1920). English illustrator, well known for his pictures for The Vicar of Wakefield; Cranford; Vanity Fair; etc.

Thomson, James (1700-1748). English poet, known as a forerunner of ROMANTICISM in a period when NEO-CLASSICISM held sway in literature. His best-known works are THE SEASONS, consisting of Winter (1726), Summer (1727), Spring (1728), and Autumn (1730), and THE CASTLE OF INDOLENCE (1748), an imitation of the style of Edmund SPENSER. These poems are marked by love of nature, humanitarianism, fantasy, and sensuous imagery, all romantic qualities unique at the time of composition. Thomson is considered to be one of the founders of the tradition of nature poetry in English literature, and to have helped (in The Seasons) to reintroduce blank verse as a medium of poetic expression and to establish the tradition of MILTON as an important influence in English poetry. Thomson also wrote Sophonisba, a tragedy; Liberty (1734), a long poem, which he considered his best work; and the famous Rule, Britannia.

Thomson, James (1834-1882). English poet, known for his savage melancholy, political radicalism, and atheism, best expressed in his most famous poem, THE CITY OF DREADFUL NIGHT (1880). He also wrote Vane's Story, Weddah, and Om-el-Bonain, and Other Poems (1881); Insomnia (1882); and critical prose studies of Ben Jonson, William Blake, and other English writers. The well-known short poem Give a Man a Horse He Can Ride (1865), later set to music, was of his authorship. He was a great admirer of both P. B. SHELLEY and NOVALIS, whose names he combined into Bysshe Vanolis, a pseudonym he frequently used, signing his work with the initials B.V.

Thomson had an extremely unhappy life, his father being paralyzed when the poet was a young child and his mother being the victim of a melancholy religious mania. For a time he was an army instructor in Ireland; then he became a radical journalist and held a number of other jobs of a miscellaneous nature. His death came as the result of excessive dissipation. See also BRADLAUGH, CHARLES; WELLER, MATILDA.

Thomson, Sir John Arthur (1861-1933). Scottish biologist who has written popular books on science, notably The Outline of Science (1922). William Beebe thinks that he is "the most capable compiler of scientific literature in the world."

Thomson, Virgil (1896-). American composer and critic. An intimate friend of Gertrude STEIN, he wrote the music for her opera Four Saints in Three Acts (1934). Music critic of the New York Herald Tribune. The State of Music (1939). The Musical Scene (1945); The Art of Judging Music (1948).

Thomson, William. 1st Baron Kelvin (1824-1907). British mathematician and physicist who made lasting contributions to thermodynamics and electricity. In 1866 he was instrumental in the laying of a trans-Atlantic cable.

Thopas, Rime of Sir. A burlesque on contemporary metrical romances, told as Chaucer's own tale in the CANTERBURY TALES. Sir Thopas is a native of Poperyng in Flanders, a capital sportsman, archer, wrestler and runner. The beginning of his adventures is told in minute, interminable detail. He resolves to marry no one but an elf queen, and sets out for Fairyland. On his way he meets the three-headed giant Olifaunt, who challenges him to single combat. The knight gets permission to go back for his armor, and promises to meet the giant next day. Here mine host interrupts the narrative as intolerable nonsense, and the "rime" is left unfinished.

Thor. In Norse mythology, after Odin, the second principal god. He is the son of Odin and Earth, the god of thunder, and owns as his most precious possessions a hammer, a belt of strength, and a pair of iron gloves. The giant who built the residence for the gods was paid by Thor with his mallet. When this hammer had fallen into the possession of the giant Thrym, Thor recovered it by dressing himself in Freya's clothes, pretending to be the fair goddess whom the giant wanted to be his bride in exchange for the hammer. During a visit to Jotunheim Thor almost lifted the Midgard serpent off the earth; he almost conquered Elli, old age; and almost emptied a drinking horn which was connected with the ocean. At Ragnarok Thor will kill the Midgard serpent but die from its venom.

Thoreau, Henry David (1817-1862). American poet, prose-writer, and naturalist, a member of the school of TRANSCENDENTALISM, chiefly influenced by the philosophic ideas of R. W. EMERSON. Thoreau is known for his extreme individualism, his love of nature, his primitivistic preference for simple, even austere living (see PRIMITIVISM), his tendencies toward mysticism, and his revolt against the demands of society and government. His works include A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers (1849); WALDEN (1854), his most famous book; Excursions (1863); The Maine Woods (1864); Cape Cod (1865); A Yankee in Canada (1866); Early Spring in Massachusetts (1881), Summer (1884), Winter (1888), and Autumn (1892), selections from his massive Journal, which was published in its entirety, fourteen volumes, in 1906; Letters (1894); Poems of Nature (1895). Civil Disobedience (1849) and Life Without Principle (1863), are his best-known single essays, summarizing his ideas on the individual and society.

Thoreau was extremely eccentric, independent, and individualistic in his behavior. He spent several years in a little hut in the countryside near the village of Concord, Massachusetts, writing and observing nature; on one occasion he spent a day in jail for refusing to pay his poll-tax, because he disapproved of the war with Mexico then in process, regarding it merely as an expedition to seize land. In his later years he traveled in New England and Canada, lectured, especially in connection with the abolitionist movement, wrote in his journal, and worked on a study of the Indians which was never completed. He died of tuberculosis.

Thorfinn Karlsefni (fl. 1002-1007). Icelandic explorer who searched for Vineland, which was later discovered by Leif Ericsson.

thorn.

a thorn in the flesh. A source of constant irritation, annoyance, or affliction; said of objectionable and parasitical acquaintances, obnoxious conditions, of a "skeleton in the cupboard," etc. The expression was first used by St. Paul in one of his Epistles. There was a sect of the PHARISEES which used to insert thorns in the borders of their gaberdines to prick their legs in walking and make them bleed.

the Crown of Thorns. That with which Jesus was crowned in mockery (Matt. xxvii. 29); hence, sometimes used of a very special affliction with which one is unjustly burdened.

Thornbury, George Walter (1828-1876). English writer; in his time a well-known contributor to the magazines edited by Charles Dickens. Cf. also his history of London, Old and New London (1872, 1876).

Thorndike, Ashley Horace (1871-1933). American educator; authority on the Elizabethan drama and Shakespeare. His brother, Edward Lee Thorndike (1874-1949), is a well-known psychologist; another brother, Lynn Thorndike (1882-), is a historian, especially known for his books on medical history.

Thorndike, Dame Sybil (1882-). English actress and theatrical manager. She toured Egypt, Palestine, Australia, and New Zealand in the 1930's. Dame of the British Empire (1931). Her brother, Russell Thorndike, is an actor and writer.

Thorndyke, Dr. A scientific detective, in stories by R. Austin FREEMAN.

Thorne, Dr. In Trollope's Chronicles of Barsetshire (see BARSETSHIRE), notably in Dr. Thorne, a kindly physician of the village of Greshambury. The heroine of the novel is his niece, Mary Thorne, a lovable girl, typically English in her charms and virtues, who finally marries Frank GRESHAM.

Thornhill, Sir William. The whimsical landlord of the VICAR OF WAKEFIELD in Goldsmith's novel of that name. After traveling through Europe on foot, he returns disguised as MR. BURCHELL. Twice he rescues Sophia PRIMROSE: once when she is thrown from her horse into a deep stream, and once when she is abducted by his nephew, Squire Thornhill. Ultimately he marries her.

Squire Thornhill. Nephew of Sir William Thornhill. He enjoys a large fortune, but is entirely dependent on his uncle. He is a sad libertine, who abducts both the daughters of Dr. Primrose and casts the old Vicar into jail for not paying the rent after the entire loss of his house, money, furniture, and books by fire. He tries to impose upon Olivia Primrose by a false marriage but is caught in his own trap, for the marriage proves to be entirely legal.

Thornton, John. The dog Buck's master in Jack London's novel, THE CALL OF THE WILD.

Thorold, Earl of Tresham. The chief character in Browning's BLOT ON THE 'SCUTCHEON.

Thorpe, John. A young blusterer in Jane Austen's NORTHANGER ABBEY.

Thorpe, Lossie. The heroine of De Morgan's JOSEPH VANCE.

Thorpe, Rose Hartwick (1850-1939). American writer. In 1867 she contributed to a Detroit newspaper the well-known ballad Curfew Must not Ring Tonight.

Thorpe, Thomas Bangs (1815-1878). Early American artist and pioneer in the American "tall tale," notably in The Big Bear of Arkansas (1841). He was a friend of Zachary Taylor and wrote The Taylor Anecdote Book (1848). His The Bee-Hunter (1854) was translated and read abroad.

Thorvaldsen, Bertel (1768-1844). Danish sculptor famous for his statue of the Lion of Lucerne.

Thoth. A prominent god of Egyptian mythology, identified by the Greeks and Romans with HERMES or MERCURY. He is represented with the head of an ibis on a human body. He is the inventor of the arts and sciences, music and astronomy, speech and letters. Sometimes he is shown holding in his hand the heart and tongue of RA, the sun-god, to imply that he controls the intelligence of that great deity.

Thoughtless, Miss Betty. The heroine of a novel of that name by Mrs. Heywood (1697-1758), a virtuous, sensible, and amiable young lady, utterly regardless of the conventionalities of society, and wholly ignorant of etiquette. She is consequently forever involved in petty scrapes most mortifying to her sensitive mind. Even her lover is alarmed at her gaucherie, and deliberates whether such a partner for life is desirable. Mrs. Heywood's novel is said to have suggested the more important Evelina of Fanny BURNEY.

Thousand and One Nights. See ARABIAN NIGHTS.

Thrale, Mrs. See PROOZZI, HESTER LYNCH.

Thrasea Paetus, Publius Clodius (?-A.D. 66). Roman Senator and Stoic philosopher. Friend of SENECA and one of the keepers of the SIBYLLINE BOOKS.

Thraso. A boastful captain in the comedy Eunuchus (The Eunuch) by TERENCE, said to have been the inspiration for similar characters in Elizabethan drama. See BOBADIL; PAROLLES; COPPER CAPTAIN, etc.

Thrasybulus. Athenian general who aided Alcibiades in his victories over the Spartans (411-410 B.C.). He was exiled from Athens; upon his return he helped institute a more democratic form of government. In 389 B.C. he commanded the fleet against the Spartans and was killed in battle.

Threadneedle Street. The street in the City of London leading from Bishopsgate to the Bank of England.

the Old Lady of Threadneedle Street. The Bank of England, which stands in this street. The term dates from the late 18th century, and there is a caricature by Gilray, dated May 22, 1797, entitled The Old Lady in Threadneedle Street in Danger, which refers to the temporary stopping of cash payments, February 26, 1797, and to the issue of one pound banknotes on March 4 the same year.

three. The philosopher PYTHAGORAS calls three the perfect number, expressive of "beginning, middle, and end," wherefore he makes it a symbol of Deity.

A Trinity is by no means confined to the Christian creed. The Hindu Trimurti consists of Brahma, the Creator, Vishnu, the Preserver, and Siva, the Destroyer. The world was supposed by the ancients to be under the rule of three gods, viz. Jupiter (heaven), Neptune (sea), and Pluto (Hades). Jove is represented with three-forked lightning, Neptune with a trident, and Pluto with a three-headed dog. The Fates are three, the Furies three, the Graces three, the Harpies three, the Sibylline books three times three (of which only three survived); the fountain from which Hylas drew water was presided over by three nymphs; the Muses were three times three; the pythoness sat on a three-legged stool, or tripod; and in Scandinavian mythology we hear of "the Mysterious Three," viz., "Har" (the Mighty), the "Like-Mighty," and the "Third Person," who sat on three thrones above the rainbow.

Man is threefold (body, soul, and spirit); the world is threefold (earth, sea, and air); the enemies of man are threefold (the world, the flesh, and the Devil); the Christian graces are threefold (Faith, Hope, and Charity); the kingdoms of nature are threefold (mineral, vegetable, and animal); the cardinal colors are three in number (red, yellow, and blue), etc. See NINE, which is three times three.

Three Black Pennys, The. A novel by Joseph HERGESHEIMER (1917), telling the story of several generations of Pennys. The Pennys are a family of Pennsylvania iron founders, for the most part sober and respectable but with a queer wild strain in the blood that manifests itself in an occasional dark-skinned, passionate "Black Penny." The last of the "Black Pennys," Howat, is a modern dilettante.

Three Lives. The first published work of Gertrude STEIN (1909), consisting of three sympathetic character studies of women in lowly circumstances. The Good Anna deals with Anna Federer, a kindly, devoted housekeeper; The Gentle Lena tells of the wretched married life of a German servant-girl; Melanchtha is concerned with an intelligent, partially white Negro girl who finds only unhappiness among the Negroes with whom she grows up. The style in which Three Lives is written is extremely simple and concrete, suggesting the author's later experiments.

Three Men in a Boat. A story by Jerome K. JEROME.

Three Men on a Horse. A comedy (1935) by John Cecil Holm and George Abbott.

Three Musketeers, The (Les Trois Mousquetaires). A famous historical romance by Alexandre DUMAS (1844), which, together with its sequels, Twenty Years After (Vingt Ans après; 1845) and The Vicomte de Bragelonne (1848) covers the period of 1625 to 1665 in French history. The central figure, D'Artagnan, was a historical personage (1623-1673); his three friends also have counterparts in history, even to their names, and much of the material for the novels is drawn from D'Artagnan's Memoirs. Few characters of fiction are so widely beloved as this gay and high-spirited young Gascon, whose arrival in Paris on a raw-boned yellow pony with but three crowns to his name is the opening chapter of a whirlwind of adventures. He is determined to become one of Louis XIII's guardsmen, and before his first day in Paris is over, he has involved himself in duels with Athos, Porthos and Aramis, three of the most renowned fighters of that renowned corps. As an upshot he is welcomed into the congenial fellowship of the "three Musketeers"; and the fortunes and misfortunes, narrow escapes and amazing exploits of these four fast friends form the subject matter of the novels. The trilogy follows the career of D'Artagnan (Charles de Baatz, Seigneur d'Artagnan) through to his death as Comte d'Artagnan, commander of the Musketeers and marshal of France. Of the four friends, Athos is always the gallant gentleman, Porthos the physical giant, good-hearted but not too clever, Aramis the schemer and politician with leanings toward the church, and D'Artagnan first and foremost the soldier, quick-witted, quick-tempered, brave and lovable.

In Twenty Years After, a romance which deals with the uprising against Cardinal Mazarin known as the Fronde, the old friends are on opposing sides. D'Artagnan and Porthos, as guardsmen, support the powers that be; Athos and Aramis (who have retired from the corps, the former to a country-seat, the latter to a monastery) join the intrigue. The Vicomte de Bragelonne, the last of the trilogy, deals with the reign of Louis XIV and includes portions frequently published as separate novels, notably Louise de la Vallière and The Man in the Iron Mask. The Vicomte de Bragelonne is a son of Athos, in love with Louise de la Vallière, who becomes the mistress of the King. In this novel Aramis is general of the Jesuits, and the main plot concerns itself with his schemings for power. He it is who discovers the existence of the mysterious individual later known as the "Man in the Iron Mask" (see under MAN) and almost succeeds in kidnapping Louis XIV and setting this twin brother and physical double on the throne in his place.

Rudyard KIPPLING has a story entitled The Three Musketeers in his Plain Tales from the Hills, opening with the sentence "MULVANEY, ORTHERIS, LEAROYD are privates in the B Company of a Line Regiment and personal friends of mine. Collectively I think, but am not certain, they are the worst men in the regiment so far as genial blackguardism goes." This trio appears in many other of Kipling's tales.

Three Sisters, The. A drama in four acts (1900) by Anton CHEKHOV concerning three sisters who spend a dull existence in the country and long to go to a big city.

Three Soldiers. A novel by John Dos Passos (1921), dealing with three representative soldiers in the American army during World War I: Dan Fuselli, an Italian-American; Chrisfield, a farmboy from Indiana; and John Andrews, a sensitive musician who longs to be a composer. Fuselli does not mind life in the army, being interested only in advancement, but Chrisfield and Andrews are extremely unhappy and resentful of its regimentation of their lives. The latter two desert, and Andrews spends some time in the French countryside composing a symphony before he is apprehended.

Three Wise Fools. A comedy (1918) by Austin STRONG.

Threshers. Members of an Irish political organization instituted in 1806 by Catholics in opposition to the ORANGEMEN. One object was to resist the payment of tithes. Their threats and warnings were signed "Captain Thresher."

Throckmorton, Cleon (1897-). American stage designer (since 1917), originally a painter. He has done designs for Eugene O'Neill plays; for Porgy; Sidney Howard's The Silver Cord; etc.

Throgmorton Street. In England the financial world at large, or the Stock Exchange, which is situated in this narrow London street. It was so named from Sir Nicholas Throckmorton (d. 1571), head of the ancient Warwickshire family and ambassador to France in the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

Through the Looking-Glass. Sequel (1872) to ALICE'S ADVENTURES IN WONDERLAND, by LEWIS CARROLL.

Through the Wheat. A war novel (1923) by Thomas BOYD.

Thrumms. The town immortalized by Sir James BARRIE under this name in his Window in Thrumms (1889) and other volumes is Kirriemuir, Forfarshire.

Thrym or Thrymr. In Scandinavian mythology, a giant who stole THOR's hammer Mjolnir and refused to return it unless he was given the goddess FREYA. Thor put on Freya's garments and presented himself as a veiled bride accompanied by LOKI as handmaid. When Thrym expressed surprise at his bride's tremendous appetite, Loki explained that she had been so impatient to see her lover that she had not touched food for eight days. The hammer was now brought and the supposed Freya seized it and killed Thrym and all his company.

Thucydides (471?-?400 B.C.). Greek historian, considered the greatest historian of ancient times. His famous History of the Peloponnesian War was written in exile (423-403 B.C.).

thug. Originally, a member of a religious body of northern India, worshipers of KALI, who could be propitiated only by human victims who had been strangled, hence, the thugs became a professional fraternity of stranglers, and supported themselves by the plunder obtained from those they strangled. Their native name is p'hansigars ("stranglers"); that of thug ("cheat") was given them in 1810. Their methods were rigorously suppressed under British rule, and were practically extinct by 1840. The word is used for any ruffian.

Thule. The name given by the ancients to an island, or point of land, six days' sail north of Britain, and considered by them to be the extreme northern limit of the world. The name is first found in the account by Polybius (ca. 150 B.C.) of the voyage made by Pytheas in the late 4th century B.C. Pliny says, "It is an island in the Northern Ocean discovered by Pytheas, after sailing six days from the Orcades." Others, like CAMDEN, consider it to be Shetland, in which opinion they agree with Marinus, and the descriptions of Ptolemy and Tacitus; still others assert that it was some part of the coast of Norway. The etymology of the name is unknown.

Ultima Thule. The end of the world; the last extremity.

Tibi serviat Ultima Thule.

to steal one's thunder. To forestall him; or to adopt his own special methods as one's own. The phrase comes from the anecdote of John Dennis (d. 1734), the critic, who invented a very effective way of producing stage thunder for use in a play of his. The play was refused a hearing, but, to the author's extreme annoyance, they "stole his thunder" for Macbeth.

the Thunderer. A name facetiously applied to The Times (London) in the mid-19th century, in allusion to an article by the editor, Edward Sterling (d. 1847), beginning:

We thundered forth the other day on the subject of social and political reform.—The Times.

Thyestean banquet. A cannibal feast. Thyestes was given his own son to eat at a banquet served up to him by his brother Atreus.

Thyestean revenge. Blood for blood; tit for tat of bloody vengeance.

Thyrsis. (1) A herdsman introduced in the Idyls of THEOCRITUS, and in VIRGIL's Eclogue, vii. Any shepherd or rustic is so called.

Hard by, a cottage chimney smokes
From betwixt two aged oaks,
Where Corydon and Thyrsis met,
Are at their savoury dinner set.

Milton, L'Allegro (1638).

(2) A monody on his friend Arthur Henry Clough by Matthew ARNOLD.

thyrsus. A long pole with an ornamental head of ivy, vine leaves, or a fir cone, carried by BACCHUS and by his votaries at the celebration of his rites. It was emblematic of revelry and drunkenness.

Tibbett, Lawrence (1896–). American baritone who made his début on the concert stage in 1917 and in opera at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York City in 1923. He has sung in many operas and also on the air and in moving pictures.

Tibbs, Beau. A famous character in Goldsmith's CITIZEN OF THE WORLD, a poor, clever, dashing young spark, who has the happy art of fancying he knows all the haut monde, and that all the monde knows him; that his garret is the choicest spot in London for its commanding view of the Thames; that his wife is a lady of distinguished airs; and that his infant daughter will marry a peer. He takes off his hat to every man and woman of fashion, and pretends that dukes, lords, duchesses, and ladies address him simply as Ned.

"I was asked to dine yesterday," he says, "at the Duchess of Piccadilly's. My Lord Mudler was there. 'Ned,' said he, 'I'll hold gold to silver I can tell you where you were poaching last night. . . . I hope, Ned, it will improve your fortune.' 'Fortune, my Lord? five hundred a year at least—great secret—let it go no further.' My Lord took me down in his chariot to his country seat yesterday, and we had a lôte-à-lôte dinner in the country." "I fancy you told us just now you dined yesterday at the Duchess's in town." "Did I so?" replied he coolly. "To be sure, egad! now I do remember—yes, I had two dinners yesterday."—Letter liv.

Tiffany, Mrs. The leading character in the comedy Fashion by Mrs. Mowatt Ritchie.

Tiffet, Mahetable. See CRÈVECOEUR, HECTOR ST. JOHN DE.

tiffin. An old Northern English dialect word for a small draught of liquor. It was introduced into India, where it acquired its modern meaning of a lunch or light meal between breakfast and dinner. The word is almost solely used by Anglo-Indians, but it is in no way an Indian word.

Tiger, the. The nickname of the French statesman Georges CLEMENCEAU (b. 1841). A tiger is also a final yell in a round of cheering.

Tiger, The. A famous poem by William BLAKE, contained in his Songs of Experience (1794), celebrating the mystery and triumph of the creation of life. The first stanza is as follows:

Tiger! Tiger! burning bright
In the forests of the night,
What immortal hand or eye
Could frame thy fearful symmetry?

Tiger Lily. An Indian princess in Barrie's PETER PAN.

Tighe, Mary (1772–1810). Irish poet. Her poem Psyche (1805) greatly attracted John Keats.

til. A Portuguese DIACRITICAL MARK, in appearance and origin identical with the Spanish TILDE, used over various vowels to indicate their nasalization.

Tilburina. In Sheridan's comedy THE CRITIC, a character in Mr. Puff's tragic drama, The Spanish Armada, which is being rehearsed. Tilburina is a gushing, romantic girl in love with Whiskerandos. She is the daughter of the governor of Tilbury Fort, "a plain matter-of-fact man" whose temperament is in sharp contrast with that of his emotional daughter.

Tilbury Town. An imaginary town created and populated by the poems of Edwin Arlington ROBINSON. It exists presumably in New England. Among the best-known characters are Richard Cory, a fine gentleman who shoots himself, to everyone's surprise; Miniver Cheevy, the town drunkard; the mysterious "man Flammonde from God knows where"; and Old King Cole, whose three sons have proved utterly worthless.

tilde. A Spanish DIACRITICAL MARK, used over the letter n (as in cañon) to indicate its palatalization. It has evolved from the dash placed by medieval scribes over various letters as a substitute for a following m or n. The word signifies "tute."

Tilden, Samuel Jones (1814-1886). Governor of New York (1875-1876). As Democratic candidate for president (1876), he received more popular votes than the Republican candidate Rutherford B. Hayes, a state of affairs which resulted in the creation of an electoral commission (1877) to examine the contested returns in certain states. The committee reported in favor of Hayes, who was elected by one electoral vote, Tilden always believing that he had been wronged. The fortune that he bequeathed was used to establish a free public library in the City of New York.

Tilden, William Tatem (1893-). American tennis champion of the world (1920-1925) and member of the Davis Cup Team (1920-1930).

Tilly, Count of. Johan Tserclaes (1559-1632). Flemish field marshal in the Thirty Years' War. He replaced Wallenstein in command of the Imperial forces (1630). In taking Magdeburg, his army committed great atrocities. He was defeated by Gustavus II in two engagements and mortally wounded in the second.

Tilney, Henry. The hero of Jane Austen's NORTHANGER ABBEY. His father, General Tilney, is also a prominent character.

Time. An American weekly magazine of news, current events, and domestic and foreign affairs, founded in 1923 and known particularly for its compressed, idiomatic, and occasionally fantastic style, making use of word-coinages, epithets, and unusual sentence structure. Time became the nucleus of Time, Inc., the publishing enterprise of Henry R. LUCE. It expanded to include The March of Time, a radio program and motion-picture newsreel feature.

Time of Man, The. A novel (1926) by Elizabeth Madox ROBERTS.

Times. A New York newspaper, founded in 1851 by Henry Jarvis Raymond (1820-1869) and George Jones (1816-1891) with Whig backers. Raymond, who had helped found the Republican party in 1856, and supported Lincoln during the Civil War, was its editor from 1851 to 1869. After Raymond's death, during the '70s, it led in the attack on the Tweed Ring. It declined during the early '90s, till it was bought by Adolph Ochs, who built it up again and revived its motto, "All the News That's Fit to Print." During two World Wars its war reportage has been of high standard. The family of Adolph Ochs carries on the paper, with Arthur Hays Sulzberger as its publisher. The Times is conservative in editorial tone, though politically independent. It is a morning paper with a large Sunday edition, including the excellent Sunday Magazine and Book Review.

Times, The. The London Times (so named since 1788) was founded by John Walter as The Daily Universal Register (1785). There have been many famous editors of the Times, its contributors in the early period included George BORROW, Leigh HUNT, DISRAELI, etc.

Timoleon (d. ca. 337 B.C.). The liberator of Syracuse and other cities in Sicily. He is mentioned by James THOMSON in The Seasons.

Timon of Athens. An Athenian misanthrope of the late 5th century B.C. and the principal figure in SHAKESPEARE's play so called. The play, which was acted about 1608 and printed in 1623, is not all Shakespeare's work. The drama begins with the joyous life of Timon, and his hospitable extravagance; then it launches into his pecuniary embarrassment, and the discovery that his professed friends will not help him. The play ends with his flight into the woods, his misanthropy, and his death. Aside from the hero, the two most important characters are Flavius, his faithful steward, and Alcibiades, the Athenian captain. Timon finds a hidden treasure in the woods, but so great is his disillusionment and hatred of mankind that he has no desire to make use of it. He gives a part of it to Flavius and another part to Alcibiades to enable him to launch an expedition against Athens.

MACAULAY uses the expression to out-Timon Timon—i.e., to be more misanthropical than even Timon.

Timon's banquet. A banquet at which nothing is served; a banquet of lukewarm water. Timon gave such a feast to bid farewell to his friends and express his scorn for them.

Timoshenko, Semën K. (1895-). Russian soldier. Created marshal of the Red Army and people's commissar for defense (1940). He was commander in chief on the southwestern front and directed the defense of Stalingrad and the Caucasus (1941-1942). He also directed the Winter offensive on the northwestern front (1942-1943).

Tinker Bell. An unseen fairy in Barrie's PETER PAN.

Tin Pan Alley. Popular and journalistic term applied to the section of New York City in which the writers and publishers of popular songs were located; later, by extension, applied to the industry as a whole. Tin Pan Alley was at first located in the district around 14th Street, but later moved uptown. George GERSHWIN and Irving BERLIN were among the leading composers of Tin Pan Alley.

Tintagel Castle. Residence of King Mark of Cornwall.

Tinto, Dick. An artist who appears in two of Scott's novels. He is introduced as a lad in the BRIDE OF LAMMERMOOR and later in ST. RONAN'S WELL, as touching up the signboard of Meg Dods.

Tintoretto. Real name Jacopo Robusti (1518-1594). Italian painter called Il Furioso, from the extreme rapidity with which he painted. His canvases exhibit his endeavor to combine Michelangelo's power of design with Titian's coloring.

Tiny Tim. Bob Cratchit's little lame son in Dickens' CHRISTMAS CAROL.

Tiphany. The name given in the old romances to the mother of the Magi. Of course it is a corruption of EPIPHANY.

Tiphys. In Greek legend, the name of the pilot of the Argo, the vessel of the Argonauts.

Tippecanoe and Tyler too. Campaign slogan of the Whig Party in the presidential campaign of 1840. William Henry HARRISON, the candidate for President was nicknamed "Tippecanoe" from his victory over the Indians at Tippecanoe, Indiana, in the War of 1812. His running mate was John TYLER, who became President when Harrison died one month after his inauguration.

Tirante the White. The hero and title of a famous romance of chivalry. Cervantes describes it thus in his DON QUIXOTE:

"Let me see that book," said the curé; "we shall find in it a fund of amusement. Here we shall find that famous knight don Kyrie Elyson of Montalban and Thomas his brother, with the knight Fonseca, the battle which Detrianté fought with Alano, the stratagems of the Widow Tranquil, the amour of the empress with her 'squire, and the witticisms of lady Brilianta. This is one of the most amusing books ever written."

Tiresias. A Theban of Greek legend, who by accident saw ATHENA bathing, and was therefore struck with blindness by her splashing water in his face. She afterwards repented, and, as she could not restore his sight, conferred on him the power of soothsaying and of understanding the language of birds, and gave him a staff with which he could walk as safely as if he had his sight. He found death at last by drinking from the well of Tilphosa. There are several versions of this legend. See also OEDIPUS.

Tirpitz, Alfred von (1849-1930). German admiral who created the navy of the Second Reich and was responsible for unrestricted submarine warfare during World War I. Also remembered for his remarkable beard.

Tisiphone. One of the three FURIES. Covered with a bloody robe, she sits day and night at hell-gate, armed with a whip. Tibullus says her head is coiled with serpents in lieu of hair.

Tish. An intrepid old maid, the heroine of Mary Roberts RINEHART's Adventures of Letitia Carberry and of numerous short stories. She has two companions in adventure, Lizzie and Aggie (who has hay fever).

Tissot, James Joseph (1836-1902). French painter and illustrator whose three hundred water-color paintings of the life of Christ (based on sketches made in the Holy Land) were exhibited in 1894.

Titan, The. See COWPERWOOD, FRANK.

Titanic. White Star liner which held the record of size and speed but struck an iceberg south of Newfoundland on its maiden voyage to New York (April 15, 1912). It sank within two and a half hours. More than 1,500 lives were lost. This greatest maritime disaster in times of peace has challenged the imagination of poets and novelists. Cf., for instance, The Titanic, a narrative poem by E. J. Pratt, and Parti de Liverpool, a novel by André Peisson.

Titania. Queen of the fairies and wife of OBERON. She appears in Shakespeare's MID-SUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

Titans. Primordial beings of Greek mythology, of enormous size and strength, and typical of lawlessness and the power of force. There were twelve, six male (Oceanus, Coeus, Crius, Hyperion, Iapetus, and Cronus) and six female (Theia, Rhea, Themis, Mnemosyne, Phoebe, and Tethys), children of Uranus and Ge (Heaven and Earth). Legends vary, but one states that Cronus swallowed the rest of them, and that when liberated by Zeus (son of Cronus), they dethroned and emasculated their father Uranus. Thereupon they made war on Zeus, who, after defeating them, imprisoned them all—Oceanus alone excepted—in TARTARUS.

By Virgil and Ovid the sun was sometimes surnamed Titan.

Titcomb, Timothy. The pseudonym under which J. G. HOLLAND wrote some of his early books, notably the Titcomb Papers, a series of sketches with a didactic flavor.

Tite Barnacle, see BARNACLE.

Tithonus. A beautiful Trojan of Greek legend, son of Laomedon, and beloved by Eos (Aurora). At his prayer the goddess granted him immortality, but as he had forgotten to ask for youth and vigor he grew old, and life became insupportable. He now prayed Eos to remove him from the world; this, however, she could not do, but she changed him into a grasshopper. TENNYSON has a poem entitled Tithonus.

Tithorea. One of the two chief summits of PARNASSUS. It was dedicated to BACCHUS, the other (Lycorea) being dedicated to the MUSES and APOLLO.

Titian. Ital. Tiziano Vecelli (1477-1576). One of the great painters of all time. He is known as the chief of the Venetian school. As painter to the Venetian state, he did many portraits, frescoes, religious pictures, etc., and became later court painter to Charles V. He is known for his remarkable color and the magnificence of his rendering of flesh and costume. Titian red is a red-yellow of high saturation, valued as rare and beautiful in women's hair.

the French Titian. Jacques Blanchard (1600-1638).

the Portuguese Titian. Alonzo Sanchez Coello (1515-1599).

Titmarsh, Michael Angelo. A pseudonym under which THACKERAY published some of his less important work.

Titorelli. In Franz Kafka's THE TRIAL, a lawyer, the advocate of the hero, K., who receives his client in bed and is unwilling to give him any help.

Titurel. A legendary character who appears in many of the narratives concerning the Holy GRAIL and is the titular hero of a 13th century romance by WOLFRAM VON ESCHENBACH, to which Albert of Scharfenberg later added Young Titurel. This valiant and holy knight was the first guardian of the Grail, the father of Frimurtel, who succeeded him as guardian and the grandfather of AMFORTAS.

Titus. (1) An alternative name of the Penitent Thief used in Longfellow's Golden Legend.

(2) In Roman legendary history, the son of Lucius Junius BRUTUS. His father condemned him to death for supporting the Tarquins.

Titus Andronicus. A drama published among the plays of SHAKESPEARE and formerly attributed to him (ca. 1589). It is a tragedy of pre-Shakespearean type, full of bloody horrors. The plot turns on the ingratitude of Saturninus, who has become Emperor of Rome through the good offices of Titus Andronicus. Saturninus marries not Titus' daughter Lavinia, to whom he had been betrothed, but Tamora, Queen of the Goths, one of the captives whom the conquering Titus has brought home. She and her lover, Aaron the Moor, accomplish the dishonor and horrible mutilation of Lavinia and the execution of Lavinia's two brothers. Titus now gives himself up to vengeance and one atrocity follows another until all the principal characters are killed. There were several plays on this same subject extant in Shakespeare's time.

Tityrus. A poetical surname for a shepherd; from its use in Greek idyls and Virgil's first Eclogue. In the SHEPHERD'S CALENDAR (Feb., June, and Dec.) SPENSER calls CHAUCER by this name.

Tityus. A gigantic son of ZEUS and Ge in Greek mythology whose body covered nine acres of land. He tried to defile LATONA, but APOLLO cast him into TARTARUS, where a vulture fed on his liver, which grew again as fast as it was devoured. See also PROMETHEUS. He was the father of EUROPA.

T. N. T. An abbreviation of trinitrotoluene, a highly explosive substance.

Tobacco Road. A novel by Erskine CALDWELL (1932), dealing with the impoverished and degenerate Lester family in the cotton region of Georgia. The family includes Jeeter and his wife Ada; Jeeter's aged mother; Dude, the swaggering, 16-year-old son; Ellie May, one of the daughters, afflicted with a hare-lip; and Pearl, the second daughter, who at the age of twelve has been married to Lov Benson, a railroad worker. The family is starving but Jeeter, knowing and caring only for farming, insists on staying on his land. In the course of the story, Dude marries Sister Bessie, a woman preacher, who gives him an automobile with which he accidentally kills his grandmother; Pearl runs away from her husband and Ellie May takes her place; and the farmhouse catches fire, Jeeter and Ada being burned to death. Tobacco Road was dramatized as a phenomenally successful play in 1933. It had 3,182 performances.

Tobermory. A story about a talking cat by SAKI.

Tobit. The principal character of the Book of Tobit, a romance included in the Old Testament Apocrypha. While sleeping outside the wall of his courtyard he was blinded by sparrows "muting warm dung into his eyes." His son Tobias was attacked on the Tigris by a fish, which leapt out of the water and which he caught at the bidding of the angel Raphael, his mentor. Tobias afterwards married Sara, seven of whose betrothed lovers had been successively carried off by the evil spirit Asmodeus, who was driven by the angel Azarias to the extremity of Egypt, bound. Tobit was cured of his blindness by applying to his eyes the gall of the fish which had tried to devour his son.

Toboso. The village home of DON QUIXOTE's lady-love, whom he renamed DULCINEA. It is a few miles east of Ciudad Real.

Tocqueville, Count Alexis Charles Henri Maurice Clérel de (1805-1859). French historian, known for his studies of the nature and operation of democracy, with the view of advancing the rule of the people and at the same time controlling its undesirable tendencies. His best-known works are Démocratie en Amérique (Democracy in America, 1835-1839), called the first impartial and systematic study of American institutions; and L'Ancien Régime et la Révolution (The Old Régime and the Revolution; 1856), a history of the French Revolution of 1789, left unfinished at the time of his death. Tocqueville held a number of official positions in the French government, at one time serving on a special mission to the U.S. He was later a deputy and, for awhile, a minister under Napoleon III, retiring from the latter position after the coup d'état of December 2, 1851.

Todd, Mabel Loomis (1858-1932). American poet and author of travel books, best known as editor of the Poems of Emily Dickinson (3 series; 1890-1896), partly in collaboration with Colonel Thomas Wentworth Higginson, and Letters of Emily Dickinson (1894); all with accurate and fascinating introductions. Editorial work on Bolts of Melody: New Poems of Emily Dickinson (1945) was completed by Mrs. Todd's daughter, Mrs. Millicent Todd Bingham, who is also the author of Ancestors' Brocades: The Literary Debut of Emily Dickinson, the story of the internecine strife over Emily's literary remains.

Todd, Mary (1818-1882) The wife of Abraham Lincoln whom he married November 4, 1842. She came from Springfield, Illinois. In 1870 she was pensioned by Congress; in 1875 she was adjudged insane.

Todgers, Mrs. In Dickens' MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT, proprietress of a "commercial boarding-house"; weighed down with the overwhelming cares of "sauces, gravy," and the wherewithal of providing for her lodgers. Mrs. Todgers has a "soft heart" for Mr. PECKSNIFF, widower, and being really kind-hearted, befriends poor Mercy Pecksniff in her miserable married life with her brutal husband Jonas Chuzzlewit.

Todhunter, John (1839-1916). Irish writer who practiced medicine in Dublin and wrote poetry and dramas.

Tofana. An old woman of Naples (d. 1730) immortalized by her invention of a tasteless and colorless poison, called by her the Manna of St. Nicola of Bari, but better known as Aqua Tofana. More than 600 persons fell victim to this insidious drug. It was said to be used particularly by young wives who wished to get rid of their husbands.

toga. The usual outer dress of a Roman citizen when appearing in public; the Romans were hence the gens togata or the togaed people. The toga consisted of single piece of undyed woolen cloth, cut almost in a semi-circle and worn in a flowing fashion round the shoulders and body.

toga picta. The toga embroidered with golden stars that was worn by the emperor on special occasions, by a victorious general at his "triumph," etc.

toga praetexta. The toga with a purple border that was worn by children, by those engaged in sacred rites, magistrates, etc.

To Have and Have Not. A novel by Ernest HEMINGWAY (1937), dealing with the efforts of Harry MORGAN, a native of Key West, Florida, to earn a living for himself and his family. He has operated a boat for rental to fishing parties, but during the depression era of the 1930's he turns to the smuggling of Chinese immigrants and then of illegal liquor. While assisting a gang of bank-robbers to escape, he is shot and dies murmuring that "... one man alone ain't got—no chance."

To Have and to Hold. A historical novel by Mary JOHNSTON (1899). The scene is laid in 17th century Virginia. Ralph Percy, the hero, takes a bride by chance from a shipload sent from England and learns that his wife is not a domestic servant, as he supposed, but the King's ward, Jocelyn Leigh, who has taken this means of avoiding a marriage with Lord Carnal to which the King has urged her. Carnal pursues her to Virginia and a long series of exciting adventures follows, but he admits his defeat at last and takes poison.

To Helen. A poem by Edgar Allan Poe.

Toilers of the Sea (Les Travailleurs de la mer). A novel by Victor HUGO (1866). Much of the action centers about the steamboat La Durande and its trips between the Isle of Guernsey and St. Malo, and there is a deal of smuggling and exciting adventure. The heroine is Deruchette and the real hero Gilliatt.

Toinette. In Molière's MALADE IMAGINAIRE, a confidential female servant of ARGAN, the malade imaginaire. She is "adroite, soigneuse, diligente, et surtout fidèle," but fond of contradicting and always calling into action her master's irritable temper. In order to cure him, she pretends to be a traveling physician of about ninety years of age, although she has not seen twenty-six summers, and in the capacity of a Galen, declares M. Argan is suffering from lungs, recommends that one arm should be cut off, and one eye taken out to strengthen the remaining one.

Toledo. A sword made at Toledo in Spain, which long before and after the Middle Ages was specially famous for its fine blades.

Toller, Ernst (1893-1939). German playwright and poet, of Jewish parentage, known for his revolutionary sympathies. His plays, many of which make use of the techniques of EXPRESSIONISM, marked by fervent humanitarianism and indignation at injustice, deal with the miseries of working people in an industrial civilization, the horror and brutality of war, and the eventual political revolt of the oppressed classes. Toller's dramatic works include Die Wandlung (1919); Man and the Masses (Masse-Mensch; 1921), his best-known play; The Machine Wreckers (Maschinenstürmer; 1922); Der entfesselte Wotan (1923); Hinkemann (1924); Hoppla, wir leben! (1927), written in a panoramic technique compared to that of John Dos Passos; Feuer aus Kesseln (1930); Nie wieder Friede! (No More Peace!; 1937); Pastor Hall (1939). Other works are Gedichte der Gefangenen (1923); Vormorgen (1924), and Das Schwalbenbuch (The Swallow-Book; 1924), books of poetry; Quer durch (1930), translated as Which World—Which Way?, an account of travel in Russia and America; Look through the Bars (1937), a collection of letters from prison.

Toller fought in the German army during the early years of World War I but later helped to organize labor strikes in Germany as a means of stopping the war. He was elected president of the Bavarian Soviet Republic, set up as a result of revolution, but he was imprisoned for five years when the revolution was suppressed; his best-known works were written during his term in prison. When the National Socialist government (see NAZISM) came to power in Germany in 1933, Toller's books were burned and he was deprived of citizenship. He came to the U.S. as a refugee and was active in the anti-Fascist movements of the 1930's. In despair, he committed suicide in New York.

Tolosa.

he has got the gold of Tolosa. A Latin proverb meaning, "ill-gotten wealth will do no good." It is derived from the account of Caepio, who, on his march to Gallia Narbonensis, stole from Toulouse (Tolosa) the gold and silver consecrated by the Cimbrian Druids to their gods. In the battle which ensued (106 B.C.) both Caepio and his brother consul were defeated by the Cimbrians and Teutons, and 112,000 Romans were left dead on the field.

Tolstoi, Count Aleksei Nikolaevich (1882?-1945). Russian novelist and playwright. Distantly related to the great Tolstoi and also, through his mother, to TURGENEV. One of the most notable novelists of the Soviet Union. His novel Darkness and Dawn (1936) has been highly praised. His play, The Path to Victory (1938), brings Lenin and Stalin on the stage. His greatest work is a fictionalized biography Peter the Great (1930). It has appeared in two parts over a period of five years and was made into a moving picture.

Tolstoi, Count Leo. Full Russian name Lev Nikolaevich Tolstoi (1828-1910). Russian novelist, playwright, short-story writer, and essayist, known for his psychological studies of character and his panoramic pictures of Russian life in the 19th century, and later for his PRIMITIVISM and religious mysticism. Among his works are WAR AND PEACE (1865-1872), his most famous novel; ANNA KARÉ-NINA (1875-1876); The Death of Ivan Ilyich (1884); The Power of Darkness (1886), a play; The Kreutzer Sonata (1889); What Is Art? (1898), an analysis of art according to its emotional appeal; RESURRECTION (1899). Others include Childhood, Boyhood, and Youth, My Religion, and My Confession, autobiographical and introspective; The Cossacks; Sebastopol; Master and Man, What Is to Be Done?; The Kingdom of God Is Within You.

Tolstoi came of a wealthy and noble family, but eventually became discontented, developing a system of thought which emphasized simplicity, faith, love, and the Christian brotherhood of man, and deplored man-made institutions such as governments, churches, and creeds. He forswore literature and art, made an effort to renounce his material possessions, and endeavored to live as a peasant in the country. He died in a railway station after having fled from an unhappy domestic background to take refuge in a monastery.

Tom.

long Tom. A familiar name for any gun of great length; especially the naval 4.7's used on land in the second Boer War.

Peeping Tom of Coventry. See GODIVA.

Uncle Tom. See UNCLE TOM'S CABIN.

Tom and Jerry. Types of the roistering young man about town; from Pierce Egan's Life in London, Or The Day and Night Scenes of Jerry Hawthorn, Esq., and his Elegant Friend Corinthian Tom (1821).

Tom, Dick, and Harry. A set of nobodies; persons of no note; persons unworthy of notice. "Brown, Jones, and Robinson" are other men; they are the vulgar rich, who give themselves airs, especially abroad, and look with scorn on all foreign manners and customs which differ from their own.

Tom Tug. A waterman.

Tom, Uncle. See UNCLE TOM'S CABIN.

To Mary in Heaven. A poem by Robert BURNS (1789), written on the anniversary of the death of Mary CAMPBELL, one of the poet's sweethearts.

Tom Brown's Schooldays. A famous book for boys by Thomas HUGHES (1857) portraying life in an English public school. When Tom enters Rugby, he is a shy, homesick chap, but he is soon drawn into the life of the school and develops robust, manly qualities. A sequel, Tom Brown at Oxford, appeared in 1861.

Tom Burke of Ours. A historical novel by Charles LEVER (1844). The witty, brave, resourceful Irish hero is involved in numerous conspiracies and other adventuresome affairs, both in the British Isles and in France where he is a commissioned officer. Napoleon is a prominent character in the novel. He gives Tom his commission, and on one occasion Tom saves his life.

Tom Grogan. A novel by F. Hopkinson Smith (Am., 1896). The heroine, Tom Grogan, is a plucky Irish widow who adopts her husband's name and business as stevedore on Staten Island, in order to make a living for herself and her two children. She runs counter to the labor unions and has a hard fight, but comes out on top.

Tom Jones. More completely, The History of Tom Jones, a Foundling. A novel by FIELDING (1749) which, as one of the first of English novels, exerted a great influence upon the development of fiction. Its hero, Tom Jones, is not overheroic; he is perhaps a model of generosity, and manly spirit, but mixed with dissipation. Lord Byron calls him "an accomplished blackguard" (Don Juan, xiii. 110, 1824). See also ALLWORTHY.

A hero with a flawed reputation, a hero sponging for a guinea, a hero who cannot pay his landlady, and is obliged to let his honor out to hire, is absurd, and the claim of Tom Jones to heroic rank is quite untenable.—Thackeray.

Tomlinson, Henry (1873-). English novelist whose The Sea and The Jungle (1912) established his reputation as a writer of real literature. His Gallions Reach won the Fémina-Vie Heureuse prize (1927). He has been compared in certain ways to Joseph CONRAD.

Tommy or Tommy Atkins. A British private soldier, as a Jack Tar is a British sailor. At one time all recruits were served out with manuals in which were to be entered the name, age, date of enlistment, length of service, wounds, medals, and so on of the holder.

With each book was sent a specimen form showing how the one in the manual should be filled in, and the hypothetical name selected, instead of the lawyers' John Doe or Richard Roe, was Thomas Atkins. The nickname was popularized by KIPLING.

For it's Tommy this, and Tommy that, and "Tommy, wait outside";
But it's "Special train for Atkins" when the trooper's on the tide

Tommy (Barrack-Room Ballads.)

Tommy, Sentimental, see SENTIMENTAL TOMMY.

Tommy and Grizel. A novel by J. M. BARRIE (1900), a sequel to SENTIMENTAL TOMMY.

Tommy Gallagher's Crusade. A short novel by James T. FARRELL (1939), presenting a study of the development of a Fascist attitude (see FASCISM) in the mind of Tommy Gallagher, an ill-educated Irish-American youth, unemployed, who listens to the anti-Semitic harangues of Father MOYLAN, a demagogic Roman Catholic radio priest. Under the influence of the priest's arguments, Tommy gradually comes to focus his bitterness and resentment at his own failure on the Jewish race. As the novel closes, Tommy is shown reflecting that once Adolf HITLER was in a position like his own.

Tom o' Bedlam. A mendicant who levies charity on the plea of insanity. In the 16th and 17th centuries applications for admission to BEDLAM became so numerous that many inmates were dismissed half cured. These "ticket-of-leave men" wandered about chanting mad songs, and dressed in fantastic dresses, to excite pity. Posing as these harmless "innocents," a set of sturdy rogues appeared, called ABRAM MEN, who shammed lunacy, and committed great depredations.

Tom Sawyer, The Adventures of. A famous story by Mark TWAIN (1876) which, together with its sequel HUCKLEBERRY FINN, retails the adventures of the "bad boy" of a little Missouri town. Tom Sawyer's maneuvers to outwit his ultra-conventional Aunt Polly, his sworn friendship for the disreputable Huck Finn, his prize collection of Sunday School tickets, the memorable exploits of the white-washing of the fence and the appearance of Huck and Tom at their own funeral, to mention only a few of his escapades, have endeared him to thousands of readers. The two books referred to above were followed by Tom Sawyer Abroad (1894) and Tom Sawyer Detective (1896).

Tom the Piper's Son. The thievish hero of an old nursery rhyme. Tom the Piper was one of the characters in the old MORRIS DANCE.

Tom Thumb. Any dwarfish or insignificant person is so called; from the pigmy hero of the old nursery tale, popular in the 16th century. The History of Tom Thumb was published by R. Johnson in 1621 and a similar tale by PERRAULT (Le Petit Poucet), in 1630. The American midget Charles Sherwood Stratton (1838-1883) exhibited at sideshows by P. T. BARNUM, was popularly called "General Tom Thumb."

Tom Tiddler's ground. A children's game in which one child stands on one side of a line drawn on the ground and the others run across shouting "Here we are on Tom Tiddler's ground picking up gold and silver." They are then pursued by the child who is "it" and the first one caught takes his place.

Tom Titivil. The name of the devil in many of the old MORALITY PLAYS.

Tone, Wolfe (1763-1798). Famous Irish revolutionist who founded the United Irishmen with Thomas Russell and Napper Tandy (Napper Tandy is mentioned in the beginning of the famous Irish song The Wearing of the Green). Tone negotiated for a landing of the French in Ireland but the fleet gathered together was scattered by a storm in 1796. The British captured him with a small French squadron off Lough Swilly in 1798. Tone finally committed suicide. One of his descendants is the moving-picture actor Franchot Tone.

tong (Chinese t'ang, literally "hall"). A Chinese secret association or society. See also CHINATOWN.

Tonio. A character in Leoncavallo's opera I PAGLIACCI.

Tonio Kröger. A short novel (NOVELLE) by Thomas MANN, considered by many the author's masterpiece because of its concise treatment of the perennial Mann problem of the conflict between the artist and the bourgeois.

Tono-Bungay. A novel by H. G. WELLS (1909). The hero, George Ponderevo, throws in his fortunes with his uncle, inventor of the patent medicine "Tono-Bungay," which brings them both an immense fortune.

Tonson, Jacob (1656?-1736). English publisher. He held the copyright of Paradise Lost and published Dryden, Addison and editions of Shakespeare and Beaumont and Fletcher. He also brought out a famous Miscellany which Dryden edited and which included poetry by Pope, Swift, etc. Secretary of the Kit-cat Club.

Tonty, Henry de (1650-1704). Companion of La Salle in exploring the Mississippi valley (1678-1683) who also helped the Louisiana colony in its early days (1700-1704). Known as "Tonty of the Iron Hand."

Tooke, Horne (1736-1812). English radical and student, called the "philosopher of Wimbledon." He wrote on the etymology of English words, including excursions into metaphysics and politics, while he was being imprisoned for opinions which included his championship of the Americans in the Revolution.

Toomer, Jean (1894-). American Negro writer and lecturer. Author of Cane (1923); Essentials (1931); and Portage Potential (1932). A friend of ZONA GALE and husband of the novelist Margery Latimer.

Toonerville Trolley. A popular comic supplement feature illustrating the foibles of human nature as seen on a trolley car in the small town of Toonerville, the creation of the American cartoonist Fontaine Fox. The trolley was commercialized as a child's toy during the 1920's.

Tophet. A valley just to the south of Jerusalem, at the southeast of GEHENNA, where children were made to "pass through the fire to Moloch." Josiah threw dead bodies, ordure, and other unclean things there, to prevent all further application of the place to religious use (2 Kings xxiii. 10), and here Sennacherib's army was destroyed (Is. xxx. 31-3). A perpetual fire was kept burning in it to consume the dead bodies, bones, filth, etc., deposited there, and hence it was taken as symbolical of Sheol or Hell. The name is Hebrew, and may mean "a place to be spat upon," or it may be connected with toph, a drum, in allusion to the drowning of the murdered children's cries by the beating of drums.

Toplady, Augustus Montague (1740-1778). English clergyman and controversialist, chiefly remembered for his hymn Rock of Ages (1775).

Topper. A ribald novel (1926) by Thorne SMITH, later made into a moving picture.

Top Secret. A personal record (1946) by Ralph INGERSOLL about World War II. In it, the author criticizes Generals Montgomery and Eisenhower, and British policy in general, but gives graphic accounts of the invasion of Europe.

Topsy. The Negro slave girl in UNCLE TOM'S CABIN by Harriet Beecher Stowe.

Torah. The name of the first five books of Hebrew law; the Pentateuch.

Toralva. The licentiate in DON QUIXOTE (II. iii. 5), who is conveyed on a cane through the air, with his eyes shut. In the space of twelve hours he arrives at Rome and alights on the tower of Nona, whence, looking down, he witnesses the death of the Constable de Bourbon. Next morning he arrives at Madrid and relates the whole affair. During his flight the Devil bids him open his eyes, and he finds himself so near the moon that he can almost touch it with his finger.

Torch-bearers, The. A play (1922—revised 1938) by George KELLY which is a satire on the little-theater movement.

To-Remain Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Tormes, Lazarillo de, see LAZARILLO DE TORMES.

Torquato, i.e., Torquato Tasso, see TASSO.

Torquemada, Tomás de (1420?-1498). Spanish Dominican monk, appointed by Ferdinand and Isabella the first inquisitor general for all the Spanish possessions and made grand inquisitor by Pope Innocent VIII (1487). Notorious for his cruelty and severity.

Torre, Sir. In Tennyson's IDYLLS OF THE KING, the brother of ELAINE, the lily maid of Astolat.

Torrence, Ridgely (1875-). American poet and playwright, one of the first to write plays of and for the American Negro, as Plays for a Negro Theater (1919; including Granny Maumee; The Rider of Dreams; and Simon the Cyrenian). His poems, Hesperides (1925), republished with few additions as Poems (1941), make of him an American A. E. Housman.

Torricelli, Evangelista (1608-1647). Italian physicist and mathematician, who invented (1643) the Torricellian Tube, the earliest mercurial barometer.

Torrigiano, Pietro (1472-1522). Florentine sculptor, patronized by Lorenzo the Magnificent. Cellini reports that he once broke Michelangelo's nose in a quarrel.

Tortilla Flat. A novel (1935) by John STEINBECK concerning the halfbreeds in Monterey. Made into a play by Jack Kirkland (1937). Tortillas are Mexican corn cakes.

tory. A word of Irish origin, meaning "pursuer." It was first applied to Irish outlaws, later became a nickname of those opposed to excluding the Duke of York (who became James II and was a Roman Catholic) from succeeding to the Crown. In this way it became the name of one of the great English parties. After 1689 the English tories inclined toward the Stuarts, but after George III came to the throne, their policy became one of upholding church and state and of opposing liberalism. Today "tory" has given place in English politics to "conservative." In a U.S. source of 1777, a tory is defined as "a thing whose head is in England, whose body is in America, and whose neck ought to be stretched."

Tosca, La. An opera by PUCCINI (1900) based on the drama by SARDOU. Tosca, an Italian singer, unable to endure the strain when her lover, the painter, Mario Cavaradossi, who has concealed a dangerous political prisoner, is tortured, reveals the whereabouts of the prisoner to Scarpia, chief of police. Scarpia promises to save Cavaradossi by a mock execution if Tosca will give herself to him. She agrees, but stabs him at the last moment. The execution is, however, a real one, and Tosca leaps from a battlement to her death.

Toscanini, Arturo (1867-). Italian-born operatic and symphonic conductor. He conducted at La Scala in Milan (1898-1907; 1921-1931) and for the Metropolitan Opera Company (1907-1921). He has conducted for the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra and at the Bayreuth and Salzburg Festivals. He organized (1937) and conducted the symphony orchestra of the National Broadcasting Company.

Tosti, Sir Francesco Paolo (1847-1916). Italian-born composer and singing teacher to the British royal family (1880). His best-known song is Good-bye.

Tostig. Earl of Northumbria (died 1066). Saxon ruler, the brother of King Harold of England. Outlawed, he made a pact with Harold Haardraade of Norway and invaded the north of England (1066); defeated and slain by King Harold at Stamford Bridge, just prior to the southern invasion of England by William the Conqueror.

totem. A North American Indian (Algonquin) word for some natural object, usually an animal, taken as the emblem of a person or clan on account of a supposed relationship. Totemism, which is common among primitive peoples, has a distinct value in preventing intermarriage among near relations, for if persons bearing the same totem (as, for instance, in the case of brothers and sisters) intermarry the punishment is death. Another custom is that one is not allowed to kill or eat the animal borne as one's totem.

totem pole. The post standing before a dwelling on which grotesque and, frequently, brilliantly colored representations of the totem were carved or hung. It was often of great size, and sometimes so broad at the base that an archway was cut through it.

Tottel's Miscellany. Popular title for Songs and Sonnets, a "miscellany," or collection of poems by various authors, published in its first edition by Richard Tottel in England in 1557. It contained 310 poems, chiefly lyrics, although epigrams, epitaphs, elegies, satires, pastorals, and narrative verse were included also; original work and translations of Latin, Italian, and French poems were represented, as well as the first English SONNETS and possibly the first published genuine English BLANK VERSE. Among the poets appearing in the collection were John HEYWOOD, Sir Thomas WYATT, the Earl of SURREY, Nicholas GRIMALD, CHAUCER, and a number of "Uncertain Authors." Tot- tel's Miscellany was immensely popular, going through at least eight editions in thirty years, and a number of imitations of it were issued during the latter part of the 16th century, although they were all considered to be inferior to the original. The titles of these later miscellanies include Pleasant Sonnets and Stories (1566); A Hundred Sundry Flowers (1573); The Paradise of Dainty Devices (1576); Flowers of Epigrams (1578); A Gorgeous Gallery of Gallant Inventions (1578); The Forest of Fancy (1579); THE PHOENIX NEST (1593); THE PASSIONATE PILGRIM (1599); Breton's Bower of Delights (1591); The Arbor of Amorous Devices (1597); England's Parnassus (1600); England's Helicon (1600); A Poetical Rhapsody (1602). A number of these drew some of their selections from Songs and Sonnets and The Paradise of Dainty Devices.

The poetical miscellany grew out of the "commonplace book," in which the poetry lover of the days before widespread printing would copy down verses that pleased him when he heard them read or saw them in manuscript. There was also a classical model for them in the GREEK ANTHOLOGY.

Tottenham in Boots. A popular toast in Ireland in 1731. Mr. Tottenham gave the casting vote which threw out a Government bill very obnoxious to the Irish, on the subject of the Irish Parliament. He had come from the country, and rushed into the House without changing his boots, just in time to give his vote, which prevented the bill from passing by a majority of one.

Touchstone. The witty clown of Shakespeare's As You Like It. His famous speech is "the seven degrees of affront": (1) the retort courteous, (2) the quip modest, (3) the reply churlish, (4) the reproof valiant, (5) the countercheck quarrelsome, (6) the lie circumstantial, and (7) the lie direct (Act. v. sc. 4). See COUNTERCHECK, etc.

Toulouse-Lautrec. In full Henri Marie Raymond de Toulouse-Lautrec Monfa (1864-1901). French painter, designer of posters, and lithographer. His paintings have been frequently exhibited in America. His subjects are taken mostly from the life of the demi-monde of Paris. Physically misshapen, he indulged in periodic dissipation. Cf. Toulouse-Lautrec, by Gerstle Mack.

Tour, the Grand. A journey through France, Switzerland, Italy, and home by Germany, made by most of the young British aristocrats as the finish of their education. Those who went merely to France or Germany were simply tourists.

tour de force (Fr.). A feat of strength or skill.

Tourgée, Albion Winegar (1838-1905). American lawyer and novelist, known for his depiction, realistic in background and detail, of the Reconstruction period in the South after the Civil War. His works include Toinette (1874), reissued in 1881 as A Royal Gentleman; Figs and Thistles (1879); A Fool's Errand (1879); Bricks without Straw (1880); John Eax and Mamelon (1882); Hot Plowshares (1883); Button's Inn (1887); With Gauge and Swallow (1889); Pactolus Prime (1890); The Mortgage on the Hiproof House (1896). These are particularly marked by an understanding of the problems of the Negro.

Tourgée fought in the Northern army during the Civil War, and later went to North Carolina as a carpetbagger. As a judge in the superior court of the state he helped to break up the KU KLUX KLAN, and much of the material in his books was based on first-hand experience.

tournament (O. Fr. toirneiment, from Lat. toirnare, "to turn"). A tilt of knights, the chief art of the game being so to maneuver or turn your horse as to avoid the adversary's blow.

Tournament of Tottenham, The. A comic romance, given in Percy's Reliques. A number of clowns are introduced, practicing warlike games and making vows like knights of high degree. They ride tilt on cart-horses, fight with ploughshares and flails, and wear for armor wooden bowls and saucapan-lids.

Tourneur or Turnour or Turner, Cyril (1575?-1626). Elizabethan dramatist who wrote The Revenger's Tragedy (?1607) and The Atheist's Tragedy (?1611). His Plays and Poems were edited (1878) by John Churton Collins and later (1930) by Allardyce Nicoll. Tourneur's work has tragic intensity.

Toussaint L'Ouverture. The Negro hero who freed San Domingo from French rule (1791). He died in captivity in France. He is the central figure of a historical novel, The Hour and the Man (1840), by Harriet MARTINEAU. Black Majesty (1928) by John W. VANDERCOOK is his biography, and Selden Rodman, in The Revolutionists, has written in drama form the story of him and Henri Christophe.

Tovarich. A comedy (1934) adapted by Robert E. SHERWOOD from the French of Jacques DEVAL. The word means "comrade" and is used in Communist Russia as a greeting and form of address.

Tower Beyond Tragedy, The. A play in free verse which appeared in Tamar and Other Poems (1924) by Robinson JEFFERS. It is one of the best English modernizations of a Greek tragic theme.

Tower Hill. An elevation near the Tower of London, the site of the execution of traitors. Among famous figures executed there were Sir Thomas More, the Earl of Surrey, Strafford, and Archbishop Laud.

Tower of Babel. See under BABEL.

Tower of London. William the Conqueror and the monarchs that followed him built the various buildings included in the name Tower of London, which stand by the Thames. The Tower has been a prison for many distinguished persons including kings and queens. It is said that the last person sent to the Tower was Sir F. Burdett in 1810.

Towers, Duchess of. A character in PETER IBBETSON by George DU MAURIER.

town and gown. The two sections of a university town, composed of those who are not attached to the university and those who are; hence, a town and gown row, a collision, often leading to a fight, between the students and non-gownsmen. See also PHILISTINES.

Towne, Charles Hanson (1877-1949). American editor and poet. Editor of Harper's Bazaar (1926-1931) and writer of a column for the New York American (1931-1937). Two of his best-known poems are Youth and Manhattan.

Towneley Mysteries or Plays. One of the important cycles of English MYSTERY PLAYS. They are also known as the Wakefield Mysteries because they were probably acted at the fairs of Widkirk, near Wakefield. They have a more popular, lively and even jocular tone than the plays of the other cycles. See also WAKEFIELD MASTER.

Town Mouse and Country Mouse. An old fable of a mouse in the city who invites a country mouse to dinner in its fine house. The country mouse, however, prefers its own home in the woods. This fable has been told by Horace and La Fontaine. Cf. the poem for children, The City Mouse and The Garden Mouse, by Christina Rossetti.

Townsend, Edward Waterman (1855-1942). American journalist, legislator, and writer, well-known for creating the fictional character Chimmie Fadden.

Townsend, Robert Etheridge. The hero of Cabell's CORDS OF VANITY.

Townshend, Charles (1725-1767). English statesman. He introduced taxes on glass, paper, and tea against which the American colonies revolted, thus bringing on the American Revolution against England.

Tox, Miss Lucretia. In Dickens' DOMBEY AND SON, the bosom friend of Mr. Dombey's married sister (Mrs. Chick). Miss Lucretia is a faded lady, "as if she had not been made in fast colors," and is washed out. She "ambled through life without any opinions, and never abandoned herself to unavailing regrets." Miss Tox greatly admires Mr. Dombey and entertains a forlorn hope that she may be selected by him to take the place of his deceased wife.

Toynbee, Arnold Joseph (1889-). English historian and educator at the University of London. His greatest work is A Study of History (6 vols. to date), an exhaustive study of six principal civilizations, which, in a condensed version, became a best-seller in 1947. His yearly Survey of International Affairs (1920-1923) has been continued by other editors.

Tozer, Leora. In Sinclair Lewis' ARROWSMITH, a North Dakota farm girl who has been working as a nurse in a local hospital and who becomes the wife of Martin Arrowsmith. She is loyally devoted to her husband, assisting him in his scientific experiments and helping him in his career as a physician. She dies of tropical fever while working with Arrowsmith in administering serum to afflicted natives on an island in the West Indies.

Tractarians. The authors of the TRACTS FOR THE TIMES, which enunciated the principles of the OXFORD MOVEMENT, also called the Tractarian Movement; also, their followers. Hence the term is applied to High Churchmen generally.

Tracts for the Times. A series of papers on theological and liturgical subjects, published at Oxford (hence sometimes called The Oxford Tracts) between 1833 and 1841. They were launched by the Rev. J. H. NEWMAN (afterwards Cardinal Newman) with the object of arresting "the advance of Liberalism in religious thought," and reviving "the true conception of the relation of the Church of England to the Catholic Church at large." The authors, who used the first seven letters of the alphabet as signatures to their contributions, were:

A. Rev. John Keble, M.A., author of the Christian Year, fellow of Oriel, and Professor of Poetry at Oxford.

B. Rev. Isaac Williams, Fellow of Trinity; author of The Cathedral, and other Poems.

C. Rev. E. B. Pusey, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew, and Canon of Christ Church.

D. Rev. John Henry Newman, D.D., Fellow of Oriel.

E. Rev. Thomas Keble.

F. Sir John Provost, Bart.

G. Rev. R. F. Wilson, of Oriel.

The series came to an end (at the request of the Bishop of Oxford) with Newman's Tract No. XC, "On Certain Passages in the XXXIX Articles"; later many of the Tractarians entered the Roman Catholic Church.

Traddles, Tommie. In Dickens' DAVID COPPERFIELD, a simple, honest young man, who believes in everybody and everything. Though constantly failing, he is never depressed. He has the habit of brushing his hair up on end, which gives him a look of surprise. Tom Traddles marries one of the "ten daughters of a poor curate."

At the Creakle's school, when I was miserable, he [Traddles] would lay his head on the desk for a little while, and then, cheering up, would draw skeletons all over his slate.—David Copperfield, vii.

Tradition and the Individual Talent. An essay by T. S. ELIOT, published in The Sacred Wood (1920), in which the author asserts that a poet cannot write significant poetry in the 20th century unless he has a knowledge and understanding of the poetry written in the past, so that he may surrender himself to his art and to the specific work he has to do, thus liberating himself from the bondage of purely personal expression.

Trafalgar, Battle of. A naval battle (October 21, 1805) off Cape Trafalgar on the southwest coast of Spain between the British and the combined French and Spanish fleets. Fifteen French and Spanish ships were either captured or destroyed by the British who did not lose a single vessel. The brilliant victory was marred by the death in action of Lord NELSON, the commander of the British fleet.

Trafalgar Square. A famous square in London, named after Nelson's victory. A tall column in the middle of the square bears a statue of him (designed, 1829).

tragedy (literally, a goat-song from Gr. tragos, "goat," ode, "song"). HORACE (As Poetica, 220) says it was called "goat-song" because the winner at choral competitions received a goat as a prize, but the explanation has no authority. Another derivation is from the satyr-like chorus.

It was ARISTOTLE (in his Poetics) who said that tragedy should move one "by pity and terror":

The plot ought to be so constructed that, even without the aid of the eye, he who hears the tale told will thrill with horror and melt to pity at what takes place.—xix (Butcher).

the Father of Tragedy. See under FATHER.

Tragedy of Nan, The. A poetic drama by John MASEFIELD (1909). The heroine is Nan Hardwick.

Tragic Comedians, The. A novel by George MEREDITH (1880), dealing with the tragic love affair of the brilliant young Jewish Hungarian leader of the German Republican Socialists, Ferdinand Lassalle (1825-1864) to whom Meredith has given the name Sigismund Alvan. The heroine (Helene von Döniges) is called Clotilde von Rüdiger. The novel is said by Meredith to follow "the bare railway line of their story." Alvan is killed in a duel by his rival, Prince Marko, who was in real life Yanko von Racowitza.

Traherne, Thomas (1636-1674). English poet, one of the later METAPHYSICAL POETS, known for the emphasis placed in his poetry on what he regarded as the direct and untutored apprehension of truth on the part of children. His work is marked by simple diction and a vivid presentation of the common things of everyday life as the vehicles of mystic revelation. Traherne was not discovered as a poet until the 20th century, his manuscripts at first having been ascribed to Henry VAUGHAN. He is considered to be one of the most important poets of his age and to throw an important light on the mysticism of such poets as Vaughan and William BLAKE. His Poetical Works and Poems of Felicity were published in 1903 and 1910, respectively; Centuries of Meditations, prose, was published in 1908.

Traill, Henry Duff (1842-1900). English journalist and biographer. Editor of a history of England, Social England (1893-1897), contributed to by various hands. He was also the author of satiric verse, fantasies, a biography of Sir John Franklin, and an especially notable biography of William III.

Trail of the Lonesome Pine, The. A novel (1908) by John Fox, Jr., made into a play by Eugene Walter (1912). Also title of a popular song.

Train, Arthur (1875-1946). American novelist, short-story writer, and criminologist. President, National Institute of Arts and Letters. Creator of the famous character of Ephraim Tutt, unquestionably the best known of American lawyers, "more real, more typically true to the legal personality than life itself." The Tutt stories appeared for many years in the Saturday Evening Post and were afterwards collected in book form. Mr. Tutt's Case Book (1937) is required reading in several law schools.

Traitor's Gate. The name of the gate by the river through which prisoners entered the TOWER OF LONDON.

Trajan. In Latin Marcus Ulpius Trajanus (52?-117 A.D.). Roman emperor, appointed by his predecessor Nerva (97). It is said that Trajan, although unbaptized, was delivered from Hell in answer to the prayers of St. Gregory. He is one of the two pagans said to have been admitted to Heaven. See also RIPHEUS.

There was storied on the rock
The exalted glory of the Roman prince,
Whose mighty worth moved Gregory to earn
His mighty conquest—Trajan the emperor.
Dante, Purgatory, xi (1308).

Tramecksan and Slamecksan. The High Heels and Low Heels, the two great political factions of Lilliput, in Swift's Gulliver's Travels (see GULLIVER, LEMUEL). The High Heels are the Tories, and the Low Heels the Radicals, and "the animosity of these two factions runs so high that they will neither eat, nor drink, nor speak to each other." The king was a Tramecksan, but the heir-apparent a Slamecksan.

Tramp, Tramp, Tramp. A famous song of the Civil War written by George Frederick Root (1820-1895), imitating the sound of the marching feet of the infantry. Cf. Rudyard Kipling's famous poem, Boots.

Tramp Abroad, A. A humorous book by Mark TWAIN (1880), the description of a walking trip through the Black Forest and the Alps.

Tranio. A slave in the Mostellaria, a comedy by PLAUTUS. He is a clever rogue who from that time on became a sort of stock character in Roman comedy.

transcendentalism. A New England school of literature and philosophy taking its point of departure from the philosophy of Kant's CRITIQUE OF PURE REASON and affirming the importance of phenomena that transcend the experience of the senses. The Transcendental Club, a group of congenial New Englanders who met from time to time from the year 1836 on, included Ralph Waldo EMERSON, Amos Bronson ALCOTT, Theodore PARKER, Margaret FULLER, Henry THOREAU, Nathaniel HAWTHORNE and William Henry CHANNING. According to the Cambridge History of American Literature, Emerson's Nature "appearing the same year the club was formed may be fittingly considered the philosophical constitution of Transcendentalism." THOREAU and Jones VERY were also associated with the movement, which had THE DIAL as its literary organ.

Transfiguration, Mount of. A mountain top where Jesus went with his disciples Peter and James and John "and he was transfigured before them; and his face did shine as the sun, and his garments became white as the light." Cf. Matt. xvii. 1-9.

transition. A monthly literary magazine, one of the most famous of the LITTLE MAGAZINES of the 1920's, founded in Paris in 1927 with Elliot PAUL and Eugene Jolas as editors. Its purpose was to encourage experimental writing, especially that giving free play to the imagination. Gertrude STEIN, E. E. CUMMINGS, Ernest HEMINGWAY, and a number of European authors and others of the American expatriate groups were among those whose work appeared in its pages. Several sections of James Joyce's Finnegans Wake, then known only as WORK IN PROGRESS, were first published in transition, and the editors and writers of the transition group were among the few persons who knew Joyce's complete plan for his work. The magazine ceased publication in 1930, but was revived in 1940 in the U.S. by Jolas.

Transome, Harold. A leading character in George Eliot's novel FELIX HOLT, THE RADICAL.

Mrs. Transome. The mother of Harold Transome.

Mrs. Transome, whose imperious will had availed little to ward off the great evils of her life, found the opiate for her discontent in the exertion of her will about smaller things. She was not cruel, and she could not enjoy thoroughly what she called every little sign of power her lot had left her. She liked that a tenant should stand bareheaded below her as she sat on horseback. She liked to insist that work done without her orders should be undone from beginning to end.—Ch. 1.

Trapbois, Old. In Scott's FORTUNES OF NIGEL, a miser in Alsatia. Even in his extreme age, "he was believed to understand the plucking of a pigeon better than any man in Alsatia."

Martha Trapbois. The miser's daughter, a cold, decisive, masculine woman, who marries Richie MONIPLIES.

Trapper, The. Natty Bumppo or LEATHER-STOCKING is so called in Cooper's novel, The Prairie.

Traprock, Captain, see CHAPPELL, GEORGE S.

Trasimenus, Lake. Latin name of the modern Lago Trasimeno or Lago di Perugia in Etruria, Italy. It was the scene of a famous battle (217 B.C.) in the Second Punic War. The Carthaginians and Gauls under Hannibal almost completely destroyed a large Roman army under the consul Flaminius.

Traubel, Horace L. (1858-1919). A devoted friend and literary executor of Walt Whitman. His With Walt Whitman in Camden (3 vols.; 1906-1914) is a record of their conversations. His Chants Communal (1904), a sort of prose verse, and still more his Optimos (1914), shows strongly Whitman's influence. Eugene Debs called him the "master democrat of his time." His notes on Whitman are valuable source material.

Traum, Philip. The "MYSTERIOUS STRANGER" in Mark Twain's novel of that title.

Traveller, The. A poem (1764) by Oliver GOLDSMITH. Dr. Johnson is said to have added nine lines to it.

Travels in . . . Remote Regions. See Lemuel GULLIVER.

Travels with a Donkey. A record of travel by foot in the Cévennes (1879) by Robert Louis STEVENSON.

Travers, Edith. Heroine of Conrad's RESUE.

Travers, Pamela (1906-). Australian author. Her books concerning the mythical nurse Mary Poppins are delightful stories for children.

Traviata, La (The Castaway). An opera by VERDI (1853), based on the romance and drama La Dame aux Camélias by Alexandre Dumas fils, better known in America as CA-

MILLE. In the opera the demi-mondaine heroine is Violetta Valery and the man whom she loves but gives up because of his father's protests is called Alfred Germont. The libretto is by Piavé.

Treacle Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Treasure Island. A romance by Robert Louis STEVENSON (1883), a tale of mutiny, piracy and buried treasure. The one-legged pirate, John Silver, sails as sea-cook of the Hispamola, but appears in his true colors later when he heads the mutiny and runs up the black flag, the Jolly Roger.

Trecentisti. The Italian worthies of the Trecento (13th and 14th centuries). They were DANTE, PETRARCH, BOCCACCIO, and others of less note.

tree. The cross on which Jesus was crucified is frequently spoken of in hymns and poetry as the tree. See Acts v. 30: ". . . Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree"; 1 Pet. ii. 24: "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree." The gallows is also called the tree, TYBURN TREE, the fatal tree, etc. the tree of Buddha or of Wisdom. The bot-tree, famous as the scene of Buddha's meditation and enlightenment.

the tree of Diana. See PHILOSOPHER'S TREE.

the tree of liberty. A post or tree set up by the people hung with flags and devices, and crowned with a cap of liberty. In the United States poplars and other trees were planted during the War of Independence, "as symbols of growing freedom." The Jacobins in Paris planted their first trees of liberty in 1790, and used to decorate them with tricolored ribbons, circles to indicate unity, triangles to signify equality, and Caps of Liberty. Trees of liberty were also planted by the Italians in the revolution of 1848.

the Tree of Life and the Tree of Knowledge. Forbidden trees in the Garden of Eden (Gen. ii. 9), the former conferring immortality, the latter, knowledge of good and evil, upon those who ate their fruit. Adam and Eve were cast out of the Garden for eating the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge.

Tree Grows in Brooklyn, A. A novel by Betty Smith (Am. 1943), which sold 2,500,000 copies. Brooklyn is a borough of New York City; the tree was an ailanthus.

Tree, Sir Herbert Beerbohm (1853-1917). English manager and actor, brother of Max BEERBOHM. Manager (1887-1897) of the Haymarket Theater in London; acted in plays by Ibsen, Wilde, Maeterlinck, and Shakespeare. He tried to revive the poetic drama with the plays of Stephen Phillips.

trefa meat. Meat prohibited to the Jews as food because it has not been slaughtered in the orthodox manner; the opposite of kosher meat. It is so called from a Hebrew word signifying "that which is torn."

Tregeagle. A fabulous giant of Dosmary Pool, Bodmin Downs (Cornwall), whose allotted task is to bale out the water with a limpet-shell. When the wintry blast howls over the downs, the people say it is the giant roaring.

Treitschke, Heinrich von (1834-1896). German historian, who supported the Hohenzollerns and increased anti-British sentiment in Germany. His writings glorify the state, and advocate colonial expansion. Author of Deutsche Geschichte im XIX. Jahrhundert (5 vols.; 1879-1894).

Trelawney, Edward John (1792-1881). English adventurer and traveler. Friend and companion of Shelley, at whose death he was present (1822), and of Lord Byron, whom he accompanied to Greece. Author of Adventures of a Younger Son (1831) and Recollections of the Last Days of Shelley and Byron (1858).

Trelawny of the Wells. A comedy of stage life by PINERO (1898). The actress heroine, Rose Trelawny, becomes engaged to a young aristocrat, but breaks her engagement to return to the stage. Nothing daunted, her lover follows and becomes an actor.

Tremont. The original name of Boston, Massachusetts, sometimes used in reference to old Boston.

Tremouille, Louis de la (1460-1525). French general who commanded the army of Charles VII and acted with ferocity toward his prisoners after he had defeated the Duke of Orleans.

Trench, Frederick Herbert (1865-1923). Irish-born British poet. His New Poems (1907) contain the long narrative poem Apollo and the Seaman and other poems of distinction. This book established his reputation. He also wrote for the theater and produced, at the Haymarket, King Lear and The Blue Bird. He spent his last years in Italy.

Trench, Richard Chenevix (1807-1886). Anglican Archbishop of Dublin (1863-1884). Noted philologist, author of On the Study of Words (1851); English Past and Present (1855); etc. Active in the Philological Society, which supported his scheme for the beginning of the Oxford New English Dictionary.

Trenchard, Asa. Titular hero of Tom Taylor's play OUR AMERICAN COUSIN.

Trenck, Baron Franz von der (1711-1749). Austrian soldier. Commanded a regiment of Croat peasants who became widely known for their plundering propensities. He joined the army of Maria Theresa and was court-martialed and imprisoned. His cousin, Baron Friedrich von der Trenck (1726-1794), was a military adventurer in the army of Frederick the Great. He was twice imprisoned and finally executed by Robespierre.

Trent, Anne. In John Dos Passos' U.S.A., a young Texas girl, affectionately known as "Daughter" among her family; a tomboy, fond of riding and swimming, imbued with enthusiasm but emotionally naïve and inexperienced. She visits New York for awhile in an effort to forget her disappointment at the marriage of a man she is in love with to another woman, is bewildered and repelled by the unfamiliar city atmosphere, and is briefly involved with Ben COMPTON in a labor strike in New Jersey. After the death of one of her brothers in an airplane accident, she goes to France during World War I as a relief worker, stopping off on her way to the Near East. In Paris she meets and has a love affair with Richard Ellsworth SAVAGE; when she becomes pregnant, however, he refuses to marry her. In desperation, she takes an airplane ride with a French aviator and is killed in a crash.

Trent, Nell. See LITTLE NELL.

Trent, William Peterfield (1862-1939). Professor of English Literature at Columbia University (1900-1929); author of A History of American Literature 1607-1865 (1903). Founder of the Sewanee Review.

Trent Affair. An international incident which occurred during the Civil War (1861), when Captain Wilkes removed from the British steamer Trent the Confederate commissioners Mason and Slidell who were incarcerated in Boston. They were released (January, 1862) and allowed to go to Europe, due to the attitude of Secretary of State Seward, who feared Great Britain might come into the war on the side of the Confederacy.

Trent's Last Case (1913). A famous mystery novel by E. C. BENTLEY.

Tresham, Thorold Lord. One of the chief characters in Browning's BLOT ON THE 'SCUTCHEON.

Tressady, Sir George. A leading character in Mrs. Humphry Ward's novel of that title. A sequel to MARCELLA.

Trevelyan, Sir George Otto (1838-1928). English historian and statesman. He wrote and edited The Life and Letters of Lord Macaulay (1876). A well-known work of his is The American Revolution (6 vols.; 1899-1914). His third son, George Macaulay Trevelyan (1876-), also a historian, was regius professor of modern history at Cambridge (1927-1940). He is the author of British History in the Nineteenth Century, 1782-1901 (1922); History of England (1926); and England Under Queen Anne (3 vols.; 1930-1934).

Trevena, John. Pen name of Ernest George Henham (1870–). Canadian poet and novelist.

Trivisa, John de (1326–1412). English translator. Fellow at Oxford (1362–1379). His English version (1387) of Higden's Polychronicon is one of the most vigorous examples of early English prose.

triads. Three subjects more or less connected treated as a group, as: the Creation, Redemption, and Resurrection; Brahma, Vishnu, and Siva; Alexander the Great, Julius Caesar, and Napoleon; Law, Physics, and Divinity.

The Welsh Triads are collections of historic facts, mythological traditions, moral maxims, or rules of poetry disposed in groups of three for mnemonic purposes.

Trial, The (Der Prozess). A novel by Franz KAFKA, published in 1925. It deals with the sudden and mystifying arrest of Joseph K., a bank assessor in a German city, for a crime which he is unaware of having committed. He is never told what charges have been leveled against him, and he is unable to discover the nature or the source of the authority of the secret law court which has condemned him and is located in a ramshackle building in the tenement district of the city. The bank assessor tries to defend himself and frantically seeks help from anyone who appears to have influence with the mysterious authorities. Through LENI, a little servant, he secures an interview with his advocate, TITORELLI, but receives no help, and Leni in a moment of sympathy, advises him to confess and throw himself on the mercy of the court. His guilt is already assumed, and he learns there are only two alternatives for the mitigation of punishment left open to an accused man. One is indefinite postponement of the case; the other is a temporary release involving possible re-arrest at any time. Joseph K. is unable to win either of these, largely because he attempts to resist the authority of the court. Eventually he is apprehended by two agents of the mysterious organization and murdered by them.

Like Kafka's other famous novel, THE CASTLE, which is regarded in some respects as a companion work, The Trial is considered to be a symbolic presentation of the relation between mankind and divine authority. The tyrannical, brutal, inefficient, and insanely irrational system of law courts that condemns Joseph K. is interpreted as the average human misapprehension of the revealed laws of God, for which neither God nor the original form of the laws, but rather man's own imperfect understanding, is responsible. If a man insists on following his own human and faulty conceptions of reason and right in the face of divine retribution (as in The Trial) or in the pursuit of divine grace (as in The Castle), his fate is certain. It has been pointed out that in both novels the non-intellectuals—the peasants, the tenement dwellers, the courtroom attendants, the amoral slum-girls—are in a secure position with respect to the official bureaucracies because they obey commands unquestioningly, while K. and Joseph K., the heroes, men of some intellect and education who try to impose their own standards on the situations in which they find themselves, are continually frustrated in their aims and doomed to punishment.

The Trial, the most widely known and most influential of Kafka's works, has been highly praised for its moving characterization of Joseph K. in his vain struggle against a power he cannot understand, and for its effective creation of an atmosphere of nightmare horror.

Trial by Jury. A one-act operetta (1875) by W. S. GILBERT with music by Sir Arthur SULLIVAN.

Triamond. Son of the fairy Agape, and brother to Diamond and Priamond, in Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE (Bk. iv). He is a champion of friendship, and wins the prize on the second day of the tournament after being overcome by SATYRANE (IV. iv). He was the husband of Canace.

Triboulet. A nickname given to Francis Hotman, court fool of Louis XII. This worthy is introduced by Rabelais in GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL and by Victor HUGO in his tragedy Le Roi s'amuse. In Verdi's opera based on the latter he appears as RIGOLETTO.

Tribune and Herald Tribune. A New York newspaper, founded by Horace GREELEY in 1841. He merged his earlier New Yorker with the Tribune in the same year. He supported Free Soil and anti-slavery, and the administration in the Civil War, and advocated universal amnesty and suffrage after the war. He edited the paper till his death, when Whitelaw Reid took over. Under him and his son, Ogden Mills Reid, the Tribune was the country's most powerful Republican newspaper. In 1924 the Tribune bought the New York Herald and became the Herald Tribune. Its large Sunday edition is distinguished by its literary supplement, Books, edited by Irita Van Doren, now called the Weekly Book Review. It holds a yearly Herald Tribune Forum of public opinion, which is of value. Its chief columnist is Walter Lippmann. It is one of the best morning papers in the U.S.

Tribunes, last of the. Cola di RIENZI, who assumed the title of "Tribune of liberty, peace, and justice." Rienzi is the hero of one of BULWER LYTTON's novels.

tricolor. A flag of three broad strips of different colors, especially the national standard of France, blue, white, and red. The first flag of the Republicans was green. The tricolor was adopted July 11, when the people were disgusted with the king for dismissing Necker. The popular tale is that the insurgents in 1789 had adopted for their flag the two colors, red and blue, but that Lafayette persuaded them to add the Bourbon white, to show that they bore no hostility to the king.

tricotseuses (Fr., "the knitters"). Parisian women who, during the French Revolution, used to attend the meetings of the Convention and, while they went on with their tricotant (knitting), encouraged the leaders in their bloodthirsty excesses. They gained for themselves the additional title funies of the guillotine. Cf. also Dickens' TALE OF TWO CITIES.

trigon. The junction of three signs. The zodiac is partitioned into four trigons, named respectively after the four elements: the watery trigon, Cancer, Scorpio and Pisces; the fiery, Aries, Leo and Sagittarius, the earthy, Taurus, Virgo, and Capricornus; and the any, Gemini, Libra and Aquarius.

Trilby. A novel by George DU MAURIER, in eight parts (1894). The heroine is Trilby O'Ferrall, and the hero, "Little Billee," or William Bagot. When the novel opens, Trilby is about seventeen, earning her living as an artist's model. She becomes intimate with three art-students in Paris: a big Yorkshire Englishman called Taffy, the Laird of Cockpen, a Scotchman, and Little Billee, an English artist. They all fall in love with Trilby, but Little Billee proposes marriage, and, after nineteen refusals, Trilby accepts his proposal. His mother now speeds from Devonshire and induces Trilby to break off the match. Trilby falls into the hands of an Hungarian musician, who assumes the name of Svengali. He teaches her singing, under mesmeric influence, and when under this influence she is the best vocalist that ever lived. But when she appears before the British public, Svengali, who is sitting in the stage-box, dies suddenly of heart-disease, and Trilby loses her voice entirely. She now languishes, and soon dies, beloved by everyone.

Charles NODIER, in 1822, published a novellette of the same name, but this Trilby was a male spirit who attached itself to a fisherman, fell in love with his wife, and performed for her all kinds of household services.

Trim, Corporal. In Sterne's TRISTRAM SHANDY, Uncle Toby's orderly.

Trim, instead of being the opposite, is . . . the duplicate of Uncle Toby . . . yet . . . is the character of the common soldier nicely discriminated from that of the officer. His whole carriage bears traces of the drill-yard, which are wanting in the superior. Under the name of a servant, he is in reality a companion, and a delightful mixture of familiarity . . .

and respect . . . It is enough to say that Trim was worthy to walk behind his master.—Elwin, editor of the Quarterly Review.

Trimalchio. The vulgar and ostentatious multi-millionaire of PETRONIUS ARBITER'S Satyricon (1st century A. D.); the subject of allusion on account of the colossal and extravagant banquet that he gave.

Trimurti. (Sanskrit, "having three forms"). In Hindu mythology, the threefold impersonation of the Supreme Spirit: Brahma, the creator; Vishnu, the preserver; Siva, the destroyer.

Trinculo. A jester in Shakespeare's THE TEMPEST.

Trinity. The three Persons in one God as the Christian God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost.

And in this Trinity none is afore or after other; none is greater, or less than another, but the whole three Persons are co-eternal together and co-equal.—The Athanasian Creed.

Tertullian (160–240) introduced the word into Christian theology. Almost every mythology has a three-fold deity. See THREE; also TRIMURTI.

Trinity College. The largest of the colleges at Cambridge University in England. It has a library designed by Sir Christopher Wren and has had as masters and scholars many distinguished literary figures.

Trinovant, see TROYNOVANT.

Tripitaka (Pali tipitaka, "the three baskets"). The three classes into which the sacred writings of the Buddhists are divided, viz., the Sutrapitaka (Basket of Aphorisms or Discourses) or Sutras, the Vinayapitaka (Basket of Disciplinary Directions), and Abidhammapitaka (Basket of Metaphysics).

Triple Alliance. A treaty entered into by England, Sweden, and Holland against Louis XIV in 1668. It ended in the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle.

A treaty between England, France, and Holland against Spain in 1717. In the following year it was joined by Austria, and became a Quadruple Alliance.

Triple Entente. See ENTENTE.

tripos (Gr. treis, "three," pous, "foot"). A Cambridge term, meaning the three honor classes in which the best men are grouped at the final examination, whether of Mathematics, Law, Theology, or Natural Science, etc. The word is often applied to the voluntary classical examination, so called because the champion in the old university disputations held during the admission of graduates to their degrees used to sit on a three-legged stool.

Triptolemus. A Greek hero and demi-god, worshiped chiefly at Eleusis as the giver to man of grain and the first instructor in agriculture.

triptych. See under DIPTYCH.

Trismegistus (Gr., "thrice great"). A name given to HERMES, the Egyptian philosopher, or Thoth, counselor of Osiris, to whom is attributed a host of inventions, among others the art of writing in hieroglyphics, the first code of Egyptian laws, harmony, astrology, the lute and lyre, magic, and all mysterious sciences.

Trissotin. In Molière's FEMMES SAVANTES an affected poet and bel esprit. Philaminte, a femme savante, wishes him to marry her daughter Henriette, but Henriette is in love with Clitandre. The difficulty is soon solved by the announcement that Henriette's father is on the verge of bankruptcy, whereupon Trissotin makes his bow and retires. Trissotin is said to have been meant for the Abbé Cotin, who affected to be poet, gallant, and preacher. His dramatic name was "Tricotin."

Tristan or Sir Tristram, Tristrem or Tristram. A hero of medieval romance whose exploits, though originally unconnected with it, became attached to the Arthurian cycle, he himself being named as one of the Knights of the ROUND TABLE. There are many versions of his story, which is, roughly, that he is cured of a wound by ISOLT, Iseult, or Isolde (Ysolde), daughter of the king of Ireland, and on his return to Cornwall tells his uncle, KING MARK, of the beautiful princess. Mark sends him to solicit her hand in marriage, and is accepted. Tristan escorts her to England, but on the way they both unknowingly partake of a magic potion and become irretrievably enamored of each other. Isolt marries the King, and on his discovering her with Tristan, the latter flees to Brittany, where, according to some versions, he marries another Isolt—Isolt of Brittany, or of the White Hands. He then goes on his adventures, and, being wounded, learns that he can be cured only by his first Isolt. A messenger is dispatched to Cornwall, and is ordered to hoist a white sail if he brings her back. The vessel comes in sight with a white sail displayed, but Isolt of the White Hands, out of jealousy, tells her husband that the sail is black, and Tristan expires.

This version of the story forms the basis of Wagner's opera Tristan und Isolde (1865). There are other accounts of his death. Thus Malory's MORTE D'ARTHUR says:

When by means of a treaty sir Tristram brought again La Beale Isond unto king Mark, from Joyous Guard, the false traitor king Mark slew the noble knight as he sat harping before his lady, La Beale Isond, with a sharp-ground glaive, which he thrust into him from behind his back.—Pt. iii. 147 (1470).

Tennyson in his IDYLLS OF THE KING has it that Sir Tristram, dallying with his aunt, hung a ruby carcanet round her throat, and, as he kissed her neck—

Out of the dark, just as the lips had touched, Behind him rose a shadow and a shriek—
"Mark's way!" said Mark, and clove him thro' the brain.

Idylls The Last Tournament.

The story of Tristan is of Celtic origin. It was the subject of many medieval romances, notably versions by Thomas and Béroul, a French poem by CHRÉTIEN DE TROYES (now lost), and a German poem by Gottfried von Strassburg based on that of Chrétien and later continued by Ulrich von Thurheim and Heinrich von Freiburg.

Aside from Tennyson's Last Tournament (Idylls of the King) and Wagner's opera, Tristan und Isolde, referred to above, in modern literature it forms the subject of Matthew ARNOLD's Tristram and Iseult and SWINBURNE's Tristan of Lyonesse.

Sir Tristram's book. Any book of venery, hunting or hawking is so called. Tristan was famed as the originator of many hunting terms and feats.

Tristram. A poem in blank verse (1927), one of a trilogy on King Arthur, by Edwin Arlington ROBINSON. It was awarded the Pulitzer prize for poetry.

Tristram Shandy. A famous novel by Laurence STERNE (1760-1767), more formally entitled The Life and Opinions of Tristram Shandy. Tristram's father, Water Shandy, is a metaphysical Don Quixote in his way, full of superstitions and idle conceits. He believes in long noses and propitious names, but his son's nose is crushed, and his name becomes Tristram instead of Trismegistus. Tristram's Uncle Toby, wounded at the siege of Namur and forced to retire on half pay, is benevolent and generous, simple as a child, brave as a lion, and gallant as a courtier. His modesty with Widow Wadman and his military tastes are especially noteworthy. HAZLITT said of My Uncle Toby that he is "one of the finest compliments ever paid to human nature." He is said to be drawn from Sterne's father. Tristram's mother is the beau-ideal of nonentity (described by Scott as a "good lady of the pococurante school"); and of Tristram himself, we hear almost more of him before he was born than after he burst upon an astonished world.

Triton. In classic myth, son of NEPTUNE, represented as a fish with a human head. It is this sea god that makes the roaring of the ocean by blowing through his shell.

a Triton among the minnows. The sun among inferior lights.

Triumph of the Egg, The. A book of impressions from American life in stories and poems by Sherwood ANDERSON (1921).

Trivia. John GAY's name for his invented goddess of streets and ways. His burlesque in three books so entitled (1716) is a mine of information on the outdoor life of Queen Anne's time.

Thou, Trivia, aid my song.
Through spacious streets conduct thy bard along . . .
To pave thy realm, and smooth the broken ways
Earth from her womb a flinty tribute pays.

Trivia, Bk. i.

Diana was called Trivia by the Latins in reference to her guardianship over all trivia or places where three roads came together. Trivia is also the plural of TRIVIUM.

Trivia is also the title of a collection of short humorous sketches by Logan Pearsall SMITH.

trivium (Lat. tres, "three," via, "a road"). The three roads to learning in the Middle Ages, i.e., Grammar, Rhetoric, and Logic, forming the lower division of the seven liberal arts. See QUADRIVIUM.

trochee. In prosody, a poetic foot consisting of a long syllable followed by a short one, as hateful, legal, holy. Trochaic verse is verse based on trochees. The meter is further designated by the number of poetic feet in the line, as trochaic trimeter, tetrameter, etc. The latter is the most common trochaic meter, exemplified by the following lines:

Tell me not in mournful numbers
Life is but an empty dream
For the soul is dead that slumbers
And things are not what they seem.
Longfellow, Psalm of Life.

trochilus. A small Egyptian bird fabled by the ancients to enter with impunity the mouth of the crocodile and to pick its teeth, especially of a leech which greatly tormented the creature. Allusions to it are common in 16th- and 17th-century authors.

Not half so bold
The puny bird that dares, with teasing hum,
Within the crocodile's stretched jaws to come.
Thomas Moore, Lalla Rookh, Pt. i.

troglydites (from Gr. troggle, "cave," and duein, "to go into"). A people of Ethiopia, southeast of Egypt, so called because they lived in cave dwellings, remains of which are still to be seen along the banks of the Nile. Hence the term is applied to other cave-dwellers, and, figuratively, to those who live in seclusion. There were troglydites of Syria and Arabia also, according to Strabo, and Pliny asserts that they fed on serpents.

Troil, Magnus. In Scott's PIRATE, the old udaller of Zetland.

Brenda Troil. The udaller's younger daughter, who marries Mordaunt Mertoun.

Minna Troil. The udaller's eldest daughter, in love with the Pirate.

Ulla Troil. See NORNA OF THE FITFUL HEAD.

Troilus. In classic myth, the prince of chivalry, one of the sons of PRIAM, killed by ACHILLES in the siege of Troy (Homer's Iliad).

The loves of Troilus and Cressida, celebrated by SHAKESPEARE and CHAUCER, form no part of the old classic tale. Their story appeared for the first time in DARES PHRYGIUS and Dietys Cretensis, then about the 12th century in BENOÎT DE ST.-MAURE, and in the 13th century in GUIDO DELLE COLONNE. Later it passed to BOCCACCIO, whose Il Filostrato (1344)—where PANDARUS first appears—was the basis of Chaucer's Troilus and Criseyde. Shakespeare's drama by the same name, Troilus and Cressida (ca. 1609) follows the general outline of Chaucer's narrative. Cressida or Cressid, daughter of Calchas, a Grecian priest, is beloved by Troilus. They vow eternal fidelity to each other, and as pledges of their vow Troilus gives the maiden a sleeve, and Cressid gives the Trojan prince a glove. Hardly has the vow been made when an exchange of prisoners is agreed to. Diomed gives up three Trojan princes, and is to receive Cressid in lieu thereof. Cressid vows to remain constant, and Troilus swears to rescue her. She is led off to the Grecian's tent, and soon gives all her affections to Diomed, and even bids him wear the sleeve that Troilus gave her in token of his love. Hence Cressida has become a byword for infidelity.

As false
As air, as water, wind, or sandy earth,
As fox to lamb, as wolf to heifer's calf,
Pard to the hind, or step-dame to her son;
"Yea," let them say, to stick the heart of falsehood
"As false as Cressid."

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, iii. 2.

as true as Troilus. Troilus is meant by Shakespeare to be the type of constancy, and Cressida the type of female inconstancy.

After all comparisons of truth . . .
"As true as Troilus" shall crown up the verse.
And sanctify the numbers

Troilus and Cressida, iii. 2

Troilus verse. Another name for RHYME ROYAL.

Trojan, a regular. A fine fellow, with good courage and plenty of spirit; what the French call a brave homme. The Trojans in Homer's ILIAD and Virgil's AENEID are described as truthful, brave, patriotic and confiding.

Trojan Horse, The. A "political parable" in prose and verse (1937) by Christopher MORLEY. Made into a play by the author.

Trojan War. The legendary war sung by Homer in the ILIAD as having been waged for ten years by the confederated Greeks against the men of Troy and their allies, in consequence of PARIS, son of PRIAM, the Trojan king, having carried off HELEN, wife of MENE LAUS, King of Lacedemon (or of Sparta). The last year of the siege is the subject of the Iliad; the burning of Troy and the flight of Aeneas is told by Virgil in his AENEID.

There is no doubt whatever that the story of the siege of Troy has some historical basis, but when it took place is purely a matter of conjecture. Many dates, ranging from the 11th to the 14th centuries B. C., have been assigned to it.

Trojan Women, The. A Greek tragedy (415 B. C.) by EURIPIDES dealing with the destruction of Troy.

Trollope, Anthony (1815-1882). English novelist, known for his simple, natural and semi-realistic stories of English Victorian life. His best-known novels are those included in two series, called Chronicles of Barsetshire (see BARSETSHIRE) and PARLIAMENTARY NOVELS. The first series consists of The Warden (1855); Barchester Towers (1857); Doctor Thorne (1858); Framley Parsonage (1861); The Small House at Allington (1864); The Last Chronicle of Barset (1867). Included in the second series are PHINEAS FINN (1869); Phineas Redux (1874); The Prime Minister (1876); The Duke's Children (see OMNIUM, DUKE OF; 1880). Among other works by Trollope are The Macdermots of Ballycloran (1847); The Kellys and the O'Kellys (1848); The Belton Estate (1865); THE CLAVERINGS (1867); THE EUSTACE DIAMONDS (1873); Ayala's Angel (1881); Dr. Wortle's School (1881); numerous travel books; a study of W. M. Thackeray (1879); and an Autobiography (1883). Cf. The Trollopes (1945), by Lucy and Richard Stebbins.

Trollope, Frances, née Milton (1780-1863). English novelist, mother of Anthony Trollope. She visited America and wrote the rather unkind book, Domestic Manners of the Americans (1832). Author of many novels, among them The Vicar of Wrexhill (1837); The Widow Barnaby (1839); and The Widow Married (1840).

trolls. Dwarfs of Northern mythology, living in underground caverns or beneath hills; they are represented as stumpy, misshapen, and humpbacked, inclined to thieving, and fond of carrying off children and substituting their own. These hill people, as they are called, are especially averse to noise, from a recollection of the time when THOR used to be forever flinging his hammer after them. The Troll King is a character in Ibsen's PEER GYNT.

trope. A figure of speech. A word or phrase used out of its ordinary usage in such a way as to give life to an idea. The most important types of trope are METAPHOR, METONYMY, SYNECDOCHE, IRONY.

Trophonius. An architect, celebrated in Greek legend as the builder of the temple of APOLLO at Delphi. After his death he was deified and had an oracle in a cave near Lebadeia, Boeotia, which was so awe-inspiring that those who entered and consulted the oracle never smiled again. Hence a melancholy or habitually terrified man was said to have visited the cave of Trophonius.

Tropic of Cancer and Tropic of Capricorn. Two books (1931 and 1939) by Henry MILLER.

Trotsky, Leon. Real name Lev Davidovich Bronstein (1877-1940). Russian Communist leader associated with Lenin. After the Soviet Revolution he became people's commissar for foreign affairs (1917). After Lenin's death (1924), Stalin defeated him in securing control of the Communist party. He was expelled from the party (1927), being charged with subversive activities, and banished from Russia (1929). He lived in Mexico (1937-1940) where he was murdered. Author of The Defense of Terrorism (1921); Literature and Revolution (1925); My Life (1930; with Max Eastman); History of the Russian Revolution (3 vols.; 1932); etc.

Trotter, Job. In Dickens' PICKWICK PAPERS, servant to Alfred JINGLE. He is a sly, canting rascal, who has, however, the virtue of fidelity to his master. Mr. Pickwick's generosity touches his heart, and he shows sincere gratitude to his benefactor.

Trotwood, Miss Betsey. In Dickens' DAVID COPPERFIELD, great-aunt of David Copperfield. Her bête noir is donkeys. A dozen times a day she rushes on the green before her house to drive off the donkeys and donkey-boys. She effectively conceals her tenderness of heart under a snappish austerity of manner. In her younger days she married a handsome man, who ill-used her and ran away, but sponges on her for money till he dies. Miss Betsey takes the runaway David Copperfield in, defends him with spirit against the MURDSTONES and becomes most devoted to him.

Troubadors or Troubadours. Minstrels of the south of France in the 11th, 12th, and 13th centuries; so called from the Provençal verb trobar, "to find" or "invent" (cf. "poet," which means "a maker.") They wrote in the langue d'oc, principally on love and chivalry according to the conventions of COURTLY LOVE. Leading troubador poets were Bernart de Ventadour, Bertran de Born, Geoffrey Rudel, Peire Vidal, Guiraut de Bornelh, and Guilhelm de Cabestanh.

See also TROUVÈRES.

Troubetzkoy, Princess. Amélie Rives (1863-1945). American popular romantic novelist, married to the portrait painter Prince Pierre Troubetzkoy. Her play, The Young Elizabeth, was awarded a prize in 1937. Her first novel, The Quick or the Dead (1888), was a sensation.

Trouillogan's advice. None at all; "yes and no." In Rabelais' GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL, when Pantagruel asks the philosopher Trouillogan whether PANURGE should marry or not, the reply is "Yes." "What say you?" asks the prince. "What you have heard," answers

Trouillogan. "What have I heard?" says Pan-tagruel. "What I have spoken," rejoins the sage. "Good," says the prince; "but tell me plainly, shall Panurge marry or let it alone?" "Neither," answers the oracle. "How?" says the prince; "that cannot be." "Then both," says Trouillogan.

Trouvères. The troubadors of the north of France, in the 12th, 13th, and 14th centuries, so called from Fr. trouver, "to find or invent." See TROUBADORS. Their work comprises chiefly narrative poems.

Trovatore, Il (The Troubador). An opera by VERDI (1853) based on a Spanish drama by Gatteerez. The scene is laid in 15th century Biscay and Aragon. The heroine, Leonora, is in love with Manrico, a troubador, who has been brought up by the gypsy Azucena as her son but is in reality the kidnaped brother of the Count di Luna, who is also a suitor for the hand of Leonora. The Count captures Azucena, and Manrico is also made prisoner in an attempt to rescue her. Leonora now offers herself to the Count in return for the life of Manrico, but drinks poison and dies. Manrico, who has refused to leave her, is forthwith executed, and a moment afterwards the dying gypsy tells the horrified Count that he has caused the death of his own brother.

Trowbridge, John Townsend. Pseudonym Paul Creyton (1827-1916). American writer of books for boys. Among his verse is one famous ballad, Darius Green and His Flying Machine.

Trowbridge, Walt. In Sinclair Lewis' IT CAN'T HAPPEN HERE, a former U.S. Senator, opponent of BUZZ WINDRIP in the presidential election. When he is defeated and Windrip begins to set up a Fascist dictatorship, Trowbridge takes refuge in Canada and initiates an underground revolutionary movement.

Troxartas (Gr., "bread-eater"). King of the mice in THE BATTLE OF THE FROGS AND MICE, and father of Psycarpax, who is drowned.

Fix their council . . .
Where great Troxartas crowned in glory reigns . . .
Psycarpax' father, father now no more!
Battle of the Frogs and Mice, Bk. i. (Parnell).

Troy.
the Siege of Troy. See ILIAD; HELEN; TROJAN WAR; etc.

Troy town. A Cornish expression for a labyrinth of streets, a regular maze. Troy was formerly used figuratively of any scene of disorder or confusion; a room with its furniture all higgledy-piggledy, for instance, would be called a Troy fair.

Troy, Sergeant. A character in Hardy's FAR FROM THE MADDING CROWD.

Troynovant. The name given by the early chroniclers to London, anciently the city of the Trinobantes; a corruption of Trinovant. As Troynovant was assumed to mean The New Troy, the name gave rise to the tradition that BRUT, a Trojan refugee (from whom was derived the name Britain) came to England and founded London.

Truce of God. In 1041 the Church attempted to limit private war, and decreed that there should be no hostilities between Lent and Advent or from the Thursday to the next Monday at the time of great festivals. This Truce of God was confirmed by the Lateran Council in 1179, and was agreed to by England, France, Italy, and other countries, but little attention was ever paid to it.

Trudeau, Edward Livingston (1848-1915). American doctor who established the Adirondack Cottage Sanatorium, now the Trudeau Sanatorium, where for the first time in America open-air treatment was tried for tuberculosis. He also established at Saranac, New York, the first laboratory for the study of tuberculosis (1894).

Trueman, Adam. A farmer in Mrs. Mowatt Ritchie's comedy FASHION.

Trulliber, Parson. In Fielding's JOSEPH ANDREWS, a fat clergyman, ignorant, selfish, and slothful. He is pictured in sharp contrast to the Parson ADAMS of the same novel.

Truman, Harry S. (1884-). Thirty-third president of the United States, succeeding to the presidency on the sudden death of Franklin D. Roosevelt (April 12, 1945). Formerly vice-president of the U.S. and U.S. senator from Missouri.

Trumbull, John (1750-1831). American poet, a member of the HARTFORD WITS, known as the author of satires and bombastic patriotic poems in the neo-Classical style. See NEO-CLASSICISM. His works include The Progress of Dullness (1772-1773), a satire on the methods of contemporary education; An Elegy on the Times (1774), a patriotic piece; McFINGAL (1782), an anti-British satire, extremely popular in its time; essays in the style of THE SPECTATOR; several anonymous revolutionary essays; and a number of incidental poems. He also collaborated with Joel BARLOW and other members of the Hartford school on THE ANARCHIAD.

Trumbull, considered the most popular of the Hartford Wits, came of an outstanding Connecticut family and began his career as a child prodigy. He learned to read and write at the age of two, passed the Yale entrance examinations at the age of seven, and entered the college at thirteen. During the period just before the Revolution he studied law in the office of John Adams in Boston and took part in the political agitation of the time. Later he was a representative in the state legislature of Connecticut and a judge in the superior and supreme courts. He died of tuberculosis.

Trumbull, Jonathan (1710-1785). Early American statesman; governor of Connecticut (1769-1784) and a great supporter of the American Revolution. Washington's nickname for him, "Brother Jonathan," has become a stock phrase to denote the typical American.

trumpet.

the Feast of Trumpets. A Jewish festival, held on the first two days of Tisri (about mid-September to mid-October), the beginning of the ecclesiastical year, at which the blowing of trumpets formed a prominent part of the ritual.

trunk hose. Short padded breeches reaching about half way down the thigh. Often slashed to show lining. Sixteenth and early seventeenth-century dress for men.

Trunnion, Commodore Hawser. In Smollett's ADVENTURES OF PEREGRINE PICKLE, a one-eyed naval veteran, who has retired from the service in consequence of injuries received in engagements but still keeps garrison in his own house, which is defended with drawbridge and ditch. He sleeps in a hammock and makes his servants sleep in hammocks, as on board ship, takes his turn on watch, and indulges his naval tastes in various other ways. Lieutenant Jack Hatchway is his companion. When he goes to be married, he rides on a hunter which he steers like a ship, according to the compass, tacking about, that he may not "go right in the wind's eye." See also WEMMICK.

Truth, The. A drama by Clyde FITCH (1906). The heroine, Mrs. Warder, accused by her husband of a love affair with Fred Lindon of which the jealous Mrs. Lindon has informed him, tells so many lies to protect herself that she loses all chance of making him believe the truth, that the affair is a harmless flirtation. She goes home to her father, Roland, but a few moments after she has been blaming him for bringing her up to tell lies as a matter of course, he sends for Warder on the pretext that she is sick. Warder learns she has been perfectly well and is more infuriated than ever, until she says she has learned to hate lies, whether she tells them or not, and begs to be taken back.

Truth about Blayds, The. A play (1922) by A. A. MILNE, about a literary impostor.

Truthful James. An imaginary character who is the narrator in a number of Bret HARTE's poems, notably The Society on the Stanislaw and THE HEATHEN CHINESE. The latter was first published under the title Plain Language from Truthful James.

Tryamour, Sir. The hero of an old metrical novel and the model of all knightly virtues.

Tryan, Rev. Edgar. In George Eliot's JANET'S REPENTANCE the curate who is responsible for Janet Dempster's regeneration.

Tryanon. Daughter of the fairy king who lived on the island of Oléron. "She was as white as lily in May," and married Sir Launfal, King Arthur's steward, whom she carried off to "Olhroun her jolif isle," and, as the romance says—

Since saw him in this land no man,
Ne no more of him tell I n'can
For soothé without lie.

Thomas Chester, Sir Launfal (15th cent.).

Trygaeus. The hero of the Greek comedy The Peace by ARISTOPHANES (415 B. C.). This comedy was produced in the midst of the Peloponnesian war. The hero rides a dung-beetle to Olympus in search of Peace and finds that she has been thrown down a well. The gods are all away, so he rescues her and brings her back to Athens.

Tsung-Li Yamen. The former department for foreign affairs in China, through which, from its establishment in 1861 until 1901, foreign ministers addressed their communications to the Emperor and the Government.

Tuatha De Danann. A legendary race of super-human heroes which invaded Ireland, overthrew the Fírbolgs and Fomors, and were themselves overthrown by the Milesians, who later worshiped them as gods.

Tub, Tale of a. See TALE OF A TUB.

Tubal. In Shakespeare's MERCHANT OF VENICE, a wealthy Jew, the friend of SHYLOCK.

Tubalcain. In the Old Testament, the first "forger of every cutting instrument of brass and iron."

Tuck, Friar. Chaplain and steward of Robin Hood, introduced by Scott in IVANHOE. He is a pudgy, paunchy, humorous, self-indulgent, and combative clerical Falstaff. His costume consists of a russet habit of the Franciscan order, a red corded girdle with gold tassel, red stockings, and a wallet. The name was probably given him because his dress is tucked by a girdle at the waist; thus Chaucer says, "Tucked he was, as is a frere about."

In this our spacious isle I think there is not one
But he hath heard some talk of Hood and Little John;
Of Tuck, the merry friar, which many a sermon made

In praise of Robin Hood, his outlaws, and their trade.
Drayton, Polyolbion, xxvi. 311-16.

Tucker, Luther (1802-1873). American journalist, associated with the magazine The Country Gentleman (1853-1873).

Tucker, Sophie (1884-). American vaudeville actress and singer, who began at Tony Pastor's, joined the Ziegfeld Follies (1909) and later the Shubert Gaieties and the Earl Carroll Vanities. She has also been successful in London and New York cabarets.

Tuckerman, Frederick Goddard (1821-1873). American poet, rediscovered by Witter BYNNER, who edited The Sonnets of Frederick Goddard Tuckerman (1931).

Tuckerman, Henry Theodore (1813-1871). American essayist and poet. He wrote sonnets in the Petrarchan manner and the stiffness of his writing gave origin to the word "tucker-manity."

Tudor, Antony (1909-). American dancer and choreographer. His most famous ballets are Lilac Garden (1936) to Chausson's Poème, and Pillar of Fire (1942), to SCHÖNBERG's Verklärte Nacht.

Tuileries. One of the oldest palaces in Paris. It has superb gardens which were laid out by Louis XIV. The original palace, begun by Catherine de Médicis, is no longer in existence. The name means "brickyard" and is explained by the previous use of the site it occupies.

Tukhachevski, Mikhail Nikolaevich (1893-1937). Soviet general. In World War I, fought against Kolchak and Denikin. Marshal of the Soviet Union; accused of treason and executed (1937).

Tulliver, Maggie. The heroine of George Eliot's MILL ON THE FLOSS:

Maggie, in her brown frock, with her eyes reddened and her heavy hair pushed back, looking from the bed where her father lay, to the dull walls of this sad chamber which was the centre of her world, was a creature full of eager, passionate longings for all that was beautiful and glad; thirsty for all knowledge; with an ear straining after dreamy music that died away and would not come near to her; with a blind unconscious yearning for something that would link together the wonderful impressions of this mysterious life, and give her soul a sense of home in it—Bk. 3, v.

When Maggie was not angry, she was as dependent on kind or cold words as a daisy on sunshine or the cloud; the need of being loved would always subdue her.—Bk. 6, iv.

Tom Tulliver. Maggie's beloved brother.

Tom never did the same sort of foolish things as Maggie, having a wonderful, instinctive discernment of what would turn to his advantage or disadvantage; and so it happened that though he was much more wilful and inflexible than Maggie, his mother hardly ever called him naughty. But if Tom did make a mistake of that sort, he espoused it, and stood by it; he "didn't mind" . . . If Tom Tulliver whipped a gate, he was convinced, not that the whipping of gates by all boys was a justifiable art, but that he, Tom Tulliver, was justifiable in whipping that particular gate, and he wasn't going to be sorry—Bk. 1, vii.

Tullus Hostilius. Legendary Roman king (673-641 B. C.). His period was distinguished by war between the Horatii and the Curiatii.

Tully. Marcus Tullius CICERO 106-43 B. C.), the great Roman orator.

Tully, Jim (1891-1947). Popular American novelist. Emmet Lawler (1922); Beggars of Life (1924); Jarnegan (1925); Circus Parade (1927); Blood on the Moon (1931); A Hollywood Decameron (1937); Biddy Brogan's Boy (1942); etc.

Tully, Richard Walton (1877-1945). California dramatist. Co-author, with David Belasco, of The Rose of the Rancho (1906). His play The Bird of Paradise (1912) was made into a musical comedy (1930).

Tumbledown Dick. Anything that will not stand firmly. "Dick" is Richard Cromwell (1626-1712), the Protector's son, who was but a tottering wall at best.

Tumulty, Joseph Patrick (1879-). Private secretary to Woodrow Wilson as Governor of New Jersey (1910-1913) and President of the U.S. (1913-1921). Author of Woodrow Wilson as I Know Him (1921).

Tunney, Gene (1898-). American heavyweight champion. In World War II, in charge of physical training for the U.S. Navy.

Tunning of Elynour Rummung, The. A poem by John SKELTON which describes low life in England with a Hogarthian touch.

Tupman, Tracy. In Dickens' PICKWICK PAPERS, an M. P. C. (Member of the Pickwick Club), a sleek, fat young man, of very amorous disposition. He falls in love with every pretty girl he sees, and is consequently always getting into trouble.

Tupper, Martin Farquhar (1810-1889). English versifier whose Proverbial Philosophy (1838) was very popular and attained international vogue.

tu quoque (Lat., "you too"). A retort implying that the one addressed is in the same boat as the speaker—that his case is no better and no worse.

the tu quoque style of argument. Personal invective; the argument of personal application; argumentum ad hominem.

Turberville, George (1540?-1610). A pioneer in English blank verse. He wrote metrical letters on Russia which appear in Hakluyt's Voyages. He also translated from Ovid, and wrote on falconry.

Turcaret. One who has become rich by hook or by crook, and, having nothing else to show, makes a great display of his wealth; from the hero of the comedy of the same name (1709) by LE SAGE.

Turenne, Vicomte de. Henri de la Tour d'Auvergne (1611-1675). French soldier. Napoleon called him the greatest military leader. He served through the Thirty Years' War and helped to hasten its end. He commanded armies under Louis XIV, and, through the king's influence, abandoned his original faith and became a Catholic (1668). He was killed in action, fighting against the Empire.

Turgenev, Ivan Sergeevich (1818-1883). Russian novelist and poet, known for the realism and local color of his portrayals of life in 19th-century Russia, especially the conflicts between young, Westernized intellectuals and their conservative fathers. He is considered to have fixed the type of introspective, nihilist hero (see NIHILISM) in Russian fiction, and is believed to have influenced George SAND, FLAUBERT, and Henry JAMES in the technique of the novel. His works include A Sportsman's Sketches (1847-1851); Rudin (1856); A Nest of Gentlefolk or A Nest of Nobles, also known as Liza (1859); FATHERS AND SONS (1862); On the Eve (1860); SMOKE (1867); VIRGIN SOIL (1876). Among other titles are The Gamekeeper at Home; A Lear of the Steppes; Torrents of Spring; Clara Milch; Dream Tales and Prose Poems.

Turgenev traveled a good deal in western Europe and was influenced by the ideas and techniques he encountered there. He was interested in the attempts of his time to westernize Russia, although his art had greater attractions for him than participation in active politics. He took a brief part in the movement to free the serfs, and was exiled to his country estate for calling GOGOL "a great man" in one of his articles. Nationalistic authors, most notably DOSTOYEVSKY, scorned Turgenev for his European ways and ideas, and the character of KARMAZINOV in The Possessed is considered to be a satirical portrait of the novelist.

Turgot, Anne Robert Jacques. Baron de l'Aulne (1727-1781). French statesman who is considered one of the founders of political economy. As finance minister under Louis XVI (1774-1776) he abolished some feudal privileges.

Turiddu. The hero of Mascagni's opera CAVALLERIA RUSTICANA.

Turk. Applied to barbarous, savage, cruel men, because these qualities have been for centuries attributed to Turks; also to mischievous and unruly children, as You little Turk.

the Young Turks. See under Young.

Turk Gregory. Falstaff's ne plus ultra of military valor—a humorous combination of the Sultan with Gregory VII (Hildebrand), probably the strongest of all the Popes.

Turkey in the Straw. A frontier song, probably written about 1815. Its first name was Zip Coon. It was popular in the 1830s.

Turmoil, The. A novel by Booth TARKINGTON (1915). The hero is Bibbs Sheridan, the sensitive and despised poet son of a father who has been largely responsible for the industrial development of a western city. Bibbs hates machinery and has a nervous breakdown from his father's effort to have him learn the business from the bottom up. His two older brothers, Jim and Roscoe, both ambitious, practical young men, nevertheless fail to make good as their father's successors, and Bibbs proves the mainstay of the family. He loves and marries his neighbor, Mary Vertrees.

Turner, Charles Tennyson (1808-1879). Older brother of Alfred, Lord TENNYSON. Author of several volumes of poetry.

Turner, Frederick Jackson (1861-1932). American historian. His best works are: The Frontier in American History (1920) and The Significance of Sections in American History (1932), which won the Pulitzer Prize for history (1933). His last book on the United States was uncompleted at his death.

Turner, Joseph Mallord William (1775-1851). English painter known for his watercolors and his brilliant effects of light. John Ruskin praised him in Modern Painters (1843).

Turner, Walter James Redfern (1889-). English writer. Music critic for the London Daily Express (from 1923) and author of many books of poems, novels, and essays on music and life, notably a biography of Mozart. Several of his shorter poems have been much anthologized.

Turn of the Screw, The. A tale by Henry JAMES (1898), told from the viewpoint of the leading character, a spinster governess in love with her employer, who goes to an isolated English estate to take charge of Miles and Flora, two attractive and precocious children. She sees what she believes are the ghosts of Miss Jessel and Peter Quint, respectively the former governess and steward of the estate, and concludes that these two are exerting an evil influence over the children. She tries to convince the housekeeper of the danger she perceives, and struggles to impose her influence on the children and win them from the apparitions. At the climax of the story she enters into direct conflict with the children, with the result that Flora seems to turn into a witch before her eyes and Miles dies of fright.

There have been conflicting interpretations of this famous tale, but the one most favored is that the appearance of the ghosts is merely hallucination on the part of the governess, whose frustrated desire takes the form of an attempt to exert over the children the power she cannot win over their uncle.

Turnus. In Virgil's AENEID, a prince betrothed to Lavinia, the daughter of the King of Latium. When Aeneas lands in Italy after the Trojan War and becomes a suitor for the hand of Lavinia, the two fight and Turnus is killed.

Turpentine State. North Carolina. See STATES.

Turpin, Archbishop. A famous figure of medieval legend, by most accounts one of the paladins of Charlemagne's court. In historical reality he was a contemporary of CHARLEMAGNE, Archbishop of Rheims from 753 to 794, on whom has been fathered a French chronicle history, written in Latin in the first half of the 11th century. The probable author was a canon of Barcelona. This chronicle, known as the pseudo-Turpin, was a most important link in the growth of the Carolingian legend and was largely drawn upon for the Italian epic poems ORLANDO INNAMORATO and ORLANDO FURIOSO. It relates the expedition of Charlemagne to Spain in 777, and his return to France after subduing Navarre and Aragon. The chronicle says he invested Pampeluna for three months without being able to take it; he then tried what prayer could do, and the walls fell down of their own accord, like those of Jericho. Those Saracens who consented to become Christians were spared; the rest were put to the sword. Charlemagne then visited the sarcophagus of James, and Turpin baptized most of the neighborhood. The King crossed the Pyrenees, but the rear commanded by ROLAND was attacked by 50,000 Saracens, and none escaped.

Turpin, Dick. A noted highwayman executed at York in 1739. Many legends and ballads have him as their central figure. Harrison AINSWORTH, in his once widely read novel Rookwood (1834), introduced the incident of Turpin's famous ride from London to York in a single night on his steed Black Bess. The horse was exhausted and died upon arrival.

Turveydrop, Mr. In Dickens' BLEAK HOUSE, a selfish, self-indulgent, conceited dancing-master, who imposes on the world by his majestic appearance and elaborate toilette. He lives on the earnings of his son (named Prince, after the Prince Regent), who reveres him as a perfect model of "deportment."

Tuscan Poet, the. Ludovico ARIOSTO (1474-1533), born at Reggio, in Modena, noted for his epic poem ORLANDO FURIOSO.

Tushina, Lizaveta Nikolaevna. In Dostoyevsky's THE POSSESSED, a young Russian woman, a neighbor of Varvara Petrovna STAVROGIN. Lizaveta Nikolaevna is a proud, passionate, independent young woman, divided by conflicting emotions. For a time she is fascinated by the revolutionary band and its plans for a publication, and especially by Nikolay Stavrogin. She resolves to try to save Nikolay from himself by teaching him truly to love, and spends the night with him. When she discovers that his nature is dead to all genuine, selfless emotions, she denounces him and leaves in a state of desperate excitement. At the scene of the fire and the murder of the LEBYADKINS she is killed by an infuriated mob. Like many of Dostoyevsky's heroines, Lizaveta Nikolaevna is believed to have been based on the character of Polina Suslova, a proud, passionate woman of keen intellect with whom the author once was unhappily in love.

Tusitala, see STEVENSON, ROBERT LOUIS.

Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute. A college for Negroes founded by Booker T. Washington (1881). It has an endowment of seven million dollars and owns two thousand acres in Alabama.

Tussaud, Madame (1760-1850). Swiss originator of a famous collection of wax figures of leaders and victims of the French Revolution, called Madame Tussaud's Exhibition. It was established in Baker Street, London (1833); a supplement to it was a Chamber of Horrors which contained implements and other relics of criminals.

Tusser, Thomas (ca. 1524-1580). English poet, known for his advice on domestic and farm problems, resembling later farmers' almanacs but written throughout in verse, which were very popular in their day among the farmers and housewives of England. His works in this vein include A Hundred Good Points of Husbandry (1557); A Hundred Good Points of Housewifery (1570); and Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry, United to as Many of Good Housewifery (1573). Religious verse and moral maxims were also included among information on crops, soil cultivation, weather, and the like. Tusser, once a pupil of Nicholas UDALL, was for a time a musician at court, but later retired to the country as a farmer. He died eventually in a debtor's prison.

Tutankh-Amen. An Egyptian king (ca. 1350 B. C.), whose tomb was unearthed in the Valley of the Kings near Luxor by Howard Carter and Lord Carnarvon in 1923.

Tutivillus. The demon of medieval legend who collects all the words skipped over or mutilated by priests in the performance of the services. These literary scraps or shreds he deposits in that pit which is said to be paved with "good intentions" never brought to effect.

tutorial system. The manner of education in English universities where the students study under a particular tutor who instructs them as to university requirements and oversees and directs their reading. This system has also been introduced into certain American universities, especially Harvard.

Tutt, Mr. See ARTHUR TRAIN.

Twachtman, John Henry (1853-1902). Leading American painter of the impressionist school.

Twa Dogs, The. A poem by Robert BURNS, a dialogue between Caesar, a gentleman's dog, and Luath, a ploughman's collie.

Twain, Mark. Pseudonym of Samuel Langhorne Clemens (1835-1910). American humorist, journalist, and author, best known for his humorous stories of American frontier life in the 19th century, written at first under the influence of Bret HARTE, with whom he was for a time associated. His works include The Adventures of Thomas Jefferson Snodgrass (1856); The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County (see JUMPING FROG; 1865), his first work to attract attention, reissued in The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County, And Other Sketches (1867); THE INNOCENTS ABROAD (1869); Roughing It (1872); THE GILDED AGE (1873), a novel written with Charles Dudley Warner; The Adventures of Tom Sawyer (see TOM SAWYER; 1876), with its sequel The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn (see HUCKLEBERRY FINN; 1884) the most famous of Twain's books; A Tramp Abroad (1880), an account of European travel; LIFE ON THE MISSISSIPPI (1883); THE PRINCE AND THE PAUPER (1882); A CONNECTICUT YANKEE IN KING ARTHUR'S COURT (1889); The American Claimant (1890); PUDD'NHEAD WILSON (1894); Tom Sawyer Abroad (1894) and Tom Sawyer, Detective (1896), late sequels to the earlier Sawyer books; Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc (see JOAN OF ARC; 1896); Following the Equator (1897), an account of a lecture tour of the world; THE MAN THAT CORRUPTED HADLEYBURG (1899); What Is Man? (1906); Christian Science (1907); Captain Stormfield's Visit to Heaven (1909); THE MYSTERIOUS STRANGER (1916); Mark Twain's Letters (1917); Mark Twain's Autobiography (1924). Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn are considered his best work, marked, as are his most representative humorous sketches, by vigor, high-spirited exaggeration, and native colloquial idiom.

Clemens was born in Missouri and in his early youth held a number of odd jobs, working as a printer and as apprentice to a pilot on a steamboat on the Mississippi River. His pseudonym had its origin in this latter job, "mark twain," meaning "two fathoms deep," being a phrase used in taking soundings on the river boats. At the time of the Civil War he went to Nevada and California, where he met Artemus WARD and Harte, worked on frontier newspapers, and first attracted attention by his writing. He soon became extremely popular, and was also praised by serious critics of the day. After 1894, when he suffered a financial failure, his work began to show a pessimistic, misanthropic quality. Some critics, notably Van Wyck BROOKS in The Ordeal of Mark Twain, have attributed this to the frustration of Twain's genuine creative talents by the conservative, Puritanical influence of his wife, Olivia Langdon, and her friends. The author himself directed that some of his works be published only after his death, feeling that they were too pessimistic for the public of his own lifetime.

'Twas the Night Before Christmas. A very popular poem (1823), originally called A Visit from St. Nicholas, by Clement Clarke Moore.

Tweed, William Marcy (1823-1878). American politician and head of Tammany Hall. The "Tweed Ring" of politicians swindled the treasury of New York City out of millions. Samuel J. TILDEN was chairman of the Democratic State committee which effected its destruction. Thomas NAST, drawing his remarkable cartoons for Harper's Weekly, was a great force in helping to destroy it, and so was the New York Times in 1870. Cf. "Boss" Tweed (1927), by Denis Tilden Lynch.

Tweedledum and Tweedledee. Names invented by John BYROM (d. 1763) to satirize two quarreling schools of musicians between whom the real difference was negligible. Hence, used of people whose persons—or opinions—are "as like as two peas."

Some say compared to Bononcini
That Mynheer Handel's but a nunny;
Others aver that he to Handel
Is scarcely fit to hold a candle.
Strange all this difference should be 'Twixt Tweedledum and Tweedledee.

J. Byrom

The Duke of Marlborough and most of the nobility took the side of G. B. Bononcini (d. about 1752), but the Prince of Wales, with POPE and ARBUTHNOT, was for Handel. See also GLUCKISTS.

Lewis CARROLL introduced Tweedledum and Tweedledee into his Through the Looking-Glass, the sequel to Alice in Wonderland, with entertaining effect. They sing the famous ditty of The Walrus and the Carpenter.

Tweedsmuir, 1st Baron, see BUCHAN, JOHN.

Tweedy, Marion. Maiden name of Molly BLOOM, in James Joyce's ULYSSES.

Twelfth Night. January 5, the eve of Twelfth Day, or the 'Feast of the Epiphany, twelve days after Christmas, January 6. Formerly this was a time of great merrymaking, and the games that took place were, with little doubt, a survival of the old Roman Saturnalia, which was held in the same season.

Twelfth Night, or What You Will. A comedy by SHAKESPEARE (ca. 1600). The plot hinges on the physical likeness between Sebastian and his twin sister, Viola. They are shipwrecked off the coast of Illyria, and Viola, separated from her brother, in order to support herself dresses like a man and becomes the page of Duke Orsino.

The Duke cherishes a hopeless passion for the Countess Olivia, but she, instead of returning his devotion, falls in love with his handsome page. Eventually Olivia marries Sebastian, whom she first mistakes for the page, and the Duke, on learning Viola's sex, consoles himself by making her the Duchess of Illyria. The interest in Twelfth Night depends largely on the famous comic characters of MALVOLIO, Sir Andrew AGUECHEEK, Sir Toby BELCH and MARIA. The play was called Twelfth Night, doubtless, because it was written to be acted at the Twelfth Night festivities. The plot was taken, through various secondary sources, from an Italian novella of Bandello.

the Twelve. All the prelates of the Roman Catholic Church. Of course the allusion is to the Twelve Apostles.

The Pope identifies himself with the "Master," and addresses those 700 prelates as the "Twelve."—The Times, December 11, 1869.

the Twelve Apostles. See APOSTLES.

the Twelve Disciples. See APOSTLES.

the Twelve Knights of the Round Table. See ROUND TABLE.

the Twelve Paladins. See PALADINS.

the Twelve Tables. The earliest code of Roman law, compiled by the Decemviri, and engraved on twelve bronze tablets (Livy, iii, 57; Diodorus, xii, 56).

the Twelve Wise Masters. See MEISTER-SINGERS.

Twelve-Pound Look, The. A comedy (1910) by J. M. BARRIE.

Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea. A romance (1870) by Jules VERNE, remarkable for its prediction of submarines.

Twenty Years After (Vingt Ans après). A historical romance by Alexandre DUMAS (1845), a sequel to THE THREE MUSKETEERS.

Twice-told Tales. A collection of short stories (1837) by Nathaniel HAWTHORNE.

Twichell, Joseph Hopkins (1838-1918). American clergyman and friend of Mrs. Stowe, Charles Dudley Warner and Mark Twain. He suggested to Mark Twain that he write Life on the Mississippi. In Mark Twain's A Tramp Abroad, Twichell appears as Harris.

Twickenham, The Bard of. See under BARD.

Twickenham, the Wicked Wasp of. See POPE, ALEXANDER.

Twilight of the Gods. See RAGNAROK.

Twin Cities. Minneapolis and St. Paul. See under CITY.

Twist, Oliver, see OLIVER TWIST.

Twitcher, Jemmy. A cunning, treacherous highwayman in Gay's BEGGAR'S OPERA.

Two Gentlemen of Verona, The. A comedy by Shakespeare (ca. 1592), the plot of which is taken from the Diana of Montemayor (16th century). The "two gentlemen" are Proteus and Valentine, close friends at first, but later rivals for the hand of Silvia, daughter of the Duke of Milan, who is, however, betrothed to Thurio. Proteus forgets his old love Julia, plays his friend false, and brings about his banishment. When Valentine is thus forced to leave the court, he becomes a bandit and in the course of time Silvia falls into his hands. A party from the court comes to the rescue, including Thurio and Proteus, the latter attended by a page who is really his old love, Julia, in disguise. Valentine's conduct is so manly that the Duke freely bestows his daughter upon him, and the repentant Proteus contents himself with marrying Julia.

Two Little Confederates. A boys' story of the Civil War by Thomas Nelson Page (Am., 1888). The scene is laid in Virginia and the heroes are two Southern boys too young to enlist.

Two Noble Kinsmen, The. A drama (1634) by John Fletcher and William Shakespeare. It was reprinted, without Shakespeare being mentioned, in a second folio edition of Beaumont and Fletcher's plays (1679). It is still unknown how great a part Shakespeare played in its authorship. The story is taken from the Knights Tale by Chaucer.

Two on a Tower. A novel by Thomas HARDY (1882), dealing with the mutual love of the young astronomer Swinburn St. Cleve and Lady Viviette Constantine. An early secret marriage between them is set aside by later developments, and when St. Cleve finally returns from South Africa to the familiar observatory tower to propose marriage, Viviette falls dead in his arms.

Two Orphans, The. A French play (1875) by D'Ennery and Cormon very popular as a melodrama in the late nineteenth century. D. W. GRIFFITH directed Lillian and Dorothy GISH in a silent motion picture called Orphans of the Storm.

Two-Shoes, Goody. See under GOODY.

Two Years Before the Mast. A famous narrative by Richard Henry DANA (1840) giving an account of his voyage around Cape Horn to California as a young sailor of twenty-two.

Tybalt. In Shakespeare's ROMEO AND JULIET, a fiery young nobleman of Verona, Lady

Capulet's nephew and Juliet's cousin. He is slain in combat by Romeo. The name had been given to the cat in the beast-epic called REYNARD THE FOX; hence MERCUTIO calls him "rat-catcher" (Act III. Sc. 1), and when Tybalt demands of him, "What wouldst thou have with me?" Mercutio replies, "Good king of cats, nothing but one of your nine lives."

Tyburn Tree, the. A gallows; so called because criminals were at one time hung on the elm trees which grew on the banks of the Tyburn. Hence also the expressions a Tyburn face, or criminal appearance; a Tyburn tippet or halter; and to preach at Tyburn Cross, meaning to be hanged.

Tyburnia. The Portman and Grosvenor Squares district of London, described by THACKERAY as "the elegant, the prosperous, the polite Tyburnia, the most respectable district of the habitable globe."

tycoon. From Chinese, "high prince." A title taken by some of the Tokugawa Shoguns of Japan (1603-1868). The shogun was the first of the daimios who, in turn, were vassals of the crown. Today the term is used as a designation of a magnate of industry in the U.S. or elsewhere, especially by the news-magazine TIME. Cf. The Last Tycoon (1941) by F. Scott Fitzgerald.

Tydeus. In classic myth, one of the "SEVEN AGAINST THEBES."

Tyler, John (1790-1862). Tenth president of the United States (1841-1845). Vice president at the time of President William Henry Harrison's death (April 4, 1841). During the Tyler administration Texas was annexed to the Union.

Tyler, Moses Coit (1835-1900). Professor of American history at Cornell University (1881-1900). He helped to found the American Historical Association (1884) and wrote several weighty books on early American literature.

Tyler, Royall (1757-1826). American lawyer and playwright, best known as the author of THE CONTRAST (1787), the second native American play and the first American comedy. Other works by Tyler are May-Day in Town, Or New York in an Uproar (1787), a satirical opera; The Georgia Spec, Or Land in the Moon (1797), another satirical comedy; The Chestnut Tree (1824), a long poem on American life of the author's time; THE ALGERINE CAPTIVE (1797), a picaresque and satirical novel; Yankee in London (1809), a series of letters supposedly by an American living in London; and several unpublished, unproduced plays, including three Biblical dramas in blank verse. Tyler eventually became chief justice of the Vermont supreme court.

Tyler's Insurrection, also called The Peasants' Revolt. An armed rebellion of peasants in southern England in 1381, led by Wat Tyler (an Essex man), in consequence of discontent aroused by the Statute of Laborers, and the heavy taxation, especially a poll-tax of three groats to defray the expenses of a war with France. Wat Tyler was slain by the Lord Mayor at Smithfield, the revolt was crushed, and many of the rebels executed. He is the hero of a poem by Southey called Wat Tyler. See also VOX CLAMANTIS.

Tyll Owlglass or Howleglass. The English name of the German Tyll Eulenspiegel, a figure of popular legend whose pranks were first written down supposedly by Thomas Murner (1483). Tyll is a mechanic of Brunswick, who runs from pillar to post as charlatan, physician, lansquenet, fool, valet, artist, and Jack-of-all-trades.

To few mortals has it been granted to earn such a place in universal history as Tyll Eulenspiegel. Now, after five centuries, Tyll's native village is pointed out with pride to the traveller, and his tombstone . . . still stands . . . at Mollen, near Lubeck, where, since 1350 [sic], his once numble bones have been at rest —Carlyle.

Tyltyl. One of the two children who go in search of the BLUE BIRD in Maeterlinck's play of that title.

Tynan, Katharine (1861-1931). Irish poet and voluminous writer of fiction who was a friend of Alice MEYNELL. She wrote as a Catholic; her work is very Celtic.

Tyndale, William (died 1536). English Protestant preacher, known for his translation of the Bible into English, first printed at Cologne in 1525. He sent copies of his translation into England for distribution, but they were condemned by the Roman Catholic bishops and burned. Tyndale also wrote pamphlets supporting the single authority of the Bible and the king over the power of the Church and the Pope, and for awhile was favored by King Henry VIII, although he soon lost this favor when he disapproved of the King's divorce. He carried on a vigorous controversy with Sir Thomas MORE, and in 1536 was strangled and burned at the stake in Antwerp as a heretic.

Tyndale's Bible. See BIBLE, THE ENGLISH.

Tyndall, John (1820-1893). British popularizer of science. Collaborated with Huxley in Switzerland, and lectured in the United States (1872-1873). He made various investigations of heat and light and wrote a number of treatises on scientific subjects.

Typee. A romance of the South Seas by Herman MELVILLE (1846) recording the adventures of a whaling voyage in the Pacific. Typee (Taipi) is a valley in one of the Marquesas where Melville was kept captive by the natives. The book gives a vivid picture of a civilized man in contact with the exotic, dreamlike life of the tropics. Its popularity was revived by the South Sea furor of the 1920's.

Typhoeus. A giant of Greek mythology, with a hundred heads, fearful eyes, and a most terrible voice. He was the father of the HARPIES. Zeus killed him with a thunderbolt, and he lies buried under Mount Etna.

Typhon. A fire-breathing monster, the father of the Sphinx, the Chimaera, and other monsters. He is often identified with Typhoeus, a son of Tartarus and Gaea, who begot the unfavorable winds or, according to other stories, is himself one of them. As a hundred-headed giant he warred against the gods and was banished by Jupiter to Tartarus under Mount Aetna. Typhon is also the name used by the Greeks for the Egyptian Set, the god of evil, who killed his brother (or father) OSIRIS.

Typhoon. A well-known short story (1903) by Joseph Conrad.

typographical signs. ♪ An acute accent. In Greek, it indicates a rise in the voice; in French, vowel quality; in Spanish, stress; in Bohemian and Hungarian, a long vowel.

^ A grave accent. In Greek, indicating a fall of the voice; in French, vowel quality, or sometimes a differentiation (as in la, là); and in English, that the accented syllable is to be pronounced (as in blesséd).

^ A circumflex; in French, usually indicating that an s has been dropped (as être for older estre), and that the marked vowel is long.

¸ under the letter c in French, is called a cedilla, and indicates that the c (ç) is to be pronounced as s. It represents the Greek zeta (ζ), which formerly followed the c to indicate an s sound.

•• over the second of two vowels, as in reëstablish, denotes that each vowel is to be sounded and is called the diaeresis, in French, trema. In German it is the umlaut or zwei-punkt (two dots) and denotes a change in the vowel sound, a following vowel (usually i) having been dropped.

° over a vowel, is the Scandinavian form of the umlaut or zwei-punkt.

~ The tilde, used in Spanish, over the n (as Oñoro) to show that it is pronounced ny.

& And; the Tironian Sign, or Ampersand.

⁂ The note of interrogation, or query mark; said to have been formed from the first and last letters of Lat. Quaestio (question), which were contracted to Q.

! The note of exclamation; representing the Latin Io (joy), written vertically I.

' The apostrophe; indicating that a letter (or figure) has been omitted, as don't, I'm; the rebellion of '98 (for 1798); also marking the possessive case (John's book), and plurals of letters and figures, as in too many I's, half a dozen 8's.

*, †, ‡, The asterisk, dagger (or obelisk), and double dagger; used as reference marks, etc. Another reference mark is

* or , the asterism.

* * *

§ The section mark; said to represent the old long initial s's (ſ ſ) of Lat. signum sectionis, sign of a section.

☞ An index-hand, to call attention to a statement.

¶ A blind P (a modification of the initial letter of paragraph), marks a new paragraph.

() Called parentheses, and [] Called brackets, separate some explanatory or collateral matter from the real sequence.

See also PROOF.

Tyr. In Norse mythology, the god of battle, one-handed since the day when he put his hand in Fenris's mouth as a pledge which the other gods did not redeem.

tyrant. In ancient Greece the tyrant was merely the absolute ruler, the despot, of a state, and at first the word had no implication of cruelty or what we call tyranny. Many of the Greek tyrants were excellent rulers, as Pisistratus and Pericles, of Athens; Periander, of Corinth; Dionysius the Younger, Gelon, and his brother Hiero, of Syracuse; Phidion, of Argos; Polycrates, of Samos; etc. The word tyrannos soon, however, obtained much the same meaning as it has with us.

a tyrant's vein. A ranting, bullying manner. In the old MORALITIES the tyrants were made to rant, and the loudness of their rant matched the villainy of their dispositions.

the Thirty Tyrants. The thirty magistrates appointed by Sparta over Athens, at the termination of the Peloponnesian war. This "reign of terror," after one year's continuance, was overthrown by Thrasybulus (403 B. C.).

In the Roman empire, those military usurpers who endeavored, in the reigns of Valerian and Gallienus (253-268), to make themselves independent princes, are also called the Thirty Tyrants. The number must be taken with great latitude, as only nineteen are given, and their resemblance to those of Athens is extremely fanciful.

Tyrian purple. A famous crimson or purple dye used by the Greeks and Romans.

Tyrtaeus. A lame schoolmaster and elegiac poet of Athens who is said so to have inspired the Spartans by his songs that they defeated the Messenians (7th century B. C.). The name has hence been given to many martial poets who have urged on their countrymen to deeds of arms and victory.

Tyrwhitt, Thomas (1730-1786). English scholar. His chief claim to fame is that, although at first he believed that the Rowley Poems were authentic, he then exposed the fact that they were actually written by Thomas CHATTERTON.

Tzara, Tristan (1896-). Rumanian-born poet and leader of the DADA movement in French literature. He edited the magazine Dada (1916-1920) and was a surrealist in 1930.

U

Ubal dini, Ruggiero. Ghibelline leader and archbishop of Pisa who imprisoned and starved to death (1288) Ugolino della Gherardesca and his sons and grandsons. He appears in the Inferno of Dante, Canto xxxiii.

Uberti, Farinata Degli. A noble Florentine, leader of the Ghibelline faction. Dante represents him, in his INFERNO, as lying in a fiery tomb not to be closed till the Last Judgment.

Ubique. A poem about the Royal Artillery by Rudyard Kipling. The word is Latin and means "everywhere."

Udall, Nicholas (1505-1556). English playwright and schoolmaster, known as the author of the earliest extant English comedy, RALPH ROISTER DOISTER (1553). Udall was headmaster of both Eton and Westminster schools, translated plays from the Latin of Terence, and wrote other plays in Latin on theological subjects. He once taught Thomas TUSSE.

Udolpho, The Mysteries of. See MYSTERIES OF UDOLPHO.

Uffizi. Great art gallery in Florence, Italy, established by the Medicis in the 15th century.

Ugly Duchess, The. Historical novel (1928), by Lion FEUCHTWANGER. The Duchess was the model for the Duchess in ALICE IN WONDERLAND.

Ugly Duckling, The. One of ANDERSEN'S Fairy Tales, the story of a swan hatched among ducklings and mocked at as an ungainly member of the brood, until finally it becomes apparent that he is a swan.

Ugolino. A Ghibelline, Ugolino della Gherardesca, Count of Pisa, who, about 1270, deserted his party and with the hope of usurping supreme power in Pisa, formed an alliance with Giovanni Visconti, the head of the Guelphs. The plot failed; Giovanni died, and Ugolino joined the Florentines and forced the Pisans to restore his territories. In 1284 Genoa made war against Pisa, and the Count again treacherously deserted the Pisans, causing their total overthrow. At length a conspiracy was formed against him, and in 1288 he was cast with his two sons and two grandsons into the tower of Gualandi, where all starved to death. Dante, in his INFERNO, has made the sad tale immortal.

Uhland, Johann Ludwig (1787-1862). German poet, playwright, essayist, and literary historian. Especially known for his ballads and songs.

ukase. In the former Russian Empire an edict either proceeding from the senate or direct from the emperor. Hence it came to mean a rigid order or official decree of any kind.

Ulalume. A poem by Edgar Allan Poe (1847), in memory of his "lost Ulalume."

Urania. In the Charlemagne romances, the Queen of Perduto or Islanda. She sent a golden shield to CHARLEMAGNE, which he was to give to his bravest paladin, and whoever could win it from him was to claim the hand of Urania in marriage. Cf. Orlando Furioso, Bk. xv.

ulema. The learned classes in Mohammedan countries, interpreters of the Koran and the law, from whose numbers are chosen the mollahs, imams, muftis, cadis, etc. (ministers of religion, doctors of law, and administrators of justice). Ulema is the plural of ulim, "a wise man." The body is under the presidency of the Sheikh-ul-Islam.

Ulrica. In Scott's IVANHOE, daughter of the late thane of Torquilstone, alias Dame Urfried, an old sibyl at Torquilstone Castle. Also, in Verdi's opera The Masked Ball, a witch who predicts the peril that is to befall the two lovers.

Ulster. The northernmost province of Ireland, which was forfeited to the Crown in James I's reign in consequence of the rebellions of Tyrconnel and Tyrone, and colonized (1609-1612) by English and Scottish settlers, who were forbidden to sell land to any Irishman. Since then the Ulstermen (see also ORANGEMEN) have been intensely English and anti-Irish in sentiment and action and have refused on any terms to coalesce with the original inhabitants, who have ever been anti-British.

The long loose overcoat known as an ulster is so called because it was originally made of Ulster frieze.

the Red, or Bloody, Hand of Ulster. The badge of Ulster, a sinister hand, erect, open, and couped at the wrist, gules. Legend has it that in an ancient expedition to Ireland it was given out that whoever first touched the shore should possess the territory which he touched; O'Neill, seeing another boat likely to outstrip his own, cut off his left hand and threw it on the coast. From this O'Neill the princes of Ulster were descended, and the motto of the O'Neills is to this day Lamh dearg Eirin, "red hand of Erin."

Ultima Thule. See under THULE.

ultramontane party. The extreme Popish party in the Church of Rome. Ultramontane opinions or tendencies are those which favor the high "Catholic" party. Ultramontane (beyond the mountains, i.e., the Alps) means Italy or the old Papal States. The term was first used by the French to distinguish those who look upon the Pope as the fountain of all power in the Church from the Gallican school, which maintained the right of self-government by national churches.

ultraviolet. See under INFRA-RED.

ultra vires (Law Lat. ultra, "beyond," vires, pl. of vis, "strength"). In excess of the power possessed; transcending authority.

Ulyanov, Vladimir Ilyich, see LENIN, NIKOLAY.

Ulysses. The Roman name of the Greek Odysseus, hero of Homer's ODYSSEY and a prominent character in the ILIAD. He is called Ulysses in most English poetry, including translations of Homer. TENNYSON wrote a poem Ulysses (1842), in which the hero in his old age speaks of his still active longing for adventure. Stephen PHILLIPS made him the subject of a poetic drama, Ulysses. He is a character in The World's Desire, by HAGGARD and LANG.

Ulysses. A novel by James JOYCE, published in Paris in 1922. Making the first major use of the technique of STREAM-OF-CONSCIOUSNESS and employing other unique technical devices, such as excerpts from newspaper headlines, a series of questions and answers, parodies on a variety of literary styles, the dialogue form of a play, etc., Ulysses presents a record of the events taking place in the lives of the three leading characters on an average day in Dublin, Ireland (June 16, 1904). A general parallel between the events in the novel and those presented in the ODYSSEY is maintained throughout, with the leading characters, Leopold BLOOM, his wife Molly, and Stephen DEDALUS, corresponding to the classic characters of ULYSSES, PENELOPE, and TELEMACHUS, respectively. The theme of the novel in general is the quest of the average 20th-century man (Bloom) for a son in whom he can place his trust and his hope, and the simultaneous quest of the disinherited 20th-century artist (Dedalus) for a father who will give him encouragement and a sense of continuity with mankind. Both men are lonely, Bloom's child, Rudy, having died in infancy, and Stephen having cast off his family and his Roman Catholic Irish heritage as bigoted and provincial.

The following is an outline of the separate episodes making up the novel, an indication of the Homeric parallels involved, and the approximate time of day at which each takes place:

I 8 A.M. Stephen Dedalus is seen as he rises from sleep in the old tower on the shores of Dublin Bay where he lives with Buck Mulligan and an English student named Haines. (Stephen as Telemachus.)

II 10 A.M. Stephen, teaching a class of boys in Mr. Deasy's school, is unhappy and unable to keep his mind on his work. Later he talks with Mr. Deasy, who asks him to try to arrange the publication of a letter on hoof-and-mouth disease. (Stephen as Nestor.)

III 11 A.M. Stephen takes a walk along the beach, and his personality and his attitude of mind are presented by the flow of his thoughts as he watches the waves, brooding on his spiritual isolation and the death of his mother. (Stephen as Proteus.)

IV 8 A.M. Leopold Bloom rises, prepares his wife's breakfast, reflects on a variety of subjects, and brings Molly her morning mail, among which is a letter from her lover, Blazes Boylan. (Calypso incident.)

V 10 A.M. Bloom goes to a post office, where he receives a love-letter from Martha Clifford, a typist with whom he is having a love affair and who addresses him as Henry Flower. Bloom next stops in at a church to hear music, calls at a drug store, or chemist's shop, to buy some lemon soap for his wife, and then goes to a public bath, for awhile reveling in sensuous enjoyment of the water and its warmth. (Episode of the Lotus Eaters.)

VI 11 A.M. Bloom attends the funeral of a former friend, Paddy Dignam, riding with Simon Dedalus, Stephen's father, and a group of other Dubliners. Bloom reflects at random on the subject of death, and the others ride sedately in silence or make strained remarks. After the funeral a collection is taken up for Dignam's widow. (Ulysses' voyage to Hades.)

VII 12 Noon. Bloom visits a newspaper office, where he discusses politics and makes arrangements for the placing of an advertisement. A little while after he has left, Stephen comes into the same office and invites those present to join him in a tavern as his guests, he having resigned from his job with Mr. Deasy and for the moment feeling affluent in the possession of a check for his back salary. (Aeolus episode.)

VIII 1 P.M. Bloom walks through the streets of Dublin, noticing the people about him in the streets, such celebrities as A.E., the poet, being included among them. Bloom at last goes into the "pub" of Davy Byrne and lunches on a sandwich and wine. (Episode of the Lestrygonians.)

IX 2 P.M. Stephen, Buck Mulligan, and Haines engage in a heated literary discussion in a public library, arguing chiefly about Shakespeare; Stephen advances theories of his own regarding Hamlet and Shakespeare's private life. Bloom enters the library also and passes the group of young men on his way to a newspaper file. (Episode of Scylla and Charybdis.)

X 3 P.M. Bloom, Stephen, Simon Dedalus, Stephen's sister Dilly, and a number of other persons stroll through the streets of Dublin, and the sights and sounds of the city are presented impressionistically in eighteen scenes. The episode concludes with a street parade by the Viceroy of Ireland and his retinue on their way to a charity bazaar. (Episode of the Wandering Rocks.)

XI 4 P.M. Bloom goes to the Ormand Hotel, where he has a meal and meets Stephen's father and uncle. Later he writes a love letter, while at about the same time Molly Bloom and her lover, Blazes, are enjoying a rendezvous together. (Episode of the Sirens.)

XII 5 P.M. Bloom enters a bar in search of Martin Cunningham, with whom he plans to discuss arrangements for the payment of the insurance due Mrs. Dignam. He becomes involved in a political quarrel with the drunken Michael Cusack, who soon begins to express anti-Semitic sentiments. Pursued by Cusack's dog, Bloom makes his escape in a cab. (Cyclops episode.)

XIII 8 P.M. Tired after walking about, Bloom sits down on the beach to rest. He becomes interested in watching a girl, Gerty MacDowell, who is playing with some children, and her exhibitionism causes him to become sexually excited. When Gerty leaves the scene, Bloom muses on his courtship of Molly in his youth. (Nausicaä episode.)

XIV 10 P.M. Bloom goes to a maternity hospital to visit Mina Purefoy, who has just borne a child; here occurs the famous parody of various literary styles in an implied analogy between the development of the language and the development of the embryo in the womb. Stephen is also at the hospital, drinking and reveling with Buck Mulligan in the internes' quarters, and at last he and Bloom meet. Bloom feels a fatherly interest in the young man, who is rapidly becoming drunk, and decides to follow and watch out for him when the group sets out for nocturnal adventures in the disreputable sections of Dublin. (Oxen of the Sun episode.)

XV 12 Midnight. In the brothel run by Bella Cohen, to which Bloom has followed Stephen, there occurs the scene called by some critics the WITCHES' SABBATH or Walpurgisnacht episode. Demonic hallucinations and apparitions appear before Bloom and Stephen, mixing with the drunken revelry of the brothel, all presented in a bewildering variety of literary styles and forms. Stephen at last thinks he sees the ghost of his mother, for whose death he feels responsible, and in a fury he breaks the chandelier with his walking-stick and flees. Outside the house he becomes involved in a fight with two English soldiers, Privates Carr and Compton. He is beaten into unconsciousness, and Bloom rescues him, believing he sees the ghost of his dead son in Stephen. (Circe episode.)

XVI 1 A.M. Stephen, recovered, goes into a cabman's shelter with Bloom, and the two drink coffee and converse with some steve-dores and a sailor who tells them fantastic yarns. (Eumaeus episode.)

XVII 2 A.M. Stephen goes with Bloom to the older man's home in Eccles Street, and in the kitchen the two drink cocoa and discuss a variety of subjects, such as music, philosophy, astronomy, the future of the Jewish and Irish peoples, and the like. Notable is a recital of pertinent facts in the lives of Bloom and Stephen and details of the physical scene in which they are placed, presented in the form of a catechism. (Ithaca episode.)

XVIII Later in the night. Stephen at last goes home, and Bloom retires to bed, where he tells his wife what has happened to him during the day. The novel concludes with its most famous passage—a stream-of-consciousness monologue by Molly Bloom as she lies in bed, thinking of her husband, her lover, her daughter, sex and her own sexual experiences, her childhood, girlhood, and married life, and finally her first youthful acceptance of love and her affirmation of life. (Molly as Penelope.)

(For most of names mentioned above, see separate entries. The outline given above is based mainly on the one published in This Generation, by George K. Anderson and Eda Lou Walton [Simon & Schuster, Inc., New York, 1940].)

Ulysses, which required seven years to write, is Joyce's most famous work and was the center of sensational controversy on its first publication. It began as a serial in THE LITTLE REVIEW in New York in 1918 and was regularly presented there until American authorities forbade it in 1920. It was prohibited from sale in a number of places on the charge of obscenity, and was legally admitted into the U.S. only after a long battle in the courts ending in 1934. The novel was also frequently attacked as being utterly unintelligible, until the many imitations and adaptations of its so-called "obscure" forms and techniques in novels and short stories during the 1920's and 1930's made its method generally recognizable and its content more readily understandable than on its first appearance.

With THE MAGIC MOUNTAIN and REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST, Ulysses is ranked as one of the greatest novels of the 20th century and also as one of the greatest novels of all time. It has been highly praised for its characterizations of Bloom, Molly, and Stephen, for the vivid realism of its depiction of life in the city of Dublin, for the originality of its techniques and methods, its many passages of lyric and dramatic power, and its success in raising the events of an ordinary day and the thoughts and feelings of an average man to the level of significance of a literary epic.

For a study of Ulysses, cf. James Joyce's Ulysses, by Stuart Gilbert, and James Joyce, by Harry Levin.

umlaut. The transformation of a vowel under the influence of another originally present in the following syllable. Loosely also the DIACRITICAL MARK used in German to differentiate unlauded vowels, as ä, ö, ü. The two dots are the remnants of a small e formerly placed over the vowel as a substitute for the older DIGRAPHS ae, oe, ue still occurring in proper names, as Goethe, etc.

Una. The heroine of the first book of Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE, typifying Truth (Una, the One). With the RED CROSS KNIGHT as her champion she sets forth to relieve her royal parents, who are being besieged by a dragon, but is soon parted from her knight, and is met by a lion, who afterwards attends her. She sleeps in the hut of Superstition, and next morning meets Archimago (Hypocrisy) dressed as her knight. As they journey together, SANSLOY meets them, exposes Archimago, kills the lion, and carries off Una to a wild forest. She is rescued by fauns and satyrs who attempt to worship her, but, being restrained, pay adoration to her donkey; she is delivered by Sir SATYRANE and is told by Archimago that the Red Cross Knight is dead, but subsequently hears that he is the captive of ORGOGLIO. She goes to King ARTHUR for aid, and the King slays Orgoglio and rescues the knight, whom Una takes to the house of Holiness, where he is carefully nursed. He eventually slays the dragon whose destruction was the original quest, and Una then leads him to Eden, where their marriage takes place. She is taken to represent Protestantism and Queen Elizabeth as well as abstract truth, and in this connection is strongly contrasted with DUESSA.

Unamuno y Jugo, Miguel de (1864-1936). Spanish scholar, novelist, poet, and essayist, known for his mystical and philosophical preoccupations and his denunciation of 20th-century materialism. English translations of his works include The Tragic Sense of Life (1921), a translation of Del Sentimiento Trágico de la Vida (1913), his best-known work; Essays and Soliloquies (1925); The Life of Don Quixote and Sancho (1927); The Agony of Christianity (1928); Mist (1928); Three Exemplary Novels and a Prologue (1930).

As a result of his vehement criticism of the military dictatorship established at the time by Primo de Rivera, Unamuno was exiled from Spain in 1924. When an amnesty was granted him later, he refused to return to his native country, preferring to live thereafter in France.

unanimism. A French school of thought in the early 20th century (ca. 1907), based on the theory that the group is of prime importance and that the individual, especially the poet, can attain power and significance only by merging himself with a social aggregation of one kind or another, he himself being far less important than the collective whole. Georges DUHAMEL and Jules ROMAINS were among the literary men associated with the school. In 1908 Romain published a volume of poetry entitled La Vie unanime, and the unanimist influence is considered to be found in the collective emphasis of his Men of Good Will.

Uncas. "The Last of the Mohicans" in Cooper's novel of that title. Cooper has frequently been accused of over-idealizing the American Indian in his portrayal of this noble and valiant young warrior. The historical Uncas (1588?-1683) was constantly engaged in warfare with other Indians and the English, who finally forced him to surrender and to leave his sons in their hands as an earnest of his remaining neutral in King Philip's War.

uncial. A style of writing used in old manuscripts from the third century B.C. to the tenth A.D. Uncials are rounded capitals.

Uncle Remus, His Songs and His Sayings. A famous book of folk tales by Joel Chandler HARRIS (1880). They "are told night after night to a little boy by an old Negro who has nothing but pleasant memories of the discipline of slavery, and who has all the prejudices of caste and pride of family that were the natural results of the system." The characters are animals, chief among them being Brer Rabbit and Brer Fox.

Uncle Sam. See under SAM; NICKNAMES.

Uncle Sam's heel. Florida.

Uncle Sam's ice box. Alaska.

Uncle Silas. A famous mystery novel (1864) by J. Sheridan LEFANU.

Uncle Toby. In Sterne's TRISTRAM SHANDY, the lovable uncle of the hero.

Uncle Tom's Cabin, or Life Among the Lowly. A novel by Harriet Beecher STOWE (1851), which did much to arouse anti-slavery sentiment before the Civil War. The chief figure is the faithful old slave Uncle Tom. Sold by the Shelbys from his old home in Kentucky, where he leaves his wife Chloe, he lives for a time with the easy-going, good-tempered Augustine St. Clare, to whose gentle little daughter Eva he is devotedly attached. In the St. CLARE household are also the Yankee old maid, Miss Ophelia, and the immortal TOPSY, an amusing black "limb of mischief." After the death of LITTLE EVA and her father, Uncle Tom is sold to the brutal Simon LEGREE, by whom he is treated with such harshness that when George Shelby, the son of his former master, finds him, he is dying. Among the slaves represented is Eliza, whose escape from the bloodhounds, with her boy Harry, by crossing the Ohio River on cakes of ice, is a familiar incident. Her husband, George Harris, follows her along the UNDERGROUND RAILWAY.

Uncle Vanya. A drama in four acts (1897) by Anton CHEKHOV. One of his best-known plays, which has been several times produced on Broadway.

Uncommercial Traveller, The. Twenty-eight miscellaneous papers published by DICKENS in All the Year Round, and reproduced in 1860.

Uncumber, St. See under SAINTS.

Under Fire: The Story of a Squad. A translation of Le Feu, the best-known novel of Henri BARBUSSE (1916) and one of the earliest books inspired by World War I, giving a bitter, realistic, and denunciatory picture of war. It deals with the experiences of a squad of lower-class French soldiers in combat, showing them undergoing physical tortures, hating their officers, quarreling among themselves, and living in a general atmosphere of filth, horror, and human debasement. The novel was widely heralded on publication, and had an important influence on the war literature of the time. See also WAR IN LITERATURE.

Underground Railway or Railroad, the. A term used in the United States as the embodiment of the various ways by which slaves from the southern states made their escape either to the north or to Canada before slavery was abolished.

Underhill, Evelyn (1875-1941). English mystical writer and poet. Mysticism (1911).

Underhill, Uplike. Hero of Tyler's ALGERINE CAPTIVE.

Undershaft. A manufacturer of munitions in Shaw's MAJOR BARBARA.

Under the Greenwood Tree. A novel by Thomas HARDY (1872), depicting country life. The heroine, Fancy Day, is loved by Farmer Shiner, by the young vicar, Arthur Maybold, and by Dick Dewy. She chooses the latter, and all ends happily.

Under the Jackstaff. A book of stories by Chester Bailey FERNALD.

Under Western Eyes. A novel by Joseph CONRAD (1911), dealing with anarchistic intrigue in Russia. The revolutionary Haldin, having just killed an official with a bomb, appeals to his fellow student Razumov for help. Razumov is ambitious to enter government service, believes in law and order, and dreads the thought of becoming involved in revolutionary action. Leaving the trusting Haldin asleep in his rooms, he goes out and denounces him to the police. Later he is sent to Geneva as a government spy and meets Nathalie, Haldin's sister, who, knowing nothing of his defection, receives him into the revolutionary circle there as Haldin's benefactor. Tormented by the love that springs up between himself and Nathalie, Razumov forces himself to confess to a roomful of revolutionists. His ear drums are broken in the commotion, and the following morning he is run over by a tram car.

Underwoods. The title of a collection of poems (1640) by Ben JONSON. Robert Louis STEVENSON adopted the title for a book of his own poems (1887).

Undine. A fairy romance by De La Motte FOUQUÉ (1814). The heroine, Undine, is a water-sylph, who is in early childhood changed for the young child of a fisherman living on a peninsula near an enchanted forest. One day, Sir Huldbrand takes shelter in the fisherman's hut, falls in love with Undine, and marries her. Being thus united to a man, the sylph receives a soul. Not long after the wedding, Sir Huldbrand falls in love with Bertalda, the fisherman's real daughter. Undine is spirited away by her angry kinsfolk, and the knight marries his new love. On the wedding day she calls for a drink from the old well, and Undine is forced to arise with the waters and bring about the death of her knight.

Undiscovered Country, The. A novel by W. D. HOWELLS (1880), dealing with spiritualism. Dr. Boynton, a country physician who has become a fanatical devotee of the occult, brings up his high-strung daughter Egeria as a medium. She is torn between filial affection and repulsion at the quackery her duties involve, until finally her health gives way under the strain. Much of the action takes place in a SHAKER community.

Undset, Sigrid (1882-1949). Norwegian novelist, awarded the Nobel prize for literature in 1928, best known for her novels dealing with life in the Scandinavian countries during the Middle Ages, presented according to the technique and viewpoint embodied in the 20th-century realistic and psychological novel. Her novels of the modern era are chiefly concerned with social and psychological problems, solved according to the views of the Roman Catholic Church. Among her works are Fru Marta Oulie (1907); Den Lykkelige Alder (The Happy Age; 1908); Jenny (1911); Poor Souls (1912), a collection of short stories; Spring (1914); KRISTIN LAVRANSDATTER, her most famous novel, a trilogy consisting of Kransen (1920; translated as The Bridal Wreath), Hustrue (1921; translated as The Mistress of Husaby), and Korset (1922; translated as The Cross); Olaf Audunsson i Hestviken, a tetralogy, translated as The Master of Hestviken and consisting of The Axe (1928), The Snake Pit (1929), In the Wilderness (1929), and The Son Avenger (1930); The Wild Onchid (1931), a translation of Gymnadenia; The Burning Bush (Den Braendende Busk; 1932); Ida Elisabeth (1932); Christmas and Twelfth Night (1932), essays; The Longest Years (1935), childhood recollections; Stages on the Road (1934), a study of several Catholic authors; Sagas of Saints (1934), on early Norwegian saints; Gunnar's Daughter (1936), a translation of Fortaellingen om Viga-Ljot og Vigdis; Images in a Mirror (1938), a translation of Fru Hjelde; The Faithful Wife (1937), a translation of Den Trofaste Hustru; Madame Dortha (1939); Happy Times in Norway (1942), reminiscences; Return to the Future (1942).

Sigrid Undset was the daughter of a university professor and acquired her fondness for the Middle Ages through assisting her father in his research when she was a child. She was converted to the Roman Catholic Church in 1924, and after her success as a novelist she took up residence in a restored house dating from the year 1000 and surrounded herself with medieval Norse furnishings and art objects; she even dressed habitually in the gown of a Norse matron of the Middle Ages. When Norway was invaded by the Germans in 1940, during World War II, she was forced to flee and came to the U.S. as a refugee.

unearned increment. Increase in the value of property because of external causes, such as public improvements, rather than any effort on the part of the owner.

Unfortunate Traveller, The, or the Life of Jack Wilton. A picaresque story (1594) by Thomas NASH.

unicorn (from Lat. unum cornu, "one horn"). A mythical and heraldic animal, represented by medieval writers as having the legs of a buck, the tail of a lion, the head and body of a horse, and a single horn, white at the base, black in the middle, and red at the tip, in the middle of its forehead. The body is white, the head red, and eyes blue. The oldest author that describes it is Ctesias (400 B.C.). The medieval notions concerning it are well summarized in the following extract:

The unicorn has but one horn in the middle of its forehead. It is the only animal that ventures to attack the elephant; and so sharp is the nail of its foot, that with one blow it can rip the belly of that beast. Hunters can catch the unicorn only by placing a young virgin in his haunts. No sooner does he see the damsel, than he runs towards her, and lies down at her feet, and so suffers himself to be captured by the hunters. The unicorn represents Jesus Christ, who took on Him our nature in the virgin's womb, was betrayed to the Jews, and delivered into the hands of Pontius Pilate. Its one horn signifies the Gospel of Truth.—Le Bestiaire Divin de Guillaume, Clerc de Normandie (13th century).

The supporters of the old royal arms of Scotland are two unicorns. When James VI of Scotland came to reign over England (1603) he brought one of the unicorns with him, and with it supplanted the red dragon which, as representing Wales, was one of the supporters of the English shield, the other being the lion. ARIOSTO refers to the arms of Scotland thus:

Yon lion placed two unicorns between
That rampant with a silver sword is seen.
Is for the king of Scotland's banner known.
Hoole's Translation, Bk. iii.

The animosity which existed between the lion and the unicorn referred to by Spenser in his FAERIE QUEENE (II. v)—

Like as a lyon, whose imperiall powre
A proud rebellious unicorn defyes—is allegorical of that which once existed between England and Scotland. A battle between the Lion and the Unicorn is an episode in THROUGH THE LOOKING-GLASS, by LEWIS CARROLL.

union.

the Union. A short term for the United States of America, and (in England) a familiar euphemism for the workhouse, i.e., the house maintained for the destitute by the Poor Law Union.

the Act of Union. Specifically, the Act of 1706 declaring that on and after May 1, 1707, England and Scotland should have a united parliament. The two countries had, of course, been united under one sovereign since 1603. The term is also applied to the Act of 1536 incorporating Wales with England, and to that of 1800, which united the kingdoms of Great Britain and Ireland on and after January 1, 1801.

the Union Rose. The combined emblematic rose of the Houses of York and Lancaster, the petals of which are white and red; white representing York, and red representing Lancaster. See also under rose.

union is strength. The wise saw of Perianther, tyrant of Corinth (665–585 B.C.).

Union Jack. The national banner of Great Britain and Ireland. It consists of three united crosses—that of St. George for England, the saltire of St. Andrew for Scotland (added by James I), and the cross of St. Patrick for Ireland (added at the Union in 1801).

Union Magazine, The. A magazine (1847–1852), chiefly remembered because in it were first published Poe's poems To Helen and The Bells, his essay The Poetic Principle, and stories by William G. SIMMS.

Unitarian. One who denies the Trinity and holds that God is one in person and substance. Specifically, a member of the Unitarian Church which was formed in 1773 by Theophilus Lindsay upon seceding from the Church of England.

United Kingdom. The name adopted on January 1, 1801, when Great Britain and Ireland were united.

unities, the. The three dramatic unities, viz., the rules governing the so-called "classical" drama, are founded on Renaissance interpretations of passages in Aristotle's Poetics, and are hence sometimes styled the Aristotelean unities. Their principles are that in drama there should be (1) unity of action; (2) unity of time, and (3) unity of place. Aristotle lays stress on (1), meaning that an organic unity, or a logical connection between the successive incidents, is necessary; but (2) was deduced by Castelvetro, the 16th century Italian scholar and critic, from the passage in the Poetics where Aristotle, in comparing epic poetry and tragedy, says that the former has no limits in time but the latter "endeavors, as far as possible, to confine itself to a single revolution of the sun, or but slightly to exceed this limit." Having thus arrived at the unity of time, (3) the unity of place followed almost perforce.

The theory of the three unities was formulated in Italy nearly a century before it was taken up in France, where it became, after much argument, the corner-stone of the literary drama. Its first modern offspring was La Sophonisbe (1629) by Mairet, though it was not till CORNEILLE's triumph with Le Cid (1636) that the convention of the three unities can be said to have been finally adopted. The principle had little success in England, despite the later championship of DRYDEN (cf. his Essay on Dramatic Poesy), ADDISON (as exemplified in his Cato), and others. BEN JONSON's The Alchemist (1610) is perhaps the best example of the small class of English plays in which the unities of place and time have been purposely adhered to. In France, on the other hand, the three unities were much more strictly observed, and not until the momentous performance of Victor Hugo's HERNANI did the old classical theories really give way to those of the modern romantic movement. See ROMANTICISM.

Universal Doctor. See under DOCTOR.

University Wits. Term applied to a group of brilliant young English writers of the later years of the 16th century, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, who had received their training at the universities of Oxford and Cambridge. Among these, chiefly playwrights and pamphleteers, the latter known for their polemics and their contributions to the "ROGUE LITERATURE" of the day, were ROBERT GREENE, GABRIEL HARVEY, THOMAS LODGE, JOHN LYLLY, CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE, and THOMAS NASH.

Unknown, the Great. Sir Walter SCOTT, so called (first by his publisher, James Ballantyne) because the WAVERLEY NOVELS were published anonymously.

Unlearned Parliament. See under PARLIAMENTS.

Unleavened Bread. A novel (1900) by ROBERT GRANT. It was made into a play by the author and LEO DITTRICHSTEIN (1901).

Unmerciful Parliament. See under PARLIAMENTS.

Unpopular Review, The. A quarterly (1914-1921) which had as contributors PAUL ELMER MORE, DOROTHY CANFIELD FISHER, MARY AUSTIN and AMY LOWELL. In 1919 it changed its name to The Unpartisan Review.

Unrighteous Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Unruh, Fritz von (1885-). German dramatist, poet, and novelist. Between World Wars I and II, the most powerful exponent of the principle that art must serve and must be the vehicle of an inspired message. The leitmotiv of his work is (negatively) hatred of war and militarism and (positively) emphasis on the value of the free and responsible individual human soul. The Way of Sacrifice (1916) and The End Is Not Yet (1947). Now living in U.S.

Unter den Linden. A famous avenue of linden trees in Berlin, now destroyed.

Untermeyer, Louis (1885-). American poet and anthologist. Widely known for his collections of American and British poetry which have gone into all the schools of the country. His own poetry and parodies have been collected in several volumes. He is a fine lyric writer and as a parodist has few equals today. In his early years he was a contributing editor of THE LIBERATOR and THE SEVEN ARTS. His translations of Heine are among the best of our time. Cf. his autobiography, From Another World (1939).

Untermeyer, Samuel (1858-1940). Famous American lawyer who acted as counsel for a Congressional Committee that investigated the Pujo money-trust. He was head of the board which made the income tax laws and the laws concerning excess profits in World War I.

Unto This Last. Four essays (1860-1862) by JOHN RUSKIN, dealing with employment and wages and published in the Cornhill Magazine. They caused such disturbance that they were discontinued by the editor THACKERAY. Although at the time Ruskin's ideas were thought to be chimaerical, today practically every reform he advised has been adopted.

unwashed. The first application of the term, the great unwashed, to the mob has been attributed to EDMUND BURKE and also to BROUGHAM—perhaps to others, too. CARLYLE has, "Man has been set against man, Washed against Unwashed." (French Revolution, II. ii. 4).

Unwin, Mrs. Mary. Friend and benefactor of WILLIAM COWPER, who boarded with her. A poem, To Mary and Sonnet to Mrs. Unwin both written in 1793, indicate the poet's gratitude to her. Her jealousy over the relation of another of Cowper's friends, Lady Austen, to the poem THE TASK resulted in the destruction of the second friendship.

Unwin, Thomas Fisher (1848-1935). English publisher. He founded the publishing firm of T. Fisher Unwin (1882) and was joint founder of the first council of the English Publishers Association. He has been called the discoverer of Joseph Conrad.

Upanishads. The oldest speculative literature of the Hindus, a collection of treatises on the nature of man and the universe, forming part of the Vedic writings, the earliest dating from about the 6th century B. C. The name is Sanskrit, and means "a sitting down (at another's feet)," hence "a confidential talk," "esoteric doctrine."

Uppike, Daniel Berkeley (1860-1941). American printer who established the Merrymount Press in Boston (1893). He helped to improve typography in the United States and wrote the authoritative Printing Types (1922).

Up, Guards, and at them! Traditionally the words of the Duke of Wellington ordering the attack in the last part of the Battle of Waterloo.

Upham, Charles Wentworth (1802-1875). Minister in Salem, Mass., known for his books on Salem witchcraft.

upper ten, the. The aristocracy, the cream of society, short for the upper ten thousand. The term was first used by N. P. Willis in speaking of the fashionables of New York, who at that time were not more than ten thousand in number.

Upson, Arthur (1877-1908). American poet and poetic dramatist. His Octaves in an Oxford Garden is a very rare achievement.

Upstream. The autobiography (1922) of Ludwig Lewisohn.

uraeus. The image of the sacred asp on the headdress of Egyptian rulers.

Urania. The Muse of astronomy in Greek mythology, usually represented pointing at a celestial globe with a staff. Milton (Paradise Lost vii. 1-20) makes her the spirit of the loftiest poetry, and calls her "heavenly born" (the name means "the heavenly one") and "sister of Wisdom."

Uranus. In Greek mythology, the personification of Heaven; son and husband of Gaia (the earth), and father of the Titans, the Cyclopes, the Furies, etc. He hated his children and confined them in Tartarus, but they broke out and his son Cronus dethroned him. The planet Uranus was discovered in 1781 by Herschell and was named by him Georgium Sidus in honor of George III.

Urban, Joseph (1872-1933). Famous Austrian-born stage designer who did many sets for large productions at the Metropolitan Opera House and for the Ziegfeld Follies.

Urbino. The Dukes of Urbino were important figures in Italy in the time of the Renaissance. They were warriors and one of them was prefect to Rome. Their surname was della Rovere. Their history, Memours, was written by James Dennistown and edited by Edward Hutton.

Urdur or Urdhr. The most famous of the three Norns of Scandinavian mythology.

Urfé, Honoré d' (1568-1626). French noble, author of the pastoral Astrée (1608-1624) which was extremely popular and influential. It foreran other romances of the same type by La Calprenède, Mlle de Scudéry, etc.

Urfried, Dame. In Scott's Ivanhoe, an old sibyl at Torquilstone Castle, alias Ulrica, daughter of the late thane of Torquilstone.

Urgan. A mortal born and christened, but stolen by the king of the fairies and brought up in elf-land (Scott's Lady of the Lake, iv. 12). It is decreed that if a woman signs his brow thrice with a cross he should recover his mortal form. Alice Brand does this, and the hideous elf becomes "the fairest knight in all Scotland," in whom she recognizes her brother Ethert.

Urganda. A potent fairy in the Amadis of Gaul and other romances of the Carolingian cycle.

Uriah the Hittite. In the Old Testament, a captain in David's army and the husband of Bathsheba, whom David loved. At David's orders he was sent into the most dangerous part of the battle line, where he was killed, and David then took Bathsheba as his wife.

letter of Uriah (2 Sam. xi. 15). A treacherous letter, importing friendship but in reality a death-warrant. See also Bellerophon.

Uriel. One of the seven archangels of rabbinical angelology, sent by God to answer the questions of Esdras (2 Esdras, iv.). In Milton's Paradise Lost (iii. 690) he is the "Regent of the Sun," and "sharpest-sighted spirit of all in heaven." Longfellow, in the Golden Legend, makes Raphael the angel of the Sun, and Uriel the minister of Mars. The name means "Flame of God," or "Angel of Light."

Urim and Thummim. Two objects of uncertain form and material used in the early forms of ancient Hebrew worship, probably in connection with divination and obtaining oracular answers from Jehovah. They are mentioned in Ex. xxviii. 30; 1 Sam. xxviii. 6; Deut. xxxiii. 8; Ezra ii. 63, etc., but fell out of use in post-exilic times, evidently through the Jews developing a higher conception of the Deity.

Urizen. In Blake's mystical poems, the figure of Jehovah but also a symbol of man in bondage. It is not impossible that the name was suggested to Blake through association with "reason."

Urn Burial or Hydriotaphia. An essay (1658) by Sir Thomas Browne based on the unearthing of urns in Norfolk.

Urquhart, Sir Thomas (1611-1660). Scottish author, chiefly known for his free translation of RABELAIS which is a masterpiece (1653-1693). It was completed by Peter Anthony Motteux (1708). One of Urquhart's treatises contains a famous account of The Admirable Crichton.

Ursa Major. The Great Bear, Big Dipper, or Charles' Wain, the most conspicuous of the northern constellations. See CALLISTO.

Boswell's father used to call Dr. JOHNSON Ursa Major.

Ursa Minor. The Little Bear; the northern constellation known as CYNOSURE or "Dog's tail," from its circular sweep.

Ursula, St. See under SAINTS.

Ursule Mirouet. A novel by BALZAC (1841), unique among his novels in that it contains only virtuous women. It concerns the schemes of joint heirs to a fortune and the social success of the titular heroine, a woman with a beautiful singing voice. It is said that Balzac wrote this novel for his young nieces.

Urth. One of the three Norns (Fates) in Norse mythology. In the earliest conception Urth was the only Norn and her name was often identified with Death or Hel. When two additional Norns were added [Verthandi, Skuld], Urth came to represent the past.

Urvasi. A Hindu heavenly nymph.

U.S.A. A trilogy by John Dos Passos (1938), consisting of THE 42ND PARALLEL (1930), 1919 (1932), and THE BIG MONEY (1936). The novel gives a panoramic picture of life and events in the U.S. in the period just preceding World War I, the period of the war and the armistice settlement, and the boom era of the 1920's, ending with the first years of the depression. Four distinctive devices are used: the NEWSREEL (objective); the CAMERA EYE (subjective); a series of impressionistic biographical sketches of representative politicians, newspapermen, scholars, writers, radicals, captains of industry, scientists, and other public figures of the time; and the life stories, told in episodic fashion and a simple, plain, almost callously impersonal style, of a group of fictional characters representing various geographical sections of the country, social classes, and psychological temperaments. These characters are Fainy Mc-CREARY, JOE WILLIAMS and his sister Janey, J. Ward MOOREHOUSE, Eleanor STODDARD, Eveline HUTCHINS, Charley ANDERSON, Richard Ellsworth SAVAGE, Anne TRENT, Ben COMPTON, Mary FRENCH, and Margo Dowling.

The pervading tone of U.S.A. is one of inevitable sociological and economic determinism, with greed, exploitation, opportunism, dishonesty, and vice triumphing and the various characters finding they have no control over their lives. Those who try to resist their times and those who simply drift along with the times are alike defeated; the only persons who emerge victorious are those who put aside all scruples and take advantage of the opportunities offered by the times for material success. American radicals and radical movements also play an important rôle in the novel, with the more sincere radicals sometimes succeeding in preserving a measure of personal integrity.

With James T. FARRELL's STUDS LONIGAN, U.S.A. is regarded as one of the most important novels of American life in the 20th century. It has been praised by critics for the breadth of its scope and its social perspective, the skill of its individual characterization, the originality and effectiveness of its techniques, and the vividness and realism of its portrayal of an eventful period in American history.

Useless Parliament. See under PARLIAMENTS.

Usher, see FALL OF THE HOUSE OF USHER, THE.

Usk. Celtic for "water." A river in South Wales and Monmouthshire, England. On it is situated Caerleon, the traditional seat of King Arthur's court.

Ussher, James (1581-1656). Archbishop of Armagh. A distinguished Irish scholar who wrote a Latin history of the world. He had a remarkable library and left his books and manuscripts to Trinity College in Dublin. Among them is the famous BOOK OF KELLS.

Ute. Queen of Burgundy, mother of Kriemhild and Gunther in the NIBELUNGEN-LIED.

Utgard (Old Norse, "outer ward"). The circle of rocks that hemmed in the ocean which was supposed by the ancient Scandinavians to encompass the world, and to be the haunt of the giants.

Utgard-Loki. In Norse mythology, the chief of the giants. Disguised as Skrymir he conducted Thor, Thialfi, and Loki to Tötunheim. There fire, disguised as Logi, ate faster than Loki; thought, disguised as Hugi, ran faster than Thialfi; old age, disguised as Elli, was stronger than Thor; etc. When Utgard-Loki had told Thor about his tricks, he escaped the god's wrath by vanishing.

Uther. A legendary king, or PENDRAGON, of the Britons. By an adulterous amour with IGERNE (wife of GORLOIS, Duke of Cornwall) he became the father of ARTHUR, who succeeded him.

uti possidetis (Lat., "as you at present possess them"). The principle in international law that the belligerents are to retain possession of all the places taken by them before the treaty commenced.

utilitarianism. The ethical doctrine that actions are right in proportion to their usefulness or as they tend to promote happiness; the doctrine that the end and criterion of public action is "the greatest happiness of the greatest number."

John Stuart MILL coined the word, but Jeremy BENTHAM, the official founder of the school, employed the word "utility" to signify the doctrine which makes "the happiness of man" the one and only measure of right and wrong.

Utopia (Gr ou, "not," topos, "a place"). Nowhere, the name given by Sir Thomas MORE to the imaginary island in his political romance of the same name (1516), where everything is perfect—the laws, the morals, the politics, etc., and in which the evils of existing laws, etc., are shown by contrast. See COMMONWEALTHS, IDEAL; and WEISSNIGHTWO.

Rabelais in his GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL (Bk. II. ch. xxiv), sends Pantagruel and his companions to Utopia, where they find the citizens of its capital, Amaurot, most hospitable. They reach the island by doubling the Cape of Good Hope, and sailing with a "Tramontane Wind" past Meden, Ut, Uden, Gelasim, the Islands of the Fairies, and along the Kingdom of Achoria.

This fictional island has given us the adjective utopian, applied to any highly desirable but quite impracticable scheme.

Utrillo, Maurice (1883–). French painter, known for his pictures of Paris streets, cathedrals, etc.

Uz. The home of Job.

Uzziel. One of the principal angels of rabbinical angelology, the name meaning "Strength of God." He was next in command to Gabriel, and in Milton's Paradise Lost (iv. 782) is commanded by Gabriel to "coast the south with strictest watch."

Vagret. A lawyer in Brieux's RED ROBE. Like his colleague Mouzon, he puts his personal ambition first and justice second, but unlike him, repents before it is too late.

Vailima. The mountain home of R. L. STEVENSON in Samoa, where he lived during the last years of his life. A collection of his letters was called Vailima Letters.

Vallant, Father Joseph. In DEATH COMES FOR THE ARCHBISHOP, a kindly, simple, and energetic priest who is the devoted friend of the Bishop, Jean LATOUR.

Vaishnava. One of the great sects of reformed Brahmins who worship Vishnu as supreme among the Hindu gods. Their sacred books are known as the Vaishnava Puranas.

Vaisya. The third of the four chief Hindu castes, or a member of it, from a Sanskrit word meaning "a settler." See also CASTE.

vae victis! A Latin phrase meaning "woe to the vanquished!" It is ascribed to the Gaul Brennus, who conquered Rome in 390 B. C.

Valclusa. The famous retreat of PETRARCH (father of Italian poetry) and his mistress LAURA, a lady of Avignon.

Vale. See Ave.

Valentine. (1) In Shakespeare's TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA, one of the titular heroes. Valentine marries Silvia, daughter of the Duke of Milan.

(2) In Goethe's FAUST and Gounod's opera of the same name, brother of MARGARET. Madened by the seduction of his sister, he attacks Faust during a serenade, and is stabbed by MEPHISTOPHELES. He dies reproaching his sister.

(3) Heroine of Meyerbeer's opera THE HUGUENOTS.

Valentine, St. See under SAINTS.

Valentine and Orson. An old French romance, connected with the ALEXANDER cycle.

The heroes, from whom the romance is named, are the twin sons of Bellisant, sister of King Pepin, and Alexander, and were born in a forest near Orleans. ORSON is carried off by a bear and becomes a wild man. While the mother is searching for him, Valentine is carried off by his uncle, the King. Each has many adventures, but all ends happily, and Valentine marries Clerimond, sister of the Green Knight.

Valentine Day. See under SAINTS.

Valentine Legend. In Congreve's Love for Love. See LEGEND, VALENTINE.

Valentino, Rudolph (1895-1926). Moving-picture actor in the silent films, born in Italy, extremely popular in America for his romantic acting. His funeral in New York nearly caused a riot.

Valera, Eamon de, see DE VALERA.

Valère. One of the principal characters in Molière's L'Avare, in love with HARPAGON's daughter Elise.

Valerian or Valirian. A martyr whose story is told in the SECOND NUN'S TALE, one of Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES.

Valérie Marneffe, Mme. (In Balzac's Cousin Betty.) See MARNEFFE, MME VALERIE.

Valéry, Paul Ambroise (1871-1945). French poet and critic, in his early career a protégé of Pierre Louys and at first influenced by the school of SYMBOLISM. His interest later turned to philosophy, mathematics, science, and economics, and he professed himself to be attracted to poetry only as a mental exercise. Following Leonardo da VINCI, whom he admired, he developed a kind of mathematical metaphysic to guide him in his thought and his art. Valéry is known for his personal aloofness, his emphasis on the importance of the intellectual classes in shaping and controlling society, and the precision, extreme condensation, and abstruseness of theme of his poetry, which was regarded by many contemporary critics as artificial and obscure. His books of poetry include La Jeune Parque (1917), considered his best work; Odes (1920); L'Album des Vers anciens (1920); Charmes (1922); Fragments du Narcisse (1922); Poésies (1923). He is generally best known for his series of literary and philosophical essays consisting of Variété (1924), Variété II (1930), Variété III (1936), and Variété IV (1938); these were translated into English. Other works include L'Idee Fixe (1934); Moralités (1932); Pièces sur l'Art (1936); Poésie et Pensée abstraite (1939) and La Politique de l'Esprit (1941), lectures.

Paul Valéry was elected to the French Academy in 1925, succeeding Anatole FRANCE, about whom he delivered a slighting address on his induction, although it was customary for the new member to laud his predecessor. Declaring that he was a businessman rather than a Bohemian, Valéry made a point of keeping his works inaccessible in order to increase their value, insisting that they be published only in limited and distinctive editions.

Valery, Violetta. Heroine of Verdi's opera LA TRAVIATA.

Valhalla. Literally, the hall of the slain. One of the mansions of Asgard, built (in Wagner's Ring) for Odin (or Wotan) by the giants who were paid, in place of the goddess Freya at first agreed upon, with the treasure of the Nibelungs. In Valhalla Odin feasts with heroes fallen bravely in battle on mead and boar's meat. It is a hall with 540 gates from which the warriors go out each morning to return at night for another banquet with the Valkyries as servitors.

Vali. The "silent god" and guardian of justice among the ancient Scandinavians. He was the second son of ODIN, and avenged the death of BALDER by slaying his murderer, Hoder. He was one of the few who were to survive the catastrophe of the Twilight of the Gods, for justice must not be banished from the earth.

Valiant-for-Truth. In Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, a brave Christian, who fights three foes at once. His sword is "a right Jerusalem blade," so he prevails but is wounded in the encounter. He joins Christiana's party in their journey to the Celestial City.

Valjean, Jean. The hero of Victor Hugo's LES MISÉRABLES.

Valkyries, the (Old Norse, "the choosers of the slain"). The twelve nymphs of Valhalla, who, mounted on swift horses, and holding drawn swords, rushed into the mêlée of battle and selected those destined to death. These heroes they conducted to VALHALLA, where they waited upon them and served them with mead and ale in the skulls of the vanquished. The chief were Mista, Sangrida, and Hilda.

In Wagner's RING DES NIBELUNGEN, Brunhild is the favorite Valkyrie and the heroine of the opera The Valkyrie (Die Walküre). She also appears in SIEGFRIED and GÖTTERDÄMMERUNG.

Valla, Lorenzo (1406-1457). Italian HUMANIST, known for his study and criticism of history. His notable contribution was the revelation that the so-called Donation of Constantine (see DECRETALS) was a forgery.

Valladolid, the Doctor of. (In Le Sage's Gil Blas.) See under SANGRADO.

Vallandigham, Clement Laird (1820-1871). American politician. During the Civil War he was a leading spirit among the COPPERHEADS. He had previously favored a compromise between the North and the South, but, being a strong supporter of states' rights, he held Lincoln responsible for the War. Lincoln banished him to the Confederacy.

Valle Inclán, Ramón María del (1870-1936). Spanish poet, playwright, and novelist. Author of a series of historical novels dealing with nineteenth-century Spain. Curator of National Arts and director of the School of Art in Rome during the Spanish republic. He was an eccentric and a bohemian.

Vallejo, Mariano Guadalupe (1808-1890). In California's struggle against Mexico (1836), Vallejo was a prominent fighter for California. A town in California, close to the Mare Island Navy Yard, bears his name.

Valley Forge. A play in free verse (1934) by Maxwell Anderson.

Valley of Decision, The. A novel by Edith WHARTON (1902), the story of an Italian principality of the late eighteenth century. The hero, Odo Valsecca, suddenly becomes Duke of Pianura through several unexpected deaths in the line, and although he loves Fulvia Vivaldi, the daughter of a revolutionary theorist, she sends him from her "to serve liberty on a throne." But the people are not ready for the liberties he wishes to give them, and the way is difficult. Years pass. By the time public opinion changes, Duke Odo has returned to the conservative views of the class to which he was born, and is accordingly banished from his kingdom.

Also title of a popular novel by Marcia DAVENPORT.

Valley of Humiliation. In Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, the place where Christian encounters APOLLYON and puts him to flight.

Valley of the Moon, The. A novel (1913) by Jack LONDON.

Valley of the Shadow of Death. In Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, a "wilderness, a land of deserts and of pits, a land of drought, and of the shadow of death" (Jer. ii. 6). "The light there is darkness, and the way full of traps . . . to catch the unwary." Christian must pass through it after his encounter with Apollyon.

Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me.—Ps. xxiii. 4.

Vallon, Annette. A young French woman with whom William WORDSWORTH had a brief love affair while he was visiting France in 1792. A daughter, Caroline, was born, and Wordsworth corresponded for a time with Annette. It is believed that the poet went to France and had a meeting with the mother and child about 1802 shortly before his marriage to Mary Hutchinson. The affair was kept a secret by the Wordsworth family and was discovered only in the 20th century.

Valois. The name of the French royal house (1328-1589) which preceded the Bourbons.

Valunder. In Frithiof's Saga, a Scandinavian form of WAYLAND.

Vamen or Vamena. One of the avatars of VISHNU. A dwarf asked Bali, the giant monarch of India, to permit him to measure out three paces to build a hut upon. The kind monarch smiled at the request, and bade the dwarf measure out what he required. The first pace compassed the whole earth, the second the whole heavens, and the third all pandalon, or Hell. Bali now saw that the dwarf was no other than Vishnu, the second person of the Hindu triad.

vampire. A fabulous being, supposed to be the ghost of a heretic, excommunicated person, or criminal, that returns to the world at night in the guise of a monstrous bat and sucks the blood of sleeping persons who, usually, become vampires themselves. See also STOKER, BRAM.

The word is applied to one who preys upon his fellows—a "bloodsucker." In the early 20th century, vampire, or vamp, meant a femme fatale, a beautiful but heartless woman who lures men to moral destruction. KIPLING has a well-known poem called The Vampire, beginning:

A fool there was and he made his prayer
(Even as you and I)
To a rag and a bone and a hank of hair
(We called her the woman who did not care)
But the fool he called her his lady fair—
(Even as you and I)

van. See also under second part of name.

Van Bibber. The hero of a volume of short stories by Richard Harding DAVIS, called Van Bibber and Others (1892). Vanir. The nature-gods of the old Scandinavians, who presided over the ocean, air, earth, streams, etc.; opposed to, and generally at war with, the AESIR. Niörd, the water-god, was the chief; his son was Frey; his daughter Freya (the Scandinavian Venus); his wife Skadi; and his home Noatun.

Vanity Fair. In Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, a fair established by Beelzebub, Apollyon, and Legion, in the town of Vanity, and lasting all the year round. Here are sold houses, lands, trades, places, honors, preferments, titles, countries, kingdoms, lusts, pleasures, and delights of all sorts.

Vanity Fair, a Novel without a Hero. A novel by THACKERAY (1848) of which he wrote while in the process of composing it: "What I want to make is a set of people living without God in the world (only that is a cant phrase), greedy, pompous men, perfectly self-satisfied for the most part, and at ease about their superior virtue. Dobbin and poor Briggs are the only two people with real humility as yet. Amelia's is to come."

The two boarding school friends, Amelia SEDLEY and Becky SHARP are in marked contrast throughout the novel. Becky Sharp, clever, scheming, determined to get on in the world, first plays her cards to win Amelia's rich and stupid brother, Joseph SEDLEY but failing that, secretly marries Rawdon CRAWLEY, a younger son of Sir Pitt Crawley, at whose house Becky is governess. Rawdon is, however, disinherited. The undaunted Becky endeavors to live at the height of fashion on a small income and succeeds with the help of Lord STEYNE. Finally Rawdon suspects his wife's relations with Steyne, discovers the truth and departs to become the governor of Coventry Island, leaving their son to the care of Sir Pitt Crawley. Becky is completely ostracized and forced to live by her wits on the Continent. Meantime Amelia, loved by George Osborne and William DOBBIN, has married the former, but he is killed in the Battle of Waterloo. Because of her poverty, she is forced to give her son, Georgy, into the care of his grandfather, Mr. Osborne, who will, however, have nothing to do with her. On Mr. Osborne's death, Georgy is left a fortune. Amelia and her brother, traveling on the Continent, now meet Becky Sharp, and she gradually regains her old influence over Joseph Sedley. The faithful Dobbin, having loved Amelia through thick and thin, is at last rewarded with her hand.

Vanity Fair. An American magazine, founded in 1868 and for a time edited by Frank HARRIS, best known in its incarnation during the period 1913-1936. Then, under the editorship of Frank Crowninshield, it presented news of society, examples of the work of leading American and European authors, articles on music and the arts, satire, and reproductions of paintings of the most advanced 20th-century schools, all appealing to a sophisticated and cosmopolitan audience. In 1936 it was incorporated with the fashion magazine Vogue and lost its previous identity. An American humorous magazine of the 19th century (1859-1863) was also called Vanity Fair.

Van Loon, Hendrik Willem (1882-1944). Dutch-born American journalist and miscellaneous author, known for his best-selling books popularizing historical, scientific, and cultural subjects, written in a sentimental and lightly "familiar" vein, with illustrations of his own. His publications include The Fall of the Dutch Republic (1913); The Rise of the Dutch Kingdom (1915); The Golden Book of Dutch Navigators (1916); A Short History of Discovery (1918); Ancient Man (1920); The Story of Mankind (1921); The Story of the Bible (1923); Tolerance (1925); America (1927); Man, the Miracle-Maker (1928); R. v. R. (1930), on the painter Rembrandt; Van Loon's Geography (1932); Ships and How They Sailed the Seven Seas (1935); The Arts (1937); The Story of the Pacific (1940); Van Loon's Lives (1942).

Vanzetti, Bartolomeo (1888-1927). With Nicola Sacco he was arrested for the murder of a shoe-factory paymaster at South Braintree, Massachusetts, on April 15, 1920. He was tried and convicted on July 14, 1921. The case was appealed, and soon great doubt of the guilt of Sacco and Vanzetti was entertained. The protest in their favor was world-wide. A special committee, appointed to examine the case, confirmed the findings of the court. The two men were electrocuted on August 23, 1927. Many of the writers of America both protested in their favor and wrote concerning their case.

Van Zorn. A play (1914) by Edwin Arlington ROBINSON.

Varden, Gabriel. In Dickens's BARNABY RUDGE, a locksmith; he is a round, red-faced, sturdy yeoman, with a double chin, and a voice husky with good living, good sleeping, good humor, and good health. During the GORDON RIOTS, Gabriel refuses to pick the lock of Newgate prison, though at the imminent risk of his life.

Mrs. Varden (Martha). The locksmith's wife, and mother of Dolly, a woman of "uncertain temper" and a "martyr." When too ill-disposed to rise, Mrs. Varden orders up "the little black teapot of strong mixed tea, a couple of rounds of hot buttered toast, a dish of beef and ham cut thin without skin, and the Protestant Manual in two octavo volumes. Whenever Mrs. Varden was most devout, she was always the most ill-tempered."

Dolly Varden. The locksmith's daughter; a pretty, laughing girl, with a roguish face, lit up by a lovely pair of sparkling eyes, the very impersonation of good humor and blooming beauty. She marries Joe WILLET, and conducts with him the Maypole Inn, as never a country inn was conducted before. They prosper and have a large and happy family. Dolly dresses in the Watteau style, and Watteau gowns and hats were for a time, about 1875, called "Dolly Vardens." The name was frequently in use in fashions of a later period also.

Vardon, Harry (1870-1937). Famous golf player. He won the British open championship six times.

Varieties of Religious Experience, The. A book (1902) by William JAMES. The material in it was originally given as a series of lectures at the University of Edinburgh (1901-1902).

Variety. Theatrical trade journal (1873-) written in the lingo of Broadway but containing all the news of theatrical events throughout the year. In 1933 it instituted a Hollywood supplement.

variorum. An edition with notes by different persons. A good example is the Variorum Shakespeare (1871-1930) edited originally by Horace Howard Furness.

Varmint, The. The first of three volumes by Owen JOHNSON (1878-) concerning the school and college life of Dink Stover. The Varmint (1910) and The Tennessee Shad (1911) relate his prep-school adventures in hilarious fashion, and Stover at Yale (1911), a more pretentious novel, treats seriously the social problems of modern college life.

varnishing day. The day set aside for painters, who are exhibiting in a gallery, to varnish or put finishing touches on their work. Sometimes this is the day when the art critics are asked to attend.

Varro, Marcus Terentius (116-27 B.C.). Roman scholar, called by Quintilian "the most learned of the Romans." He arranged the library in Rome at the direction of Julius Caesar and was appointed superintendent of another library by Augustus.

Varuna. In the early Hindu mythology of the Rig Veda, lord of the universe; with INDRA the greatest of the gods of the Vedic hymns. He is invoked as the night sky and his double, Mitra, as the day sky; in the later Vedic period his power is more and more confined to this one aspect of nature. Finally, however, in the post-Vedic period, Varuna becomes the Hindu Neptune, represented as an old man riding on a sea monster with a club in one hand and a rope in the other.

Vasantasena. Heroine of the old Sanskrit drama known as THE LITTLE CLAY CART.

Vasari, Giorgio (1511-1574). Italian painter, famous especially for writing the valued source book, Lives of the Most Excellent Architects, Painters and Sculptors (1550 and 1568). Considered the founder of modern art criticism.

Vasco da Gama, see GAMA, VASCO DA.

Vashti. In the Old Testament, the Queen of King Ahasuerus before the days of Esther. When the heart of the King was merry with wine, he commanded his chamberlains to bring Vashti, the Queen, into the banquet-hall, to show the guests her beauty, but she refused to obey the insulting order, and the King, being wroth, divorced her. (Esth. i. 10, 19.)

O Vashti, noble Vashti! Summoned out,
She kept her state, and left the drunken king
To brawl at Shushan underneath the palms.
Tennyson, The Princess, iii. (1830).

Vassar College. A college for women at Poughkeepsie, N.Y. (founded 1861). Among its contributions to literature have been the work of Adelaide CRAPSEY, Edna St. Vincent MILLAY, and Constance ROURKE.

Vatel, François (died 1671). A famous chef who was the steward of the French finance minister Fouquet. He is said to have committed suicide because the fish had not arrived in time for one of the banquets given by the Prince de Condé.

Vathek. The hero of W. BECKFORD's oriental romance of the same name (1786). The ninth caliph of the Abbasside dynasty, he is a haughty, effeminate monarch, induced by a malignant genius to commit all sorts of crimes. He abjures his faith, and offers allegiance to Eblis, under the hope of obtaining the throne of the pre-Adamite sultans. This he gains, only to find that it is a place of torture and that he is doomed to remain in it for ever.

Vathek's daughter. A red-and-yellow mixture given him by an emissary of Eblis, which instantaneously restored the exhausted body, and filled it with delight.

Vatican. The palace of the Pope; so called because it stands on the Vaticanus Mons (Vatican Hill) of ancient Rome, which got its name through being the headquarters of the vaticinatores, or soothsayers. Hence it is used to mean the Papacy, or the Catholic Church.

Vatnaz, Clémence. In Flaubert's SENTIMENTAL EDUCATION, a spiteful old maid, associated with the radicals of 1848, for a time the mistress of Dussardier. She is particularly inimical toward Rosanette Bron, whose property she on one occasion has sold at public auction.

Vauban, Marquis de. Sébastien Le Prestre (1633-1707). French marshal who was also a great military engineer. He introduced a special system of siege approach and invented the socket bayonet.

vaudeville. A light entertainment consisting of a succession of acts, also called variety. The name comes from Vau-de-Vire (in Normandy, France) where the kind of song originally designated as "vaudeville" was common. In 1865, when Tony Pastor opened his Opera House in New York, he introduced this kind of entertainment. The Keiths took it up later on. In 1885, there grew up a system of continuous vaudeville, running two shows a day, from eleven in the morning till eleven at night. Some famous vaudeville producers are Oscar Hammerstein, Alexander Pantages, and Marcus Loew. The Palace Theater in New York was formerly the principal home of vaudeville. Sarah BERNHARDT and many lesser stars played in vaudeville. Killed by talking pictures. it may be revived by television.

Vaughan, Henry (1622-1695). Welsh-born English poet, a later member of the METAPHYSICAL POETS, professing himself to be a disciple of George HERBERT. He is known for his mystical poetry, emphasizing the manifestations of God in nature. His published works are Sillex Scintillans (1650 and 1655) and Thalia Rediviva (1678). His best-known poem is THE WORLD. Vaughan fought in the Civil War, studied medicine, and spent a long career as a country doctor in Wales.

Vaughan, Hilda (1892-). Welsh novelist who can claim to be descended collaterally from the poet Henry Vaughan. She married Charles MORGAN. Her novels of Welsh life are notable for their knowledge of the people.

Vaughan Williams, Ralph (1872-). English composer; president of the English Folksong Society. His A London Symphony (1918) has been called "the most significant work composed by an Englishman."

Vauquer, Maison (Vauquer House). The cheap, fourth-rate boarding house described in detail in Balzac's Father Goriot (Le Père Goriot) and famed as the dwelling-place of many of the characters of his Comédie Humaine. See GORIOT.

Vautrin. One of the names under which the criminal Jacques COLLIN appears in Balzac's novels.

Vaux, Thomas. 2nd Baron Vaux of Harrowden (1510-1556). English poet who contributed to TOTTEL'S MISCELLANY and wrote a song which Shakespeare adapted as the song of one of the grave-diggers in Hamlet.

Vauxhall Gardens. A famous place of entertainment in London, laid out in the middle of the seventeenth century as New Spring Gardens. Many writers of the time went to Vauxhall Gardens, among them Samuel Pepys. In The Spectator they are visited by Sir Roger de Coverley. Closed in 1859.

Vavasour, Mr. A character in Disraeli's TANCRED who "saw something good in everybody and everything . . . liked to know everybody who was known and to see everything which ought to be seen. His life was a gyration of energetic curiosity, an insatiable whirl of social celebrity."

Ve. Brother of ODIN and Vili, in Scandinavian mythology. He was one of the three deities who took part in the creation of the world; and he and Vili slew YMIR and drowned the whole race of frost-giants in his blood.

Veal, Mrs. An imaginary person, who, according to Daniel DEFOE, appeared, the day after her death, to Mrs. Bargrave of Canterbury, on September 8, 1705. This cock-and-bull story was affixed by Defoe to Drelincourt's book of Consolations against the Fears of Death, in order to increase the sale of the book, and such is the matter-of-fact style of the narrative that most readers thought the fiction was a fact. It was later published separately as The True Relation of the Apparition of One Mrs. Veal.

Veblen, Thorstein Bunde (1857-1929). Liberal American sociologist and author. His chief works, which contain many acute criticisms of established social and economic institutions, include The Theory of the Leisure Class (1899); The Theory of Business Enterprise (1904); and The Vested Interests and the State of the Industrial Arts (1919); etc. Veblen was born in Wisconsin of Norwegian parents. He concluded his long career as a teacher at the New School for Social Research in New York (from 1919).

Vecelli. The family name of TITIAN.

Veck, Toby. In Dickens' Christmas tale, The Chimes, a ticket-porter, nicknamed "Trotty" who runs on errands. One New Year's Eve he eats tripe for dinner and has a nightmare, in which he fancies he has mounted up to the steeple of a neighboring church, and that goblins issue out of the bells, giving reality to his hopes and fears. He is roused from his sleep by the sound of bells ringing in the new year.

Vedas or Vedams. The four sacred books of the Brahmins, comprising (1) the Rig or Rish Veda (2) Yajur Veda; (3) the Sama Veda; and (4) the Atharva Veda. The first consists of prayers and hymns in verse, the second of prayers in prose, the third of prayers for chanting, and the fourth of formulas for consecration, imprecation, expiation, etc.

The word Veda means knowledge.

Vedder, Elihu (1836-1923). American painter and illustrator. His best murals are in the Library of Congress, Washington, D.C. His best illustrations were done for an edition of the Rubāiyāt of Omar Khayyām.

Vega, Garcilaso de la, see GARCILASO DE LA VEGA.

Vega, Lope de (1562-1635). Founder of the Spanish national drama, author of some two thousand plays. Created the comic character, "El Gracioso."

Veiled Prophet of Khorassan, the. Hakim ben Allah, surnamed Mokanna or "The Veiled," founder of an Arabic sect in the 8th century. He wore a veil to conceal his face, which had been greatly disfigured in battle. He gave out that he had been Adam, Noah, Abraham, and Moses. When the Sultan Mahadi marched against him, he poisoned all his followers at a banquet, and then threw himself into a cask containing a burning acid, which entirely destroyed him. Thomas Moore has made this the subject of a poetical tale in his LALLA ROOKH, The Veiled Prophet of Khorassan:

There, on that throne, . . . sat the prophet-chief,
The great Mokanna. O'er his features hung
The veil, the silver veil, which he had flung
In mercy there, to hide from mortal sight
His dazzling brow, till man could bear its light.

"'Tis time these features were uncurtained [now].
This brow, whose light—oh, rare celestial light!—
Hath been reserved to bless thy favoured sight . . .
Turn now and look; then wonder, if thou wilt,
That I should hate, should take revenge, by guilt,
Upon the hand whose mischief or whose mirth
Sent me thus maimed and monstrous upon earth . . .
Here—judge if hell, with all its power to damn,
Can add one curse to the foul thing I am!"

He raised the veil; the maid turned slowly round,
Looked at him, shrieked, and sunk upon the ground.

Veiller, Bayard (1869-1943). American dramatist. Author of several popular plays, particularly The Thirteenth Chair (1922) and The Trial of Mary Dugan (1928). The Fun I've Had (1941) is his autobiography.

Velásquez, Diego Rodríguez de Silva y (1599-1660). One of the greatest painters of Spain. Court painter to Philip IV (1623). He painted many portraits of the court, as well as of court jesters and dwarves. He also did many religious and mythological paintings. He became a close friend of RUBENS.

Venable, William Henry (1836-1920). Teacher, poet, and author of Beginnings of Literary Culture in the Ohio Valley.

Vendée, La. During the French Revolution this department in the west of France became the scene of civil war. The irregular bands which roamed the countryside were called Chouans after the name of one of their leaders, or possibly after a kind of owl whose cry they imitated to call their people together. Balzac wrote a novel, LES CHOUANS (1829).

vendetta. A blood feud of the kind originating in Sicily, Sardinia and especially in Corsica in the eighteenth century. "Feuding" among the mountaineers of Kentucky in the United States is a form of vendetta.

Veneering, Mr. and Mrs. A newly rich couple in Dickens' novel OUR MUTUAL FRIEND:

Mr. and Mrs. Veneering were bran-new people, in a bran-new house, in a bran-new quarter of London. Everything about the Veneerings was spick and span new. All their furniture was new, all their friends were new, all their servants were new, their plate was new, their carriage was new, their harness was new, their horses were new, their pictures were new, they themselves were new, they were as newly married as was lawfully compatible with their having a bran-new baby.

In the Veneering establishment, from the hall chairs with the new coat of arms, to the grand piano-forte with the new action, and upstairs again to the new fire-escape, all things were in a state of high varnish and polish.—11 (1864).

The Veneerings (1922) by Sir Harry JOHNSTON, is a novel in which these people are characters.

Venetian Glass Nephew, The. A fantastic novel (1925) by Elinor WYLIE.

venial sin. One that may be pardoned; one that does not forfeit grace. In the Catholic Church sins are of two sorts, mortal and venial (Lat. venia, "grace, pardon"). Cf. Matt. xii. 31.

Venice.

Venice of the East. Bangkok, capital of Burma.

Venice of the North. Stockholm, Sweden. Sometimes Amsterdam is so called.

Venice of the West. Glasgow.

Venice glass. The drinking-glasses of the Middle Ages, made at Venice, were said to break into shivers if poison were put into them. Venice glass, from its excellency, became a synonym for perfection.

Venice Preserved. A famous tragedy by OTWAY (1682). A conspiracy is formed by Renault, a Frenchman, Elliot, an Englishman, Bedamar, Pierre, and others, to murder the Venetian senate. Jaffier is induced by his friend Pierre to join the conspirators, and gives Belvidera, his wife, as hostage of his good faith. As Renault most grossly insults the lady, Jaffier takes her away and she persuades her husband to reveal the plot to her father Priuli, one of the threatened senators, under the promise of a general amnesty. The senate violates the promise made by Priuli, and commands all the conspirators except Jaffier to be broken on the wheel. Jaffier, to save his friend Pierre from torture, stabs him, and then himself. Belvidera goes mad and dies.

veni, vidi, vici (Lat., "I came, I saw, I conquered"). According to Plutarch it was thus that Julius Caesar announced to his friend Amintius his victory at Zela (47 B. C.), in Asia Minor, over Pharnaces, son of Mithridates, who had rendered aid to Pompey. Suetonius, however, says that the words were displayed before his title after his victories in Pontus, and does not ascribe them to Caesar himself. They are often used as an example of laconism, extreme concision.

Venizelos, Eleutherios (1864-1936). Greek statesman who forced the abdication of King Constantine (1917) and brought Greece into World War I on the side of the Allies. He took part in the Peace Conference at Paris (1919), advocated a republic in Greece, was several times premier, and finally (1935), having opposed the government, was forced into exile. King George II, after his return to the throne (1935), granted him an amnesty.

Venn, Diggory. A reddleman in Hardy's RETURN OF THE NATIVE.

Venner, Elsie. The heroine of O. W. Holmes' novel ELSIE VENNER.

Venner, Uncle. An old village character in Hawthorne's HOUSE OF THE SEVEN GABLES.

Venus. In Roman mythology, the goddess of beauty and love. Originally of minor importance, she became through identification with the Greek Aphrodite one of the major characters in classical myths. She was the daughter of Jupiter and Dione. According to another view (influenced by association with the Greek term aphros, "foam") she had sprung from the foam of the sea at Cyprus. Jupiter gave her in wedlock to Vulcan. She was the mother, by Vulcan, of Eros and Anteros; by Mars, of Harmonia; by Anchises, of Aeneas; etc. She wore a magic girdle which enabled its wearer to arouse love in others. She plays an important part in many legends and stories: she gave beauty as a gift to Pandora, the first woman; she fell in love with Adonis and after his death changed his blood into the anemone; she first objected and finally consented to her son Cupid's (Eros') love for Psyche; she had Atalanta and Hippomenes changed into lions; she consoled Ariadne and gave her Bacchus as her husband; she competed against Juno and Minerva for the apple of discord and was given the prize by Paris; she destined Helen, the wife of Menelaus, for Paris and caused thus the Trojan war; she sided with the Trojans against the Greeks and enlisted the help of her admirer Mars; etc., etc.

Her name is given to the second planet from the sun, and in astrology "signifie the white men or browne . . . joyfull, laughter, liberrall, pleasers, dauncers, entertayners of women, players, perfumers, musitions, messengers of love."

In Camoëns' epic poem THE LUSIAD, Ura-nian Venus is the impersonation of divine love and the presiding deity of the Lusians. The Isle of Venus is a paradise created for the Lusian heroes. Here Uranian Venus gives Vasco da Gama the empire of the sea.

In Wagner's opera TANNHAUSER, Venus is goddess of love and illicit delights and entertains the hero in her magic grotto beneath the Venusberg.

Venus and Adonis. A long poem by Shakespeare. For the myth it treats of, see ADONIS.

There are several famous statues of Venus, notably the VENUS DE' MEDICI and the Venus of Milo (ca. 400 B. C.).

Venus de' Medici. A statue in Parian marble of Venus holding both hands before her body. Found in Hadrian's villa at Tivoli and brought to Florence by Cosmo de' Medici III about 1680. It is in the Uffizi Gallery. The signature of Cleomenes (ca. 200 B. C.) is considered a forgery. The statue is clearly a Greco-Roman work.

Venus, Mr. In Dickens' novel OUR MUTUAL FRIEND, a man skilled in the preserving of birds and animals and the articulating of human bones. With Silas Wegg he plans to blackmail Mr. Boffin, but changes his mind and confesses the plot.

Venusberg. In German legend and in Wagner's opera TANNHAUSER, a place of fatal delights presided over by Venus, goddess of love. Here Tannhäuser tarries, and when Pope Urban refuses to grant him absolution, he returns there. William Morris has a poem The Hill of Venus in his Earthly Paradise (1870), retelling the old legend with a modern setting.

verbatim et literatim (Lat.). Accurately rendered, "word for word and letter for letter."

verb. sap. (Lat. verbum sapienti, "a word to the wise"). A hint is sufficient to any wise man; a threat implying if the hint is not taken I will expose you.

verb. sat. (Lat. verbum satienti, "a word is enough"). Similar to the above. A word to the wise is enough.

Vercel, Roger (1894-). French novelist. His Captain Conan (1934) won him the Goncourt prize; The Tides of Mont St. Michel (1938) was popular in America.

Vercingetorix. Gallic chief who fought against Julius Caesar. Executed in Rome. Cf. Book VII of Caesar's Commentaries.

Verdant Green. A novel of Oxford undergraduate life by Cuthbert BEDE (1860). The hero, as his name implies, is a young man of infinite simplicity who goes to college and is played upon by all the practical jokers of alma mater. After he has bought his knowledge by experience, he uses it to play pranks on juveniles greener than himself. Verdant Green's spectacles win for him the nickname of "Gig-lamps."

Verdi, Giuseppe (1813-1901). Italian composer. Especially known for his operas, as ERNANI (1844); RIGOLETTO (1851); IL TROVATORE (1853); LA TRAVIATA (1853); LA FORZA DEL DESTINO (1862); AIDA (1871); OTELLO (1887); and FALSTAFF (1893).

Verdurin, M. and Mme. In Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST, a newly-rich couple of insignificant social background, scorned by the aristocratic GUERMANTES group. They hold regular soirées to which they invite literary, artistic, and musical celebrities and gradually win away some of the prized guests who attend the Guermantes gatherings.

Vere, Edward de, Earl of Oxford. See OXFORD, EDWARD DE VERE, EARL OF.

Vereshchagin, Vasili (1842-1904). Russian artist, famous for his realistic war pictures. Served in the Russo-Turkish and Russo-Japanese Wars. Killed in action.

Verges. In Shakespeare's MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING, an old-fashioned constable and night-watch, noted for his blundering simplicity.

Verhaeren, Émile (1855-1916). Famous Belgian poet who came to particular notice during World War I. His books translated into English include Poems (1899); Belgium's Agony (1915); Plays (1916); Five Tales (1924); etc.

Verhovensky, Pyotr Stepanovich. In Dostoyevsky's THE POSSESSED, the cold, ruthless leader of the band of revolutionary terrorists, a man utterly devoid of conscience. He has been impressed by Nikolay STAVROGIN, but has himself taken over command of the revolutionaries and feels no scruples in devising the most brutal schemes to carry out his terrorist aims. Verhovensky was intended by the author to represent the typical nihilist (see NIHILISM) of the 19th century in Russia, and is believed to have been based on an actual radical leader, Nechaev, who introduced the system of Bakunin into Russia. Critics point out, however, that Verhovensky's ideas are anarchistic and despotic and are not characteristic of the ideas of Marxian Socialism (see MARXISM) which Dostoyevsky believed he was attacking. Pyotr Stepanovich has been called a typical "self-willed" Dostoyevskian hero, similar to RASKOLNIKOV.

Stepan Trofimovich Verhovensky, the father of Pyotr Stepanovich, is a former professor of history and a political liberal, in his youth regarded as a dangerous radical by the authorities. Living on the estate of Varvara Petrovna Stavrogin, with whom he has frequent passionate quarrels, Stepan Trofimovich is a gentle, innocent, and sentimental academician, an admirer of Western European ideas. He is horrified when he discovers how his own theories have been distorted in the hands of the nihilists. This character is said to have been based on an actual personage also, one T. N. Granovsky, a professor of history at the University of Moscow in the 1840's.

Verisopht, Lord Frederick. In Dickens' NICHOLAS NICKLEBY, a weak and silly nobleman, but far less vicious than his bear-leader, Sir Mulberry HAWK. He draws in his speech, and is altogether "very soft."

Verlaine, Paul (1844-1896). French poet, an immediate forerunner of SYMBOLISM in France, known for the grace, delicacy, and musical suggestiveness of his characteristic lyrics. Among his books are Poèmes Saturniens (1866), a volume in the style of the PARNASSIANS; Fêtes Galantes (1869), written in a Watteau-like, 18th-century mood; La Bonne Chanson (1870), a celebration of the poet's joy at his coming marriage; Romances sans Paroles (1874); Sagesse (1881), containing poems of religious sentiment; Jadis et Naguère (1884).

Verlaine was extremely erratic in personality and behavior, living a Bohemian life which took him from cafés to hospitals and prisons, and alternating between sensuality and mysticism. He loved his wife, but after their separation he engaged in liaisons of a perverted nature, the most notorious of which was with Arthur RIMBAUD. Rimbaud is considered to have had a morally corrupting influence on Verlaine but to have assisted the older man in developing a new conception of poetry. Verlaine was converted to Catholicism during the 1870's.

Verloc. "The SECRET AGENT" in Conrad's novel of that title. His wife Winnie Verloc plays an important part in the action.

Vermeer, Jan. Known as Jan van der Meer van Delft (1632-1675). One of the most distinguished Dutch painters. Of his paintings about forty are known. His treatment of life is an outstanding characteristic.

Vermont. A land-locked New England state with a turbulent early history. See also GREEN MOUNTAIN BOYS.

Verne, Jules (1828-1905). French writer of quasi-scientific romances which in some ways have proved prophetic of the advance of science. His books have always been popular with young people. A Voyage to the Center of the Earth (1864); TWENTY THOUSAND LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA (1870), etc.

Verneuil, Marie de. In Balzac's novel THE CHOUANS (Les Chouans), a beautiful Republican spy whose love for the Royalist chief whom it is her duty to betray, involves both in tragedy.

Vernier, Pierre (1580-1637). French mathematician who invented the double sliding scale, known as veinier, which is used for determining distances and angles.

Vernon, Diana. In Scott's Rob Roy, niece of Sir Hildebrand Osbaldistone. She has great beauty, sparkling talents, an excellent disposition, high birth, and is an enthusiastic adherent of the exiled king. She marries Frank Osbaldistone.

Sir Frederick Vernon. Father of Diana, a political intriguer, called "His Excellency the Earl of Beauchamp." He first appears as Father Vaughan.

Vernon, Mme de. The mother of Matilda in Mme de Staël's DELPHINE, a cool-headed intriguing egotist frequently considered a portrait of TALLEYRAND in female guise.

Veronese, Paolo (1528-1588). Italian painter of the Venetian school, called the "Painter of Pageants." Frescoes of his are in the Library of St. Mark in Venice, among them, Temptation of St. Anthony.

Veronica, St. See under SAINTS.

Verrazano, Giovanni da (1485?-?1528). Italian navigator who found the mouth of the Hudson River (1524).

Verrill, Alpheus Hyatt (1871-). American naturalist and explorer, the son of Addison Emery Verrill (1839-1926), zoologist and professor at Yale. In Central America, he discovered important evidence of a prehistoric culture. As an avocation he has written a number of adventure books for boys.

Verrinder, Mrs. The old woman in De Morgan's ALICE-FOR-SHORT, who suddenly recovers her memory, lost sixty years before.

Verrocchio, Andrea del (1435-1488). Florentine sculptor and painter; with the exception of Donatello, the chief sculptor of the Tuscan school. His best-known work is the equestrian statue of Colleoni.

Versailles. A town near Paris, noted for its park and palace built by Louis XVI, now used as a museum. Among the treaties concluded at Versailles is that terminating the Franco-Prussian War (1870-1871) and, especially, the one which was to lay the foundation of a durable peace between the Allies and Germany after World War I (June 28, 1919). The U.S. Senate refused to ratify it and it had to be supplemented by a separate treaty concluded at Berlin (August 25, 1921).

the German Versailles. Cassel; so called from its gardens, conservatories, fountains, and colossal statue of Hercules.

the Versailles of Poland. The palace, etc., of the counts of Braniski, taken over by the Municipality of Bialystok.

vers de société (Fr., "society verse"). Light poetry of a witty or fanciful kind, generally with a slight vein of social satire running through it.

vers libre, see FREE VERSE.

versus rhopalicus. See under KNITTELVERS.

Verthandi. In Norse mythology, one of the three Norns or Fates. She represents the present, her name being related to German werden, "to grow, become."

Vertrees, Mary. The heroine of Tarkington's TURMOIL.

Vertumnus. In Roman mythology, the god of the seasons, who married POMONA. He courted her unsuccessfully in many guises until finally he appeared as an old woman and pled his own cause under cover of giving good advice.

Verulamium. Roman town near the modern St. Albans in England. From it Sir Francis BACON took his title of Baron Verulam.

Vervain, Florida. Heroine of W. D. Howells' FOREGONE CONCLUSION.

Verver, Maggie. The heroine of Henry James' novel THE GOLDEN BOWL. Her millionaire father, Adam Verver, is also an important character.

Very, Jones (1813-1880). American poet and Greek scholar, known for his sonnets and lyrics celebrating ecstatic religious visions of a mystic nature. He was associated with the movement of TRANSCENDENTALISM and was befriended and encouraged by R. W. EMERSON, who believed in the value of his poetry. His work has been found to show stylistic imitations of CHATEAUBRIAND, MONTAIGNE, and the 17th-century English religious writers, especially the METAPHYSICAL POETS, but most often it is written in the couplets of Milton's L'ALLEGRO. Published works by Very are Essays and Poems (1839), which Emerson helped to edit; Poems (1883); Poems and Essays (1886). At one time Very was declared insane and committed to an asylum. After his release he served for awhile as a clergyman in small New England churches, although he was not ordained.

Vesalius, Andreas (1514-1564). Belgian anatomist. He was the first in modern times to dissect the human body. The Inquisition condemned him to death but his sentence was commuted to a pilgrimage to Jerusalem; on his return from there he was shipwrecked. His De Humani Corporis Fabrica is a treatise in seven books about the structure of the human body.

Vespasian (9-79 A.D.). Roman emperor chosen by his soldiers. He began the Colosseum. His name is immortalized by the vespa-siennes (public toilets) in Paris.

Vespucci, Amerigo (1451-1512). Italian navigator. Although he did not reach the American continent until June 16, 1497, he has given his name to it. "Amerigo" is the Italian form of "Emmerich." Vespucci's letters are available in translation through the Hakluyt Society (1894).

Vesta. The virgin goddess of the hearth of Roman mythology, corresponding to the Greek HESTIA, one of the twelve great Olympians. She was custodian of the sacred fire brought by AENEAS from Troy, which was never permitted to go out lest a national calamity should follow. See VESTALS.

Vestal, Stanley (1887-). Legal name by his stepfather, not used by him in his work, Walter Stanley Campbell. Author of ballads, novels, biography, history. Authority on the old southwest. Fandango: Ballads of the Old West (1927); Kit Carson (1928); The Old Santa Fé Trail (1939); etc.

Vestals. The six spotless virgins who tended the sacred fire brought by AENEAS from Troy and preserved by the state in a sanctuary in the Forum at Rome. They were subjected to very severe discipline, and in the event of losing their virginity were buried alive. Other duties of the Vestal Virgins were to prepare from the first fruits of the May harvest the sacrificial meal for the Lupercalia, the Vestalia, and the Ides of September.

The word vestal has been figuratively applied to any woman of spotless chastity.

Véto, M. et Mme. Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette, so called during the French Revolution because the king had been allowed a veto on the resolutions of the National Assembly. The name is used in the revolutionary song, La Carmagnole.

Vetsera, Baroness Marie. See RUDOLF, MAYERLING.

V for Victory. A slogan devised in 1941 by the British propaganda offices as a rallying cry for the citizens of European countries which had been occupied by German troops during World War II. It was represented by three distinctive symbols: the capital letter V of the Roman alphabet; three dots and a dash (. . . -), the signal for the letter V in Morse telegraphic code, known and used internationally; and the opening bar of the first movement of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, which resembles the Morse signal rhythmically. It was hoped that the slogan and its symbols would serve as a signal to arouse the populations of the conquered nations to revolt against the Germans, but the latter vitiated this movement by adopting the idea and using it as their own, asserting that a "V for Victory" meant victory in the war for Germany. In isolated uprisings against the German armies of occupation, however, V's would be found scrawled on walls, or on risk of death a peasant might tap out three dots and a dash on a table-top. In the U.S. the letter V and the Morse signal supplied a popular design for costume jewelry and printed fabrics and was once used in a whiskey advertisement.

Via Crucis. A historical novel by F. Marion CRAWFORD (1898), dealing with the Second Crusade. The English hero, Gilbert Ward, is beloved by beautiful Queen Eleanor of France, but remains true to his early love, Beatrix de Curboil.

Via Dolorosa. The way which Jesus took to the Hall of Judgment, from the Mount of Olives to Golgotha, about a mile in length.

Viaud, Louis Marie Julien, see LOTI, PIERRE.

Vibart, Peter. The hero of Farnol's BROAD HIGHWAY.

Vibert, Jehan (1840-1902). French painter who was a very exact draftsman but not distinguished for his color. He did a great many "story paintings," among them The Grasshopper and the Ant (1875).

Vicar of Bray. A semi-legendary vicar of Bray, Berkshire, who, between 1520 and 1560, was twice a Papist and twice a Protestant in successive reigns. His name has been given as Symonds, Alleyne, and Pendleton, and his date transferred to the time of Charles II. Historically nothing is known of him. The well-known song is said to have been written in Restoration times by an officer in Colonel Fuller's regiment. The song begins: "In good King Charles's golden days," I was a zealous high-churchman and continues "When royal James obtained the crown," I found the Church of Rome would fit my constitution. "When William was our king declared," I swore to him allegiance. "When gracious Anne became our queen," I became a Tory. "When George, in pudding-time came o'er," I became a Whig. And "George my lawful king shall be—until the times do alter."

Vicar of Christ. A title given to the Pope, in allusion to his claim of being the representative of Christ on earth.

Vicar of Wakefield, The. A novel by Oliver GOLDSMITH (1766), a story of the Vicar, Dr. PRIMROSE, and his six children. Like Job, the Vicar undergoes a series of terrible trials through no fault of his own, and like Job also, is eventually restored to prosperity. See THORNHILL.

Vice. In Old English MORALITIES, a buffoon who usually wore a cap with ass's ears. He was a boon companion of the Devil.

Vicente, Gil (1470-1540). Portuguese poet who has been mentioned with CAMOENS as one of the leading poets of his country.

Vice-Versá. A fantastic novel (1882) by F. ANSTREY. It tells of the transformation of a father into his son and of the schoolboy son into his father. Cf. Turnabout (1931) by Thorne SMITH, in which a husband and wife exchange bodies.

Vichy Government. The emergency government set up at the famous health resort, Vichy, in France after the defeat of that nation by Germany during World War II (June, 1940). It was headed by Marshal PÉTAINE, an octogenarian veteran of World War I, and dictatorial powers were granted its members. The Vichy government was accused of "collaborating" with, and giving aid in the form of men and weapons to, the German government during the later years of the war.

Vicksburg. A town on the Mississippi. During the American Civil War, Grant besieged the Confederate forces in Vicksburg for a month and a half. Its surrender (July 4, 1863) gave the Federals control of the Mississippi River.

Vicomte de Bragelonne, The. The third of a trilogy of historical novels by Alexandre DUMAS. See THREE MUSKETEERS.

Victor, Orville James (1827-1910). American publisher. In 1860 he originated the idea of a melodramatic kind of adventure story which would sell as cheaply as ten cents. He got together a group of writers to turn out the first "dime novels."

Victor and Cazire. The pen names under which Percy Bysshe SHELLEY and his sister Elizabeth published a book of poetry in 1810.

Victoria (1819-1901). Queen of Great Britain (1837-1901). Her long reign included the industrial revolution and gave her name to a great period in English literature. Cf. Queen Victoria (1921), by Lytton STRACHEY.

Victory. A novel by Joseph CONRAD (1915). Convinced by his pessimistic father that life is not to be trusted, Axel Heyst makes every effort to preserve a complete detachment and wanders about the South Seas, a lonely, impersonal figure. His few impulsive acts of friendship bear fruit that only confirms his theories. Finally, however, he rescues a poor, unhappy girl named Lena from a wandering theatrical troupe and carries her off from their insults and abuse to his lonely island. The innkeeper Schomberg, a vulgar brute who had been infatuated with the girl, hates Heyst and sets the fantastic, unscrupulous gentleman adventurer Jones, with his followers, Ricardo and Pedro, on his track in the belief that there is treasure on the island. A dramatic struggle ensues and the affair ends fatally, but Lena and Heyst achieve a sort of "Victory" in spite of the tragic outcome.

Vidar. One of the Aesir of Scandinavian mythology, a son of ODIN. He avenges his father's death by slaying FENRIS at RAGNAROK.

Vidocq, François Eugène (1775-1857). Chief of detectives in Paris (1809-1827; 1832). He himself organized a robbery and then investigated it as a police officer. Lecoq, in some of the stories by Émile GABORIAU, is evidently based on Vidocq. George Sanders played Vidocq in a moving picture (1946) called "A Scandal in Paris."

Vielé, Egbert Ludovicus. Changed to Francis Vielé-Griffin (1863-1937). French poet, born in Virginia, where his father was Federal military governor in the Civil War. He was of Huguenot ancestry, went to France at the age of nine, and never returned to the U.S. He married a French wife, and became associated with the symbolist school. France considers him one of her great poets; he would have become a member of the French Academy had he not insisted on not giving up his American citizenship. His brother, Herman Knickerbocker Vielé (1856-1908), was a painter and novelist writing in English, and lived in the United States. The Last of the Knickerbockers is his best novel.

Vienna, Congress of. The congress (1814-1815) held by the powers of Europe after Napoleon's first abdication to settle the question of new boundaries. France kept the frontiers she had had in 1792; Prussia's territory was much increased; Poland was made into a new kingdom under the Czars; etc.

Vieth von Golssenau, Arnold. Pseudonym Ludwig Renn (1899-). German novelist, well known in the United States for several books about war. In 1936 he was chief of staff of the Eleventh International Brigade in the Loyalist Army in Spain. Warfare: The Relation of War to Society (1939).

Vigée-Lebrun, Marie Anne Élisabeth (1755-1842). French portrait painter. One of her best-known pictures is Lady Hamilton as a bacchante. She also did over twenty portraits of Marie Antoinette.

vigilance committee. An unofficial group organized to maintain law and order and suppress crime. The term first came into use at the time of the California gold fever in the mid-19th century. The members of such committees were called vigilantes (Spanish for "vigilants"). Accounts of their activities in literature can be found in Bret Harte's The Outcasts of Poker Flat; Frank Norris' The Octopus; and John Steinbeck's In Dubious Battle.

vignette. A design, usually at the head of a chapter or as a tailpiece, which decorates the pages of a book. The word comes from the French word for vine, the decoration often having a design of vine leaves.

Vigny, Alfred de (1797-1863). French poet, playwright, and novelist of the romantic period (see ROMANTICISM), known for the emphasis placed in his poetry on the "inner life" of man and on the role of the poet as a lonely martyr to his art. Vigny is considered to have been among the first poets to express the latter concept and also to adopt the scientific view of the non-human and unalterable character of natural law. His poetry is marked by melancholy, pessimism, stern pride and an attitude of Stoicism, frequent primitive and historical coloring, a simple, classical technique. Among his works are the following: Poèmes (1822), Poèmes Antiques et modernes (1826), and Les Destinées (1864), volumes of poetry; La Maréchale d'Ancre, Quitte pour la Peur, and Chatterton (1835), dramas, the last-named being considered by some critics to be the best play of French romanticism; Servitude et Grandeur militaires (1835), short stories; Cinq Mars (1826), the first important example of the historical novel in France; and Journal d'un Poète (1867).

Vigny, of a noble family, was disillusioned by the low regard in which nobility was held in his day and by the failure of his term of military service to make a military career attractive to him. After an unhappy love affair with an actress, he broke with his former associates in the romantic movement and retired to intellectual, social, and artistic solitude. It was in connection with this retreat from the active world that Vigny became the first writer about whom the phrase "IVORY TOWER," almost a cliché in later criticism, was used.

Vigrid. In Norse mythology, the battlefield where at Ragnarok Loki and his kin will kill, and be killed by, the gods and where the world will be devastated.

Viking. A Norse pirate of about the 8th to 10th centuries A. D.; probably so called from Icel. víg, war, cognate with Lat. vincere, to conquer. The word is not connected with king. There were sea-kings, sometimes, but erroneously, called "vikings," connected with royal blood, and having small dominions on the coast, who were often vikings or vikings, but the reverse is not true that every vikings or pirate was a sea-king. IBSEN has a drama called The Vikings (1861).

Vildrac, Charles (1882-). French dramatist and poet, real name Charles Messenger. His one-act play, Steamship Tenacity, translated by Sidney HOWARD, was produced in New York.

Vili. In Norse mythology, one of the brothers of Odin. With Ve, the third brother, they slew Ymir and formed the world out of his body. When the first man and the first woman were made, Vili gave them reason and motion.

Villa, Francisco. Known as Pancho Villa. Real name Doroteo Arango (1877-1923). Mexican brigand and revolutionist, considered by some a champion of the people. In 1914 he held Mexico City and became dictator. He was thought to have raided across the border into New Mexico, as a consequence of which President Wilson sent General PERSHING to capture him. President CARRANZA of Mexico resented American intervention and Pershing's troops were withdrawn. Villa was assassinated (1923). John REED had accompanied him as a correspondent in the early stages of his uprising. His report upon him and his activities was published as Insurgent Mexico (1914).

Village, the, see GREENWICH VILLAGE.

Village, The. A long poem by George CRABBE (1783), written in answer to Goldsmith's The Deserted Village (see AUBURN), which Crabbe considered too sentimental to be a true picture of rural life. The Village describes in realistic terms the hardships, evils, sordidness, and misery of the lives of country-dwellers of the day, with a strong humanitarian note.

I grant indeed that fields and flocks have charms
For him that grazes or for him that farms;
But when amid such pleasing scenes I trace
The poor laborious natives of the place,
And see the mid-day sun, with fervid ray,
On their bare heads and dewy temples play;
While some, with feeble heads, and fainter hearts
Deplore their fortune, yet sustain their parts:
Then shall I dare these real ills to hide,
In tinsel trappings of poetic pride?

Village Blacksmith, The. A well-known poem by LONGFELLOW (1841), beginning:

Under a spreading chestnut tree
The village smithy stands
The smith, a mighty man is he
With large and sinewy hands
And the muscles of his brawny arms
Are strong as iron bands.

Villa-Lobos, Hector (1887-). Foremost composer of Brazil. Superintendent of musical and artistic education. He has edited a book of folksongs, Alma do Brasil.

villanelle. A poem of five three-line stanzas followed by a quatrain and having only two rhymes. In the stanzas following the first, the first and third lines of the first stanza are repeated in alternation as refrains. They are the final two lines of the concluding quatrain.

Villard, Oswald Garrison (1872-1949). Prominent liberal American journalist. Editorial writer and owner of the New York Evening Post (1897-1918). He bought The Nation (1908) and edited it (till 1932). His mother was a daughter of William Lloyd Garrison; from her he inherited his fighting spirit in behalf of liberalism. He has written John Brown: a Biography (1910); Newspapers and Newspaper Men (1923); his autobiography, Fighting Years (1939); etc.

Villari, Pasquale (1827-1917). Italian historian, known especially for his histories of SAVONAROLA and MACHIAVELLI.

Ville d'Is. The city of Ys on the coast of Brittany, ruled over by King Gradlon. The legend is that it sank into the sea in the fifth century A. D. because of the wickedness of the king's daughter. Norman Douglas, in his fantastic novel They Went (1921), gives an account of the princess's treatment of her lovers.

Villehardouin, Geoffroi de (ca. 1150-1218). French noble. He was at the conquest of Constantinople and wrote an eyewitness account of the Fourth Crusade in his Chronicles. His book has been called "the first great literary work in French prose."

Villette. A novel (1853) by Charlotte BRONTE. "Villette" is the city of Brussels.

Villiers, Alan John (1903-). Australian sailor and writer about the sea. One of his most exciting books is Grain Race (1933).

Villiers de L'Isle-Adam, Jean Marie Mathias Philippe Auguste, Comte de (1828-1889). French novelist and short-story writer, associated with the DECADENTS, known for his fantastic and macabre tales. Among his works are La Révolte (1870), a drama; Le Nouveau-Monde (1880), also a drama; Le Secret de l'Echafaud (1888); Chez les Passants (1890); Axël (1890), a novel; Histoire souveraines (1899); Oeuvres complètes (1922-1926). Contes cruels is his best-known collection of tales, and among separate titles are Isis, Claire Lenoir, L'Eve future, Tribulat Bonhomet, L'Amour suprême, Morgane, Elén.

Villon, François. Real name perhaps either François de Montcorbier or François des Loges (1431-?). French poet of the late Middle Ages, widely celebrated by 19th-century romantic novelists and poets and known for the vigor and imagination, the realism, pathos, technical skill, and expressive lyric power of his verse. Well-known single poems by him are his Petit Testament, Grand Testament, Ballade des Pendus, Ballade des Dames du temps jadis (famous in English in its translation by D. G. ROSSETTI), and Ballade pour Prier Notre Dame. Villon came of a poor family with well-to-do relatives, from one of whom he took the name by which he is best known. He held both Bachelor's and Master's degrees from the Sorbonne and spent most of his time in student brawls in the LATIN QUARTER. He was arrested several times for complicity in murders and robberies, and in 1462 was sentenced to be hanged. Later his punishment was changed to a banishment of ten years, and immediately thereafter the poet disappeared; no further record exists of him. Victor Hugo and R. L. STEVENSON are among the writers who celebrated his exploits, many of which were imaginative inventions. The Vagabond King, a popular 20th-century operetta, deals with a highly fictitious episode in his career. Justin Huntly McCARTHY's If I Were King and Needles and Pins portray Villon as a prominent character, and Stevenson depicts him in his Lodging for the Night.

Vincent, St. See under SAINTS.

Vincenzio. In Shakespeare's MEASURE FOR MEASURE, the Duke of Vienna. He delegates his office to Angelo and leaves Vienna for a time, under the pretense of going on a distant journey; but, by assuming a monk's hood, he observes incognito the conduct of his officers.

Vinci, Leonardo da (1452-1519). One of the world's great geniuses. Florentine painter, sculptor, architect, engineer, scientist. Protégé of LORENZO the Magnificent and Lodovico SFORZA. Painted Annunciation, MONA LISA. Cf. Leonardo da Vinci: the Artist (1936), The Notebooks of Leonardo da Vinci (1938), and The Mind of Leonardo da Vinci (1939) by Edward MacCurdy; and The Drawings of Leonardo da Vinci (1945) by A. E. Popham.

Vincy, Rosamond. In George Eliot's MIDDLEMARCH, a vivacious, attractive girl who marries Dr. Lydgate and whose selfishness and extravagance corrupt his ideals.

Fied Vincy. Rosamond's brother, in love with Mary Garth.

Vinicius. In Sienkiewicz' Quo Vadis, the lover of Lygia.

Vinland. Name given to North American coast by Norse wanderers in early 11th century.

Vinteuil. In Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST, a composer, considered to have been based on the French composer SAINT-SAËNS. A particular phrase in one of Vinteuil's sonatas has a peculiar fascination for the narrator of the novel, MARCEL, and he recalls it under a variety of circumstances. See ELSTIR; BERGOTTE (under ANATOLE FRANCE).

Vintry. A ward on the Thames in London where wine was landed by the merchants of Bordeaux.

Viola. The heroine of Shakespeare's TWELFTH NIGHT, sister of Sebastian. She marries Orsino, the Duke.

Violante. In Browning's RING AND THE BOOK, wife of Pietro and putative mother of Pompilia. Violante provides this supposititious child partly to please old Pietro, and partly to cheat the rightful heirs.

Viollet-le-Duc, Eugène Emmanuel (1814-1879). Famous French architect, who led the Gothic revival and whose dictionaries of architecture are still invaluable. He wrote of French architecture from the eleventh to the sixteenth century. His restorations, which affect also several cathedrals, are somewhat romantic.

Vionnet, Madame de. In Henry James' AMBASSADORS, the French woman to whom Chad Newsome is devoted.

Virgil. Full name Publius Virgilius Maro (70–19 B.C.). The greatest poet of ancient Rome, born near Mantua (hence called the Mantuan Swan), a master of epic, didactic and idyllic poetry. His chief works are the AENEID, the Eclogues or Bucolics, and the Georgics.

In the Middle Ages, Virgil came to be represented as a magician and enchanter, and it is this traditional character that furnishes DANTE with his conception of making Virgil, as the personification of human wisdom, his guide through the infernal regions in his Divine Comedy.

the Christian Virgil. Marco Girolamo Vida (d. 1566), an Italian Latin poet.

the Virgil and Horace of the Christians. So Bentley gave the Spanish poet, Aurelius Clemens Prudentius (fl. ca. 400 A.D.).

the Virgil of our dramatic authors. Ben Jonson (1572–1637), was so called by Dryden.

Shakespeare was the Homer or father of our dramatic poets; Jonson was the Virgil, and pattern of elaborate writing. I admire rare Ben, but I love Shakespeare.

the Virgil of the French drama. Jean Racine (1639–1699) was so called by Sir Walter Scott.

the English Virgil. Alfred, Lord Tennyson (1809–1892).

the Virgil of Prose. Robert Louis Stevenson (1850–1894).

Virgilia. In CORIOLANUS, Virgilia is made by Shakespeare the wife of Coriolanus, and Volumnia his mother; but historically Volumnia was his wife and Veturia his mother.

Virgin. One of the ancient constellations (Virgo), and a sign of the Zodiac. (August 23 to September 23). The constellation is the metamorphosis of ASTRAEA, goddess of justice, who was the last of the deities to quit our earth. See ICARIUS.

The word virgin is used to indicate that an article has never been used, tried, or brought into cultivation; as paper of virgin whiteness, paper that is unwritten, or unprinted, upon; a virgin fortress, one that has never been captured; a virgin forest, one that man has never attempted to tame or make use of.

Virginia. (1) In Roman legend, a young Roman plebeian of great beauty, decoyed by Appius Claudius, one of the decemvirs, and claimed as his slave. Her father, Virginius, being told of it, hastened to the Forum, and arrived at the moment when Virginia was about to be delivered up to Appius. He seized a butcher's knife, stabbed his daughter to the heart, rushed from the Forum, and raised a revolt.

This legend has been the subject of a host of tragedies: In French, by Mairet (1628), by Leclerc (1645), by Campistron (1683), by La Beaumelle (1760), by Chabanon (1769), by Laharpe (1786), by Leblanc du Guillet (1786), by Guiraud (1827), by Latour St. Ybars (1845), etc.; in Italian, by Alfieri (1783); in German, by Ephraim Gotthold Lessing (18th century); in English, by John Webster, entitled Appius and Virginia (1654); by Miss Brooke (1760); J. S. Knowles (1820), Virginius. It is the subject of one of MACAULAY's lays (1842), supposed to be sung in the forum on the day when Sextus and Licinius were elected tribunes for the fifth time, and it forms the subject of the Physician's (or Doctor of Physic's) Tale in Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES.

(2) The heroine of Bernardin de St. Pierre's romance PAUL AND VIRGINIA.

Virginian, The. A novel by Owen Wister (Am., 1902) portraying cowboy life in Wyoming. The cowboy hero, "the Virginian," wins the love of Molly Wood, a school teacher from the East. The dramatization of the novel was successful, and it has been filmed several times.

Virginians, The. A novel by THACKERAY (1857), a sequel to HENRY ESMOND, relating the story of George and Harry Warrington, the twin grandsons of Colonel Esmond. The novel takes the two brothers, of differing tastes and temperaments, through boyhood in America, through various experiences in England, where they are favorites of their wicked old aunt, Baroness Bernstein (the Beatrix of Henry Esmond) and through the American Revolution, in which Harry fights on the side of his friend, George Washington, and George on the British side.

Virginia Quarterly Review, The. A liberal journal (founded in 1925), which, although it is published at the University of Virginia, is not an organ of that institution nor primarily a Southern magazine. Its many contributors have included such names as Robert Frost, Sherwood Anderson, Thomas Wolfe, T. S. Eliot, etc.

Virginia reel. See under COVERLEY, SIR ROGER DE.

Virginibus Puerisque (Lat., "for girls and boys"). A well-known essay by Robert Louis Stevenson (1881).

Virginius. See VIRGINIA.

Virgin Queen, the. Queen Elizabeth; also called (by Shakespeare) "the fair Vestal."

Virgin Soil. A novel by TURGENEV (1876). The hero, Neshdanov, and his sweetheart, Marianne, with whom he elopes, are NIHILISTS and eagerly desire to work for the freedom of the peasants. But when his ideals fail him and his work comes to seem futile, Neshdanov commits suicide, advising Marianne to marry his practical-minded employer Solomon.

Virtues, The Seven. See under SEVEN.

Visconti. The name of a powerful Italian family. It supplied for more than a century (1311-1447) the ruling dukes of Milan. Cf. The Viper of Milan (1906) by Marjorie BOWEN.

Vishnu. The Preserver; the second member of the Hindu trinity (see TRIMURTI). He has had nine incarnations, or AVATARS, and there is one, Kalki, still to come, during which Vishnu will at the end of four ages destroy sin, the sinful, and all the enemies of the world. He is usually represented as four-armed and carrying a club, a shell, a discus, and a lotus; a bow and sword are slung at his side, and on his breast is a peculiar mark called the Shrivatsa. The sect that holds him supreme is known as the VAISHNAVA. He has millions of worshippers, especially under his avatars as RAMA and KRISHNA.

vis inertiae (Lat., "the power of inactivity"). That property of matter which makes it resist any change. Thus it is hard to set in motion what is still, or to stop what is in motion. Figuratively, it applies to that unwillingness of change which makes men "rather bear the ills they have than fly to others they know not of."

Vision of Columbus, The. See COLUMBIAD, THE.

Vision of Judgment, The. A satirical poem by Lord BYRON (1822), parodying an earlier poem by SOUTHEY, A Vision of Judgment (1821), in the preface of which Byron himself was attacked for "lewdness and impiety." Byron's poem ridicules Southey and treats with irreverent humor the subject of the earlier work, the entry of King George III, recently dead, into Heaven. The publisher of The Vision of Judgment was fined as a result of this satirical treatment of the former king's death.

Vision of Piers Plowman. See PIERS PLOWMAN.

Vision of Sir Launfal, The. A long poem (1848) by James Russell LOWELL. See also under LAUNFAL, SIR.

Vita Nuova, La (It., The New Life). A famous work by DANTE Alighieri, written about 1291. In prose, lyric poems, and sonnets, it celebrates the intensely spiritual love of Dante for his lady BEATRICE, whom he worshipped from afar until her death. La Vita Nuova is one of the notable landmarks in the tradition which extended from the medieval convention of COURTLY LOVE and the TROUBADOUR poets of Provence, through the Italian school of DOLCE STIL NUOVO and the SONNETS of PETRARCH, to the sonnet sequences of Elizabethan England.

Vitellius, Aulus (15-69 A.D.). Roman general, proclaimed emperor (January-December 69) by his troops. Opposed by VESPASIAN. Defeated and killed.

Vitruvius, Pollio Marcus (fl. ca. 40 B.C.). Roman architect, author of De Architectura (10 books), the only classical work on architecture which has come down to us.

Vittoria. A novel by George MEREDITH (1866). See SANDRA BELLONI.

Vittoria Corombona. Subtitle of The White Devil (ca. 1610) by John WEBSTER.

Vitus, St. See under SAINTS.

Vivaldi, Fulvia. The heroine of Edith Wharton's VALLEY OF DECISION.

viva voce (Lat., "with the living voice"). Orally; by word of mouth. A viva voce examination is one in which the respondent answers by word of mouth.

Vivian Grey. A novel by DISRAELI (1827), chiefly concerning an intrigue which the very young, gay and talented Vivian Grey persuades the Marquess of Carabas to support against his own government. Although Vivian manages to control the Marquess through his stupidity and vanity, the plot fails because of a woman's double-dealing, and the young hero is involved in a duel, kills his opponent, and is compelled to go abroad, where he meets with sundry adventures which conclude the book. An intriguer of the intriguers, now in support of Vivian, now against him, is the clever and ruthless Mrs. Felix Lorraine, who ends by attempting to poison him. The character of Mrs. Lorraine is said to have been drawn, in part, from Lady Caroline LAMB, and Vivian Grey has usually been regarded, whether rightly or not, as a self-portrait.

Viviani, Emilia. An Italian woman, one of the many to whom P. B. SHELLEY enjoyed "Platonic" attachment during his career.

Vivien. An enchantress of the Arthurian romances, called also Nimue and, because she lived in a palace in the middle of a magic lake, usually identified with the Lady of the Lake. It was here that she brought up LAUNCELOT, hence called Launcelot of the Lake. King Arthur's famous sword Excalibur was her gift. She is MERLIN's mistress, and at last causes his downfall by entrapping him in a hawthorn bush from which it is impossible for her to release him or for him to free himself. The motive of this act varies in different versions of the legend, from curiosity to sheer malice.

In Tennyson's Idylls she appears as a wily wanton who "hated all the knights." She tries to seduce "the blameless king," and does seduce Merlin, who, "overtalked and overworn, told her his secret charm":

The which if any wrought on anyone
With woven paces and with waving arms,
The man so wrought on ever seemed to lie
Closed in the four walls of a hollow tower,
From which was no escape for evermore

Vivien

Having obtained this secret, the wanton "put forth the charm," and in the hollow oak lay Merlin as one dead, "lost to life, and use and name, and fame."

Vizetelly, Frank Horace (1864-1938). American lexicographer; editor (1914-1938) of Funk & Wagnalls Standard Dictionary; author of many books on the English language.

Vlaminck, Maurice de (1876-). French painter, identified with the Fauvists.

Vogel, Henriette. See KLEIST, BERND HEINRICH WILHELM VON.

Vogelweide, Walther von der, see WALTHER VON DER VOGELWEIDE.

Vogler, Abt. See ABT VÖGLER.

Voisin, Gabriel (1880-). French pioneer manufacturer of airplanes.

Volapük. A language intended for universal use, invented about 1879 by Johann Martin Schleyer (1831-1912), a German priest of Konstanz, Baden. The name is formed by combining two of his manufactured words, vol, "the world," and puk, speech. Volapük is an ingeniously simplified form of English, containing no sound or sound combination which Schleyer believed would present difficulties for some ethnic group somewhere in the world.

Volkov, Fëdor Grigorievich (1729-1763). Russian actor who organized (1755) the first company of actors in his country and, by command of the Czarina, established the Moscow Theater (1756).

Vollar, Nettie. A leading character in Hergesheimer's JAVA HEAD.

Vollmer, Lula. American dramatist from North Carolina. Author of Sunup (1923); The Shame Woman (1923); etc.; radio serials; and short stories.

Volpone or The Fox. A comedy by Ben Jonson (1606). Volpone, a rich Venetian nobleman, without children, pretends to be dying, in order to draw gifts from those who pay court to him under the expectation of becoming his heirs. Mosca, his knavish confederate, persuades each in turn that he is named for the inheritance, and by this means exacts many a costly present. At the end, Volpone is betrayed, his property forfeited, and he is sentenced to lie in the worst hospital in all Venice.

Volscius, Prince. In the Duke of Buckingham's comedy The Rehearsal (1671), a military hero, who falls in love with the fair Parthenope and disputes with Prince Prettyman upon the superiority of his sweetheart to Cloris, whom Prince Prettyman sighs for.

Why, this is worse than Prince Volscius in love!—
Sir W. Scott.

Oh, be merry, by all means Prince Volscius in love! Ha, ha, ha!—Congreve, The Double Dealer (1694)

Volstead Act. An act passed by the United States Congress on October 28, 1919, providing for enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment (national prohibition), through the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. See also PROHIBITION.

Völsunga Saga. The Scandinavian prose form of the German epic poem, the NIBELUNGENLIED. The general outlines of the two stories are the same, but names and details vary. The hero, Sigurd (see SIEGFRIED) is brought up by Regin the Smith and at his instigation kills the dragon Fafner. He rides through flames to the sleeping Valkyr maiden Brynhild (see BRUNHILD), marries her, leaves her in search of adventure, and under the influence of a love-potion given him in the hall of the Nibelungs, marries Gudrun (the KRIEMHILD of the Nibelungenlied) and aids her brother Gunnar (see GUNTHER) to secure Brynhild as his wife. In jealous fury Brynhild persuades Gudrun's brother Guttorm to kill Sigurd, and then dies herself on his funeral pyre. Gudrun now marries Atli (the Attila of history and the ETZEL of the Nibelungenlied), and when she has secured vengeance on her enemies, sets fire to the house and kills Atli.

William MORRIS retold the Völsunga Saga in his poetic Lay of the Volsung and the Fall of the Niblung (1877) and Wagner drew largely upon it for the four operas of his RING DES NIBELUNGEN.

Volta, Count Alessandro (1745-1827). Italian physicist; pioneered in electricity. The electrical unit volt is named after him.

Voltaire. Pseudonym of François Marie Arouet (1694-1778). French poet, dramatist, satirist, historian, and philosopher, famous for his skepticism, his enmity to organized religion, fanaticism, intolerance, and superstition (attacked under the slogan Écrasons l'infâme!), his biting wit and his prejudices, his personal vigor in spite of chronic ill health, his clever and swiftly moving philosophic tales, and his contributions to the objective study of history. His dramatic works, chiefly neo-classical in form, include Oedipe (1718); Zaire (see ZARA; 1732); Alzire (1736); Mahomet, ou le Fanatisme (1742); Mérope (1743); Sémiramis (1748); L'Orphelin de la Chine. Among his polemic and philosophic writings are Lettres sur les Anglais, attacking what he regarded as Shakespeare's faulty dramatic construction and poor taste, while praising other aspects of English life and thought; Lettres Philosophiques (1734); Traité de Métaphysique; Épître à Uranie and Discours en Vers sur l'Homme (1738), philosophical poems; Poème sur le Désastre de Lisbonne; Poème sur la Loi naturelle; Traité sur la Tolérance; Dictionnaire Philosophique Portatif (1764); Sermon des Cinquante; Le Philosophe ignorant (1766). Of his historical works, the greatest are considered to be Histoire de Charles XII (1731); Le Siècle de Louis XIV (1751); Essai sur les Moeurs et l'Esprit des Nations (1753-1756), regarded as the first history of civilization; Le Pyrrhonisme de l'Histoire (1768). The best-known of his philosophical tales, which became the most popular of his works in later times, are Le Monde Comme il va; ZADIG (1748); Micromégas (1752), often compared to Gulliver's Travels (see GULLIVER, LEMUEL); L'Ingénu (1757); CANDIDE (1759), the most famous of all his works. Outstanding among his poetry are La Henriade (1728-1730), an epic on the period of Henry IV; Le Temple de Goût (1733), a satire believed to have been inspired by Pope's DUNCIAD; and La Pucelle (1762), a burlesque on Joan of Arc. He also wrote numerous light and witty verses on a variety of occasions.

Voltaire, one of the most famous and influential figures in the history of thought, lived a turbulent life, constantly being arrested and exiled because of his unorthodox ideas, displeasing to political and religious authority of his time, and his merciless satire. He first made his reputation as a dramatist, but after being beaten and imprisoned by an offended noble, he went to England for a time. There he came under the influence of POPE and SWIFT, whom he met, of the ideas of NEWTON and LOCKE, and of English political ideals; as a result of this visit, he introduced the plays of Shakespeare into France on his return, although in time he came to regard Shakespeare's influence on the drama as deplorable. Later Voltaire was banished again from France because of his Lettres Philosophiques and took refuge first with Mme du CHÂTELET at Cirey and then in Holland. After a correspondence with Frederick the Great, the author was invited to Prussia, where he stayed at the monarch's court for three years until, in 1753, the two men became estranged. Then Voltaire retired to FERNEY, and for nearly all the rest of his life he lived there at ease, writing treatises which violently denounced the cases of intolerance and injustice that came to his attention, quarreling with J. J. ROUSSEAU, the Roman Catholic Church, and CALVINISM, and winning fame all over Europe. When he returned once more to Paris, just before his death, he was honored as a great man and entertained so sumptuously that it is said he died of exhaustion. In 1791, after the French Revolution, on which he had an important influence, his ashes were placed in the Pantheon.

The name Voltaire is simply an anagram of Arouet L. I. (le jeune).

the German Voltaire. Johann Wolfgang von Goethe (1749-1838); Christoph Martin Wieland (1733-1813).

the Polish Voltaire. Ignatius Krasicki (1774-1801).

Voluntaries. A poem by Ralph Waldo EMERSON, first published (1863) in the Atlantic Monthly. It was written in honor of Colonel Robert G. Shaw who led a Negro regiment in the Civil War. See also ODE IN TIME OF HESITATION.

Vonnoh, Robert William (1858-1933). American portrait painter. His wife, Bessie Potter Vonnoh (1872-), is a well-known American sculptor and member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters.

Voodoo or Voodooism. A degraded system of magic and witchcraft which includes snake-worship and, in its extreme forms, human sacrifices and cannibalism, said to be a relic of African barbarism and still practiced by Creoles and Negroes in Haiti and other parts of the West Indies and southern American states. "BLOOD" screamed the whistles and the fifes of the warriors, "BLOOD" screamed the skull-faced lean witch-doctors, "Whirl ye the deadly voo-doo rattle." Vachel Lindsay, The Congo

The name is thought to have been first given to it by missionaries from Fr. Vaudois, a Waldensian, as these were accused of sorcery; but Sir Richard Burton derived it from vodun, a dialect form of Ashanti obosum, a fetish or tutelary spirit.

Voroshilov, Kliment Efremovich (1881-). Russian soldier. Having commanded a Soviet army at the end of World War I, he reorganized the Russian general staff and developed the tanks and planes of the Soviet forces. In 1941, at the beginning of Russia's war with Germany, he commanded on the Leningrad front and, with ZHUKOV, broke the siege of Leningrad (1943).

Vortex, The. A play (1925) by Noel COWARD, about a neurotic son and mother.

Vox Clamantis. A long poem in Latin, partly in allegory, by John GOWER, written about 1382, dealing mainly with the Peasants' Revolt of 1381. The rebellious peasants are presented in terms of animals and monsters, including asses, oxen, dogs, and swine, who rise against the nobles, capture London, and are finally put down. This is all told vividly as a dream experienced by the poet; the remainder of the poem is concerned with a discussion of the evils and corruptions of society at the time, in which the faults and duties of the knights, the peasants, the craftsmen and merchants, the lawyers, and finally the King himself, are considered in turn.

vox populi vox Dei (Lat.). The voice of the people is the voice of God.

Voyage of Bran, The. An early Irish tale, considered to have been written in the 7th century, dealing with a voyage made by the hero Bran, son of Febal, to the "Happy Otherworld," located on an island far out in the ocean. Bran and his band have a number of adventures on their way to the island, including a sojourn in the Land of Women. When the travelers finally reach Ireland again, they find they have been forgotten. See also EARTHLY PARADISE, THE; St. Brendan, under SAINTS.

Voynich, Ethel Lillian Boole (1864-). English novelist and translator from the Russian. Her best-known novel is The Gadfly (1897).

Voysey Inheritance, The. A drama (1905) by Harley GRANVILLE-BARKER, concerning financial ethics.

Vronski, Count. In Tolstoi's ANNA KARÉ-NINA, the young officer who becomes Anna's lover.

Vulcan. A son of JUPITER and JUNO, god of fire and the working of metals, and patron of handicraftsmen in Roman mythology, identified with the Greek Hephaestus, and called also Mulciber, i.e., "the softener."

His workshop was on Mount Etna, where the Cyclops assisted him in forging thunderbolts for Jove. It is said that he took the part of Juno against Jupiter, and Jupiter hurled him out of heaven. He was nine days in falling, and at last was picked up, half dead and with one leg broken, by the fishermen of the island of Lemnos. It was he who, with the stroke of an axe, delivered MINERVA from the head of Jupiter. VENUS was his wife, and in consequence of her amour with MARS he came to be regarded as the special patron of cuckolds.

Vulcan's badge. The badge of cuckoldom.

Vulgar Errors. The title of the best-known treatise by Sir Thomas BROWNE, published in 1646.

Vulgate, the. The Latin translation of the Bible, made about 385-405 by St. Jerome (see under SAINTS), still used, with some modifications, as the authorized version by Roman Catholics.

Vulpus, Christiane. Mistress of GOETHE from 1789 to 1806, in the latter year finally becoming his wife. She bore the poet four children.

V. V.'s Eyes. A novel by Henry Sydnor HARRISON (Am., 1913). The hero, known as "V.V.," is an utterly unworldly social reformer, and the heroine is a frivolous and selfish society girl who through his influence becomes interested in more worth-while things.

Vye, Eustacia. Heroine of Hardy's RETURN OF THE NATIVE.

English grammar, composition, geography and the use of dumb-bells are taught by Miss Melissa Wackles; writing, arithmetic, dancing, music and general fascination by Miss Sophy Wackles; needlework, marking, and samplers by Miss Jane Wackles; corporal punishment and domestic duties by Mrs. Wackles.

Waddell, Helen (1889–). Irish scholar and student of medieval literature. She has translated Latin and Chinese lyrics and is the author of The Wandering Scholars (1927); the novel Peter Abelard (1933); and The Desert Fathers (1936).

Waddington, Mr. The hero of May Sinclair's novel MR. WADDINGTON OF WYCK.

Wade, Miss. In Dickens' LITTLE DORRIT, a handsome young woman who looks at every act of kindness, benevolence, and charity with a jaundiced eye and attributes it to a vile motive. Twice she is loved—in one case she jilted her lover, in the other she was herself jilted. The man in the latter case was Henry Gowan, who has married Pet, the daughter of Mr. Meagles, and in consequence of this marriage Miss Wade hates Gowan, his wife, the Meagleses, and all their friends. She entices Tattycoram away from Mr. Meagles, and the two young women live together for a time, nursing their hatred of man to keep it warm.

Wadman, Widow. In Sterne's TRISTRAM SHANDY, a comely widow, who wishes to secure UNCLE TOBY for her second husband. Among other wiles, she pretends to have something in her eye, and gets Uncle Toby to look at it. As the kind-hearted hero of Namur does so, the gentle widow gradually places her face nearer and nearer the Captain's mouth, in the hope that he will kiss and propose.

wager of battle, trial of battle. The settling of any form of dispute by personal combat. The custom goes back to early Teutonic times. William the Conqueror gave it legal status in England where it was not officially abolished before 1818.

Wagg, Mr. A literary man in Thackeray's PENDENNIS, a professional humorist.

Wagnalls, Adam Willis (1843–1924). American publisher, one of the original founders and president of the publishing house of Funk & Wagnalls Co.

Wagner. The faithful servant and constant companion of FAUST, in Marlowe's drama called The Life and Death of Dr. Faustus (1589), in Goethe's Faust (1798) and in Gounod's opera Faust (1859).

Wagner is a type of the pedant. He sacrifices himself to books as Faust does to knowledge . . . the dust of folios is his element, parchment the source of his inspiration. . . . He is one of those who, in the presence of Niagara, would vex you with questions about arrow-headed inscriptions . . . or the origin of the Pelasgi.—Lewes.

Wagner, Richard (1813–1883). German musician and author. His major works, though often called operas, were designed as Gesamtkunstwerke ("works of all-arts-in-one") with poetry, music, dance, etc., collaborating under the authorship of one creative genius. Posterity has decided that Wagner was (first) a great musician, (second) a second-rate poet, and (third) a man of various avocations. His "music dramas" (the term is his) stress characterization and continuity of action, they work with leitmotifs and endless melodies, and abandon the bravura and stilted artifice of the operatic tradition. The subject matter of most of his works is drawn from Teutonic and German mythology or history. Wagner has been both praised and attacked as an exponent of heroic or tin-and-brass nationalism. Nietzsche, who had admired him greatly, came to despise him ferociously. For the performance of his works he founded the Festspielhaus (completed 1876), at Bayreuth.

His major work is DER RING DES NIBELUNGEN, based on the Nibelungenlied, the Volsunga Saga, and the Edda, and comprising an introduction, Das Rheingold (1st performance, 1869), and 3 parts: Die Walkure (1st performance, 1870); Siegfried (1st performance, 1876); and Götterdämmerung (1st performance, 1876). His only comedy, Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg (1st performance, 1868), is a flawless masterpiece. It is performed, in Europe as well as in the U.S., more often than any of his other works.

His wife, Cosima Wagner, née Liszt (1837–1930), a daughter of Franz Liszt, was instrumental in securing funds for the establishment of the Bayreuther Festspielhaus. Their son, Siegfried Wagner (1869–1930), also a musician, was conductor of his father's works at Bayreuth.

Wagner, Robert Ferdinand (1877–). German-born lawyer and legislator in the U.S. Justice of the supreme court of New York (1919–1926); U.S. senator (from 1927). He sponsored the Wagner Act (1935) which created the National Labor Relations Board. His consistently progressive legislation has made him an admired champion of labor.

Wagon Boy, the. The American orator and politician, Thomas Corwin (1794-1865) was so called from his youthful experience of bringing a wagon-load of supplies to General W. H. Harrison during a war against the Indians.

Wahabites. A Mohammedan sect, whose object is to bring back the doctrines and observances of Islam to the literal precepts of the Koran; so called from the founder, Ibn Abdul Wahab (died 1787).

Wailing Wall. A famous place in Jerusalem where, according to tradition, the orthodox Jews gathered to lament the fall of the Jewish nation. At times the wall, which is near the temple of Solomon, now the Mosque of Omar, has been the scene of rioting between the Jews and the Mohammedans.

Wain. Short for Charles' or Charles's Wain, that is, the wagon of Charlemagne. The constellation Dipper or Ursa Major. Also called Bear.

Wainamöinen. The hero of the KALEVALA, the Orpheus of Finnish mythology.

Wainwright, Jonathan Mayhew (1792-1854). Protestant Episcopal clergyman and bishop of New York (1852). His son, Jonathan Mayhew Wainwright (1821-1863), a naval officer in the Civil War, fought with Farragut and Porter on the Mississippi. Great-grandson, Jonathan Mayhew Wainwright (1883-), an officer in the U.S. army, commanded the northern front in the Philippines after the Japanese invasion (December, 1941); he followed MacArthur as commander in chief, and was made lieutenant general (1942); he defended Bataan and Corregidor until compelled to surrender (May, 1942). Cf. General Wainwright's Story by General Jonathan M. Wainwright, edited by Robert Considine (1946).

Wait, James. The "nigger" of Conrad's NIGGER OF THE NARCISSUS.

Waiting for Lefty. A play by Clifford ODETS (1935), dealing with a meeting of a cab-drivers' union at which it is to be decided whether or not a strike is to be called. While the members wait for the arrival of Lefty Costello, a particularly popular taximan, the background of the labor difficulties is presented in dramatic form, in terms of injustice and frustration in the lives of the drivers. Eventually word arrives that Lefty has been killed, and the members of the committee, infuriated, vote to call the strike. Waiting for Lefty was one of the best-known of the proletarian plays of the 1930's. See PROLETARIAN LITERATURE.

Wakefield Master, the. Conjectural author of the leading works in the TOWNELEY cycle of mystery and miracle plays, thought to have been a man of humble birth, though well educated, and probably a secular priest, flourishing about the middle of the 15th century; so called because internal evidence in the plays suggests they were performed by the local guilds of Wakefield, in southern Yorkshire. The plays attributed to the Wakefield Master include Noah, Herod, The Way of the Cross, and the First and Second Shepherd's Play. Because of their humor, the unknown author has been called by some scholars the "first great comic dramatist in English literature."

Wakem, Philip. In George Eliot's MILL ON THE FLOSS, a brilliant but sensitive cripple, in love with Maggie TULLIVER.

Wald, Lillian D. (1867-1940). American social worker. Founded Henry Street Settlement in New York City (1893) with the world's first public school nursing system (1902) and obtained playgrounds for children in New York slums. Vice-president, American Association for Labor Legislation. Author of The House on Henry Street (1915); Windows on Henry Street (1935); etc.

Waldegrave, Henry. The hero of Campbell's GERTRUDE OF WYOMING.

Walden, or Life in the Woods. The chief work of Henry THOREAU (1854). It is a volume telling of his simple, healthy, hermit-like life on the shores of Walden Pond, where he built himself a hut, cultivated a garden and lived for years on an annual outlay of eight dollars. The book is noted for its nature descriptions.

Waldensians or Waldenses (also called the Vaudois). Followers of Peter Waldo of Lyons, who began a reform movement in the Church about 1170. They threw off the authority of the Pope, bishops, and all clergy, appointed lay-preachers (women among them), rejected infant baptism and many other rites, and made themselves so obnoxious to the ecclesiastical powers that they met with considerable persecution. This they survived, and their descendants in doctrine still exist, principally in the Alpine valleys of Dauphiné, Provence, and Piedmont.

Waldo. The hero of Olive Schreiner's STORY OF AN AFRICAN FARM.

Waldseemüller or Waltzemüller, Martin. Called himself (in pseudo-Greek) Hylacomylus or Iacomilus (1470?-?1518). German cartographer. In his map of the world in 12 sheets, Cosmographiae Introductio (1507), he was the first to use the term America for the New World. See also VESPUCCI.

Wales, The Prince of. The popular story is that the title arose thus: When Edward I subdued Wales, he promised the Welsh, if they would lay down their arms, that he would give them a native prince who could not speak a word of English. His queen (Eleanor) having given birth to a son in Wales, the new-born child was entitled Edward, Prince of Wales, and ever since then the eldest son of the British sovereign has retained the title. The facts, however, are that Edward I obtained the submission of the Welsh in 1276; his eldest son, afterwards Edward II, was born at Carnarvon in 1284, and it was not till 1301 that he was created Prince of Wales.

Waley, Arthur David. Original surname Schloss. Assistant curator of prints and drawings in the British Museum and translator from the Chinese and Japanese. With his English version (1925 ff.) of Lady MURASAKI's Tale of Genji he made accessible to Western readers "the oldest novel [and one of the finest] in the world."

Walhalla, see VALHALLA.

Walker.

Hookey Walker! A derisive exclamation meaning Nonsense! Incredible! used when hearing a "tall story" or some statement that cannot be trusted. The legend is that John Walker was an outdoor clerk at Longman, Clementi and Company's, Cheapside, and was noted for his eagle nose, which gained him the nickname of Old Hookey. His office was to keep the workmen to their work, or report them to the principals. Of course it was the interest of the employees to throw discredit on Walker's reports, and the poor old man was so badgered and ridiculed that the firm found it politic to abolish the office.

to go by Walker's bus. To walk. Similar expressions are, "To go by the Marrowbone stage," "To ride Shanks' pony."

Walker, John Brisben (1847-1931). American publisher and journalist. Owner and editor (1889-1905) of the Cosmopolitan Magazine.

Walker, William (1824-1860). American pirate and filibuster, who made himself president of a republic in Southern California. He landed in Nicaragua and proclaimed himself president (1856). He got into trouble with Cornelius VANDERBILT (1857), who caused a coalition of Central American powers to oust him (1857). He fled to the U.S., but was arrested, turned over to the authorities of Honduras, and shot. Before that he had written a good book on The War in Nicaragua (1860).

Walking Stewart. The nickname of John Stewart (d. 1822), an English traveler, who traveled on foot through Hindustan, Persia, Nubia, Abyssinia, the Arabian Desert, Europe, and the United States. He is described as a most interesting man, . . . eloquent in conversation, contemplative . . . and crazy beyond all reach of hebeore, . . . yet sublime and divinely benignant in his visionariness. This man, as a pedestrian traveler, had seen more of the earth's surface . . . than any man before or since.—De Quincey.

Walküre, Die (The Valkyrie). One of the four operas of Wagner's RING DES NIBELUNGEN.

Wallace, Alfred Russel (1823-1913). English naturalist and traveler. His independent formulation of a theory of evolution by natural selection is his most important contribution to science. His paper, On the Tendency of Varieties to Depart Indefinitely from the Original Type, was read before the Linnaean Society the same day as Darwin's paper (July 1, 1858). Among his other writings is a valuable description of a trip to the Amazon, Travels on the Amazon and the Rio Negro (1853).

Wallace, Edgar (1875-1932). English writer of sensational fiction and plays. Sanders of the River (1930); On the Spot (1931).

Wallace, Henry Agard (1888-). U.S. secretary of agriculture (1933-1940) and vice-president of the U.S. (1941-1945). Head of the Economic Defense Board and of the Priorities Board (from 1941) and secretary of commerce (from 1945). Among the books he has written are Agricultural Prices (1920); New Frontiers (1934); Technology, Corporations, and the General Welfare (1937); The American Choice (1940); Sixty Million Jobs (1945); etc. Editor of the NEW REPUBLIC (1946-1947). Candidate for president (1948), leading his own third party the PROGRESSIVE PARTY.

Wallace, Lewis. Known as Lew Wallace (1827-1905). American lawyer, army officer, and novelist; author of best-selling romances, including THE FAIR GOD (1873); BEN HUR; A Tale of the Christ (1880); and THE PRINCE OF INDIA (1893).

Wallace, Sir William (1272?-1305). Known as "the Hammer and Scourge of England." One of the national heroes of Scotland, associated with Robert BRUCE.

Wallack, Henry John (1790-1870). English actor and head of a famous English theatrical family. His nephew, Lester Wallack (1820-1888), was a dramatist and actor, who became manager of Wallack's Theater in New York City (1861-1887). His Memories of Fifty Years (1889) are important source material for the theater historian.

Wallas, Graham (1858-1932). English economist and teacher. The Great Society (1914); The Art of Thought (1926); etc. Among his disciples in the U.S. is Walter LIPPMANN.

Wallenstein. A historic drama by SCHILLER (1799-1800), in three divisions: Wallenstein's Camp, the prologue; The Piccolomini in five acts; and Wallenstein's Death in five acts. The hero is Count Albrecht von Wallenstein (1583-1634), commander of the forces of the German emperor during the Thirty Years' War.

Waller, Edmund (1606-1687). English poet, known for the smoothness and harmony of his verse, which was highly praised by John DRYDEN. Volumes of his poems were published in 1645, 1664, 1668, and 1686. During the Civil War, Waller participated in a Royalist plot and was fined and banished from England as a result, later being allowed to return, however. During the Commonwealth he wrote a panegyric on Oliver CROMWELL, and in the Restoration period he wrote verse celebrating Charles II.

wallflowers. At a dance or party, girls who have no partners and who sit or stand near the walls.

Wallingford, Get-Rich-Quick. An engaging schemer and promoter who was the hero of many stories by George Randolph CHESTER; hence, any clever, unscrupulous schemer.

Wall Street. A term for American business and moneyed interests, from the street in New York City where the financial operations of the country are centered.

Waln, Nora (1895-). American writer. Her book on Germany, Reaching for the Stars (1939), was based on personal experiences. Her previous publication, The House of Exile (1933) was similarly the fruit of her sojourn in China.

Walpole, Horace. 4th Earl of Orford (1717-1797). English politician and author, best known for his Castle of Otranto (1764), one of the outstanding examples of the Gothic novel. His letters, several volumes of which were published after his death, are also well known, and other works by him include Anecdotes of Painting in England (1762-1771); Catalogue of Engravers in England (1763); and Historic Doubts on Richard III (1768). Walpole traveled a good deal in France and Italy, and was a Member of Parliament from 1741 to 1767. At Strawberry Hill, in Twickenham, he took up residence in a house made to resemble "a little Gothic castle" and set up a printing press on which he printed several of his own works. He was the son of Sir Robert WALPOLE.

Walpole, Sir Hugh Seymour (1884-1941). English novelist, born in New Zealand, author of best-selling novels dealing chiefly with middle- and upper-class English life. His books include The Wooden Horse (1909); Manadick at Forty (1910); Mr. Perin and Mr. Traill (1911); The Prelude to Adventure (1912); Fortitude (1913), his best-known work; The Duchess of Wrexhe (1914); The Golden Scarecrow (1915); The Dark Forest (1916); The Green Mirror (1918); The Secret City (1919); Jeremy (1919), Jeremy and Hamlet (1923), and Jeremy at Crale (1927); The Captives (1920); The Thirteen Travelers (1921); The Cathedral (1922); The Young Enchanted (1922); The Old Ladies (1924); Portrait of a Man with Red Hair (1925); Harmer John (1926); Wintersmoon (1928); The Silver Thorn (1928); Farthing Hall (1929), written with J. B. PRIESTLEY; Hans Frost (1929); Rogue Herries (1930); Judith Paris (1931); The Fortress (1932), and Vanessa (1933), a historical tetralogy; Above the Dark Tumult (1931); All Souls' Night (1933), a collection of stories; Captain Nicholas (1934); The Inquisitor (1935); A Prayer for My Son (1936); John Cornelius (1937); The Joyful Delaneys (1938); The Haxtons (1939), a play; The Sea Tower (1939); Roman Fountain (1940); The Bright Pavilions (1940); The Blind Man's House (1941); The Killer and the Slain (1942); Katherine Christian (1943), an unfinished novel.

Walpole, Sir Robert. 1st Earl of Orford (1676-1745). A leader of the Whig party in England. Secretary of war (1708-1710); treasurer of the navy (1710-1711); twice prime minister and chancellor of the exchequer. He stood for peace between France, England, and Spain. He studied especially finance and commerce, and laid the basis for free trade. Father of Horace WALPOLE.

Walpurgis Night (Ger. Walpurgisnacht). The night preceding May 1, the feast of St. Walburga (710?-777), an English missionary nun who aided St. Boniface in Germany. According to German legend, Walpurgis Night is the time of the WITCHES' SABBATH on the Brocken in the Harz Mountains. In Goethe's Faust there is a famous Walpurgis Night.

Walsh, Maurice (1879-). Irish novelist. His The Key Above the Door (1923) sold a hundred thousand copies.

Walsh, Thomas (1871-1928). American poet who studied under Brander MATTHEWS and George Edward WOODBERRY. The Prison Ships and Other Poems (1909); The Pilgrim Kings: Greco, Goya and Other Poems of Spain (1915); Gardens Overseas and Other Poems (1918); Don Folquet and Other Poems (1920). Walsh was a great lover of old Spanish literature and compiled, in English, a well-known Hispanic Anthology. Also The Catholic Anthology.

Walsingham, Sir Francis (1530?-1590). English statesman; secretary of state (1573-1590) to Queen Elizabeth. He had Mary Queen of Scots convicted and executed, and warned Queen Elizabeth about the Spanish Armada. His son-in-law was Sir Philip SIDNEY.

Walter, André. An autobiographical character of André GIDE, the hero of Gide's first work, Les Cahiers d'André Walter (The Notebooks of André Walter; 1891). This book tells in early fictional form the story presented in the author's autobiography, Si le Grain ne Meurt, translated as If It Die, and again in L'Immoraliste. The Notebooks is purportedly the posthumously published journal of André, who loves his cousin Emmanuèle, although she is already married and has no suspicion of the emotions she has inspired. André's mother dies, warning the youth to be resigned to the frustration of his love, Emmanuèle, too, dies, and André, stricken with brain fever as a result of his sorrow, finally goes to his grave also. Gide later repudiated the book "except as a testimony of the troubled mysticism of my youth."

Walter, Bruno. Original surname Schlesinger (1876-). Famous conductor of opera and symphony in Vienna, Munich, and Berlin. He became guest conductor in New York (1922-1926; 1932-1935), and also in London. Resident of the U.S. (since 1939) as guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic, the Metropolitan Opera Company, the National Broadcasting Company, etc.

Walter, Eugene (1874-1941). American dramatist. His best-known plays are Paid in Full and The Easiest Way (both 1908). He also made plays of several of the novels of John Fox Jr., as The Trail of the Lonesome Pine (1912) and The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come (1916).

Walter, John (1739-1812). English journalist and publisher. He purchased the patents of an invention (called "logotype") which permitted typesetting in units of words rather than of letters. His newspaper, The Daily Universal Register (founded in 1785), became the London Times (1788).

Walter, Lucy. Known as Mrs. Barlow (1630?-1658). Mistress of Charles II (1648-1651) and mother by him of the Duke of MONMOUTH.

Walter of Evesham or Walter Odington (fl. 1230). English Benedictine monk. Author of De Speculatione Musices, an important compendium of musical theory of the Middle Ages.

Walter or Walther von Stolzing. In Wagner's opera, DIE MEISTERSINGER, the successful suitor of Eva Pogner.

Walters or Waters, Childe, see CHILDE WATERS.

Walther von der Vogelweide (1170?-?1230). Middle High German lyric poet and MINNESINGER, attached to the Viennese court and later leading the life of a wandering minstrel. He is considered the greatest German poet of the Middle Ages, principally because he succeeded in either breaking the petrified forms of the lyrical (Provençal) tradition or filling them with a passionately personal content. He is the first medieval poet whose work is not limited to conventional love lyrics but serves also as a vehicle for the author's political ideals and gives expression to his religious fervor. The German national song, Deutschland Deutschland über alles, is a rather sorry nineteenth-century adaptation of a song about love of country and friendship by Walther von der Vogelweide. He appears as contestant for the singer crown at the Wartburg in Wagner's opera TANNHAUSER.

Walton, Eda Lou. American poet and critic. Author of Dawn Boy: Blackfeet and Navajo Songs (1926); Jane Matthew and Other Poems (1931); etc. Joint editor with George Anderson Kumler of This Generation. A Selection of British and American Literature from 1914 to the Present, to which each editor contributed a historical and critical essay.

Walton, Izaak (1593-1683). English prose-writer, best known for The Compleat Angler (1653), a discourse on the quiet pleasures of fishing, presented in the form of a conference among Piscator, the fisherman (or the author himself), Venator, the hunter, and Auceps, the falconer, during a five-day period of fishing. It is written in a simple, quiet, naive style, and combines odd bits of learning with its pastoral wisdom. Walton followed the trade of ironmonger but in his youth was a close friend of John DONNE and BEN JONSON. He wrote a number of biographies of outstanding literary figures of his ages, his subjects including DONNE (1640), Sir Henry WOTTON (1651), Richard HOOKER (1665), George HERBERT (1670), and Robert Sanderson (1678).

Walton, Katherine. Heroine of W. G. Simms' novel KATHERINE WALTON and a leading character in his Revolutionary trilogy. Colonel Walton is a prominent figure in the same books.

Waltzing Matilda. An Australian song about a "swagman" or wanderer, very popular during World War II. Lines originally written by A. B. Paterson (1864-1941) and appearing in his Collected Verse.

Wamba. In Scott's IVANHOE, "the son of Witless," the jester of Cedric the Saxon of Rotherwood.

Wanderer, The. An Anglo-Saxon dramatic lyric of the early 8th century, expressing the lament of a warrior or bard who has lost his lord, his tribesmen, and his kinsmen in a defeat in battle and wanders about in search of a new tribal court to which he may attach himself, recalling at random as he does so the pleasures of his lost home and the sorrows he has recently suffered.

Wandering Jew, the. The central figure of a widespread medieval legend which tells how a Jew who refused to allow Christ to rest at his door while He was bearing His cross to Calvary, was condemned to wander over the face of the earth till the end of the world. The usual form of the legend says that he was Ahasuerus, a cobbler. The craftsman pushed him away, saying, "Get off! Away with you, away!" Our Lord replied, "Truly I go away, and that quickly, but tarry thou till I come."

Another tradition has it that the Wandering Jew was Kartaphilos (Cartaphilus); the door-keeper of the judgment hall in the service of Pontius Pilate. He struck our Lord as he led Him forth, saying, "Go on faster, Jesus"; whereupon the Man of Sorrows replied, "I am going, but thou shalt tarry till I come again" (Chronicle of St. Albans Abbey; 1228). The same Chronicle, continued by Matthew Paris, tells us that Kartaphilos was baptized by Ananias, and received the name of Joseph. At the end of every hundred years he falls into a trance, and wakes up a young man about thirty.

In German legend, he is associated with John Buttadaeus, seen at Antwerp in the 13th century, again in the 15th, and a third time in the 16th. His last appearance was in 1774 at Brussels. In the French version, he is named Isaac Laquedem or Lakedion. Another story has it that he was Salathiel ben Sadi, who appeared and disappeared towards the close of the 16th century, at Venice, in so sudden a manner as to attract the notice of all Europe; and another connects him with the WILD HUNTSMAN.

There is a ballad in Percy's Reliques called The Wandering Jew; and poems by Béranger and Quintet entitled Ahasuerus, and by Caroline Norton entitled The Undying One, deal with the legend. SHELLEY introduces Ahasuerus into Queen Mab, The Revolt of Islam; and his prose tale The Assassin.

In prose fiction, the Jew is the subject of Croly's Salathiel (1827) reprinted in 1900 as Tarry Thou till I Come, of Lew Wallace's PRINCE OF INDIA, and of the more famous romance by Eugene Sue entitled The Wandering Jew (Le Juif errant; 1845). In the latter, Ahasuerus and his half-sister Herodias, both eternal wanderers, find their chief interest in guiding the affairs of their descendants. The romance is episodic, but the principal events take place in the Paris of 1832 and the plot centers about the struggle between the Protestants and Catholics to control a large sum of money invested for seven heirs of Count Rennepont, a descendant of Herodias. The Jesuits, led by a shrewd and energetic little priest named Rodin, succeed in bringing six of the seven heirs to disaster and presenting the seventh, Gabriel Rennepont, a young Jesuit priest, as the only claimant for the inheritance, but their schemes are finally thwarted.

Wandering Willie. In Scott's REDGAUNTLET, the blind fiddler who tells the tale about Sir Robert Redgauntlet and his son Sir John.

Wandering Wood. The wood in Bk. i of Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE, in which the RED CROSS KNIGHT and UNA stray. UNA tries to persuade him to leave the wood, but he is self-willed. Error, in the form of a serpent, attacks him, but the knight severs her head from her body. The idea is that when Piety will not listen to UNA or Truth, it is sure to get into Wandering Wood, where Error will attack it; but if it then listens to Truth it will slay Error.

Wantley, The Dragon of. An old story, preserved in Percy's Reliques, tells of this monster, which is slain by More of More Hall. He procures a suit of armor studded with spikes and kicks the Dragon in the mouth, where alone it is vulnerable. Percy says the Dragon is an overgrown, rascally attorney, who cheated some children of their estate, and was made to disgorge by one named More, who went against him, "armed with the spikes of the law," after which the attorney died of vexation. Wantley is Wharnccliffe in Yorkshire.

war.

Warburton, William (1698-1779). English theologian. Friend of Alexander Pope and instrumental in persuading Pope to add a fourth book to his Dunciad. He was also Pope's literary executor (1744) and brought out an edition of his work (1751). His edition of Shakespeare (1747) was criticized severely for want of literary judgment. He was defeated in a literary controversy by Robert Lowth (1765) who attacked his arrogance and lack of scholarship.

Ward, Aaron Montgomery (1843-1913). American businessman whose firm, established with George Thorne, developed into the mail-order house of Montgomery Ward & Co.

Ward, Sir Adolphus William (1837-1924). English historian. Contributed largely to the Dictionary of National Biography, was editor of Cambridge Modern History (1902-1912) and co-editor of Cambridge History of English Literature (1907-1916).

Ward, Artemus. The nom de plume of the popular American humorist, Charles Farrar Browne. Artemus Ward was a wandering showman whom Browne created and whose story he retailed in the first person in the Cleveland Plain Dealer until his amusing adventures, his vagaries in spelling, and his shrewd observations on human nature made him a household character.

Ward, Edward (1667-1731). English satirist and keeper of a tavern. On making a trip to New England he wrote an unflattering account of the country and its people (1699). Author of The London Spy (1698-1709). Pope pilloried him in his Dunciad. Cf. the excellent account of his life and time, Ned Ward of Grub Street (1946) by Howard William Troyer.

Waring. A poem by Robert Browning. Waring has been identified with Alfred Domett, a young poet who left England, settled in New Zealand and distinguished himself in politics. The poem, which was suggested by his sudden departure, analyzes the possible motives of such an act. It begins:—

What's become of Waring,
Since he gave us all the slip?

war in literature. From the beginning of history war has been an important subject for literature, inspiring in the ancient and medieval eras such epic works as Homer's Iliad, The Song of Roland, and Tasso's Jerusalem Delivered. In modern times, however, with an increase in the size of armies and the invention of murderous weapons, war began to lose its purely adventurous character, with individual combat as its focal point, and writers began at about the middle of the 19th century to interpret it in terms of its destruction and its effect on the individual soldier, who had become only a cipher in the vast battle-plans of generals. Stephen Crane's The Red Badge of Courage was one of the first books to treat war realistically, preceded by Tolstoi's War and Peace and Zola's and Maupassant's fictional studies of the Franco-Prussian War. World War I (1914-1918), the most destructive war in history up to its time, caused great social and psychological dislocations and gave rise to a new literary genre which presented a frank and detailed picture of the horrors and brutalities of warfare and the sufferings, both physical and psychological, of the common soldier, and vigorously denounced the whole institution of war. Among the literary works inspired by World War I are the following: Lilul, a play, and Clerambault, a semi-autobiographical study, by Romain Rolland; Heartbreak House, by G. B. Shaw; Under Fire and Clarté, by Henri Barbusse; Jeremiah, by Stefan Zweig; Die Wandlung and Hinkemann, by Ernst Toller; books of poetry by Siegfried Sassoon and Wilfred Owen; Men in War, by Andreas Latzko; Le Lâche (The Coward), a play by H. R. Lenormand; The Unknown, by W. S. Maugham; The Enormous Room, by E. E. Cummings; One Man's Initiation and Three Soldiers, by John Dos Passos; What Price Glory? a play by Laurence Stallings and Maxwell Anderson; A Farewell to Arms, by Ernest Hemingway; Journey's End, a play by R. C. Sherriff; The Case of Sergeant Grischa, by Arnold Zweig; All Quiet on the Western Front, by Erich Maria Remarque; Testament of Youth, by Vera Brittain; Dos Passos' U.S.A. and Louis-Ferdinand Céline's Journey to the End of Night deal in part with the war. These works were very popular during the 1920's and early 1930's, figuring prominently in the pacifist (see Pacifism) and social reform movements of the time. The literary works inspired by the Spanish Civil War (1936-1939) and the early years of World War II (1939-1943), such as For Whom the Bell Tolls, by Ernest Hemingway, There Shall Be No Night, a play by Robert E. Sherwood, The Moon Is Down, by John Steinbeck, and All Night Long, by Erskine Caldwell, were concerned with isolated events and periods of the war and made no attempt to consider it as a whole or analyze its psychological effects. In the U.S., the most frequent and most popular type of book on World War II at first was the humorous account of life in the army camps, like Marion Hargrove's See Here, Private Hargrove.

War is Kind. A volume of free verse (1899) by Stephen Crane.

Warman, Cy (1855-1914). American journalist and author of stories about railroads. He also published two volumes of poetry, Mountain Melodies (1892) and Songs of Cy Warman (1911).

Warming-pan. Nickname of the Jacobites. It is said that Mary d'Este, the wife of James II, never had a living child, but that on one occasion a child, introduced to her bedroom in a warming-pan, was substituted for her dead infant. This "warming-pan child" was the Pretender.

Waste Land, The. A long poem by T. S. ELIOT (1922), his most famous work. Suggested by a reading of From Ritual to Romance, by Jessie L. Weston, a study of the themes of medieval romances and legends, its basic symbolism is that on which the GRAIL legend is believed by many scholars to have been founded. The waste land is a sterile area, blighted by a curse, where crops do not grow, the Fisher King is sexually impotent, and release from the spell can be secured only by a knight's coming to the castle and asking the meaning of the various symbols it contains. In Eliot's poem, physical and sexual sterility are made to symbolize what the author regarded as the spiritual sterility of the 20th century, and two kinds of life and death (life without spiritual meaning, which is a species of death, and redemptive death, which gives eternal life) are contrasted. The author's unique method in the poem is a play on these contrasts by means of quotations from and allusions to a variety of literary and religious works of the past, identified in several pages of notes inserted at the end of the book.

The following is an approximate prose summary of the five separate parts of The Waste Land, based on the analysis of the poem by Cleanth Brooks in his Modern Poetry and the Tradition:

I. The Burial of the Dead. The introductory theme is that of the attractiveness of death, with April and Springtime shown as cruel rather than as joy-bringing because they waken dead lives to an awareness of their emptiness. This is presented through the reveries of a protagonist, mixed with a conversation in the Hofgarten. Allusions are made to passages in Ezekiel and Ecclesiastes, dealing with a Biblical waste land, and to Wagner's Tristan und Isolde in the form of an excerpt from a sailor's song of simple, happy, and naïve love, which is, as shown by another snatch of song from the same opera, absent from the Waste Land. The protagonist then is seen having his fortune told by Madame Sosostriis, who consults a pack of Tarot cards, the figures on which are: a Drowned Phoenician Sailor (representing the fertility gods of pagan myth, who were sacrificed to bring fertility to the soil); a Man with Three Staves (representing the Fisher King); Belladonna, the Lady of the Rocks (representing the woman of the Waste Land); a Wheel; and a One-Eyed Merchant (see third section). The protagonist is warned to beware of death by water. (See fourth section.) References are made to a nightmare city mentioned by BAUDELAIRE and to Dante's Limbo (see LIMBUS; the Waste Land again, or the absence of either good or evil in a secular, industrial and commercial world). Twentieth-century London is identified with Dante's Hell, and the protagonist sees a friend he recognizes, a man named Stetson, who represents both the reader and the author. A reference (from JOHN WEBSTER) to a dog digging up a corpse is interpreted by Brooks as signifying modern natural science, humanitarianism, etc., which "dig up," or analyze and banish, the supernatural, thereby preventing a rebirth of life.

II. A Game of Chess. A man and woman are seen playing chess in a room filled with rich carvings and paintings; this is considered to symbolize the 20th-century man surrounded by a rich tradition but occupying himself with empty abstractions. References are made to the legend of PHILOMELA (just as characteristic of a secular society) and to Ariel's song ("Those are pearls that were his eyes," etc.) from THE TEMPEST (death by water as rebirth). The title of this part is from Women Beware Women, by THOMAS MIDDLETON, in which a chess game is used to keep a widow occupied while her daughter-in-law is being raped (rape again signifying secularization). In contrast to the first scene, the closing scene takes place in a sordid London pub, where two Cockney women are discussing love and abortion (symbol of sterility again), with a quotation from Ophelia's speech in HAMLET.

III. The Fire Sermon. This part shows a river scene in London as presented in Spenser's PROTHALAMION, contrasted with the ugliness of a similar scene on the 20th-century Thames. The protagonist is fishing (representing the Fisher King), and there is an allusion to the poem To His Coy Mistress, by ANDREW MARVELL, combined with the sound of automobile horns in London and references to the ribald ballad of "Mrs. Porter and her daughter" who "washed their feet in soda water"; this dissolves into the sound of children singing at the ceremony of foot-washing in Wagner's Parsifal. After a recapitulation of the symbols of the nightingale and the unreal city, Mr. Eugenides, a merchant from Smyrna (the One-Eyed Merchant of the fortune-teller's cards) appears, signifying the degradation of the prophet and the seer in a secular world, and invites the protagonist to "a weekend at the Metropole" (actually a homosexual orgy). The scene then shifts to a cheap London furnished room, where a typist is seduced by a carbuncular youth, no passion being evidenced by either party; an allusion to Goldsmith's "When lovely woman stoops to folly" is used as an ironic comment on the incident. Across the Thames the protagonist hears the music from the typist's gramophone, and three river-nymphs (comparable to the three Rhine-Daughters in Wagner's Götterdämmerung) sing songs on: the sordid modern river; the Elizabethan river of Spenser's poem, with allusions to Elizabeth and Leicester sailing on a barge and to Cleopatra's barge; and the Waste Land again, with reference to Purgatory.

IV. Death by Water. This harks back to "a drowned Phoenician sailor" (Part I).

V. What the Thunder Said. This section contrasts in symbolism with The Fire Sermon. It presents first a description of hooded figures crossing the Waste Land (representing the general decay of Eastern Europe, where the fertility cults originated) in a nightmare picture of the collapse of civilization. There is a reference to the visit to the Perilous Chapel in the Grail legend (a female sexual symbol), and the sound of thunder which recurs throughout this section signifies the coming of rain, hence baptism or redemption. After allusions to and quotations from Dante's Purgatory, THE SPANISH TRAGEDY, The Tempest, and Sanskrit prayers, the protagonist finally resolves to claim the tradition he has inherited and restore it. The poem ends with the Sanskrit benediction Shantih, Shantih, Shantih, equivalent to the "peace that passeth understanding."

On its first publication, The Waste Land was attacked as unintelligible, and later, especially among proletarian critics (see PROLETARIAN LITERATURE), a favorite interpretation was that it was an expression of gigantic despair and disillusionment, articulating the feelings of the generation that had lived through World War I; there was also considerable censure of Eliot's technique of using a "patch-work" of quotations and literary allusions. Other critics have pointed out, however, that the poem expresses more than a superficial disillusionment, actually bringing the problem to a resolution at the conclusion, and that the contrasts between the past and the author's present have a symbolic as well as a literal significance, with the quotations and allusions serving as a means of compression. The poem is regarded as the most important single poetic work of the 20th century and had a wide influence on younger poets.

Watchful Waiting. A phrase used by President Woodrow Wilson to characterize the policy of the United States toward Mexico during 1915, when it was asserted that every effort consonant with the protection of American "interests" was made to keep peace with that country.

water.

Watson, Henry Brereton Marriott (1863-1921). English novelist and writer of adventure stories.

Watson, John. Pseudonym Ian Maclaren (1850-1907). Scottish author and minister, whose novel, Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush (1894), was extremely popular both in England and America. He belonged to the KAILYARD school of novelists. His son, Frederick Watson, has written books on witchcraft and other topics, some of them under the pseudonym "Ian Ferguson."

Watson, John Broadus (1878-). American psychologist; known as the principal exponent of BEHAVIORISM. Among his books are Behaviorism (1925; revised, 1931); Ways of Behaviorism (1928); etc.

Watson, Thomas (1557?-1592). Early English poet. Translated into English a collection of Italian madrigals (1590) and wrote a book of sonnets, Tears of Fancy (1593), whose influence can be traced in Shakespeare's work.

Watson, Sir William (1858-1935). English poet. His volumes of sonnets, The Purple East (1896) and The Year of Shame (1896), vigorously expressed his political opinions. Collected Poems (1898; 1906).

Watteau, Jean Antoine (1684-1721). Fashionable French painter, known for his charming genre pictures of aristocratic pastoral scenes.

Watterson, Henry (1840-1921). American journalist and politician, called "Marse Henry." Editor of the Louisville, Kentucky, Courier-Journal (1868-1918). He was bitter against Theodore Roosevelt, supported Wilson and the cause of the Allies in World War I, but opposed America's entry into the League of Nations. Pulitzer prize for journalism (1917) for his war editorials. Cf. his autobiography, Marse Henry (1919).

Watts, George Frederic (1817-1904). English painter, especially known for his series of about three hundred portraits of distinguished people of his time, including Garibaldi, Thiers, Guizot, etc. Also treated allegorical and symbolical subjects, as Life's Illusions (1849); Love and Death (1877); Sic Transit (1892); etc. Husband of Ellen TERRY.

Waugh, Evelyn Arthur St. John (1903-). English novelist, known for his biting satires on life among the aesthetes and society people of London, especially during the 1920's. See also HUXLEY, ALDOUS. His books include Rossetti: A Critical Biography (1928); Decline and Fall (1929); Vile Bodies (1930); A Bachelor Abroad (1930; published in England as Labels), on travel; Black Mischief (1932); A Handful of Dust (1934); Edmund Campion (1935); Mr. Loveday's Little Outing, And Other Sad Stories (1936); Scoop (1938); Mexico: An Object Lesson (1939), a social and political study; Put Out More Flags (1942); Brideshead Revisited (1944); The Loved One (1948).

His brother, Alec Waugh. In full Alexander Raban Waugh (1898–), is also a novelist and miscellaneous author, best known for The Loom of Youth (1917), a novel frankly depicting life in an English boys' school, and The Prisoners of Mainz (1919), a semi-autobiographical work based on his experiences in a German prison camp during World War I. Other books, many dealing with travel, include: The Lonely Unicorn (1922); Love in These Days (1926); Portrait of a Celibate (1929); Hot Countries (1930); Tropic Seed (1932); Playing with Fire (1933); The Balliols (1934); Jill Somerset (1936); Eight Short Stories (1937); Going Their Own Ways (1938); No Truce with Time (1941).

Wave, The. A novel (1929) by Evelyn Scott dealing with the Civil War.

Wavell, Sir Archibald Percival (1883–). British officer who fought first in the South African War (1901) and was with ALLENBY in India (1917–1920). He was in command of the Middle East at the beginning of World War II and organized the British offensive in Egypt (1940–1941). He was sent to India as the commander of all the forces of the United Nations (January, 1942). In 1945 he compiled an excellent anthology of poetry, Other Men's Flowers.

Waverley. The first of Sir Walter Scott's historical novels, published in 1814. The chief characters are Prince Charles Edward, the Chevalier; the noble old Baron of Bradwardine; the simple faithful clansman Evan Dhu; and the poor fool Davie Gelatley, with his fragments of song and scattered gleams of fancy. The hero is Captain Edward Waverley of Waverley Honor. He is first a captain in the royal army; then resigns his commission, and proposes marriage to Flora M'Ivor, but is not accepted. Fergus M'Ivor (Flora's brother) introduces him to Prince Charles Edward. He becomes a rebel, enters the service of the Prince, and in the Battle of Prestonpans saves the life of Colonel Talbot. When the Pretender's cause collapses, the Colonel, out of gratitude, obtains a pardon for young Waverley, who then marries Rose Bradwardine, and quietly settles down in Waverley Honor.

Waverley Novels, the. All the novels of Sir Walter Scott are included under this term; but not the three tales called Aunt Margaret's Mirror, The Laird's Jock, and The Tapestry Chamber.

Waves, The. A novel by Virginia Woolf (1931), regarded by some critics as her masterpiece, dealing with the psychological development and personal relationships of a group of six English children, with the rise and fall of the waves of the sea and the ascent and decline of the sun in the sky serving to symbolize the growth of the characters' personalities and the progress of their lives. As children, Bernard, Susan, Neville, Jinny, Rhoda, and Louis live in the same house, which has a large garden extending down to the seashore, and take their lessons from the same governess; through their relationships with each other in study and play they become aware of their own particular personalities. Becoming older, they separate to go to various schools and colleges, later meeting in a London restaurant after their various graduations. Then they scatter again, pursuing diverse careers but each following out the psychological pattern that was established in his or her childhood, until their final reunion in middle age at Hampton Court. See also PERCIVAL.

The narration of The Waves takes two forms: lyrical passages on the sea and rich and colorful descriptions of the sunlight, air, and physical background of each scene; and a series of formalized monologues in which each character in turn speaks of his impressions, his feelings, and the events in his life, with individual differences of personality expressed only by differences in imagery.

the way of all flesh. Death. See also below.

the Way of the Cross. A series of pictures in a church (see STATIONS OF THE CROSS) representing Christ's progress to Calvary; also, the devotions suited to them.

Way Down East. A play (1898) by Lottie Blair Parker. For many years it was one of the most popular melodramas in the United States.

Wayland. A wonderful and invisible smith of English legend, the English form of the Scandinavian Volund or Volunder, a supernatural smith and king of the elves. In Frithiof's Saga, Volund forges the armor of Thorsten, Frithiof's father, particularly a golden arm-ring which descends to Frithiof as one of his most precious possessions. According to the legend, King Nidud or Nidung of Sweden cut the sinews of his feet and cast him into prison to avail himself of his workmanship, but the smith made his escape in a feather boat. Scott introduces Wayland, or Wayland Smith, into KENILWORTH (Ch. xiii), where we are told that he lived in a cromlech near Lambourn, Berks (since called Wayland Smith's Cave), and that, if a traveler tied up his horse there, left sixpence for a fee, and retired from sight, he would find the horse shod on his return. KIPLING has a tale of Wayland's Sword in his PUCK OF POOK'S HILL.

Wayne, Anthony (1745–1796). American general in the Revolution, nicknamed Mad Anthony, famous for a night attack on STONY POINT on the Hudson (July, 1779). Another (mad) Anthony Wayne is the principal character in Morrison Wood's novel, The Devil is a Lonely Man (1946).

Waynflete, Lady Cicely. Heroine of Shaw's comedy CAPTAIN BRASSBOUND'S CONVERSION.

Way of All Flesh, The. A novel by Samuel BUTLER, published posthumously in 1903. The hero, Ernest, is the son of Theobald Pontifex, an English clergyman. Few Christian clergymen have been set forth in fiction in such unsympathetic vein as this pious bully, nor is his sanctimonious wife Christina, docile to his every wish, much more lovable. The novel is said to be largely autobiographical but the picture it presents cannot be regarded as other than a keenly satiric criticism of English family life in the middle classes. Ernest's school and university days are not over-happy. He struggles with the problem of orthodoxy, goes to live in the slums, is thrown into prison for impulsive advances to a respectable girl, marries the extremely vulgar Ellen, who had been his mother's maid, but finally wins through to a fair measure of self-respect and genuine success.

Way of the World, The. A comedy by William CONGREVE (1700), called by SWINBURNE "the unequalled and unapproached masterpiece of English comedy." The heroine is MILLAMANT, the hero Edward Mirabell.

W.C.T.U. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, an organization formed in the interests of universal prohibition of the sale of alcoholic beverages. See PROHIBITION.

Wealth of Nations, The. A famous economic treatise on the nature and causes of national wealth by Adam SMITH (1776).

We are Coming, Father Abraham, Three Hundred Thousand More. This poem appeared in the New York Evening Post in July 1862. It was written by James Sloan Gibbons (1810-1892), who was an Abolitionist. The poem was a result of President Lincoln's call for new troops. Stephen Foster made one of the settings for the song and it became a great favorite in the North.

Wearing of the Green, The. An Irish revolutionary song (1798).

Weaver, John Van Alstyn (1893-1938). American author. His use of the vernacular in poetry was lauded by H. L. Mencken. Author of books of verse, as In American (1921); More In American (1925); co-author, with George Abbott, of the successful play Love 'Em and Leave 'Em (1926). After 1928, Mr. Weaver wrote for the moving pictures. In his novel, Joy-Girl (1932), he indulged in biting satire against Hollywood.

Weavers, The. A drama in five acts (1893) by Gerhart HAUPTMANN.

Web and the Rock, The. A novel (1939) by Thomas WOLFE.

Webb, Charles Henry. Pseudonym John Paul (1834-1905). American journalist, founder and first editor of the Californian (1864-1866), in which magazine he published Bret Harte and Mark Twain.

Webb, Mary (1881-1927). English novelist whose Precious Bane won the Femina-Vie Heureuse prize for 1924-1925. After her death her five novels were reprinted with introductions by Stanley Baldwin, John Buchan, Chesterton, and others. She wrote of Shropshire, where she was born.

Webb, Sidney James. 1st Baron Passfield (1859-1947) and Beatrice Webb, née Potter (1858-1943). English economists, the main founders of the FABIAN SOCIETY. They followed and wrote of the British Labour Movement for fifty years. They have to their credit a large number of books, including Soviet Communism: A New Civilization (2 vols.; 1935). Cf. Beatrice Webb (1945) by Margaret Cole.

Weber, Karl Maria von (1786-1826). German composer of popular romantic operas. His best-known work is Der Freischütz (1821), based on the old legend of the hunter whose bullets, charmed by the devil, cannot miss. Weber employed the LEITMOTIV technique which was later developed by Richard WAGNER.

Weber, Max (1881-). Russian-born American painter who has lectured on the history of art and has written cubist poems and essays on art.

Weber and Fields. Stage name of Joseph Weber (1867-1942) and Lew Fields (1867-1941), a famous team of vaudeville comedians, who established their own theater, put on many burlesques, and later went into the moving pictures and the radio.

Webley, Everard. In Aldous Huxley's POINT COUNTER POINT, the founder and leader of the Brotherhood of British Freemen, an English semi-Fascist (see FASCISM) organization. He is eventually killed, and the members of his band avenge his death. This character is considered to be based on Sir Oswald Mosley, the actual leader of a similar British Fascist movement during the 1920's and 1930's.

Webster, Daniel (1782-1852). Famous American politician and orator. Secretary of state (1841-1843; 1850-1852) and U.S. senator (1827-1841; 1845-1850). He protected the vested interests of New England and took a middle-of-the-road stand concerning slavery. John Greenleaf Whittier attacked him in a poem Ichabod. His writings and speeches have been collected into eighteen volumes. A fantastic story which uses him as an arbitrator is THE DEVIL AND DANIEL WEBSTER by Stephen Vincent BENÉT (1939). Cf. Daniel Webster (1930), by Claude M. Fuess.

Webster, Henry Kitchell (1875-1932). Popular American novelist who wrote for the Saturday Evening Post, McClure's and other magazines. One of his best remembered novels, Calumet "K" (1901), was written in collaboration with Samuel Merwin.

Webster, Jean (1876-1916). American novelist and writer of short stories. Best known for Daddy-Long-Legs (1912) which the author made into a play and which became a silent picture for Mary Pickford. She also wrote a popular book for young people, When Patty Went to College (1903). It is said that the heroine of these entertaining stories was really the poet Adelaide CRAPSEY.

Webster, John (1580?-1625?). English playwright of the Elizabethan era, best known for his tragedies of violence. His works include Christmas Comes But Once a Year (1602); Westward Hoe and Northward Hoe (1607), on which he collaborated with Thomas DEKKER; The White Devil (ca. 1608); Appius and Virginia (ca. 1609); THE DUCHESS OF MALFI (ca. 1618); The Devil's Law Case (1623); A Cure for a Cuckold (1661), written with ROWLEY. The White Devil and The Duchess of Malfi are his best-known works. He also collaborated with Heywood, Tourneur, etc.

Webster, Margaret (1905-). Anglo-American theatrical director and producer. In her début as an actress she played with John Barrymore in Hamlet in London. She is noted for having directed the presentations of Shakespeare starring Maurice Evans (1937-1939). Daughter of the late Ben Webster and Dame May WHITTY.

Webster, Noah (1758-1843). Great American lexicographer and author. He was a teacher, lecturer, journalist, lawyer, etc. In politics he was an ardent partisan of Federalism. While a resident at Amherst, he was president of the Amherst Academy (1820-1821) and helped found Amherst College. His first lexicographical publication was designed as a school book. It was the word-book part, commonly known as Webster's Spelling Book or Blue-Backed Speller (1782-1783), of a three-volume Grammatical Institute of the English Language, of which parts II and III were a grammar and a reader (1784, 1785). The speller was used in all schools and sold in the course of a century some sixty million copies. Webster's first real dictionary was the Compendious Dictionary of the English Language (1806). Much more important was An American Dictionary of the English Language (2 vols.; 1828. Second edition, prepared with his son, William Greenleaf Webster, 1840), which is the foundation of all modern Websters.

Wedderburn, May. The heroine of Jessie Fothergill's FIRST VIOLIN.

wedding anniversaries. Fanciful names have been given to many wedding anniversaries, the popular idea being that they designate the nature of the gifts suitable for the occasion. The following list is fairly complete, but of these very few except the twenty-fifth and fiftieth are ever observed.

First	Cotton Wedding.
Second	Paper Wedding.
Third	Leather Wedding.
Fifth	Wooden Wedding.
Seventh	Woolen Wedding.
Tenth	Tin Wedding.
Twelfth	Silk and Fine Linen Wedding.
Fifteenth	Crystal Wedding.
Twentieth	China Wedding.
Twenty-fifth	Silver Wedding.
Thirtieth	Pearl Wedding.
Fortieth	Ruby Wedding.
Fiftieth	Golden Wedding.
Seventy-fifth	Diamond Wedding.

The sixtieth anniversary is often reckoned the "Diamond Wedding" in place of the seventy-fifth; as the sixtieth year of Queen Victoria's reign was her "Diamond Jubilee."

Wedding Journey, Their. See THEIR WEDDING JOURNEY.

Wedekind, Frank (1864-1918). German playwright whose first play, Spring's Awakening (1891), caused a sensation. Earth Spirit (1895) established his reputation. His work was regarded by some as too daring and he was sometimes in trouble with the authorities. He was spoken of as the father of expressionism in Germany.

Wedgwood, Josiah (1730-1795). English potter of Stoke-on-Trent, who perfected a kind of glazed earthenware which still bears his name.

Weed, Thurlow (1797-1882). American journalist and Republican leader. He helped to nominate Harrison, Clay, Taylor, Scott. His name is connected with those of Seward and Greeley as one of the dominating figures in New York State politics. Lincoln sent him on a mission abroad (1861).

Weekley, Ernest (1865-). English etymologist. The Romance of Words (1912); The Romance of Names (1914); An Etymological Dictionary of Modern English (1921); etc. He says that his opinions frequently differ with those of the Oxford English Dictionary but that Webster's Dictionary has done him the honor of utilizing his work on etymology quite extensively.

Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers, A. An account (1849) by Henry THOREAU of a trip he had taken (1839) in a small boat to the White Mountains.

Weeks, Edward A., Jr. (1898-). Editor of the Atlantic Monthly. Author of This Trade of Writing (1935). Reviewer and lecturer on books and authors.

Wee MacGregor. The little Scotch lad in a book of the same title by J. J. Bell (1902) who talks in dialect. The book was dramatized (1912).

Weems, Mason Locke (1759-1825). American clergyman and author, known as "Parson Weems." He was a book agent and wrote himself a short biography of George Washington (1800). In its fifth edition (1806) occurs the earliest known version of the cherry-tree story.

weeping.

to go by weeping cross. To repent, to grieve. In ancient times, weeping crosses were crosses beneath which penitents offered their devotions. Weeping Cross (1908), by Henry Longan STUART, is an historical novel of Puritan New England.

the Weeping Philosopher. Heraclitus (fl. ca. 500 B. C.), so called because he grieved at the folly of man.

the Weeping Saint. St. Swithin (see under SAINTS), so called from the tradition of forty days' rain if it rains on July 15, his name day.

Wee Willie Winkie, And Other Stories. A volume by Rudyard KIPPLING (1889). The story that gives the title to the book tells how six-year-old Percival William Williams, the young son of a British officer on duty in India, rescues the fiancée of his friend and hero, Lieutenant Brandis, and so "entered into his manhood." The name Wee Willie Winkie is an allusion to the familiar character of nursery rhyme who went about in his nightgown.

Wegg, Silas. In Dickens' novel, OUR MUTUAL FRIEND, a one-legged man who keeps a fruit stand. Mr. BOFFIN hires him to read The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire aloud every evening, a task that is somewhat beyond his powers. Wegg is a shrewd rascal and hopes to blackmail Boffin, but fails in the attempt.

Weidman, Charles Edward (1901-). Well-known member of the Denishawn Dancers (1921-1927), later forming his own dance group with Doris Humphrey.

Weidman, Jerome (1913-). New York metropolitan author of realistic propensities. I Can Get It for You Wholesale (1937); What's In It for Me? (1938); The Horse That Could Whistle "Dixie" (short stories; 1939); Too Early to Tell (1946), etc.

Weir, Julian Alden (1852-1919). American painter, especially of historical pictures. He was influenced in Paris by the methods of the impressionists. His best paintings have an atmospheric quality and a delicate lighting which makes them particularly interesting.

Weird Sisters, the. The FATES.

Weir of Hermiston. An unfinished novel (1896) by Robert Louis STEVENSON. It has in it some of his finest work.

Weissnichtwo. Nowhere. The word is German for "I know not where," and was coined by Carlyle in his SARTOR RESARTUS. It is the name of the place where Diogenes Teufelsdröckh holds his professorship of Things in General. See also KENNAQUHAIR; UTOPIA.

Weld, Theodore Dwight (1803-1895). American abolitionist. His tract, American Slavery As It Is (1839), was, according to Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe herself, the inspiration of her famous book Uncle Tom's Cabin.

Weld, Thomas (1595-1661). English Puritan and minister at Roxbury, Mass. Together with John Eliot and Richard Mather he compiled the Bay Psalm Book (1640).

Weller, Matilda. Young woman with whom the Victorian James THOMSON was in love in his youth. Her death in 1853 left him gloomy and deeply despairing.

Weller, Samuel. Probably the most popular of all Dickens' characters, the center of comic interest in THE PICKWICK PAPERS, boots at the White Hart, and afterwards servant to Mr. Pickwick, to whom he becomes devotedly attached. Rather than leave his master when he is sent to the Fleet, Sam Weller gets his father to arrest him for debt. His fun, his shrewdness, his comparisons, his archness, and his cunning on behalf of his master are unparalleled.

Tony Weller. Father of Sam, a coachman of the old school, who drives a coach between London and Dorking. Naturally portly in size, he becomes far more so in his great-coat of many capes. Tony wears top-boots, and his hat has a low crown and broad brim. On the stagebox he is a king, elsewhere he is a mere greenhorn. He marries a widow, landlady of the Marquis of Granby, and his constant advice to his son is, "Sam, beware of widders."

Welles, Gideon (1802-1878). Secretary of the navy under Lincoln, who helped to found the Republican party. He wrote Lincoln and Seward (1874), but it is his three-volume Diary (published in 1911) which is of the most historical value.

Welles, Orson (1915-). American actor and producer. As one of the directors of the New York Federal Theater, he put on Dr. Faustus and a Negro Macbeth. In 1937 he founded the Mercury Theater and adapted Shakespeare's Julius Caesar which he put on with no scenery and in modern dress. In 1938 his presentation of a radio adaptation by Howard Koch of H. G. Wells' THE WAR OF THE WORLDS caused a panic since people thought that the Martians had actually come to earth. Later on Welles made a remarkable moving picture, Citizen Kane (1941), obviously modeled on the life and career of William Randolph HEARST. His partner in his theatrical ventures was John Houseman.

Wellgunda. In Wagner's Ring (not in actual mythology), one of the three Rhine-daughters guarding the Nibelungen Hoard.

Wellington, 1st Duke of. Arthur Wellesley (1769–1852). Famous English commander and statesman, known as "the Iron Duke." He was chief in command, after the death of Sir John Moore, in the Peninsular War (1808); represented England at the Congress of Vienna (1814–1815); and defeated Napoleon at Waterloo. From 1828 to 1830 he was prime minister of England. Although he opposed reform, he later supported Robert Peel in his corn-law legislation. He was a popular idol in England.

Wellman, Walter (1858–1934). American explorer who tried to fly in a dirigible, first over the North Pole (1906–1907; 1909) and then across the Atlantic (1910). He failed in both, but broke the world's records for time and distance in an airship by flying 1,008 miles in 72 hours. He wrote The Aerial Age (1911).

Well of the Saints, The. A tragedy (1905) by J. M. SYNGE.

Wells, Charles Jeremiah. Pseudonym H. L. Howard (1799?–1879). English poet who was a friend of Keats and Hazlitt and wrote a drama in verse which Rossetti praised and Swinburne reviewed.

Wells, Herbert George (1866–1946). English novelist and journalist, known for his popular fantasies on pseudo-scientific themes, his satires on the English life of his day, his popularized accounts of history and science, and his outspoken social and political theories. His works include Select Conversations with an Uncle (1895); The Island of Dr. Moreau (1896); The Time Machine (1895); The Invisible Man (1897); Thirty Strange Stories (1897); The War of the Worlds (1898); Tales of Space and Time (1899); Love and Mr. Lewisham (1899); When the Sleeper Wakes (1899); The Sea Lady (1902); A Modern Utopia (1904); Twelve Stories and a Dream (1905); Kipps (1905); The Misery of Boots (1907); Tono-Bungay (1908); The War in the Air (1908); Ann Veronica (1909); New Worlds for Old (1908); The History of Mr. Polly (see MR. POLLY; 1910); The New Machiavelli (1910); Marriage (1912); The Passionate Friends (1913); The Wife of Sir Isaac Harman (1914); The Research Magnificent (1915); Mr. Britling Sees It Through (1916); War and the Future (1917); The Soul of a Bishop (1917); The Undying Fire (1919); The Outline of History (1920); The Salvaging of Civilization (1921); Men Like Gods (1923); A Short History of the World (1925); Mr. Blettsworthy on Rampole Island (1928); The Open Conspiracy: Blue Prints for a World Revolution (1928); The King Who Was a King (1929); The Autocracy of Mr. Parham (1930); The Way to World Peace (1930); The Work, Wealth, and Happiness of Mankind (1931); The Shape of Things to Come (1933); The Anatomy of Frustration (1936); Star-Begotten (1937); Man's Mind and Behavior (1937); Apropos of Dolores (1938); The Brothers (1938); All Aboard for Ararat (1940); Babes in the Darkling Wood (1940); The New World Order (1940); Phoenix: A Summary of the Inescapable Conditions of World Reorganization (1942); You Can't Be Too Careful (1942).

Wells was the son of a small shopkeeper and was himself apprenticed to dry-goods dealers and druggists before going to college. In his early career he taught and was a student of biology and sociology, subjects which greatly influenced his writings and his ideas. He aroused much controversy by his criticisms of 20th-century society and his sensational predictions of the future, such as tanks, air warfare, and the atomic bomb.

We'll to the Woods No More. English translation (1938) of Édouard Dujardin's novel Les Lauriers sont Coupés (1888), considered the first example in fiction of an intended INTERIOR MONOLOGUE. Daniel Prince, a young Frenchman, is in love with an actress, Leah d'Arsay, and pretends to himself to be satisfied with a merely "Platonic" relationship, although he actually wishes to make her his mistress. She allows him to believe that she is about to grant him her favors, but after she has secured a sum of money from him she skillfully puts him off. He therefore resolves in sorrow never to see her again.

The story is told through the thoughts and impressions of the hero as he walks in the street, meets friends, sits in a restaurant, rides in a carriage, and visits Leah. James JOYCE is said to have read this book about 1901 and to have been partly influenced by it while writing ULYSSES. Dujardin himself claimed to have been influenced in his technique by Richard Wagner's device of the musical Leitmotiv, by the dramatic monologue of Robert BROWNING, and by the psychological monologue of DOSTOEVSKY.

Welsbach, Aloys Auer von (1813–1869). Austrian printer. Director of the Imperial Press in Vienna. His son, Carl Auer von Welsbach (1858–1929), was a chemist and invented the Welsbach burner and mantle.

Welsh.

the Welsh ambassador. The cuckoo. The bird announces the migration of Welsh laborers into England for summer employment.

Welsh main. Same as a "battle royal."

Welsh mortgage. A pledge of land in which no day is fixed for redemption.

Welsh rabbit. Cheese melted and spread over buttered toast. "Rarebit" is incorrect.

Welsh, Jane. Wife of Thomas CARLYLE, to whom she was married in 1826. She herself was known as an intelligent and charming woman, and many critics consider that she was sacrificed by Carlyle to his own ambitions.

Welty, Eudora (1909-). Mississippi writer who has won one Guggenheim and three O. Henry Memorial awards. Her books of short stories are A Curtain of Green (1941) and The Wide Net (1943). Her first novel, Delta Wedding (1946), appeared originally as a serial in the Atlantic Monthly.

Wemmick. In Dickens' GREAT EXPECTATIONS, the cashier of Mr. Jaggers the lawyer. Mr. Wemmick wears his hat on the back of his head and looks straight before him, as if nothing is worth looking at. Mr. Wemmick at home and Mr. Wemmick in his office are two distinct beings. At home, he is "his own engineer, his own carpenter, his own plumber, his own gardener, his own Jack-of-all-trades," has fortified his little wooden house like Commodore TRUNNION and calls it his "castle." His father, eighty-two years of age, lives with him, and is known as "The Aged." The old man is very deaf, but heats the poker with delight to fire off the nine-o'clock signal, and chuckles with joy because he can hear the bang. The house has a "real flagstaff," and a plank which crosses a ditch some four feet wide and two feet deep is the drawbridge. At nine o'clock P.M. Greenwich time the gun (called "The Stinger") is fired.

Wendell, Barrett (1855-1921). One of the most distinguished (and eccentric) professors of Harvard University who wrote an excellent study of Cotton Mather and a widely known Literary History of America (1900).

Wendy. In Barrie's PETER PAN.

Wenham. In Thackeray's VANITY FAIR, a sort of general manager to the Marquis of STEYNE, a very disagreeable character.

Wenner-Gren, Axel (1881-). Swedish industrialist, owner of the largest wood-pulp company in Sweden and the Bofors munitions works. He established and endowed certain foundations for scientific research in Sweden as well as the Axel Wenner-Gren Foundation for Nordic Co-operation and Research.

Wenonah. In Longfellow's HIAWATHA, mother of Hiawatha and daughter of NOKOMIS. Nokomis is swinging in the moon when some of her companions, out of jealousy, cut the ropes, and she falls to earth "like a falling star." That night is born her first child, a daughter, whom she names Wenonah. In due time Wenonah is wooed and won by Mudjekeewis (the West Wind), and becomes the mother of Hiawatha. The false West Wind deserts her, and the young mother dies.

Fair Nokomis bore a daughter,
And she called her name Wenonah

Hiawatha, iii.

Wentworth, Austin. Richard's helpful and sympathetic uncle in Meredith's novel RICHARD FEVEREL.

Wentworth, Captain. See PERSUASION.

werewolf. See WERWOLF.

Werfel, Franz (1890-1945). Austrian poet, novelist, and playwright, born at Prague of Jewish parents, best known for his works expressing a semi-mystical belief in the brotherhood of man, the most outstanding being the best-selling novels The Forty Days of Musa Dagh (Die Vierzig Tage des Musa Dagh; 1934), concerning an Armenian siege during World War I, and The Song of Bernadette (Das Lied von Bernadette; 1942), the life of a French saint. Other works include Weltfreund (1911), Wir Sind (1913), and Einander (1915), books of poetry; Verdi (1924); The Man Who Conquered Death (1927), a translation of Der Tod des Kleinburgers; Paulus unter den Juden (Paul Among the Jews; 1928), a tragedy; Goat Song (Bockgesang; 1926), a play; Juarez and Maximilian (1926), a play; Class Reunion (1929), a translation of Der Abituriententag, The Pure in Heart (1932), a translation of Barbara, oder die Frommigkeit (1929); The Pascarella Family (1932), a translation of Die Geschwister von Neapel; The Eternal Road (Der Weg der Verheissung; 1936), a Biblical pageant; Hearken unto the Voice (Horet die Stimme; 1938); Embezzled Heaven (Der Verunreute Himmel; 1940).

Werfel was in France during World War II when that country was invaded by the German army (1940), and he took refuge in the church of St. Bernadette. It is said that he vowed to dedicate a literary work to the saint if he should make his escape. He eventually escaped to the U.S., and the successful Song of Bernadette was announced to have been inspired by his experience. His last work, The Star of the Unborn (1945), is a vast and fantastic panorama of the experiences of F. W. (= Franz Werfel) in a distant future when only the Jews and the Catholics from among our denominations will have survived.

wergild or, in the Ger. form, Wergeld (wer, "man," and gild, "payment"). Among the early Germanic tribes of Europe, a fine imposed on the accused man or his family in reparation for a murder. The nature and amount of the fine varied according to the manner of murder, the political or social position of the victim, or his relative value to the community. Thus, the wergild of a man in the service of the king was higher than that for an ordinary freeman; the fine for the killing of a pregnant woman or a woman who had begun to bear children would be greater than that for one who had ceased bearing children; churchmen usually carried the highest wergild of all; etc. A later and socially more advanced form of wergild, payable not to the kin of the murdered but to the king, was called bloodwite (blood fine). The practice of exacting wergild was abandoned when Roman law substituted the principle of public justice for that of reparation and revenge. See also GUNNAR.

Werle, Gregers. A character in Ibsen's WILD DUCK.

Werner. The hero of Byron's drama Werner or the Inheritance (1821), retold from Krutzner or the German's Tale in Harriet Lee's Canterbury Tales. In a moment of temptation, Krutzner, or Werner as he calls himself, steals a rouleau of gold from Count Stralenheim, who has unjust possession of his inheritance and has persecuted him for years. Upon hearing his father confess his crime, Ulric, Werner's son, secretly murders the Count. Werner secures his inheritance, but when he learns that his son was the assassin, he sends him away with a curse.

Werner, Alice (1859-1935). English philologist, an expert in certain African tongues and author of books on the races, legends, and languages of Central and Southern Africa. She also wrote stories and poems.

Werner, Morris Robert (1897-). American writer. Author of lively studies of outstanding American characters and institutions. Barnum (1923); Brigham Young (1925); Tammany Hall (1928); Bryan (1929); etc.

Werrenrath, Reinald (1883-). American baritone who made his debut at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York in 1919.

Werther. The sentimental hero of GOETHE's romance The Sorrows of Werther (1774). He is a young German student of poetic fancy and sensitive disposition who is so overcome by his unrequited love for Lotte that he takes his life. In the novel, Lotte is the betrothed and later the wife of Werther's friend Albert. Werther is admittedly drawn from Goethe himself, and Albert from his friend Kestner, who married Charlotte Buff (Lotte) with whom Goethe was in love.

Werther, infusing itself into the core and whole spirit of literature, gave birth to a race of sentimentalists, who raged and wailed in every part of the world till better light dawned on them, or at any rate till exhausted nature laid itself to sleep, and it was discovered that lamenting was an unproductive labour.—Carlyle.

Wertherism. Spleen, morbid sentimentality, romantic melancholy and disgust of life, in allusion to the romantic desperation of the hero in Goethe's The Sorrows of Werther.

werwolf, werewolf. A "man-wolf" (A.S. wer, "man"), i.e., a man who, according to medieval superstition, was turned—or could at will turn himself—into a wolf (the loup-garou of France). This creature had the appetite of a wolf, and roamed about at night devouring infants and sometimes exhuming corpses. Its skin was proof against shot or steel, unless the weapon had been blessed in a chapel dedicated to St. Hubert.

This superstition was once common to almost all Europe, and still lingers in Brittany, Limousin, Auvergne, Servia, Wallachia, and White Russia. In the 15th century a council of theologians, convoked by the Emperor Sigismund, gravely decided that the werewolf was a reality.

OVID tells the story of Lycaon, King of Arcadia, turned into a wolf because he tested the divinity of Jupiter by serving up to him a "hash of human flesh"; Herodotus describes the Neuri as having the power of assuming once a year the shape of wolves; Pliny relates that one of the family of ANTAEUS was chosen annually, by lot, to be transformed into a wolf, in which shape he continued for nine years; and St. Patrick, we are told, converted Veretiscus, King of Wales, into a wolf. Cf. "The Wolf of Salem," a short story written and illustrated by Howard PYLE, and Dracula, by Bram STOKER.

Wescott, Glenway (1901-). American novelist and poet, known for his writings about his native Middle West from the point of view of an expatriate of the 1920's acquainted with life in Europe. Among his books are The Bitterns (1920), a collection of poems; The Apple of the Eye (1924); Natives of the Rock (1926), poetry; The Grandmothers (1928), his best-known work, a study in the form of American family portraits; Like a Lover (1926); Goodbye, Wisconsin (1928), short stories; The Babe's Bed (1930); A Calendar of Saints for Unbelievers (1932); Fear and Trembling (1932); The Pilgrim Hawk (1940); Apartment in Athens (1945).

Wesley, Charles (1707-1788) and John Wesley (1703-1791). Two brothers, Charles founding the METHODIST society to which his brother and George Whitefield belonged. Charles composed many hymns and left a Journal (1849). John was a tremendous preacher, traveling on horseback all over the country in England. He also published many collections of hymns and his prose Works (1771-1774). He was, further, the author of a Journal which was published in a standard edition (1909-1911). It is a very human document. His Life, written by Robert Southey, is said to be one of the best of biographies.

Wessex, the novelist of. Thomas HARDY, the author of Tess of the D'Urbervilles, The Return of the Native, Wessex Tales, etc. The scenes of most of his novels are laid in the Wessex country, once a kingdom of ancient England known as Wessex, but now called Dorsetshire. In recent editions of his work a map of the Wessex territory is included.

Wesson, Daniel Baird (1825-1906). American inventor. With Horace Smith invented a repeating action for firearms (1854) and organized for its manufacture the Smith & Wesson Co. in Springfield, Mass. (1857).

the West End. The fashionable quarter of London, lying between Charing Cross and the western boundary of Hyde Park.

to go west. Of persons, to die; of things, to be lost, rendered useless, never obtained, as My chance of promotion has gone west. The phrase came into very wide use during World War I. Previously the expression go west had frequently been used in the United States as an equivalent of "Strike out for yourself" from Horace GREELEY's much quoted advice "Go west, young man, go west," that is, "go to the western states where frontier conditions still mean unusual opportunity."

West, Benjamin (1738-1820). Popular American painter who was historical painter to King George III (1772) and a friend of Sir Joshua Reynolds. He painted heroic canvases, which the American portrait painter John Singleton Copley called "ten-acre" pictures. His best-known works include The Death of General Wolfe; Penn's Treaty with the Indians; etc.

West, Lt. Kerchival. The hero of Bronson Howard's drama SHENANDOAH.

West, Mae (1893-). American actress on stage and screen, excelling in "sexy" plays, the best of which was Diamond Lil. Although melodrama, it was a real picture of life in the New York Tenderloin. A Mae West, in World War II slang, was an inflatable life-belt for aviators.

West, Nathanael (1906?-1940). American novelist, principally known for his story of newspaper life, Miss Lonelyhearts (1933). His The Day of the Locust (1939) deals with minor characters in Hollywood. He married the late Eileen McKenney, the heroine of My Sister Eileen by Ruth McKENNEY.

West, Rebecca. An important character in Ibsen's drama ROSMSHOLM.

West, Rebecca. Pseudonym of Cecily Isabel Fairfield (1892-). English novelist and critic, best known for her fictional psychological studies. Her books include Henry James (1916), criticism; The Return of the Soldier (1918); The Judge (1922); The Strange Necessity (1928), essays; Harriet Hume (1928); D. H. Lawrence (1930), criticism; War Nurse (1930), published under the pseudonym of Corinne Andrews; Ending in Earnest (1931), essays; Arnold Bennett Himself (1935); St. Augustine (1933); A Letter to a Grandfather (1933); The Harsh Voice (1935), four short novels; The Thinking Reed (1936), a novel; Black Lamb and Grey Falcon (1941), on travel in Yugoslavia; The Meaning of Treason (1947). She chose her pseudonym from the name of the heroine of Ibsen's ROSMSHOLM because in her early career she had acted the rôle of Rebecca West.

West, V. Sackville-, see SACKVILLE-WEST, V.

Westbrook, Harriet (1794?-1816). The first wife of P. B. SHELLEY, whom she met after his expulsion from Oxford. He tried to convert her to atheism, urged her to rebel against the "tyranny" of her father, a retired innkeeper, and eloped with her to Edinburgh, where they were married in 1811. The couple wandered about the British Isles for a time, supported by their fathers, but their marriage was not happy, and in 1814 Shelley left Harriet to elope with Mary Godwin. Harriet thereafter drifted from love affair to love affair of her own, finally committing suicide in 1816.

Westcott, Edward Noyes (1846-1898). American banker and novelist. His David Harum, A Story of American Life (1898), was very popular, also as a play and film.

Wharton, Anne Hollingsworth (1845-1928). American writer whose books on American colonial customs are valuable works of reference.

Wharton, Edith Newbold Jones (1862-1937). American novelist and short-story writer, strongly influenced by Henry JAMES, best known for her studies of the tragedies and ironies in the lives of members of middle-class and aristocratic New York society in the 19th century. Her work is marked by penetrating psychological characterization, a preoccupation with moral problems, and a strict adherence to artistic form; in addition to that of James, the influence of Gustave FLAUBERT, George ELIOT, Paul BOURGET, and Marcel PROUST has been found in her books. Her works include The Greater Inclination (1899), short stories; The Touchstone (1900); Crucial Instances (1901), short stories; THE VALLEY OF DECISION (1902); Sanctuary (1903); Italian Backgrounds (1905); THE HOUSE OF MIRTH (1905); Madame de Treymes (1907); The Fruit of the Tree (1907); The Hermit and the Wild Woman (1908), short stories; Artemis to Actaeon (1909), poetry; Tales of Men and Ghosts (1910); ETHAN FROME (1911); The Reef (1912); THE CUSTOM OF THE COUNTRY (1913); Fighting France (1915), on World War I; XINGU, and Other Stories (1916); SUMMER (1917); French Ways and Their Meaning (1919); The Marne (1918); In Morocco (1920); THE AGE OF INNOCENCE (1920), awarded the 1921 Pulitzer prize; Glimpses of the Moon (1922); A Son at the Front (1923); Old New York (1924), consisting of False Dawn, The Old Maid, The Spark, and New Year's Day, all novelettes; The Writing of Fiction (1925); The Mother's Recompense (1925); Here and Beyond (1926), short stories; Twilight Sleep (1927); The Children (1928); Hudson River Bracketed (1929), to which The Gods Arrive (1932) is a sequel; Certain People (1930), Human Nature (1933), The World Over (1936), and Ghosts (1937), more volumes of short stories; A Backward Glance (1934), an autobiography; The Buccaneers (1938), an uncompleted novel. THE HOUSE OF MIRTH, THE OLD MAID (a Pulitzer prize-winning play), and ETHAN FROME were successfully dramatized.

Wharton, Philip. Duke of Wharton (1698–1731). Satirized by Alexander Pope in Moral Essays. He was a son of Thomas Wharton (1648–1715) who wrote the doggerel ballad LILLIBURLERO.

What Every Woman Knows. A drama by J. M. BARRIE (1908). The heroine, Maggie Wylie, is a plain but wise little woman with a humorous charm all her own. The whimsical first act shows John Shand, a student who acts as railway porter in summer, breaking into a house for the experience of investigating the library, and Maggie's affectionate father and brother, who regret that she has "no charm" offering this intruding student enough money to complete his education if he will ask Maggie to marry him five years later. In due course of time he does marry her and, with her encouragement and help, enters Parliament. When he reveals a desire to elope with the fascinating Lady Sybil Lazenby, Maggie manages to give him such a surfeit of that lady's company as to bring him back to her cured.

What Maisie Knew. A novel (1897) by Henry JAMES, about a precocious small girl.

What Price Glory? A play by Maxwell ANDERSON and Laurence STALLINGS, produced in 1924, one of the first realistic American depictions of World War I. It deals with the rivalry of Captain Flagg and Sergeant Quirt, two members of a company of U.S. Marines in France in 1918, for the favors of Charmaine, a French girl. The play caused a sensation on its first production by its frank presentation of the profanity and brutality of the professional soldiers and the wearying ugliness of war. What Price Glory? was later dramatized as a motion picture, and "Captain Flagg and Sergeant Quirt" were adopted as the names of a military comedy team featured on the screen and on radio programs.

whaup. The European curlew. A famous poem by Robert Louis STEVENSON in answer to one by Samuel Rutherford CROCKETT centers about this bird which flies over the Scottish moors.

Blows the wind to-day, and the sun and the rain are flying,

Blows the wind on the moors to-day and now,
Where about the graves of the martyrs the whaups are crying,
My heart remembers how!

Wheatley, Gladys. In John Dos Passos' U.S.A., especially THE BIG MONEY, a Middle Western heiress whom Charley Anderson marries. She is repelled by the grossness of his attentions, rapidly becomes estranged from him, and eventually divorces him. His unhappy marriage contributes to Charley's hopelessness and his predilection for gambling and drinking.

Wheatley, Phyllis or Phillis (1753?–1784). Negro poet, the first woman writer of her race in the U.S. In 1761 she was brought to America from Africa and purchased as a slave by John Wheatley, a Boston merchant. As a child she showed unusual intelligence and was given an education and accorded special favors. She became famous in her day, being received in aristocratic society in London before the Revolution and being praised for her poetry by many intellectual and political figures of the day, including George Washington. Poems on Various Subjects (1773) is a representative book of her verse, consisting chiefly of occasional poems written in the characteristic manner of 18th century, considered to be of little literary value.

Wheeler, Burton Kendall (1882–). American politician, who ran for vice-president (1924) on the La Follette ticket. Prior to America's entry into the war, he was known as one of the leading isolationists.

Wheeler, Claude. The hero of Willa Cather's ONE OF OURS.

Wheeler, Joseph (1836–1906). American army officer and politician. A major general of volunteers in the Spanish-American War, he commanded a cavalry division in the army of General Shafter. He was at San Juan Hill and commanded a brigade in the Philippines. Retired with the rank of brigadier general (1900).

Wheelock, Eleazar (1711–1779). American educator and clergyman; first president of Dartmouth College (1769–1779).

Wheelock, John Hall (1886–). American poet and editor. His Collected Poems (1936) contain work that won its place in American poetry for its lyrical quality and sincerity.

Wheelwright, John (1897–1940) American poet, son of Boston's last civic architect. Deeply interested in social progress; founder of the John Reed Club at Harvard. Published a magazine, Poems for a Dime, for the workers. Author of Rock and Shell (1933); Mirrors of Venus (1938); Political Self-Portrait (1940). Wrote religious narratives, his favorite character being Thomas, the doubting apostle, also lyrics, satires, epigrams, and a novel in sonnets.

A vivid intellectual figure in Boston and Cambridge, where he died in a street accident.

When Johnny Comes Marching Home. A marching song of the Civil War, composed (1863) by the bandmaster P. S. Gilmore. Roy HARRIS's overture, When Johnny Comes Marching Home (1934), is based on it.

When Knighthood Was in Flower. A popular historical novel by Charles Major (Am., 1898). The scene is laid in 16th-century England. The heroine is Mary Tudor, sister of Henry VIII, and the story concerns her love affair and marriage with Charles Brandon, a commoner. This novel was dramatized with great success, and Julia MARLOWE as Mary.

When Lilacs Last in the Dooryard Bloom'd. One of the best-known poems by Walt WHITMAN, an elegy on the death of Abraham Lincoln, published in Sequel to Drum-Taps (1865-1866) and Leaves of Grass (1867). It presents a lament by the poet as he witnesses the funeral procession of the dead president, and makes use of three recurring symbols: a lilac branch, signifying love; "the drooping star in the west," representing Lincoln; and a singing thrush, symbolizing the poet himself.

Where the Blue Begins. A fantasy (1922), whose characters are all dogs, by Christopher MORLEY.

Whibley, Charles (1859-1930). English scholar and critic, associated with William Ernest HENLEY on the Scots Observer. He instituted the Tudor Translations (1892) and contributed to Blackwood's and the Spectator.

Whiffle, Captain. In Smollett's RODERICK RANDOM, a loathsome fop, "radiant in silk lace and diamond buckles."

Whiffle, Peter. Dilettante hero of the novel (1922), by Carl VAN VECHTEN.

Whig. An abbreviation of Whiggamore (whig, "to drive, and a mare"). The name was first given to the COVENANTERS in the western part of Scotland, who sprang up about 1648. In 1679 it became a name for those who did not wish James II to succeed to the throne of England, and after that it was applied to one of the two chief political parties. In the latter part of the 19th century gave place to "liberal."

Whilomville Stories. Thirteen short stories (1900) by Stephen CRANE dealing with childhood in a small New York town.

Whims, Queen. In Rabelais' GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL, the monarch of Whimdom, a country of whims, fancies, and literary speculations. Her subjects are alchemists, astrologers, fortune-tellers, rhymers, projectors, schoolmen, and so forth. The best way of reaching this empire is "to trust to the whirlwind and the current." When Pantagruel's ship runs aground, it is towed off by 7,000,000 drums quite easily.

Whipple, Clay. One of the chief characters in THE WITCHING HOUR by Augustus Thomas.

Whipple, Edwin Percy (1819-1886). American lecturer and critic. His work on foreign literature is more authoritative than the rest.

Whisky Insurrection, the. A popular outbreak in Western Pennsylvania, in 1794, resulting from an attempt to enforce an excise law passed in 1791, imposing duties on domestic distilled liquors.

Whistler, James Abbott McNeill (1834-1903). Famous American painter who settled in England (1863). He was of an imperious and quarrelsome nature and published The Gentle Art of Making Enemies (1890). He used pastel shades and signed his paintings with a butterfly. His portrait of his mother is his most famous work. Cf. his Life by Joseph and Elizabeth Robins PENNELL (1908).

Whistler, Laurence (1912-). English poet who received the gold medal presented by the King of England for the best volume of poetry published in England in 1934.

Whistler, Rex John' (1905-1944). English painter who did murals for the Tate Gallery in London and illustrated Gulliver's Travels; Desert Island; etc. He also did stage settings, as for Victoria Regina, by Laurence HOUSMAN.

white denotes purity, simplicity, and candor; innocence, truth, and hope. See colors, symbolism of.

The ancient Druids, and indeed the priests generally of antiquity, used to wear white vestments, as do the clergy of the Established Church of England when they officiate in any sacred service. The Magi also wore white robes.

The head of OSIRIS, in ancient Egypt, was adorned with a white tiara; all his ornaments were white and his priests were clad in white.

The priests of JUPITER, and the Flamen Dialis of Rome, were clothed in white, and wore white hats. The victims offered to Jupiter wore white. The Roman festivals were marked with white chalk, and at the death of a Caesar the national mourning was white; white horses were sacrificed to the sun, white oxen were selected for sacrifice by the Druids, and white elephants are held sacred in Siam.

The Persians affirm that the divinities are habited in white.

white collar. A phrase usually used as an adjective to denote the brain worker—professional classes, office clerks, etc., usually with reference to meager salaries paid to such workers, who must nevertheless dress neatly.

White Cross Knights. The Knights Hospi-tallers. The Knights Templars wore a red cross, white crow. A rara avis; a rare occurrence.

White Elephant. The sacred animal of Siam. Siam was known as the Land of the White Elephant, and its ruler as the King of the White Elephant. To have a white elephant to keep is to have an expensive and unprofitable dignity to support, or a pet article to take care of. The King of Siam used to make a present of a white elephant to such of his courtiers as he wished to ruin. On account of their sacred nature they necessitated great expense and brought no practical returns.

to show the white feather. To show cowardice; a phrase from the cockpit. No gamecock has a white feather; it indicates a cross-breed in birds.

white flag. The flag of surrender.

White Friars. The Carmelites, from their garb.

White House. The presidential mansion in the United States, at Washington; figuratively, the Presidency.

White Ladies. A species of fée in many countries, the appearance of whom generally forbodes death in the house. See also BANSHEE. The belief is a relic of old Teutonic mythology, and the White Ladies represent Holda, or Berchta, the goddess who received the souls of maidens and young children.

German legend says that when the castle of Neuhaus, Bohemia, was being built, a White Lady appeared to the workmen and promised them a sweet soup and carp on the completion of the castle. In remembrance thereof, these dainties were for long given to the poor of Bohemia on Maundy Thursday. She is also said to have been heard to speak on two occasions, once in December, 1628, when she said, "I wait for judgment!" and once at Neuhaus, when she said to the princes, "'Tis ten o'clock." The first recorded instance of this apparition was in the 16th century, and the name given to the lady is Bertha von Rosenberg. She last appeared, it is said, in 1879, just prior to the death of Prince Waldemar. She carries a bunch of keys at her side, and is always dressed in white.

In Normandy, the White Ladies lurk in ravines, fords, bridges, and other narrow passes, and ask the passenger to dance. If they receive a courteous answer, well; but if a refusal, they seize the churl and fling him into a ditch, where thorns and briars may serve to teach him gentleness of manners. The most famous of these ladies is La Dame d'Aprigny, who used to occupy the site of the present Rue St. Quentin, at Bayeux, and La Dame Abonde.

One kind of these the Italians Fata name; The French call Fée; we Sybils; and the same Others White Dames, and those that them have seen, Night Ladies some, of which Habundia's queen.

White League. A name of the Ku Klux Klan.

white lie. An excusable or pardonable untruth; a misstatement made either with no ulterior motive or "with the best intentions."

White Man's Burden, The. Euphemism for the type of imperialism predominant in Europe and America, especially Great Britain, at the end of the 19th century and the beginning of the 20th century, justified by many of its supporters as a moral duty devolving upon the "superior" white nations to guide and develop the "backward" peoples in their newly acquired colonies. The term is from the title of a poem by Rudyard Kipling (1899) which is considered to be an excellent expression of the attitude of conservative British imperialists and the author himself at the time of its composition. The first stanza is as follows:

Take up the White Man's burden—
Send forth the best ye breed—
Go bind your sons to exile
To serve your captives' need;
To wait in heavy harness
On fluttered folk and wild—
Your new-caught, sullen peoples,
Half-devil and half-child.

White Man's Grave. Sierra Leone, in Africa, from its unhealthy conditions.

White, Joseph Blanco (1775–1841). British theological writer, best remembered for one poem, a sonnet on Night and Death (1828).

Why do we, then, shun Death with anxious strife?
If Light can thus deceive, wherefore not Life?

White, Stewart Edward (1873–1946). American novelist and travel writer. He wrote many stories of California, and his earlier books include The Blazed Trail (1902); Conjuror's House (1903); The Silent Places (1904); etc. After the death of his wife, he wrote of the other world, believing that he had received psychic communications. One of the best of these books is The Unobstructed Universe (1940).

White, Terence Hanbury (1906–). English writer of fantasies of the Arthurian Cycle. The Sword in the Stone (1938); The Witch in the Wood (1939); The Ill-Made Knight (1940); Mistress Masham's Repose (1946). His eulogy of England, England Have My Bones (1937), is beautiful prose.

White, William Allen (1868–1946). Famous American editor who bought the Emporia Gazette in 1895 and edited it for many years with so original a touch that it became one of the quoted papers in America. His son, William L. White (1900–), author of They Were Expendable and other books, has taken over his post after having become well-known in the newspaper field as a roving editor and newspaper correspondent. William Allen White was known as a liberal Republican. His The Court of Boyville (1899) is one of the best accounts of boyhood in the old America. He also wrote In Our Town (1906), novels, biographies, and essays.

White, William Hale. Pen name Mark Rutherford (1831–1913). English novelist and translator.

Whiteboys. A secret agrarian association organized in Ireland about the year 1760, so called because they wore white shirts in their nightly expeditions. In 1787 a new association appeared, the members of which called themselves "Right-Boys." The Whiteboys were originally called Levelers from their throwing down fences and leveling enclosures.

Whitechapel. A quarter in the East End of London inhabited by the poorer classes, alien Jews, etc. To play Whitechapel (at cards) is to play in a mean, unsportsmanlike way; a Whitechapel cart is a light, two-wheeled spring cart, as used by small tradesmen for delivering goods; a Whitechapel shave is no shave at all, but rubbing powder over the bristles instead, "for the sake of appearance."

White Company, The. A historical romance by A. Conan DOYLE (1891), dealing with the 14th century. The hero is Alleyne Edricson, one of the White Company of Saxon bowmen led by Sir Nigel Loring under the Black Prince. He wins both honor and the hand of Sir Nigel's daughter.

White Devil, The. A tragedy (1608; published, 1612) by John WEBSTER. It contains one dirge which has become a classic.

Whitehall. A street in London on which are situated the chief government offices of the British Empire; hence, the governmental administration of the Empire.

White Hart Inn. An inn in Southwark, London, mentioned by Shakespeare in the second part of Henry VI as being Jack Cade's headquarters. It was there also that Mr. Pickwick in Dickens' PICKWICK PAPERS met with Sam Weller.

Fellow of the Royal Society and of the British Academy; president of the Mathematical Association and winner of several prizes and medals. His tenets have been compared to those of JEANS, MILLIKAN, and EDDINGTON. He is best known to the general reader through his Science and the Modern World (1925), a book excelling in clarity of style.

White Hoods. A popular party in Ghent, mentioned in Philip van Artevelde (1834), a historical drama in blank verse by Sir Henry Taylor.

White Horse, the. An historic figure of a horse which is incised on the chalk downs in Berkshire. It is supposed to be the white horse which was the emblem of the Saxons. It is 374 feet long. Since 1736 it has been given periodic scrubblings. The Ballad of the White Horse by G. K. Chesterton (1911) makes it symbolic of the struggle between the Saxons under King Alfred and the invading Norsemen and also of Christianity battling against paganism.

Whiteing, Richard (1840-1928). English journalist and writer of fiction. His best novel, No. 5 John Street (1899), is the story of a tenement in London.

White-Jacket or The World in a Man-of-War. A novel by Herman MELVILLE (1850), considered to be semi-autobiographical in character, dealing with life aboard the U.S. frigate Never-sink (said to stand for the American man-of-war United States, on which the author himself served in his youth) during a three-year cruise. Its chief interest is its depiction of the character of the various officers and men on the ship. Its revelation of the severe punishments and other abuses suffered by the men on board American naval vessels of the time led to the enactment of reforms. The title refers to a white pea-jacket worn by the narrator, his distinguishing mark among the crew; on one occasion it blows over his head during a storm, blinds him, and causes him to fall into the sea, in which he is nearly drowned.

White Knight's Ballad, The. A poem by Lewis CARROLL, appearing in Through the Looking-Glass. It is a parody on Wordsworth's Resolution and Independence. See also INCIDENTS IN THE LIFE OF MY UNCLE ARLY.

Whitman, Marcus (1802-1847). American pioneer, famous for a seven-month ride from Oregon to the East (1842-1843). He wished to consolidate his position as a missionary and collected many emigrants who went back with him to Oregon. Disease came to his mission in the Far West and he and his wife were killed in an Indian uprising. They are the principal characters in We Must March (1925), a novel by Honoré Willson MORROW.

Whitman, Sarah Helen (1803-1878). American poet who became engaged (1848) to Edgar Allan Poe. The second of his poems called To Helen was written for her. Poe's Last Letters to her appeared in 1909.

Whitman, Walter, known as Walt Whitman (1819-1892). American poet, known for the intense individualism of his poetry, his use of FREE VERSE, and his mystical celebration of America, democracy, and the common man. His poetry, unique among the American verse of his time, is marked by exuberance of spirit, sometimes extravagant rhetoric, extreme love of the sensuous in what some critics have interpreted as a tendency toward homosexuality, a worship of the superior individual, romantic identification of the individual poet with nature and the universe, stress on mystical paradox and conflict, a glorification of democratic equality and the American pioneers, and frequent vivid passages giving a realistic picture of American life in the poet's age, especially in New York City. In his work critics have found evidence of a number of diverse influences, including those of SHAKESPEARE, the BIBLE, contemporary oratory, OSSIAN, SCOTT, Italian opera, HOMER, GOETHE, the philosophy of HEGEL, the NIBELUNGENLIED, DANTE, CARLYLE, the TRANSCENDENTALISTS, and especially EMERSON. His works include Leaves of Grass (1855), new and revised editions of poems under the same title being issued in 1856, 1860, 1867, 1871, 1876, 1881-1882, 1884, 1889, 1891-1892, 1897, 1900, and so on; Drum-Taps (1865); Sequel to Drum-Taps (1865-1866); Democratic Vistas (1871), a volume of prose; Passage to India (1871); As a Strong Bird on Pinions Free, And Other Poems (1872); Memoranda during the War (1875), prose; Two Rivulets (1876); Specimen Days and Collect (1882-1883); November Boughs (1888); Good-Bye, My Fancy (1891); Calamus (1897); The Wound-Dresser (1898); Notes and Fragments (1899); The Complete Writings (1902), ten volumes; An American Primer (1904); The Gathering of the Forces (1920), a collection of prose writings published in the Brooklyn Eagle, The Uncollected Poetry and Prose (1921); Leaves of Grass (1926), an inclusive edition; The Half-Breed, And Other Stories (1927), a collection of his short stories; I Sit and Look Out (1932), a collection of prose writings published in various newspapers. His first work was Franklin Evans, or The Inebriate (1842), a temperance novel. Famous single poems are SONG OF MYSELF; There Was a Child Went Forth; Crossing Brooklyn Ferry; Out of the Cradle Endlessly Rocking; I Hear America Singing, Pioneers! O Pioneers!; Vigil Strange I Kept on the Field One Night; When I Heard the Learned Astronomer; WHEN LILACS LAST IN THE DOORYARD BLOOM'D; Once I Pass'd Through a Populous City; O CAPTAIN! MY CAPTAIN!; The Base of all Metaphysics.

Whitman, who had very little formal education, taught in a school on Long Island, worked on various newspapers in New York City, Brooklyn, and New Orleans, and lived somewhat as a Bohemian in his youth, being particularly fond of encouraging the growth of colorful legends about himself. During the Civil War he served as a nurse in the army hospitals in Washington, and later worked as a clerk in the Department of the Interior. He suffered a paralytic stroke in 1873 and spent the remainder of his life in retirement. When his work first appeared in the U.S., it shocked the general public; it is said that he lost his government clerkship because the Secretary of the Interior regarded Leaves of Grass as immoral. Whitman was first recognized as an important literary figure in England and France, by such authors as William Rossetti, Robert Louis Stevenson, J. A. Symonds, and A. C. Swinburne; his free verse influenced the vers-libre movement in French poetry. By the 20th century he was regarded as one of the most important writers in the history of American literature and had a strong influence on a number of 20th-century American poets, especially Carl Sandburg, and the proletarian poets (see PROLETARIAN LITERATURE) of the 1930's. For a study of Walt Whitman and his poetry, cf. American Renaissance, by F. O. Matthiessen.

Whitney, Eli (1765-1825). American inventor of the cotton gin (patented 1794).

Whitney, Gertrude Vanderbilt (1877?-1942). The daughter of Cornelius Vanderbilt who married Harry Payne Whitney. She was well-known as a sculptor. She carved a fountain in the Pan-American building and did the memorial of the Titanic in Washington. In 1931 she opened the Whitney Museum of American Art in New York City.

Whit Sunday. White Sunday, the seventh Sunday after Easter, to commemorate the descent of the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost. In the primitive church the newly baptized wore white from Easter to Pentecost, and were called albatu (white-robed). The last of the Sundays, which was also the chief festival, was called emphatically Dominica in Albis (Sunday in White).

An old idea is that it is the Wit or Wisdom Sunday, the day when the Apostles were filled with wisdom by the Holy Ghost.

This day Wit-sunday is cald,
For wisdom and wit sevene fald,
Was zonen to the Apostles as this day.

Cambr. Univer. MSS., Dd. i, 1, p. 234.

This day is called Wytsonday because the Holy Ghost brought wytte and wysdom into Christus disciples and filled them full of gostly wytte.—In die Pentecostis (printed by Wynkyn de Worde).

Whittier, John Greenleaf (1807-1892). American poet, known for his portrayals of everyday life in rural New England, written largely under the influence of Robert Burns, and for his poems expressing his humanitarian and politically liberal convictions, especially in connection with the anti-slavery movement. His works include Legends of New England in Prose and Verse (1831); Moll Pitcher (1832); Mogg Megone (1836), a prose account of Indian life in the days of the colonies; Poems Written During the Progress of the Abolition Question (1838); Lays of My Home, And Other Poems (1843); Voices of Freedom (1846), anti-slavery poems; Leaves from Margaret Smith's Journal in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, 1678-1679 (1849), a prose romance based on records of the SALEM WITCHCRAFT trials; Poems (1849); Songs of Labor (1850); Old Portraits and Modern Sketches (1850) and Literary Recreations and Miscellanies (1854), collections of prose; The Chapel of the Hermits (1853); The Panorama, And Other Poems (1856); Home Ballads, Poems, and Lyrics (1860); In War Time, And Other Poems (1864); Snow-Bound (1866), his best-known poem, dealing with a heavy snowfall in the countryside of New England, presented in an idyllic vein; The Tent on the Beach (1867), narrative verse; Among the Hills (1869); Miriam, And Other Poems (1871); Hazel Blossoms (1875); The Vision of Echard (1878); St. Gregory's Guest (1886); At Sundown (1890). Well-known single poems are THE BAREFOOT BOY, MAUD MULLER, ICHABOD, Skipper Iveson's Ride, and Telling the Bees. Whittier, called "the Quaker Poet," was a fervent and active Abolitionist during a large part of his career.

Whittington, Dick. A poor orphan country lad, who heard that London was "paved with gold," and went there to get a living. When he was reduced to the starving point, a kind merchant gave him employment in his family, to help the cook, but the cook so ill-treated him that he ran away. Sitting to rest himself on the roadside, he heard Bow Bells, and they seemed to him to say, "Turn again, Whittington, thrice lord mayor of London"; so he returned to his master. By-and-by the master allowed him, with the other servants, to put in an adventure in a ship bound for Morocco. Richard had nothing but a cat, which, however, he sent. Now it happened that the King of Morocco was troubled by mice, which Whittington's cat destroyed, and this so pleased His Highness that he bought the mouser at a fabulous price. Dick commenced business with this money, soon rose to great wealth, married his master's daughter, was knighted, and thrice elected lord mayor of London—in 1398, 1406, and 1419. Such is the tale. Some persons assert that Whittington's "cat" was a brig built on the Norwegian model, with narrow stern, projecting quarters, and deep waist. Others think the word achat, "barter," furnishes the right solution.

Beneath this stone lies Whittington,
Sir Richard rightly named,
Who three times Lord Mayor served in London,
In which he ne'er was blamed.
He rose from indigence to wealth
By industry and that,
For lo! he scorned to gain by stealth
What he got by a cat.
Epitaph (destroyed by the fire of London).

Whitty, Dame May (1865-1948). English actress, noted on stage and screen. Night Must Fall, The Lady Vanishes, etc. See also MARGARET WEBSTER.

Who's Who. A volume of abbreviated biographies of prominent persons. Both an English and an American Who's Who are issued annually and biennially, respectively.

Whymper, Edward (1840-1911). Pioneer alpinist who was successful in climbing the Matterhorn (1865). He wrote several books on his exploits in the Alps and the Andes. He also excelled in wood engraving and was a book illustrator.

Whyte-Melville, George John (1821-1878). British novelist of the hunting field and a great writer. He wrote also Riding Recollections (1875) and some poetry. The Australian poet Adam Lindsay Gordon was a great admirer of his.

Wickard, Claude Raymond (1893-). U. S. secretary of agriculture (1940-1945). Made administrator of food production and distribution (1942).

Wicked Wasp of Twickenham. See POPE, ALEXANDER.

Wickersham, George Woodward (1858-1936). Attorney general of the United States (1909-1913) and president of the International Arbitral Tribunal under the Young plan (1932-1936).

Wicker-Work Woman, The. A novel by Anatole France. See under BERGERET.

Wicket Gate, The. In Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, the entrance to the road which leads to the Celestial City. Over the door is written, "Knock, and it shall be opened unto you."

Wickfield, Mr. In Dickens' DAVID COPPERFIELD, a lawyer, father of Agnes. The "umble" Uriah HEEP is his clerk.

Agnes Wickfield. Daughter of Mr. Wickfield; the second wife of David Copperfield. She is considered one of Dickens' most womanly (and colorless) characters.

Wickham, Anna (1884-). English poet of slender output but powerful originality. The Contemplative Quarry (1920) is probably her best book. Recognition has been slow in coming to her.

Widdemer, Margaret (1880?-). American poet and popular novelist. Her best poetry is contained in Cross-Currents (1921). Her novels are sentimental but manifest a shrewd insight into life.

Widdicombe Fair. A popular English song, the words and the tune probably originating at the end of the eighteenth century.

Tom Pearse, Tom Pearse, lend me your grey mare,
All along, down along, out along, lee.
For I want for to go to Widdicombe Fair . . .

Widener, Harry Elkins (1885-1912). American book collector, lost on Titanic. Widener Memorial Library, opened June 1915 at Harvard, was given by his mother.

Widener, Peter (1834-1915). American financier and collector who left his collection of paintings, porcelains, antiques, etc., to the city of Philadelphia and built and endowed the Widener Memorial Industrial Training School for Crippled Children (1906).

Wide, Wide World, The. A once popular story for girls by Susan WARNER ("Elizabeth Wetherell"; 1851). The heroine, Ellen Montgomery, is left for a time in the care of Miss Fortune Emerson, a relative whose sharp tongue and Puritanical principles almost prove too much for Ellen. With the aid of the sympathetic Miss Alice Humphreys and a conscience such as the child heroines of the 19th century possessed, she manages to remain a model child.

the widow's cruse. A small supply of anything which, by good management, is made to go a long way and to be apparently inexhaustible; in allusion to the miracle of the cruse of oil in 2 Kings, iv.

the Widow of Windsor. Queen Victoria.

a California widow. A woman who lives apart from her husband; so called from the wives left behind at the time of the California gold rush.

a grass widow. A woman living apart from her husband in a state of separation but not divorce; possibly from grace widow, a widow by grace of courtesy.

According to another account, the word has nothing to do with grace widow, and the modern use seems to have originated among Anglo-Indians about the middle of the 19th century, from the practice of European husbands of sending their wives, during the hot season, to the hills—where grass is plentiful—while they worked in the sweltering plains below. Still another suggestion is that the phrase arose in America, during the gold mania in California. A man would not unfrequently put his wife and children to board with some family while he went to the "diggins." This he called "putting his wife to grass," as a horse is put to grass when not wanted or unfit for work.

Widow in the Bye Street, The. A narrative poem by John MASEFIELD (1912), the story of a devoted mother and her son, Jimmy, who, when the girl he loves is faithless, kills her lover.

Widsith. One of the oldest English poems (seventh century?) in the Exeter Book. It concerns a wandering minstrel and his travels.

Wieland. Another form of Volund or WAYLAND SMITH.

Wieland, Christoph Martin (1733-1813). German writer of romances and ironic tales in verse. He translated eleven plays by Shakespeare into German prose. His long epic Oberon was translated into English by John Quincy Adams while U.S. minister in Berlin (1797-1801).

Wieland, or The Transformation. A novel by Charles Brockden BROWN (1798), dealing with mysterious events in the household of the Wielands, the family of a German mystic who has settled in Pennsylvania. The heroine and narrator is Clara Wieland, who falls in love with one Carwin, a fascinating stranger. Suddenly mysterious voices are heard about the house at night which terrify Clara. The voices tell Clara's lover, Henry Pleyel, that she has been unfaithful to him, whereupon he leaves and returns to Germany, where he marries a former fiancée whom he has believed dead. Clara's brother, the younger Wieland, goes mad as a result of hearing the strange voices, murders his wife and children, and is put in an insane asylum. Eventually, however, Carwin confesses that he has produced the voices through ventriloquism and by the same skill is able to rescue Clara from her brother when the madman escapes from the asylum and tries to kill the girl. At the conclusion of the novel Wieland commits suicide, Carwin starts out again on his travels, and Clara marries Pleyel when his former wife dies. Wieland is notable as the first American example of the GOTHIC NOVEL.

Wiese, Kurt (1887-). Well-known American illustrator of children's books.

Wife-Hater's Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Wife of Bath. One of the famous group of pilgrims of Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES, who made the journey from Southwark to the shrine of THOMAS À BECKET in Canterbury. She is a bold, jovial woman, somewhat deaf, who has traveled over Europe and the Holy Land and has been married no less than five times. John GAY wrote a comedy called The Wife of Bath in 1713, and Percy MacKaye in his CANTERBURY PILGRIMS gives her a prominent rôle. She is described by Chaucer as follows:

A good Wyf was ther of bisyde Bathe,
But she was som-del deef, and that was scathe . . .
Bold was his face, and fair, and reed of hewe.
She was a worthy womman al hir lyve,

Housbondes at chirche-dore she hadde fyve.
Withouten oþer company in youthe.
But therof nedeth not to speke as nouthe . . .
At Rome she hadde been, and at Boloigne,
In Galice, at seint Jame and at Cologne
In felawship wel coude she laughe and carpe
Prologue to the Canterbury Tales.

The Wife of Bath's Tale. The story told by the Wife of Bath centers about the old query, "What does a woman like best?" A knight of King Arthur's court, condemned to lose his life if he does not find the answer, hunts far and near, and finally agrees to marry a poor, old, ugly woman who tells him, in return, that what a woman likes best is to have her own sweet way. She then throws off her mask and appears young, beautiful and rich. The tale was taken from Gower's Confessio Amantis.

Wife of Sir Isaac Harman, The. A novel by H. G. WELLS (1914). The petted doll wife of the wealthy and domineering Sir Isaac longs for a more active life than he allows her, and gradually comes to take satisfaction in building and managing hostels for working people.

Wiggin, Kate Douglas (1856-1923). Widely popular American writer of children's books and novels. Best known for her The Birds' Christmas Carol (1887) and REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM (1903).

Wigglesworth, Michael (1631-1705). Puritan clergyman and author of early New England, best known for his long poem THE DAY OF DOOM (1662), extremely popular, republished in the U.S. as late as 1867. He also wrote Meat Out of the Eater, Or Meditations Concerning the Necessity, End, and Usefulness of Afflictions unto God's Children (1669), a theological poem almost as popular in its day as The Day of Doom; God's Controversy with New England, Written in the Time of the Great Drought, Anno 1662, by a Lover of New England's Prosperity, first published in 1871; and a number of shorter poems on theological subjects, such as Death, Expected and Welcomed and A Farewell to the World. Wigglesworth, both minister and physician at Malden, Massachusetts, during most of career, was a characteristic Puritan of his time, but, unlike the MATHERS, he did not take part in the SALEM WITCHCRAFT trials, instead ordering public repentance and humiliation of those who did participate in the trials.

Wiggs, Mrs., see MRS. WIGGS.

Wight, Isle of. An island off the southern coast of England. Notable in literature as the residence of Lord TENNYSON in the latter part of his life.

Wilcox, Ella Wheeler (1850-1919). American verse-writer, known for her numerous books of lush, sentimental, and platitudinous poetry, extremely popular in her day and considered characteristic of the general literary taste of the time. Poems of Passion (1883) is one of her best-known volumes.

a wild-cat scheme. A rash and hazardous financial venture; a speculation in which one would have about as much chance of making a profit as of catching a wild-cat in the woods.

a wild-geese chase. A hunt after a nest. This chase has two defects: first, it is very hard to catch the goose, and, secondly, it is of very little worth when it is caught. To lead one on a wild-geese chase is therefore to beguile one with false hopes, or put one on the pursuit of something not practicable, or at any rate not worth the chase. Rex WARNER wrote an allegorical novel entitled The Wild Goose Chase (1937).

the Wild Huntsman. A spectral hunter of medieval legend who, with a pack of spectral dogs, frequents certain forests and occasionally appears to mortals. One account has it that he was a Jew who would not suffer Jesus to drink out of a horse-trough, but pointed to some water in a hoof-print as good enough for "such an enemy of Moses."

The Germans locate him in the Black Forest; the French in the Forest of Fontainebleau, and confuse him with St. Hubert; and in England he has become Herne the Hunter, once a keeper in Windsor Forest, who "walks" in winter time, about midnight, and blasts trees and cattle.

wild oats, he is sowing his. Indulging the buoyant folly of youth; living in youthful dissipation. The idea is that the mind is a field of good oats, but these pranks are wild oats or weeds sown amongst the good seed, choking it for a time, but soon to die out and give place to genuine grain.

Wild, Jonathan (1682-1725). A famous criminal, hanged at Tyburn for housebreaking. Tales of his six wives and of his gang of subordinates have become popular legend. Daniel DEFOE made Jonathan Wild the subject of a romance (1725). FIELDING did the same in 1743, calling his novel The History of Jonathan Wild the Great. In these romances he is a coward, traitor, hypocrite, and tyrant, unrelieved by human feeling and never betrayed into a kind or good action. The character is historic, but the adventures are in a measure fictitious.

Wildair, Sir Harry. The hero of a comedy so called by George FARQUHAR (1701). The same character had been introduced in the Constant Couple (1700), by the same author. Sir Harry is a gay profligate, not altogether selfish and abandoned, but very free and of easy morals. This was Wilks' and Peg Woffington's great part.

Wild Ass's Skin, The (Le Peau de chagrin).

A novel by BALZAC (1830). The hero, Raphael, receives from an old man a piece of magic skin which will insure the gratification of every desire, but will diminish with each wish granted, and with it goes the life of the possessor. Raphael cries "A short life and a merry one" and proceeds to enjoy life to the full. But the skin shrinks steadily and in spite of his frantic attempts to find some scientific means of stretching it, he is forced to yield to the inevitable and dies a young man. See FEDORA; AQUILINA.

Wild Duck, The. A drama by Henrik IBSEN (1884). The heroine, Hedwig, a sensitive and charming girl, is supposedly the daughter of Hjalmer Ekdal and his wife Gina, the former mistress of the elder Ekdal's wealthy partner Werle. Werle's son, Gregors, who believes that truth is always better than illusion, tells Hedwig of her illegitimate origin, and she kills herself.

Wilde, Oscar Fingal O'Flahertie Wills (1856-1900). Irish-born English playwright, poet, and prose-writer, known for his eccentricity and affectation of behavior and the brilliant wit and paradox of his society comedies. During his undergraduate years at Oxford he became the leader of an English aesthetic movement, given impetus by the PRERAPHAELITE BROTHERHOOD and the theories of Walter PATER, which advocated "ART FOR ART'S SAKE" and sought to cultivate the hyper-aesthetic characteristics of the contemporary DECADENTS in France. Wilde's works include Poems (1881); The Happy Prince, And Other Tales (1888), a collection of fairy tales and allegories; THE PICTURE OF DORIAN GRAY (1891), a novel in the form of a moral allegory; The House of Pomegranates (1892), another group of fairy stories; Intentions (1892), a collection of reviews and critical studies; Poems (1892); LADY WINDERMERE'S FAN (1892), A WOMAN OF NO IMPORTANCE (1893), Salomé (1893), An Ideal Husband (1895), and THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING EARNEST (1895), all plays; THE BALLAD OF READING GAOL (1898); and DE PROFUNDIS (1905). The last two works were signed Sebastian Melmoth.

Wilde was the son of a well-known Irish surgeon and an eccentric poetess, Jane Francisca Elgee, who wrote under the name of Speranza. He attracted a deal of attention and ridicule during the period of his active aestheticism, when he wore his hair long, dressed eccentrically, and carried flowers in his hands while lecturing; the Gilbert and Sullivan opera PATIENCE (1881) was a burlesque of the "art for art's sake" movement led by him. His plays were very successful and are considered by some critics to be in part forerunners of the similarly witty comedies of George Bernard SHAW. Wilde's career was wrecked when he brought a suit for libel against the Marquis of Queensberry, lost, and, as a result of evidence revealed at the trial, was sentenced to a prison term of two years at Reading Gaol on a charge of abnormal sexual vice. After his release from prison, he spent his last years in Paris in bitterness and despair.

Wilde, Percival (1887-). American playwright, at his best in the one-act play. His numerous plays for the Little Theater have been acted all over the world.

Wilder. In COOPER'S RED ROVER, a name assumed by Henry Ark.

Wilder, Thornton Niven (1897-). American novelist and playwright, known for his sophisticated and ironic novels and later for his successful plays marked by touches of fantasy and experiments in theatrical technique. Among his novels are The Cabala (1926); THE BRIDGE OF SAN LUIS REY (1927), a best-seller, awarded the Pulitzer prize; The Woman of Andros (1930); Heaven's My Destination (1935). His plays include The Trumpet Shall Sound (1926); The Angel That Troubled the Waters (1928) and The Long Christmas Dinner (1931), collections of one-act plays; OUR TOWN (1938), awarded the Pulitzer prize; and THE SKIN OF OUR TEETH (1942), dealing with the hardships and fortitude of mankind through the ages, also a Pulitzer prize play. The Ides of March (1948) is a pseudo-historical novel about Julius CAESAR.

Wilderness, Battle of the. A famous action in the U.S. Civil War when Grant tried to dislodge Lee from his position in Eastern Virginia (1864).

Wildev, Damon. One of the chief characters in Hardy's RETURN OF THE NATIVE.

Tenant of Wildfell Hall, The. A novel (1848) by Anne BRONTË, published under the pen-name of Acton BELL.

Wildfire, Col. Nimrod. A popular character of the early American stage, a Kentucky frontiersman who comes on to New York and by his brusque, direct methods straightens out innumerable difficulties for his city friends. He first appeared in James K. Paulding's Lion of the West (1831) and later in Bayle Bernard's comedy entitled A Kentuckian's Trip to New York in 1815. He introduces his intended wife, Miss Patty Snap of Salt Licks, to New York acquaintances with the comment, "There's no back out in her breed, for she can lick her weight in wild cats, and she shot a bear at nine years old."

Wildfire, Madge. In SCOTT'S HEART OF MIDLOTHIAN, the insane daughter of old Meg Murdochson, the gypsy thief. Madge was seduced when a girl, and this, with the murder of her infant, turned her brain. COLERIDGE called her the most original character ever created by Scott.

Wild Geese. Jacobite exiles who left Ireland for France after the surrender of Limerick (1691).

Wild Hunt. In European, especially German, folklore, a nocturnal chase of spectral hunters, led by the Wild Huntsman who may have to be interpreted as Odin or Woden.

Wilding, Anthony. Called Tony Wilding (1883-1915). Famous tennis player from New Zealand. Killed in action in World War I.

Wiley, Harvey (1844-1930). American chemist, famous for leading the campaign against the adulteration of food. He got the Food and Drugs Act passed by Congress (1906) and helped to have it administered effectively. He directed a bureau of foods and health for Good Housekeeping (1912-1930) and wrote several books on foods and the Food Law.

Wilfer, Reginald. In Dickens' novel OUR MUTUAL FRIEND, a character called by his wife R.W., and by his fellow-clerks Rumty. He is clerk in the drug-house of Chicksey, Stobbles, and Veneering. In person, Mr. Wilfer resembles an overgrown cherub; in manner, he is shy and retiring.

Mr. Reginald Wilfer was a poor clerk, so poor indeed that he had never yet attained the modest object of his ambition, which was to wear a complete new suit of clothes, hat and boots included, at one time. His black hat was brown before he could afford a coat; his pantaloons were white at the seams and knees before he could buy a pair of boots; his boots had worn out before he could treat himself to new pantaloons; and by the time he worked round to the hat again, that shining modern article roofed in an ancient ruin of various periods.—Ch. iv.

Mrs. Wilfer. Wife of Mr. Reginald, a most majestic woman, tall and angular. She wears gloves and a pocket-handkerchief tied under her chin. A patronizing, condescending woman is Mrs. Wilfer, with a mighty idea of her own importance. "Viper!" "Ingrate!" and such epithets are household words with her.

Bella Wilfer. Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilfer, a wayward, playful, affectionate, spoilt beauty, "giddy from the want of some sustaining purpose, and capricious because she was always fluttering among little things." Bella Wilfer marries John HARMON (John Rokesmith), the secretary of Mr. Boffin "the golden dustman."

Lavinia Wilfer. Youngest sister of Bella, and called "The Irrepressible." Lavinia is a tart, pert girl, but succeeds in catching George Sampson in the toils of wedlock.

Wilfrid. The hero of Scott's narrative poem ROKEBY, son of Oswald Wycliffe; in love with Matilda, heiress of Rokeby's knight. After various villainies, Oswald forces from Matilda a promise to marry Wilfrid. Wilfrid thanks her for the promise, and falls dead at her feet.

Wilfrid, St. See under SAINTS.

Wilhelmina (1880-). Queen of the Netherlands (1890-1948). During World War II she lived in England. Abdicated in favor of her daughter Juliana.

Wilhelm Meister. A novel by GOETHE, or rather two novels, Wilhelm Meister's Apprenticeship (Lehrjahre; 1795-1796) and its sequel, Wilhelm Meister's Wanderings (Wanderjahre; 1821-1829). The hero, the son of a well-to-do German merchant, leaves his comfortable bourgeois surroundings to roam about with a company of strolling players, whose Bohemian life has great attractions for him. He falls in love with Marianne, one of the group, and the lovers have a child named Felix, but Wilhelm leaves both mother and son in a foolish mood of jealousy. He rescues Mignon, a charming elflike Italian girl, from some abusive rope dancers, and his kindness awakens in her a passionate love that he does not return and that brings about her death. In the course of time Wilhelm becomes disillusioned with stage life and settles down into a more conventional existence. He assumes the responsibilities of a father toward young Felix and eventually marries a lady of position and becomes proprietor of an estate. See also Mignon.

Wilhelm Tell, see WILLIAM TELL.

Wilhelmstrasse. The street of the German Foreign Office; hence, the Foreign Office.

Wilkes, Charles (1798-1877). American naval officer, known for stopping the British mail steamer Trent and taking from her by force the two Confederate commissioners Mason and Slidell (1861).

Wilkes, John (1727-1797). A dissipated writer who joined a fraternity called the Mad Monks of Medmenham Abbey. In writing for The North Briton, a paper he had founded in 1762, he attacked the government, and his political periodical was suppressed. He was a Member of Parliament later on, but, although re-elected, he was twice suspended for libel. He was a great favorite with the London mob, and was instrumental in securing certain rights for the people.

Wilkie, Sir David (1785-1841). Scottish portrait and historical painter.

Wilkins, Sir George Hubert (1888-). Famous polar explorer born in Australia. He took part in the arctic expedition of STEFANSSON (1913-1917), in the British Imperial Antarctic Expedition (1920-1921), and SHACKLETON's expedition (1921-1922). He led an expedition of his own for the British Museum to Australia and other islands and commanded several arctic and antarctic expeditions thereafter. With Lincoln Ellsworth he made the Nautilus Arctic Submarine Expedition (1931). He has written Flying the Arctic (1928); Undiscovered Australia (1928); Under the North Pole (1931); etc.

Wilkins, Mary E., see FREEMAN, MARY.

Wilkins, Peter. Hero of Voyages of Peter Wilkins by Robert Paltock (ca. 1750).

Wilkinson, Ellen Cicely (1891-1947). English woman politician active in the labor and suffragist movements. Member of Parliament for Labor (1924-1931; 1935 ff.); parliamentary secretary to the ministry of home security (1940 ff.); minister of education in the Labor Government (1945).

Wilkinson, Sir John Gardner (1797-1875). English Egyptologist who wrote Manners and Customs of the Ancient Egyptians (1837-1841) and investigated Egyptian hieroglyphics.

Willard, Emma (1787-1870). American pioneer in the education of women. In 1814 she opened a seminary in Vermont for women and in 1821 founded another in Troy, New York. This latter school is still in existence and was a college some sixteen years before the women's college was established at Mount Holyoke. A book of verse which Miss Willard published contained one famous poem, Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep, which was set to music by Joseph P. Knight.

Willard, Frances (1839-1898). A leader of the temperance movement and president (1879) of the Women's Christian Temperance Union. She helped to organize the Prohibition party and wrote Glances of Fifty Years (1889).

Willard, Jess (1883-). American heavyweight champion (1915). Defeated by Jack DEMPSEY.

Willebrandt, Mabel Walker (1889-). As an attorney she defended some two thousand cases involving women in the courts of Los Angeles. She was assistant attorney general of the United States (1921-1929).

Willems. The chief character of Conrad's OUTCAST OF THE ISLANDS.

Willet, John. In Dickens' BARNABY RUDGE, landlord of the Maypole Inn. John Willet is one of the most dogged and positive fellows in existence, always sure that he is right, and that everyone who differs from him is wrong. He ultimately resigns the Maypole to his son Joe, and retires to a cottage in Chigwell, with a small garden.

Joe Willet. Son of the landlord, a broad-shouldered, strapping young fellow of twenty. Being bullied and browbeaten by his father, he runs away and enlists as a soldier, loses his right arm in America, and is dismissed from service. He returns to England, marries Dolly VARDEN, and becomes landlord of the Maypole, where he prospers and has a large family.

William IV (1765-1837). King of Great Britain and Ireland. His nicknames were "the Sailor-King" and "Silly Billy." He was the third son of George III. His successor was his niece Victoria.

William of Cloudesley. One of three famous archers. See ADAM BELL.

William of Malmesbury (1095?-1142?). English historian of the Anglo-Norman period, educated at the abbey of Malmesbury, where he served as librarian. He is known for his chronicles, reflecting sympathy with the Norman rulers and the Church. Best-known is Chronicle of the Kings of England, finished about 1128, dealing with the history of England from the settlement of the Anglo-Saxons to the contemporary period of the reign of Henry I. William also wrote Chronicle of the Popes (1125), and a number of saints' lives and miracle tales. In his later years his patron was Robert of Gloucester, son of Henry I.

William of Newburgh (1136-1198?). English historian, "the father of historical criticism," who wrote in Latin a History of English Affairs, covering the period from the Conquest to nearly the beginning of the 13th century.

William of Norwich, St. See under SAINTS.

Williams, Anna. A friend of Samuel JOHNSON, a talented and intelligent woman, mentioned frequently in Boswell's Life of Johnson.

Williams, Ben Ames (1889-). American novelist, author of some thirty books. His first book was All the Brothers Were Valiant (1919). He is a good story teller, and most of his stories are laid in Maine. Come Spring (1940), Time of Peace (1942), We Have Met the Enemy (1943). House Divided (1947) is a very long novel of the Civil War.

Williams, Caleb, see CALEB WILLIAMS.

Williams, Eleazar (1789?-1858). American missionary among the Indians. He claimed (1839) to be the son of Louis XVI, the lost dauphin of France. He wrote on Indian subjects and knew several Indian languages. Subject of a romance, Lazarre (1901), by Mary Hartwell Catherwood.

Williams, Emlyn (1905-). Welsh stage and screen actor and playwright. His plays include A Murder Has Been Arranged (1930); Night Must Fall (1935); The Corn is Green (1938); etc.

Williams, Gluyas (1888-). American cartoonist drawing for the New Yorker, Col- lier's, etc. He has illustrated the works of Robert Benchley.

Williams, Jane. One of the ladies with whom P. B. SHELLEY formed a "Platonic" attachment in Italy during the later years of his career. Her husband was drowned with Shelley when the two were caught in a sudden storm on the Adriatic, where they were sailing in a small boat.

Williams, Joe. In John Dos Passos' U.S.A., a young man from Washington, D.C., who enlists in the U.S. Navy. During World War I he becomes disgusted with his life as a sailor, deserts, and joins the merchant marine. He marries, but his wife is unfaithful, and he returns to sea.

Janey, Joe's sister, is also a character in the novel. She has a brief love affair with Jerry Burnham, goes to work for G. H. BARROW, and then becomes the secretary of J. W. MOOREHOUSE. Moorehouse's attentions to Eleanor STODDARD and Eveline HUTCHINS arouse her jealousy.

Williams, Michael (1878-). Editor of The Commonwealth, known as a liberal Catholic. His The Book of the High Romance (1918) is one of his best. He was born in Halifax, Nova Scotia, but has for many years lived and worked in the United States.

Williams, Oscar (1900-). American poet who has compiled a number of anthologies of the work of his contemporaries, including A Little Treasury of Modern Poetry (1946). Among his books of poems is That's All That Matters (1945).

Williams, Roger (ca. 1603-1683). English-born New England Protestant clergyman, known for his individualistic views on religion, politics, and democracy in political and ecclesiastical government. Progressing in belief from the Anglicans through the Separatists and Baptists to the Seekers, he was expelled from Massachusetts for establishing a democratic organization in his church at Salem, and founded the colony of Rhode Island. He was a friend of both Milton and Cromwell in England, took part in the English Civil War, and engaged in a vigorous pamphlet controversy with the Puritan John CORTON. His works include A Key into the Language of America (1643), a study of Indian languages; Queries of Highest Consideration (1643), a plea addressed to the English Parliament against the establishment of a national church; Mr. Cotton's Letter Lately Printed, Examined, and Answered (1644); THE BLOODY TENENT OF PERSECUTION (1644), his most famous work; The Bloody Tenent Yet More Bloody (1652); The Hireling Ministry None of Christ's (1652); George Foxe Digged Out of His Burrows (1676).

Williams befriended the Indians and established a democratic government in Rhode Island, permitting complete religious toleration, although he did attack the views of the Quakers and engaged in a bitter dispute with them. He is considered one of the most important crusaders for democratic rights in the American colonies in the period before the Revolution.

Williams, Tennessee (Thomas Lanier) (1914-). American dramatist. The Glass Menagerie (1945), starring Laurette TAYLOR; A Streetcar Named Desire (1947), which won the Pulitzer prize.

Williams, Valentine (1883-1947). English writer of popular mystery stories. He also wrote and acted in four radio plays for NBC.

Williams, William Carlos (1883-). American poet, early in his career a disciple of the school of IMAGISM and later an exponent of OBJECTIVISM, known for his vivid, realistic, and precise recording in his poetry of isolated, fleeting, and easily overlooked details of experience, chosen most often from a background of daily, commonplace living in the urban sections of the 20th-century U.S.; his accuracy in reproducing American speech rhythms has also been highly praised. Because of his human and humanitarian sympathies and his understanding of the proletarian and lower-middle-class Americans who supply the subject-matter of most of his poetry and prose, Williams was often ranked among the proletarian writers of the 1930's. See PROLETARIAN LITERATURE. His works include Poems (1909), The Tempers (1913), Kora in Hell (1920), Al Que Quiere! (1917), Improvisations (1920), Sour Grapes (1921), Spring and All (1922), Collected Poems (1934), An Early Martyr (1935), Adam and Eve and the City (1936), The Complete Collected Poems (1938), and The Broken Span (1941), all verse; The Great American Novel (1923) and In the American Grain (1925), criticism; A Voyage to Pagany (1928), White Mule (1937), and In the Money (1940), novels, the last two part of a planned trilogy; The Knife of the Times (1932), and Life Along the Passaic River (1938), collections of short stories.

Williams, of English and Puerto Rican parentage, studied medicine in the U.S. and Europe and throughout his career was a practicing physician in the factory region of New Jersey, working among the people about whom he wrote in his spare time. In his youth, while in Europe, he became a friend of the poets Ezra POUND and "H. D." (Hilda Doolittle).

Williams-Ellis, Mrs. Amabel (1894-). English novelist, the sister of John STRACHEY and the cousin of Lytton STRACHEY. Her children are said to have been the originals from which Richard Hughes drew the children in his The Innocent Voyage. Her best-known novel is The Big Firm (1938).

Williamson, Henry (1897-). English writer, best known for his books on nature. His Tarka the Otter was awarded the Hawthornden Prize (1927). The Gold Falcon; or The Haggard of Love (1933), a brilliantly-written ROMAN À CLEF (New York scene), was published anonymously.

William Tell. The legendary national hero of Switzerland, whose deeds are based on a Teutonic myth of widespread occurrence in northern Europe.

Fable has it that Tell was the champion of the Swiss in the War of Independence against the Emperor Albert I (slain 1308). Tell refused to salute the cap of Gessler, the imperial governor, and for this act of independence was sentenced to shoot with his bow and arrow an apple from the head of his own son. Tell succeeded in this dangerous skill-trial, but in his agitation dropped an arrow from his robe. The governor insolently demanded what the second arrow was for, and Tell fearlessly replied, "To shoot you with, had I failed in the task imposed upon me." Gessler now ordered him to be carried in chains across the lake and cast into Küssnacht castle, a prey "to the reptiles that lodged there." He was, however, rescued by the peasantry, and having shot Gessler, freed his country from the Austrian yoke.

This legend is the subject of Lemierre's tragedy Guillaume Tell (1766), Schiller's Wilhelm Tell (1804), Knowles' William Tell (1840) and Rossini's opera, William Tell (1829).

SAXO GRAMMATICUS tells nearly the same story respecting the Danish Toki, who killed Harald, and similar tales are told of the Scandinavian Egil and King Nidung, of Adam Bell, Clym of the Clough, William of Cloudeley and Henry IV, Olaf and Eindridi, etc.

William Wilson. A story (1839) by Edgar Allan POE in Tales of the Grotesque and Arabesque.

Willis, Nathaniel Parker (1806-1867). American poet and prose writer of the KNICKERBOCKER SCHOOL.

Willkie, Wendell (1892-1944). President of the Commonwealth and Southern Corporation (1933-1940). Republican nominee for president of the United States (1940); defeated by Roosevelt. Made a famous tour of the Middle East, Russia, and China (1942), recorded by him in the book One World (1943).

Will o' the Wisp. See IGNIS FATUUS.

Willoughby, John. In Jane Austen's SENSE AND SENSIBILITY, the fascinating young lover who escapes from Marianne Dashwood's affections.

willow pattern. A favorite design for blue china plates, imitating, but not copying, the Chinese style of porcelain decoration, introduced into England by Thomas Turner of Caughley about 1780, when the craze for things Chinese was at its height.

To the right is a mandarin's country seat, two stories high to show the rank and wealth of the possessor; in the foreground a pavilion, in the background an orange-tree, and to the right of the pavilion a peach-tree in full bearing. The estate is enclosed by a wooden fence, and a river crossed by a bridge, at one end of which is the famous willow-tree and at the other the gardener's humble cottage. At the top of the pattern (left-hand side) is an island. The three figures on the bridge are the mandarin and the lovers, the latter also being shown in a boat on the river.

The willow pattern does not illustrate any Chinese story or legend, and is not Chinese in origin, but the following is the tale that has been built round it:

A wealthy mandarin had an only daughter named Li-chi, who fell in love with Chang, a young man living on the island shown, who had been her father's secretary. The father overheard them one day making vows of love under the orange-tree, and sternly forbade the unequal match; but the lovers contrived to elope, lay concealed for a while in the gardener's cottage, and thence escaped in a boat to the island. The enraged mandarin pursued them with a whip, and would have beaten them to death had not the gods rewarded their fidelity by changing them both into turtle-doves. And all this occurred "when the willow begins to shed its leaves."

Will's. A famous coffee-house of Queen Anne's time that stood at the corner of Bow Street and Russell Street, Covent Garden, sometimes referred to as "Russell Street Coffee House," and "The Wits' Coffee House." It was the meeting-place of the wits and literary men of the day, and was well known to ADDISON, who established his servant, Button, in another coffee house, which eventually, as Button's, became the headquarters of the Whig literati, as Will's had been of the Tory.

Will to Believe, The, and Other Essays in Popular Philosophy. A collection of ten essays with a preface (1896) by William JAMES.

Willy-Nicky Correspondence. The name popularly given to a series of telegrams between Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany and Czar Nicholas of Russia, sent in 1904 and 1907.

Wilmot. There are three of the name in Fatal Curiosity (1736), a tragedy by George Lillo, viz., old Wilmot, his wife Agnes, and their son, young Wilmot, supposed to have perished at sea. The young man, however, is not drowned, but goes to India, makes his fortune, and returns, unknown to any one of his friends. He goes in disguise to his parents, and deposits with them a casket. Curiosity induces Agnes to open it, and when she sees that it contains jewels, she and her husband resolve to murder the owner and appropriate the contents of the casket. No sooner have they committed the fatal deed than they discover it is their own son whom they have killed; whereupon the old man stabs first his wife and then himself.

Wilmot, John, Second Earl of Rochester. See ROCHESTER.

Wilmot, Miss Arabella. In Goldsmith's VICAR OF WAKEFIELD, a clergyman's daughter, beloved by George Primrose, eldest son of the vicar of Wakefield, whom she marries.

Wilmot Proviso. A famous clause introduced by David Wilmot as an amendment to a bill before the United States Congress of 1846, providing for the prohibition of slavery in all territory to be acquired from Mexico.

Wilson, Charles Morrow (1905-). American writer. Menwether Lewis (1934); Roots of America (1936); etc.

Wilson, Charles Thomson Rees (1869-). Scottish physicist who, with A. H. Compton, was awarded the Nobel prize for physics in 1927.

Wilson, Edmund (1895-). American literary critic and author, known for his interest in social questions, approached from a Marxist (see MARXISM) viewpoint, and for his personal and psychological studies of leading 20th-century literary figures. His books of criticism include Discordant Encounters (1926); Axel's Castle (1931); The Triple Thinkers (1938); The Boys in the Back Room (1941); The Wound and the Bow (1941). Among other works are I Thought of Daisy (1929), a novel; Poets, Farewell! (1929), poetry; The American Jitters: A Year of the Slump (1932), social studies; Travels in Two Democracies (1936), on the U.S. and Russia; This Room and This Gin and These Sandwiches (1937), a collection of plays; To the Finland Station (1940), studies of the leading figures in the development of the theories of COMMUNISM in the 19th and 20th centuries; Notebooks of Night (1942), poems and essays; Memoirs of Hecate County (1946), a collection of satirical sketches, arousing vigorous controversy.

Wilson, Edward Arthur (1886-). American illustrator with a particular liking for the sea. A few of the books illustrated by him are Iron Men and Wooden Ships, edited by Frank Shay (1924); The Magnificent Idler by Cameron Rogers (1926); James Shore's Daughter by Stephen Vincent Benét (1935); etc. Mr. Wilson has also written as well as illustrated The Pirate's Treasure (1926).

Wilson, Harry Leon (1867-1939). American novelist and playwright, widely known for his Bunker Bean (1913); RUGGLES OF RED GAP (1915); and Merton of the Movies (1922). The last two were made into successful moving pictures. Mr. Wilson was at one time married to Rose O'NEILL. His Ma Pettingill is a notable humorous creation.

Wilson, John (1595-1674). English composer and lutenist. Musician to Kings Charles I and Charles II. He may be the prototype of Jack Willson who appears in a stage direction in Much Ado About Nothing, in the folio edition (1623), where it is indicated that he sings the song Sigh No More, Ladies.

Wilson, John. Pseudonym Christopher North (1785-1854). Scottish author who contributed to Blackwood's Magazine most of the Noctes Ambrosianae. He was one of the first to appreciate Wordsworth's genius.

Wilson, Margaret (1882-). American novelist. Her first novel, The Able McLaughlins, won the Harper prize (1923) and the Pulitzer prize (1924). She has written other interesting American novels.

Wilson, Romer (1891-1930). English novelist known for such novels as Dragon's Blood (1926) and Latter-Day Symphony (1927). She also wrote a play and a life of Emily Brontë (1928). Wife of Edward J. O'Brien.

Wilson, William (1801-1860). Scottish bookdealer and poet who came to the U.S. in 1833. His collected poetry was published after his death (1869). His son, James Grant Wilson (1832-1914), was a bookdealer who helped John Fiske to edit Appleton's Cyclopaedia of American Biography in six volumes (1886-1889) and wrote on General Grant, Fitz-Greene Halleck, and The Poets and Poetry of Scotland.

Wilson, Thomas Woodrow (1856-1924). Twenty-eighth president of the U.S. (1913-1921). Took America into World War I "to make the world safe for democracy," and died from his efforts to establish an effectual LEAGUE OF NATIONS. Wrote A History of the American People (5 vols., 1902), etc.

Wiman, Dwight Deere (1895-). American theatrical producer, at first producing jointly with William A. Brady, Jr., and then independently. He has had numerous successes.

Wimble, Will. A character in Addison's SPECTATOR, simple, good-natured, and officious. Will Wimble in the flesh was said to be Thomas Morecroft of Dublin.

Wimbledon. A town in Surrey, England. Chiefly known for being the headquarters of the All-English Lawn Tennis Club, where the international matches for the Davis Cup have sometimes been played.

Winant, John Gilbert (1889-1947). Governor of New Hampshire (1925-1926; 1931-1934); chairman of the Social Security Board (1935-1937); United States ambassador to Great Britain (1941-1945). Suicide by shooting. Letter from Grosvenor Square (1947).

Winchell, Walter (1897-). At one time in vaudeville. A well-known columnist for the New York Mirror (since 1929) and radio commentator on the Jeigens Journal. He is a gossip writer of the more flamboyant sort having a "style" of his own.

Winchelsea, Anne Finch, Countess of (1661-1720). A friend of Alexander Pope. To Wordsworth some of her verse seemed pleasing. In one of her longer poems a couplet containing the words "Aromatick pain" in relation to a flower may have been the original of the famous phrase by Pope, "Die of a rose in aromatic pain."

Winckelman, Johann Joachim (1717-1768). German classical scholar who influenced Goethe through his understanding of Greek art. Walter Pater wrote an essay on him. He was the son of a German shoemaker. It was mainly through him that the conception of a Greek ideal of Apollonic calm and noble grandeur (edle Einfalt, stille Grösse) came to be generally accepted. It was Nietzsche who instilled into it the proper dose of Dionysian fury.

Windermere, Lady. See LADY WINDERMERE'S FAN.

to fight with windmills. To face imaginary adversaries, combat chimeras. The allusion is to the adventure of Don Quixote, who, when riding through the plains of Montiel, approaches thirty or forty windmills, which he declares to Sancho PANZA "were giants, two leagues in length or more." Striking his spurs into Rosinante, with his lance in rest, he drives at one of the "monsters dreadful as Typhoeus." The lance lodges in the sail, and the latter lifts both man and beast into the air. When the valiant knight and his steed fall they are both much injured, and Don Quixote declares that the enchanter Freston, "who carried off his library with all the books therein," had changed the giants into windmills "out of malice."

to have windmills in your head. To be full of fancies; to have "bees in your bonnet." Sancho Panza says—

Did I not tell your worship they were windmills? and who could have thought otherwise, except such as had windmills in their head?—Don Quixote: Bk. 1, Ch. viii.

Windrip, Berzelius (Buzz). In Sinclair Lewis' IT CAN'T HAPPEN HERE, a demagogic Vermont politician who, on his election to the presidency, sets up a Fascist dictatorship in the U.S., ruling by means of his gang, called the Minute Men. Windrip is eventually ousted from power by Lee Saranson, a former friend of his.

Windsor. The name of the royal family of Great Britain since 1917, replacing the original Hanover. Windsor Castle was a royal residence for some time, and Windsor Forest is the title and subject of a well-known poem by Alexander Pope. "The Widow of Windsor" is a name applied to Queen Victoria by Kipling in a poem of that name in his Barack-Room Ballads.

Windy City. Chicago. See under CITY.

Windy McPherson's Son. A novel by Sherwood ANDERSON (1916). The hero, Sam McPherson, grows up to hate his squalid home in Caxton, Iowa, where his father, a drunken boaster, is a completely dominating force.

Wine of Wizardry, A. A fantastic poem (1907) by George STERLING; depicting visions seen in a goblet of wine.

Winesburg, Ohio. A collection of short stories by Sherwood ANDERSON, published in 1919, his best-known work. The stories are psychological portraits of a group of residents of Winesburg, Ohio, a typical American small town of the period, who do not fit into the average pattern of life in the community. The stories are presented as they are noted by George Willard, a reporter. See also SPOON RIVER.

Wingfield-Stratford, Esmé Cecil (1882-). British author. Facing Reality (1922); The History of British Civilization (1933); New Minds for Old (1935); The Foundations of British Patriotism (1939); Crusade for Civilization (1940); Churchill: the Making of a Hero (1942); etc.

Wings of the Dove, The. A novel by Henry JAMES (1902). Kate Croy is secretly engaged to Merton Densher, but allows her wealthy aunt to plan her marriage to Lord Mark. When she discovers that her friend Milly Theale, an American heiress, is in love with Densher and also that Milly has not long to live, she encourages Densher to marry Milly. Lord Mark's discovery and malicious revelation of Densher's and Kate's engagement brings on Milly's death. She leaves Densher her money but he refuses to accept it, and as Kate will not marry him unless he does, their romance is at an end.

Winifred, St. See under SAINTS.

Winkelried, Arnold von. A national hero of Switzerland. In the battle of Sempach (1386) he rushed upon the pikes of the Austrians and gathered them together so that they pierced his own body. This effected a gap in the enemy lines through which the Swiss gained a victory. James Montgomery wrote his famous poem, The Patriot's Pass-Word, about this heroic event.

Winkie, Wee Willie. See WEE WILLIE WINKIE.

Winkle, Nathaniel. In Dickens' PICKWICK PAPERS, an M.P.C., that is, Member of the Pickwick Club, a young sportsman, considered by his companions to be a dead shot, a hunter, skater, etc. All these acquirements are, however, wholly imaginary. He marries Arabella Allen.

Winslow, Ola Elizabeth (1885?-). American teacher and biographer who received the Pulitzer prize in 1941 for her Jonathan Edwards.

Winslow, Thyra Samter (1893-). Popular American short-story writer, writing both of Arkansas, her native state, and of theater life in New York.

Winsor, Kathleen (1919-). Author of Forever Amber (1944), a best-selling historical novel (Restoration period) with a pronounced emphasis on sex.

Winter, John Keith (1906-). English novelist and dramatist who is well-known for his novel and play The Rats of Norway (1932). The Shining Hour (1934) was popular in the United States.

Winter, John Strange. One of the pen-names of Henrietta Eliza Stannard (1856-1911). She had written military stories under the pen-name of Violet Whyte and she took the name of John Strange Winter from one of these early stories. A book of hers called Boots' Baby (1885) sold two million copies in two years.

Winter, William (1836-1917). Dramatic critic of the New York Tribune (1865-1909). At one time considered the chief critic of New York. He wrote theatrical reminiscences of the old New York theater in Other Days (1908) and Old Friends (1909). His Shakespeare on the Stage (2 vols.; 1911, 1915), which examines the various interpretations by famous actors of different parts in the plays of Shakespeare, is of value.

Winterblossom, Mr. Philip. In Scott's novel, St. RONAN'S WELL, "the man of taste," on the managing committee at the Spa.

Winterich, John Tracy (1891-). American bibliophile who, during World War I, was on the staff of Stars and Stripes and received the Purple Heart Medal. After the war he was for fifteen years managing editor of the American Legion Monthly, joined PM in 1940, worked for the Bureau of Public Relations, and became managing editor of The Saturday Review of Literature. He is an authority on first editions and book collecting. Twenty-three Books (1939); Another Day, Another Dollar (autobiographical; 1947), etc.

Winters, Arthur Yvor (1900–). American literary critic and poet, known for the classical orientation of both his verse and critical studies, in the latter of which he attacks the "advanced" and "experimental" writers of the 20th century. His works include The Immobile Wind (1921), The Bare Hills (1927), The Proof (1930), The Journey (1931), Before Disaster (1934), and Poems (1940), all books of poetry; Primitivism and Decadence (1937) and Maule's Curse (1938), criticism.

Winterset. A verse drama by Maxwell ANDERSON (1935), based on the SACCO-VANZETTI case. It deals with the attempts of Mio, the son of Romagna, an Italian radical who was executed for a murder he did not commit, to avenge the death of his father. A wanderer about the country, he comes to New York, meets and falls in love with Miriamne, a similarly lonely young girl, and at least meets the actual murderer for whose crime Romagna suffered—a gangster named Trock. Mio is shot by Trock's gang, and Miriamne too is killed. Filmed, with Burgess Meredith.

Winter's Tale, The. One of the last of SHAKESPEARE's plays (produced 1611; printed 1623). It is founded on Greene's Pandosto, The Triumph of Time (1588), which was written round an actual incident that occurred in the Bohemian and Polish courts in the late 14th century.

In the play Polixenes, King of Bohemia, is invited to Sicily by King Leontes, and unwittingly excites the jealousy of his friend because he prolongs his stay at the entreaty of Queen Hermione. Leontes orders Camillo to poison the royal guest, but instead of doing so, Camillo flees with him to Bohemia. The King now casts Hermione into prison and orders her infant daughter exposed on a desert shore which turns out to be "the seacoast of Bohemia." In time Florizel, the son and heir of Polixenes, falls in love with Perdita, the lost daughter of Leontes. Polixenes forbids the match, and the young lovers, under the charge of Camillo, flee to Sicily. Polixenes follows the fugitives, the mystery of Perdita is cleared up, the lovers are married and the two kings resume their friendship. Hermione, whom Leontes had long believed dead, is introduced as a statue that turns into the living Queen.

Winthrop, John (1588–1649). Governor of the Massachusetts Bay Colony. He did not believe in democracy, bringing biblical proof to bear that there was no warrant for it as there was "no such government in Israel." He stirred up the people of New England and was impeached by the colonists. He made, however, a speech on liberty which satisfied them, and was re-elected Governor every year. His Journal, partly published in 1790, appeared in full as The History of New England (2 vols.; 1825–1826). He is portrayed in THE SCARLET LETTER by Nathaniel Hawthorne and in other novels.

Winthrop, Theodore (1828–1861). Connecticut novelist who was killed in the Civil War. His books were published after his death. One of his best is a description of a journey to the Northwest and later to Panama, The Canoe and the Saddle (1863).

Winwar, Frances. Translated from the original Francesca Vinciguerra (1900–). Italian-born American biographer and novelist. Her Poor Splendid Wings (1933) won the Atlantic prize. This was followed by The Romantic Rebels (1935), concerning Keats, Shelley, and Byron; Oscar Wilde and the Yellow Nineties (1940); and The Life of the Heart (1946), about George Sand and her times. Her work, though highly colored, is usually accurate. Her style has great vigor and life.

Wireless. A famous short story by Rudyard KIPLING.

Wisdom Tooth, The. A fantasy (1926) by Marc CONNELLY.

Wise, John (1652–1725). American clergyman of New England, known for his opposition to the strict Calvinist doctrine of the "elect" (see CALVINISM) and for his espousal of the cause of democracy and equality a number of years before the American Revolution. His two famous works are The Church's Quarrel Espoused (1710), an attack in satire on a proposal by the MATHERS to set up a centralized control of the New England churches; and A Vindication of the Government of New England Churches (1717), an assertion of the doctrine of the natural rights of mankind, which Wise was the first American to employ in a plea for political democracy. In 1687 he attracted attention by leading his congregation in a refusal to pay taxes imposed on them by Governor Andros, and was arrested and imprisoned. His writings were widely read in the days of the Revolution.

Wise, Stephen Samuel (1872–). American rabbi, born in Budapest, one of the founders of the Zionist Organization of America. He founded also the liberal Jewish Institute of Religion. He drafted pioneer child-labor and juvenile court laws for the State of Oregon. As president of the American and World Jewish Congress he has done much for the relief of war victims.

Wise, Thomas James (1859-1937). English bibliographer who also indulged himself in literary forgery. Cf. Wilfred Partington, Forging Ahead: The True Story of the Upward Progress of Thomas James Wise (1939).

Wistar, Caspar (1761-1818). Famous Philadelphia physician, son of a German glass manufacturer. He taught at the University of Pennsylvania and wrote one of the first American textbooks on anatomy. The plant wistaria was named after him in 1818. His grandnephew founded the Wistar Institute of Anatomy and Biology. His grandniece, Sarah Wister (1761-1804), is the author of a valuable Journal of Life in Philadelphia. One of her descendants was Owen Wister.

Wister, Owen (1860-1938). American novelist whose best-known book is THE VIRGINIAN (1902), which has several times been made into a moving picture. He wrote of the West, Wyoming in particular, which he had known much as Theodore Roosevelt knew it in his early days. See also under WISTAR.

witch (A.S. wiccian, "to practice sorcery"). A sorceress. The typical witch is usually pictured as an old hag. There are many celebrated witches of history and legend, beginning perhaps with the Witch of Endor, who according to the Biblical narrative, called up the prophet Samuel from the dead to answer King Saul's questions concerning the fateful battle in which he would meet his death. The most famous witches in literature are the Three Weird Sisters whose prophecies concerning MACBETH started him on his ambitious and tragic course. One of Shelley's well known poems is entitled The Witch of Atlas.

Pope Innocent VIII issued the celebrated bull Summis Desiderantes in 1484, directing inquisitors and others to put to death all practitioners of witchcraft and other diabolical arts, and it has been computed that as many as nine millions of persons suffered death for witchcraft since that date. In the U.S., witches in Salem, Mass., were hanged or pressed to death. No witch was ever burned, in spite of frequent assertions to that effect.

witches' Sabbath. The muster at nighttime of witches and demons to concoct mischief. The witch first anointed her feet and shoulders with the fat of a murdered babe, then mounting a broomstick, distaff, or rake, made her exit by the chimney, and rode through the air to the place of rendezvous. The assembled witches feasted together, and concluded with a dance, in which they all turned their backs to each other. JAMES JOYCE'S ULYSSES and THOMAS MANN'S MAGIC MOUNTAIN contain scenes based on the tradition of the witches' Sabbath. Hawthorne's Young Goodman Brown is a famous short story about a New England witches' Sabbath.

Witching Hour, The. A play by Augustus THOMAS (Am., 1907), dealing with the occult. Because of his mysterious powers, Jack Brookfield, a professional gambler who is always in luck, is able to clear the young Clay Whipple from a murder charge. Clay, who is guilty of accidental but not intentional manslaughter, is in love with Jack's niece, Viola Campbell. In order to free him, Jack brings to light—through hypnotic powers only—a serious and authentic charge against Frank Hardmuth, the assistant district attorney. At the end of the play Jack gives up gambling and everything connected with the occult.

witenagemot. A yearly meeting of all the freemen of a tribe or of a state among the Norse conquerors of Britain. It became a court for the trial of principal offenses and for the election of rulers. With the conquest of England by William the Conqueror in 1066 this assemblage went out of existence.

Wither, George (1588-1667). English poet, a friend of William BROWNE, with whom he was associated in the small group of poets at the beginning of the 17th century, who wrote in the pastoral style of Edmund SPENSER. His verse publications include The Shepherd's Pipe (1614), a collection of eclogues to which Browne and John Davies of Hereford also contributed; Shepherd's Hunting (1615); Fidelia (1615); Fair Virtue (1622). He also wrote Abuses Stript and Whipt, a book of satires for the publication of which he was sentenced to prison, several volumes of hymns and psalms, and a number of pamphlets on questions of religious and political controversy of the time. Wither was of strong Puritan sympathies and during the Civil War was a captain in the Parliamentary army. It is said that on one occasion he was saved from hanging by the Royalists by the plea by Sir John DENHAM that "whilst [Wither] lived, he [Denham] should not be the worst poet in England."

Witherspoon. A brave and loyal scout in Simms' MELlichAMPE, considered one of his few well-rounded characters.

With Fire and Sword. The first of a trilogy of historic novels (1890-1893) by SIENKIEWICZ, dealing with the history of Poland from 1648 to the time of Yan III. With Fire and Sword has as its subject the struggle between Russia and Poland. In the second novel, The Deluge, the subjects treated are the settlement of the Teutonic Knights in Prussia, the union of Lithuania and Poland with Russia brought about by the marriage of a Lithuanian prince and Polish princess, and the conflict between Poland and Sweden in 1665. Pan Michael, the third novel of the series, continues and concludes the history of Poland as a separate nation of former centuries.

Within a Budding Grove. The second book of Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST, an English translation (1924) of A l'Ombre de Jeunes Filles en Fleurs (1918). It describes a period spent by the narrator Marcel in his adolescence at the seashore resort of Balbec, where for the first time he meets ALBERTINE, one of a group of young girls there.

Within the Gates. A drama by Sean O'CASEY (1933), the action of which takes place in a London park. A Bishop, wishing to learn more of the common people, comes to the park with his sister and meets a variety of the persons who usually inhabit its precincts, including Two Park Chair Attendants, an Atheist, a Policewoman, a Young Man in Plus-Fours, two Nursemaids, a Guardsman, two Evangelists, a Young Whore, a Young Salvation Army Officer, a group of Down-and-Outs, and others. The Bishop hears of their bitternesses and their dreams, their frustrations, their weaknesses, and their unhappinesses, and eventually the Young Whore is revealed to be his own daughter by a youthful affair with a woman of inferior social station. The girl dies, affirming her faith in life, and the Bishop is overcome with shame at the realization of his past smugness and his own sin. There are numerous references to social injustice, poverty, morality, and religion throughout, and frequent songs and chants by single characters and a chorus.

Wititterly, Mr. Henry. In Dickens' NICHOLAS Nickleby, an important gentleman, thirty-eight years of age, of rather plebeian countenance, with very light hair. He boasts everlastingly of his grand friends.

Mrs. Wititterly (Julia). Wife of Mr. Wititterly of Cadogan Place, Sloane Street, London; a faded lady living in a faded house. She calls her page Alphonse, "although he has the face and figure of Bill." Mrs. Wititterly toadies to the aristocracy, and, like her husband, boasts of her grand connections and friends.

Virginia Woolf, considered one of the most important novelists of the 20th century, was the daughter of Sir Leslie STEPHEN, a well-known biographer and literary critic, and was related to a number of the most distinguished scholarly families in England, such as the DARWINS, the SYMONDSES, and the STRACHEYS. She was raised in an atmosphere of literature and learning, receiving her education at home and as a young girl made the acquaintance of numerous outstanding authors of the day. The Bloomsbury Group had its inception in the gatherings of a group of former Cambridge University students and their friends which were held at the home of Virginia and her sister Vanessa. The novelist and her husband, Leonard WOOLF, an author, editor, and literary critic, together founded the Hogarth Press, a successful publishing house, known for its limited editions of the works of a number of leading 20th-century English writers, which began as a single hand-press. Depressed at the vision of the world about her at war (World War II), Mrs. Woolf committed suicide by drowning in 1941. For a study of her work, cf. Virginia Woolf, by David Daiches.

Woolf, Leonard Sidney (1880-). English publicist and writer, husband of Virginia WOOLF. Editor of the International Review; Contemporary Review; Political Quarterly, and a contributor to the New Statesman; literary editor of the Nation (1923-1930). In 1917 he and his wife founded the Hogarth Press.

Woollcott, Alexander Humphreys (1887-1943). American literary and dramatic critic and journalist, best known for his whimsical and sentimental essays and radio talks expressing his opinions on a variety of subjects, including popular comedians and forgotten murder cases. His books include Shouts and Murmurs (1922); Enchanted Aisles (1924); Going to Pieces (1928); and While Rome Burns (1934). He at one time wrote a column for THE NEW YORKER, made lecture tours, and acted on the stage and screen. A notable appearance was in The Man Who Came to Dinner (1939), a satirical comedy by George S. Kaufman and Moss Hart, in which Woollcott played the leading role, portraying a character suggested by his own personality. His death came as the result of a heart-attack while he was making a radio broadcast. His biography, A. Woollcott, His Life and his World, by Samuel Hopkins Adams, was published in 1945. Attempts at Woollcottian characterizations of Woollcott include: "He had the memory of a pachyderm and a pianola's loyalty to the same tune."—"He can be described as the man who couldn't write fiction but who did."—"He was as fascinated by mortals as he was indifferent to the immortals."

Woolley, Mary Emma (1863-1947). American educator; president of Mt. Holyoke College (1900-1937). President Hoover appointed her U.S. delegate to the Disarmament Conference (1933).

Wordsworth, William (1770-1850). English poet, with his friend S. T. COLERIDGE one of the early leaders of ROMANTICISM in England, known for his worship of nature, his humanitarianism, his early sympathy with democratic liberalism, his interest in the lives, daily pursuits, and common speech of lowly people, and his Platonistically tinged pantheism. He was particularly interested in instituting a reform in poetic diction which would employ "a selection of language really used by men," as he proposes in his famous Preface to LYRICAL BALLADS, and many of his best-known poems make use of what the poet regarded as this "real" language. In later times these came to be considered sentimental and almost comically prosaic, failing in their objective.

Wordsworth's most ambitious works are The Prelude (published in 1850) and the uncompleted The Recluse, long poems autobiographical in character, and The Excursion (1814), a long "philosophical" poem. An Evening Walk and Descriptive Sketches were his earliest works, published in 1793; the bulk of his best-known poetry is contained in Lyrical Ballads (1798), which he published jointly with Coleridge. Among well-known shorter poems of Wordsworth's are Alice Fell; MICHAEL; SIMON LEE; the Lucy poems; RESOLUTION AND INDEPENDENCE; The Solitary Reaper; PETER BELL; The Idiot Boy; I Wandered Lonely as a Cloud; Elegiac Stanzas; Nuns Fret Not; The World Is Too Much With Us; Tintern Abbey; ODE ON INTIMATIONS OF IMMORTALITY.

In his early youth, Wordsworth was influenced by the ideas of J. J. ROUSSEAU and William GODWIN and was an enthusiast for the French Revolution. He stayed in France for a while in 1792 and had a love affair with Annette VALLON, evidence of which was uncovered only in the 20th century. As he grew older, he became increasingly conservative in his political views and orthodox in his religion, living peacefully in the Lake Country of northern England. In 1843 he was appointed Poet Laureate, succeeding Robert SOUTHEY. He is buried in the churchyard at Grasmere.

Dorothy Wordsworth (1771-1855), William's sister, was the devoted and constant companion of the poet during most of his life, accompanying him and Coleridge on their tour of Germany just after the publication of Lyrical Ballads and keeping house for him while he wrote. She had a keen mind and eye and was credited by her brother with the improvement of his observation of nature on their regular walks. Her journals and letters became widely known on their publication in the 20th century. Best edition is by Ernest de Selincourt (1942).

Work, Henry Clay (1832-1884). American song writer, author of the temperance song,

Father, dear father, come home with me now,
The clock in the steeple strikes one . . .

Work in Progress. Title under which James Joyce's FINNEGANS WAKE was known until its publication. From time to time the following sections of the work were published separately in the magazine TRANSITION or in book form: Anna Livia Plurabelle; Tales Told by Shem and Shaun; Haveth Childers Everywhere; The Mime of Mick, Nick, and the Maggies; Storiella As She Is Syung.

Works and Days. A long poem by HESIOD. It is a sort of "farmer's almanac" of ancient Greece, and contains directions and advice concerning labor on the farm.

World. A New York newspaper, founded in 1866 as a religious penny daily. Bought by Joseph PULITZER in 1883, it became a crusading newspaper. OUTCAULT started in it a colored comic strip called Hogan's Alley, featuring the Yellow Kid, a name which is said to have given rise to the phrase "yellow journalism." During the Spanish-American War the paper was as sensational as the HEARST papers. In 1887 Pulitzer had founded the Evening World. From 1911, his son, Ralph Pulitzer, became the head of the Press Publishing Co., publishers of the New York World and the New York Evening World. Now the World's most brilliant period began. It accumulated as columnists Walter LIPPMANN, Franklin P. ADAMS, Heywood BROWN, etc., and Alexander WOOLLCOTT as dramatic critic. The passing of the World in 1931 was a newspaper tragedy. It was sold to the Scripps-Howard chain, combined with the New York Telegram, and was transformed into an evening paper, the New York World-Telegram. The World Almanac and Book of Facts, now published by the New York World-Telegram, was originated in 1886.

World, The. A famous mystic poem by Henry VAUGHAN (1650), which begins:

I saw Eternity the other night,
Like a great ring of pure and endless light,
All calm, as it was bright.

World Court. The Permanent Court of International Justice which was opened at The Hague (February 15, 1922) by the League of Nations. It had fifteen judges who served for nine years. The court sat on all cases which states or members of the League brought before it and also on other matters provided for in international treaties and conventions. Before World War II, Germany, Italy, and Japan had handed in their resignations. At the outbreak of World War II, the World Court ceased.

Worthies, the Nine. Nine heroes—three from the Bible, three from the classics, and three from romance—who were frequently bracketed together as in the burlesque Pageant of the Nine Worthies in Shakespeare's LOVE'S LABOR'S LOST. They are: Joshua, David, and Judas Maccabaeus; Hector, Alexander, and Julius Caesar; Arthur, Charlemagne, and Godfrey of Bouillon.

Nine worthies were they called, of different rites—
Three Jews, three pagans, and three Christian knights Dryden, The Flower and the Leaf.

the Nine Worthies of London. A kind of chronicle-history in mixed verse and prose of nine prominent citizens of London, published in 1592 by Richard Johnson, author also of The Seven Champions of Christendom. His "Worthies" are:

Sir William Walworth, who stabbed Wat TYLER, the rebel, and was twice Lord Mayor (1374, 1380).

Sir Henry Pritchard, who (in 1356), feasted Edward III (with 5,000 followers), Edward the Black Prince, John, King of Austria, the King of Cyprus, and David, King of Scotland.

Sir William Sevenoake, who fought with the Dauphin of France and built twenty almshouses and a free school (1418).

Sir Thomas White, merchant tailor, who, in 1553, kept the citizens loyal to Queen Mary during Wyatt's rebellion.

Sir John Bonham, entrusted with a valuable cargo for the Danish market, and made commander of the army raised to stop the progress of the great Solyman.

Christopher Coker. Famous at the siege of Bordeaux, and companion of the Black Prince when he helped Don Pedro to the throne of Castile.

Sir John Hawkwood. One of the Black Prince's knights, and immortalized in Italian history as Giovanni Acuti Cavaliero.

Sir Hugh Caverley. Famous for ridding Poland of a monstrous bear.

Sir Henry Maleverer, generally called Henry of Cornhill, who lived in the reign of Henry IV. He was a crusader, and became the guardian of "Jacob's well."

The names of Sir Richard Whittington and Sir Thomas Gresham are "conspicuous by their absence."

Wotan. The Old High German form of ODIN, chief of the Scandinavian gods. This is the form used in the operas of Wagner's RING

DES NIBELUNGEN, in which Wotan the Mighty plays a leading rôle.

Wotton, Sir Henry (1568-1639). English diplomat and poet. Ambassador to Venice (1604-1624); provost of Eton (1624-1639); etc. His poetry contains some famous lyrics. Izaak Walton wrote his Life (1670). Logan Pearsall Smith edited his Life and Letters (1907). Author of poem "On his Mistress, the Queen of Bohemia" and the statement that "An Ambassador is an honest man, sent to lie abroad for the good of his country."

Wrangel, Dr. The hero of Ibsen's drama THE LADY FROM THE SEA.

Wrangel, Baron Ferdinand Petrovich von (1794-1870). Russian explorer, who commanded an expedition to the polar regions (1820) and was made governor general of Alaska (1829-1834). He was against the sale of Alaska to the U.S. Wrangel Island was named in his honor.

Wrangel, Baron Pётr Nikolaevich (1878-1928). Russian Czarist general, allied with Denikin, who lost Sevastopol (1920). Fled to Yugoslavia. Settled (1926) in Brussels where he died as an engineer.

wrangler. The Cambridge term for one who has obtained a place in the highest class of the mathematical tripos. The first man used to be termed the senior wrangler, and the rest were arranged according to respective merit, but since 1909 this arrangement has been dropped and no one now can claim the title of senior wrangler.

Wrayburn, Eugene. In Dickens' novel OUR MUTUAL FRIEND, barrister-at-law; an indolent, idle, moody, whimsical young man, who loves Lizzie Hexam. After he is nearly killed by Bradley Headstone, he reforms, and marries Lizzie, who saved his life.

Wreck of the Hesperus, The. A famous ballad by Henry W. LONGFELLOW, published (1841) in Ballads and Other Poems.

Wren, Sir Christopher (1632-1723). The most famous of England's architects. He submitted plans for rebuilding London after the Great Fire (1666) and reconstructed St. Paul's Cathedral (1675-1716). He designed fifty-two churches and many other buildings in London as well as the additions to Kensington and Hampton Court Palace. He is buried in St. Paul's Cathedral.

Wren, Jenny. A character in Dickens' novel OUR MUTUAL FRIEND, whose real name is Fanny Cleaver. She is a dolls' dressmaker, and the friend of Lizzie Hexam, who at one time lodged with her. Jenny is a little, deformed girl, with a sharp shrewd face, and beautiful golden hair. She supports herself and her drunken father, whom she reproves as a mother might reprove a child. "Oh," she cries to him, pointing her little finger, "you bad old boy! Oh, you naughty, wicked creature! What do you mean by it?"

Wren, Percival Christopher (1885-1941). English novelist, soldier, and traveler, for many years a British government official in India. He is best known for his popular adventure novels and stories dealing with life in the French Foreign Legion, based on his own experiences in that organization. These include The Wages of Virtue (1916); Stepsons of France (1917), a collection of short stories; Beau Geste (1924), his best-known book, a best-seller, later dramatized on stage and screen; Beau Sabreur (1926), Beau Ideal (1928), and Good Gestes (1929), sequels to Beau Geste; Soldiers of Misfortune (1929) and its sequel, Valiant Dust (1931); Beggars' Horses (1934); The Desert Heritage (1935); Cardboard Castle (1938); The Dark Woman (1943).

Wright, Frank Lloyd (1869-). Distinguished American architect; exponent of the theory that "form should follow function," and creator of a strikingly individualistic style, closely followed and studied by young architects all over the globe. Some of his notable works include his own residence "Taliesin" in Spring Green, Wisconsin (1911); the Imperial Hotel at Tokyo, Japan (1916); the Millard House at Pasadena, California (1927); and private homes in and near Chicago. Author of Experimenting with Human Lives (1923); Modern Architecture (1931); etc.

Wright, Harold Bell (1872-1944). American Christian-Church minister (1897-1908) and novelist, whose The Shepherd of the Hills (1907) was a best seller. His The Winning of Barbara Worth (1911) sold over a million and a half copies. His novels have a strong religious bias, and castigate the fashionable world.

Wright, Mabel Osgood (1859-1934). American writer of nature books, as Birdcraft, a field book of New England birds (1895); The Flowers and Ferns in Their Haunts (1901); etc.

Wright, Richard (1908-). American Negro novelist and short-story writer, known for his fictional studies of race problems and of the position of the Negro in the U.S. in the 20th century. Uncle Tom's Children (1938 and 1940), a collection of short stories, and NATIVE SON (1940), a novel later dramatized for the theater, are among his published works. On the publication of Native Son, Wright was hailed by a number of critics as an extremely promising American author.

Wright, Richardson Little (1886-). American author, principally known as editor of House and Garden magazine and a writer on gardening in America. He has also published some books on peculiar American habits, as Hawkers and Walkers in Early America (1927) and Grandfather Was Queer (1939).

Wulstan, St. See under SAINTS.

Wurdemann, Audrey May (1911-). American poet. She is a descendant on her mother's side of Harriet WESTBROOK, a great-great-granddaughter of SHELLEY, and the wife of Joseph AUSLANDER. She was born in Seattle, Washington, and was the protégé of George STERLING. She won the Pulitzer prize for poetry with Bright Ambush (1935), the youngest poet ever to receive the prize.

Wuthering Heights. A novel by Emily BRONTE (1847). The hero is a strange, uncouth, passionate creature named Heathcliff, who grows up with Hindley and Catherine Earnshaw in their lonely moorland home. His very love is terrifying, and when Catherine, though she returns his love, marries Edgar Linton, his thwarted passion finds outlet against the Lintons and Earnshaws of his own and the succeeding generation.

Wuyck's Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Wyatt or Wyat, Sir Thomas (1503?-1542). English poet, known for his production of the first sonnets in English in his translations of PETRARCH and for his popularization of other Italian and French verse-forms among the English writers of the 16th century. Wyatt was influenced by Serafino dell' Aquila, Pietro Aretino, Luigi Alamanni, Sannazaro, and other French and Italian poets of the time. His own poetry is characterized by extreme irregularity of rhythm, which 19th-century scholars regarded as evidence of crudity of technique. In the 20th century, however, critics began to point out that this irregularity was important in the total effect of the poems, comparing it with the dramatic rhythm of John DUNNE; they also praised the vigor and authentic intensity of feeling embodied in Wyatt's best poems. His work appeared in several anthologies of his time, as Seven Penitential Psalms (1549), a collection of religious poetry in imitation of a similar undertaking by Aretino; The Court of Venus (1542); and TOTTIEL's MISCELLANY (1557).

Wyatt held a number of official positions under Henry VIII, including those of member of the Privy Council, ambassador to Spain, Member of Parliament, and Commander of the Fleet. During his career he was twice imprisoned: once at the time of the fall of Anne Boleyn, whose lover he was suspected of being; and again in 1541, during his ambassadorship to Spain, when he was charged with treason, although he was later able to clear himself. It was during an official trip to Italy in 1527 that he became acquainted with the work of the Italian love-poets. He was a friend of the Earl of SURREY and had a strong influence on the writing of the younger man; together, Wyatt and Surrey are credited as the founders of the school of English lyric poetry which flourished during the remainder of the 16th century and into the 17th.

Wycherley, William (1640-1716). English playwright of the Restoration period, known for his savage satire, his cynicism, and his realism, often censured for his licentiousness. His plays include Love in a Wood, or St. James's Park (1671); The Gentleman Dancing-Master (1671); The Country Wife (1673), his best-known work; The Plain Dealer (see MANLY; 1674), published in 1677.

Wycliffite. A LOLLARD, a follower of John Wyclif (d. 1384), the religious reformer, called "The Morning Star of the Reformation." He denied transubstantiation, condemned monasticism, and taught that all ecclesiastical and secular authority is derived from God and is forfeited by one who is living in mortal sin.

Wyclif's Bible. See BIBLE, THE ENGLISH.

Wyeth, Nathaniel (1802-1856). A merchant of Boston who is a character in Adventures of Captain Bonneville by Washington Irving. Wyeth made several expeditions to Oregon and in 1899 his Correspondence and Journals were published. He is an ancestor of the American painter Newell Convers WYETH.

Wyeth, Newell Convers (1882-1945). American illustrator and painter, widely known for his illustrations in color of the novels of Robert Louis Stevenson, to Robin Hood, the Odyssey, etc. In all, he illustrated some seventy juvenile classics. He also did murals for the National Episcopal Cathedral in Washington, D.C.; the Hubbard Memorial Building of the National Geographic Society; the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. Building in New York City; etc. Killed in an automobile accident at a railroad crossing.

Wykehamist. Any member, past or present, of Winchester College in England, from the founder William of Wykeham (1324-1404). Some of the most famous Wykehamists have been Sir Henry Wotton, Sir Thomas Browne, William Collins, Sidney Smith, Anthony Trollope, and Lionel Johnson. (See these names).

Wylie, Elinor Morton, née Hoyt (1885-1928). American poet, known for the precise and vivid imagery of her lyrics and the intensity and subtle analysis of emotions in her later love poems. Her poetry, in general influenced by medieval Scotch and English ballads and the English Elizabethan and METAPHYSICAL POETS, is considered among the best written by women in the 20th century. Her prose, less well known than her verse, is marked by fantasy, wit and irony, skill in the drawing of character, and extreme delicacy and precision of style. Her books include Nets to Catch the Wind (1921), Black Armor (1923), Trivial Breath (1928), and Angels and Earthly Creatures (1928), poetry; Jennifer Lorn (1923), The Venetian Glass Nephew (1925), The Orphan Angel (1926), and Mr. Hodge and Mr. Hazard (1928), novels; Collected Poems (1932); Collected Prose (1933). Her reputation rests mainly on Angels and Earthly Creatures. P. B. SHELLEY was her literary idol. Her third husband was William Rose BENÉT.

Wylie, Ida Alexa Ross (1885-). British writer who has written over two hundred short stories and over fifteen novels. One of her best novels is Towards Morning (1920). Her writing concerning Germany is based on an eight years' stay there. My Life with George (1940) is autobiography.

Wylie, Maggie. The heroine of Barrie's play WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS.

Wylie, Philip (1902-). American writer of popular fiction and biting satire, as A Generation of Vipers (1944). His stories of big game fishing have appeared in The Saturday Evening Post. The most peculiar of his works is Finnley Wren (1934). Frequently attacks "Moms," or excessively maternal American women.

Wyndham, George (1863-1913). English aristocrat who pursued a distinguished political career and as Secretary of Ireland (1900) was instrumental in getting the Wyndham Land Act passed which benefited both the tenants and the landlords. As a writer he was a friend of Wilfred Blunt, Chesterton, and Henley. He wrote a few essays concerning romantic literature, and edited North's version of Plutarch's Lives (1895-1896) and Shakespeare's poems (1898).

Wynn, Ed. Real name Isaiah Edwin Leopold (1886-). American comedian who was the first to put on the air the entire production of a musical comedy. Over the radio he became famous as "the Fire Chief." His nickname in musical comedy has been "the Perfect Fool." His son, Keenan Wynn, is a well-known film comedian.

Wynne, Hugh, see HUGH WYNNE.

Wyoming Massacre. The massacre in the famous Wyoming valley of a Susquehanna branch where Wilkes-Barré is situated, of American settlers by Iroquois fighting on the side of the Tories (July, 1778). A narrative poem by the English poet Thomas Campbell (1809), Gertrude of Wyoming, tells of this event in a vein of exaggeration.

X

Xanadu. A city mentioned by COLERIDGE in his KUBLA KHAN.

Xanthus (Gr., "reddish yellow"). Achilles' wonderful horse, brother of Balios, Achilles' other horse, and offspring of Zephyrus and the harpy Podarge. Being chid by his master for leaving Patroclus on the field of battle, Xanthus turned his head reproachfully, and told ACHILLES that he also would soon be numbered with the dead, not from any fault of his horse, but by the decree of inexorable destiny (Iliad, xix). Cf. Numb. xxii. 28-30. Xanthus is also the ancient name of the Scamander and of a city on its banks.

Xantippe. Wife of the philosopher SOCRATES. Her bad temper shown toward her husband has rendered her name proverbial for a conjugal scold.

Be she as foul as was Florentius' love,
As old as Sibyl, and as curst and shrewd
As Socrates' Xanthippe, or a worse,
She moves me not.

Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew. i. 2.

Xavier, St. Francis (1506-1552). Jesuit missionary, the "Apostle of the Indies." As a student in Paris he became a friend of Ignatius of Loyola and helped him establish the Society of Jesus (1534). He worked in Japan for several years and founded a mission in China. Canonized, together with his master and friend, in 1622.

Xenophon (445-391 B.C.). Greek historian, famous for his ANABASIS.

Xerxes. A Greek way of writing the Persian Ksathra or Kshatra. Xerxes I, the great Xerxes, is identical with the AHASUERUS of the Bible.

When Xerxes invaded Greece, he constructed a pontoon bridge across the Dardanelles, which was swept away by the force of the waves. This so enraged the Persian despot that he "inflicted three hundred lashes on the rebellious sea, and cast chains of iron across it." This story is probably a Greek myth, founded on the peculiar construction of Xerxes' second bridge, which consisted of three hundred boats, lashed by iron chains to two ships serving as supporters. Another story told of him is that when he reviewed his enormous army before starting for Greece, he wept at the thought of the slaughter about to take place. "Of all this multitude, who shall say how many will return?"

Xingu and Other Stories. A collection of eight stories (1916) by Edith WHARTON. Xingu is a river in Brazil.

X Y Z Correspondence. To arbitrate with France over an alliance, President Adams sent PINCKNEY, John MARSHALL, and Elbridge GERRY abroad on a special mission (1797). In their correspondence with Washington they reported that three French agents (referred to as X, Y, and Z; hence the phrase X Y Z Correspondence) had attempted to bribe them. The disclosure of the correspondence (1798) caused considerable excitement in both countries involved.

Yahoo. Swift's name, in GULLIVER'S TRAVELS, for brutes with human forms and vicious propensities. They are subject to the Houyhnhnms, the horses with human reason. Hence the word is applied to coarse, brutish or degraded persons.

Yahweh, see JEHOVAH.

Yama. The god of the dead in Hindu mythology, the Hindu PLUTO. The story is that he was the first mortal to die and so was made a god. He is of a green color, four-armed, with eyes inflamed, and sits on a buffalo.

Yamamoto, Isoroku (1884-1943). Japanese admiral. Commander in chief of the 1st fleet (from 1939) and of the combined fleet (from 1941). Killed in action.

Yamashita, Tomoyuki (1885-1946). Japanese general. Conducted the Malayan campaign and received the surrender of Singapore (1942); commanded the Japanese campaign in the Philippines, capturing Bataan and Corregidor (1942). In 1945 he was found guilty of war crimes by a military court sitting in Manila, sentenced to death, and executed the following spring.

Yanetta. In Brieux's RED ROBE, the wife of Etchepars, the accused peasant.

Yank. The "HAIRY APE" in Eugene O'Neill's drama of that title.

Yank. The magazine of the G.I.s during World War II.

Yankee. Properly, a New Englander or one of New England stock, but extended to mean, first, an inhabitant of the Northern as apart from the Southern United States, and later to comprise all United States citizens. In the South, often referred to as "Damyankees."

It is generally taken to be a North American Indian corruption of English (or of Fr. Anglais). The story is that in 1713 one Jonathan Hastings, a farmer of Cambridge, Massachusetts, used the word as a puffing epithet, meaning genuine, what cannot be surpassed, etc.; as, a "Yankee horse," "Yankee cider," and so on. The students at Harvard, catching up the term, called Hastings, "Yankee Jonathan." It soon spread, and became the jocose pet name of the New Englander.

Yankee Doodle. A quasi-national air of the United States, the doggerel words of which are said to have been written by Dr. Shuckburgh, a surgeon in Lord Amherst's army during the French and Indian war of 1755.

The origin of the tune is disputed. Some say that it comes from a medieval church service, others that it was composed in England in Cromwell's time, others that it was played by the Hessian troops during the American Revolution and adopted by the revolutionaries in mockery. A Dutch origin has also been suggested. The first verse reads:

Yankee Doodle went to town
A-riding on a pony,
Stuck a feather in his hat
And called it macaroni.

Yankees. In American baseball parlance, the nickname of the New York Americans. See under BASEBALL TEAMS.

Yarico. See INKLE AND YARICO.

Yarmolinsky, Avrahm (1890-). Russian-born chief of the Slavonic division in the New York Public Library (since 1918); author of many books on Russian literature. He and his wife, Babette DEUTSCH, have translated together Modern Russian Poetry (1921) and Contemporary German Poetry (1923).

Yarrow. The Braes of Yarrow is the title of an old Scotch ballad. The Yarrow is a river in Scotland. Scott and Hogg have celebrated its legends, and Wordsworth wrote a poem called Yarrow Revisited (1835).

Yates, Edmund Hodgson (1831-1894). English writer whose differences with Thackeray (1858) caused his dismissal from the Garrick Club. This in turn caused a long quarrel between Charles Dickens and Thackeray, which the latter, toward the end of his life, took measures to terminate. As editor of the society weekly The World, Yates incurred the wrath of Lord Lonsdale and was imprisoned for libel (1885).

Yazoo Frauds. In 1795, the four Yazoo Companies bribed the state legislature of Georgia in order to get large grants of land near the Yazoo River. Royall Tyler wrote a satirical play on this episode called The Georgia Spec: or Land in the Moon (1797).

Ybarra, Thomas Russell (1880-). American journalist and humorist, son of a Venezuelan general. Well-known especially for his autobiography, Young Man of Caracas (1941).

Yeamans, Anne (1835-1912). American actress, noted for her interpretation of Irish roles. She appeared for years with the comedians Harrigan and Hart.

Years, The. A novel by Virginia Woolf (1937), dealing with the fortunes of an upper middle-class English family, the Pargiters, from 1880 to the 1930's. There is no formal plot, but rather a series of episodes representative of the development of the family, taking place in 1880-1891, 1907, 1908, 1910, 1911, 1913, 1914, 1917, and "the present day," and constituting a recurring cycle. The book contains numerous atmospheric descriptions of London which have been highly praised by critics.

Yeats, William Butler (1865–1939). Irish poet and dramatist, leader of the movement of the IRISH RENAISSANCE. Influenced by the PRE-RAPHAELITES, WILLIAM BLAKE, SHELLEY, French SYMBOLISM, MAETERLINCK, and Hindu occultism, he is known for his poems and plays dealing with mystic and Celtic legendary themes, and for the highly developed symbolism of his later poetry. Among his books of poetry are The Wanderings of Oisín (1889); The Wind Among the Reeds (1899); In the Seven Woods (1903); The Green Helmet (1910); The Wild Swans of Coole (1919); The Tower (1928); The Winding Stair (1929); A Full Moon in March (1935); The King of the Great Clock Tower (1934); Wheels and Butterflies (1934). Yeats was the son of John Butler Yeats, a well-known Irish landscape painter, and he himself studied painting for three years. Early in his career he was associated with a group of English "Decadent" poets including Dowson, HENLEY, and Arthur SYMONS and Lionel Johnson, members of the Rhymers' Club; he was invited to come to London, the headquarters of the group, by Oscar WILDE. Yeats is credited with having been the prime mover in the Irish literary revival of the end of the 19th century, persuading Lady GREGORY, George MOORE, and John M. SYNGE to write about their native country and helping to found both the Irish Literary Society (in London and Dublin) and the Irish Literary Theater, which became the celebrated Abbey Theater. He did not approve of the realism of the plays of Sean O'CASEY which the Abbey Theater later sponsored, however. Yeats was honored widely as one of the most important poets of the 20th century, being elected a senator of the Irish Free State in 1922 and in 1923 being awarded the Nobel prize for literature. In appearance and behavior he was eccentric, foppish, dreamy, melancholy, and absent-minded, being subject to hallucinations and trance-like states since youth. He was a fervent believer in spiritualism, and his wife, Georgie Lees, was a medium who held daily séances.

Yeats-Brown, Francis (1886–1944). English writer who served in the British army in India. He combined love of adventure with a decidedly mystical turn of mind. He is known in America especially as the author of Lives of a Bengal Lancer (1930).

yellow (A.S. geolo, connected with Gr. chloros, "green," and with gall, the yellowish fluid secreted by the bile). Indicating in symbolism, jealousy, inconstancy, and adultery. In France the doors of traitors used to be daubed with yellow. In some countries the law ordained that Jews must be clothed in yellow, because they betrayed our Lord; hence Judas, in medieval pictures, is arrayed in yellow. In Spain the vestments of the executioner were either red or yellow—the former to denote bloodshedding; the latter treason.

In heraldry and in ecclesiastical symbolism yellow is frequently used in place of gold.

Yellow Book. Official documents, government reports, etc., in France are known as Yellow Books, from the color of their cover. See also SPENGLER, Oswald; BLUE BOOK.

Ygerne or Igerne. In Arthurian romance, the mother of ARTHUR, wife of GORLOIS, lord of Tintagel Castle, in Cornwall. King Uther tries to seduce her, but Ygerne resents the insult, whereupon Uther and Gorlois fight, and the latter is slain. Uther then besieges Tintagel Castle, takes it, and compels Ygerne to become his wife. Nine months afterwards, Uther dies, and on the same day Arthur is born.

Then Uther, in his wrath and heat, besieged Ygerne within Tintagil . . . and entered in . . .
Enforced she was to wed him in her tears,
And with a shameful swiftness

Tennyson, Coming of Arthur.

Yggdrasil or Ygdrasil. Literally, the horse of Yggr or Odin. In Norse mythology, the "Tree of the Universe," which sprang from the body of Ymir. It is an ash tree and has three roots. One extends to Niflheim with the well Hvergelmir where lies the dragon Nithogg gnawing away its substance. The second extends to Totunnheim and the well of Mimir, which is the source of all wisdom. The third extends to Asgard. By it lies the well Urtharbrunn whose waters the Norns use to preserve Yggdrasil from decay. The squirrel Ratatosk runs up and down the trunk carrying strife. Four harts feed on Yggdrasil's foliage. An eagle and a hawk are sitting in its branches.

Yiddish (from Ger. judisch, "Jewish"). A language spoken by Jewish ethnic groups in Germany, eastern Europe, the U.S., and elsewhere. It is a development from Rhenish-German dialects (as spoken by fourteenth- and fifteenth-century Jews coming from the Rhineland and settling in Eastern Europe) under the influence of Hebrew and various Slavonic languages. Its literature is considerable. It is written in Hebrew characters.

Young Lonigan: A Boyhood in Chicago Streets. A novel by James T. FARRELL (1932), the first volume in his trilogy STUDS LONIGAN. This book introduces the hero, Studs, as a boy of fifteen, graduating from a Roman Catholic grammar school and starting out on the typical career of his class and time, dreaming of becoming a "great guy" and taking care to conform to the pattern of conduct set for him by his associates. Notable events are his initiation into the mysteries of sex, in which he is assisted by Iris, a morally promiscuous adolescent girl of the neighborhood, and his first sentimental attachment, of which another girl, Lucy Scanlan, is the object.

Young Man, Adventures of a. A novel by John Dos Passos (1938), presented in a modification of the technique used in the objective narrative portions of U.S.A. It tells of the life and "adventures" of Glenn Spotswood, a young man of sensitivity, sincerity, and a strong sense of justice, whose father, once an instructor at Columbia University, lost his academic position because of his pacifist views during World War I. As a student in the western part of the U.S., Glenn comes in contact with radical and union activities and soon, at the suggestion of Mike Gulick, a young Columbia instructor, and Mike's wife Marice, he comes to New York and completes his education at the university where his father once taught. He meets Boris Spingarn, a Brooklyn Jewish student who is a Communist, and Boris' wife, Gladys Funaroff, and becomes more closely associated with the radical groups of the late 1920's and early 1930's. After his graduation from college, he engages in union organizational work, notably among the Kentucky coal miners, has brief love affairs with Gladys, Marice, and a Kentucky mountain girl named Wheatly, and quarrels with the Communist leaders, wishing to carry through on individual cases and assist distressed workers, while the leaders prefer to think first of general party policy and strategy. Disillusioned with the American radicals and financially embarrassed, Glenn volunteers to go to Spain as an ambulance driver in the Civil War. There he meets several of the Communist leaders whom he knew in the U.S. They are suspicious of him because of his past "opposition" and have him arrested as a Trotskyist spy, accused of plotting an uprising of the Spanish Republicans against the Communists in Barcelona. Eventually, while obeying a command to carry water to the firing-line to relieve a couple of machine-gunners, Glenn is killed.

Young Manhood of Studs Lonigan, The. A novel by James T. FARRELL (1934), the second volume of his trilogy STUDS LONIGAN. In this book the career of Studs is carried through the period of the 1920's, during which he works as a house painter with his father and participates in the vices and dissipations of the time. The activities and experiences of Studs' friends and associates parallel his. The culmination of the novel is a wild New Year's Eve party at which a girl named Irene is raped by Weary Reiley, one of Studs' companions.

Youth and the Bright Medusa. A collection of stories (1920) by Willa CATHER, dealing with the lives of artists. Includes Paul's Case, story of a neurotic boy, often reprinted.

Yum-Yum. The heroine of the Gilbert and Sullivan comic opera THE MIKADO.

Yvain, ou le Chevalier au Lion. A medieval romance by CHRÉTIEN DE TROYES, dealing with the adventures of the knight Yvain. Following the directions of a giant, he arrives at a well, finds a golden basin near it, and splashes water from the basin on a stone slab. Immediately a great storm arises and a mysterious knight comes forth to combat, from which Yvain emerges the victor. Yvain next comes to a castle, entrance to which is made possible by the assistance of a lady named Lunette, who shows him how to make himself invisible. While hidden in a room in the castle, he hears the widow of the slain knight weeping for her lost husband, and he falls in love with her. Lunette convinces the widow, Laudine, that since the magic well must be defended, it is most desirable that the man chosen as the new defender and husband be the one who vanquished the first knight. The argument is successful, and eventually Yvain marries Laudine. The remainder of the romance is concerned with his numerous other adventures, during which he rescues a lion from a serpent and thereby acquires the animal as a mascot.

Yvetôt, King of. The lord of a town in Normandy. The tale is that Clotaire, son of Clovis, having slain the lord of Yvetôt before the high altar of Soissons, made atonement to the heirs by conferring on them the title of king. BÉRANGER in his famous song Le Roi d'Yvetôt, which popularized the name, says this potentate is little known in history but his character and habits were not peculiar.

"He rose late, went to bed early, slept without caring for glory, made four meals a day, lived in a thatched house, wore a cotton night-cap instead of a crown, rode on an ass, and his only law was 'charity begins at home'":

Il était un roi d'Yvetot
 Peu connu dans l'histoire;
 Se levant tard, se couchant tôt,
 Dormant fort bien sans gloire,
 Et couronné par Jeanneton
 D'un simple bonnet de coton.
 Dit on.
 Oh! oh! oh! oh! Ah! ah! ah! ah!
 Quel bon petit roi c'était; là! là! là!
